Veronica Tyler, second prize winner in the recent Tchaikovsky vocal competition, will make her second Tanglewood appearance of the Summer at this concert. Leinsdorf will conclude the benefit performance by conducting the combined orchestras in a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, complete with cannon and salute guns, which will be fired across the Tanglewood grounds. A display of fireworks over nearby Stockbridge Bowl will bring the evening to a close.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewood during the Festival's seventh week. Programs of chamber music will be given on Monday evening at 8 and next Sunday morning at 10, and a concert by the Tanglewood Choir on Thursday evening at 8.

This afternoon guest conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct the second of his two concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Today's program includes Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance by Barber; the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Saint-Saens with Grant Johannesen as soloist; and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737
AUG 7 1966

FM Music for This Week

JANE MARSH and Stephen Kates, prize winners in the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition, will be featured at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival Concert at Tanglewood, Saturday at 8 p.m. on WCRQ-FM. Miss Marsh, first prize winner in the voice contest, will join the orchestra for a performance of Lisa's Scene and Arioso from Tchaikovsky's The Queen of Spades and Verdi's Introduction, Willow Song, and Ave Maria from Otello. Stephen Kates, second prize winner in the cello contest, will perform the Shostakovitch Cello Concerto. The orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will also play Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis and Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from Gotterdammerung.

A recording of Puccini's Turandot, played by the La Scala Milan Orchestra under the direction of Tullio Serafin, will be featured on WPJB-FM's At the Opera, Friday at 7 p.m. Soloists include Maria Callas, Giuseppe Ness, Nicola Zaccaria and Elizabeth Schwarzkopf.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 7 1966

Prize-Winning Singer At Tanglewood Aug 13

LENOX—The seventh weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood will feature winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky music competition.

Jane Marsh, first prize winner in the voice contest who has appeared twice this summer at Tanglewood, and Stephen Kates, second prize winner in the cello contest, will perform at Tanglewood Aug. 13. The following afternoon, the second prize winners in the violin and piano competitions, Masuko Ushioda of Japan and American pianist Misha Dichter, will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sixten Ehrling, music director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor at Friday's Berkshire Festival concert.

Weekend Program

Ehrling, who makes his Tanglewood debut at the Friday concert, will first direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "Symphony No. 1" by Jean Sibelius, to be followed by Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 4."

Erich Leinsdorf will begin the Aug. 13 program with Hindemith's "Symphonic Metamorphosis," and then present to the audience cellist Stephen Kates, who will perform the Shostakovitch "Cello Concert." After the intermission Jane Marsh will join the orchestra for a performance of Lisa's Scene and Arioso from Tchaikovsky's "The Queen of Spades," and other selections.

The Aug. 14 concert will begin with two works by the orchestra, followed by a violin concerto by Masuko Ushioda. The concert will be televised, marking the first occasion that a full length concert has been televised in color from the Berkshire Festival.

Preludes Popular

Friday evening's weekend prelude at 7 will begin the Tchaikovsky weekend, with Paul Hersh, Peter Marsh and Donald McCall performing the Russian composer's "Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello." As an innovation at this summer's festival, the weekend preludes have proved popular with Tanglewood patrons, each Friday by attracting audiences of more than 2500 people.

The Lenox Quartet will give the sixth program in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series Tuesday evening in the theater. The group was formed in Lenox following several summers of participation in various Berkshire Music Center activities.

On Wednesday, an evening benefit program for the center will take place at 3.30, with continuous performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center. At 8 there will be a concert in the Music Shed with the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland, with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy narrating Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" under the composer's direction.

Cannons to Close

Veronica Tyler, second prize winner in recent Tchaikovsky vocal competition, will make her second Tanglewood appearance of the summer at this concert. Erich Leinsdorf will conclude the benefit performance by conducting the combined orchestras in a performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," complete with cannons and salute guns which will be fired across the Tanglewood grounds. A display of fireworks over nearby Stockbridge Bowl will bring the evening to a close.

Events at Tanglewood during the festival's seventh week include programs of chamber music Monday at 8 and Aug. 14 at 10, and a concert by the Tangle- at 8.

On Sunday, guest conductor Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct the second of two concerts with the Boston Symphony wood Choir Thursday evening Orchestra.

Contemporary Music Festival

LENOX—The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood will open Aug. 14.

The five day "festival within a festival" will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. This summer, the festival will take place during the final week of the orchestra's Berkshire Festival which closes Aug. 21.

Foundation Aid

The Fromm Foundation, which this year celebrates its 10th summer of participation in the Berkshire Music Center's activities, makes available fellowships for study at the center, and assists the center in presenting the contemporary festival.

The first program of the festival, to be given in the Tanglewood theater, will be a concert of chamber music. On Aug. 15 the center will present a program of choral and vocal chamber music.

The concert on Aug. 16 will be the seventh of the Berkshire Festival's chamber music series. Quartets by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg, and Ruth Crawford-Seeger will be performed.

The fourth program in the Contemporary American Music Festival will be given on Aug. 17, again featuring a concert of chamber music.

TIGHT BINDING

119

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, August 7, 1966

Berkshire programs weekend concerts

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. — The seventh weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will feature prize winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition. Jane Marsh, first prize winner in the voice contest, who has appeared on two occasions here this summer and Stephen Kates, second prize winner in the cello contest, will perform Saturday.

Sunday afternoon the second prize winners in the violin and piano competitions, Masuko Ushioda of Japan and the American pianist Misha Dichter, will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the symphony orchestra. Sixten Ehrling, music director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor at Friday's concert.

Ehrling, who makes his debut here at the Friday concert, will conduct two well-known symphonies. He will first direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Symphony No. 1 by Jean Sibelius to be followed by Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Erich Leinsdorf will begin Saturday evening's program with Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis, and then present cellist Stephen Kates, who will perform the Shostakovitch Cello Concert. After the intermission Miss Marsh will join the orchestra for a performance of Lisa's Scene and Arioso from Tchaikovsky's "The Queen of Spades."

Miss Marsh will also be heard in Verdi's "Introduction," "Willow Song" and "Ave Maria" from "Otello." Leinsdorf will close the concert with Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Gotterdammerung."

On Sunday afternoon the concert will begin with two works by the orchestra, the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin" and Brahms' Symphony No. 1. Leinsdorf will then bring to the music shed stage Masuko Ushioda, who will be heard in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2. Prior to the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1, played by Misha Dichter, Leinsdorf will conduct "Little Blue Devil" and "The Twittering Machine" from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee."

Sunday afternoon's concert will be televised live and in color by the National Broadcasting Co. This will be the first time that a full length concert has been televised in color from the festival.

Friday evening's weekend prelude at 7 will begin the Tchaikovsky weekend, with Paul Hersh, Peter Marsh and Donald McCall performing the Russian composer's Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello.

The Lenox Quartet will give the sixth program in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series Tuesday evening in the theater.

The quartet consists of Peter Marsh and Delmar Pettys, violins; Paul Hersh, viola, and Donald McCall, cello. Their program on Tuesday includes Haydn's Quartet in G minor, Op. 20, No. 3; Quartet No. 5 by Bartok; Beethoven's Quartet in E minor, Op. 59, No. 2.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 33,615
AUG 9 1966

Events for Weekend Listed at Tanglewood

Sixten Ehrling, music director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Friday night. The program will include Sibelius' "Symphony No. 1" and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 4."

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Friday night beginning with Hindemith's "Symphonic Metamorphosis." Cellist Stephen Kates will be guest artist in Shostakovitch's "Cello Concerto" and Jane Marsh will join the orchestra to perform scenes from Tchaikovsky's "The Queen of Spades," also Verdi's "Otello" excerpts.

The closing will be the orchestra playing "Dawn" and Siegfried's Rhine Journey" from "Gotterdammerung." Both Cellist Kates and Miss Marsh won in the recent Tchaikovsky competition.

Sunday afternoon the concert will begin with two orchestral works: The Prelude to Act 3 of Wagner's "Lohengrin" and Brahms "Symphony No. 1." With Masuko Ushida as guest artist, there also will include Prokofieff's "Violin Concerto No. 2." Tchaikovsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1." with Misha Dichter guest artist, and the movements, "Little Blue Devil" and "The Twittering Machine" from Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee." Sunday concert will be telecast live and in color by NBC.

The Weekend Prelude Friday at 7 p.m. will begin the Tchaikovsky weekend with Paul Hersh, Peter Marsh and Donald McCall playing Tchaikovsky's "Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello."

The Lenox Quartet tonight will give the sixth event in the Berkshire Festival chamber music series. Haydn, Bartok and Beethoven quartets will be played.

The Gala Evening benefit for the Berkshire Music Center tomorrow will begin at 3:30 p.m. with continuous performances by members of the Center, followed at 8 by a concert with the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras conducted by Leinsdorf and Aaron Coplan. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts will narrate Copland's "Lincoln Portrait." Veronica Tyler, second prize winner in the recent Tchaikovsky competition, will make her second appearance this summer and the closing will be Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 8 1966

BSO Concerts To Feature Tchaikovsky Prizewinners

The seventh weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood will feature prize-winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition. Jane Marsh, first-prize winner in the voice contest who has appeared at Tanglewood on two previous occasions this summer, and Stephen Kates, second-prize winner in the cello contest, will perform on Saturday, Aug. 13. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, the second-prize winners in the violin and piano competitions, Masuko Ushioda of Japan and the American pianist Misha Dichter, will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the BSO. Sixten Ehrling, music director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor at the Friday Aug. 12 Berkshire Festival concert.

Ehrling, who will be making his Tanglewood debut, will conduct two well known symphonies, Symphony No. 1 by Jean Sibelius and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Saturday's Program

Leinsdorf will begin Saturday evening's program with Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis, and then present cellist Kates, who will perform the Shostakovitch cello concerto. Miss Marsh will sing Lisa's Scene and Arioso from Tchaikovsky's "The Queen of Spades." She will also be heard in Verdi's Introduction, Willow Song, and Ave Maria from "Otello." Leinsdorf will close the concert with "Dawn" and "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" from "Gotterdammerung."

On Sunday afternoon, the concert will begin with the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," and Brahms' Symphony No. 1. Ushioda will be heard in Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 2. Prior to the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1, played by Dichter, Leinsdorf will conduct "Little Blue Devil" and "The Twittering Machine" from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee."

Chamber Program

Sunday afternoon's complete concert will be televised live and in color from Tanglewood by the National Broadcasting Co. This will mark the first occasion that a full-length concert has been televised in color from the Berkshire Festival.

Friday evening's weekend prelude at 7 p.m. will begin the Tchaikovsky weekend, with Paul Hersh, Peter Marsh and Donald McCall performing the Russian composer's trio for piano, violin and cello.

The Lenox Quartet will give the sixth program in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series Tuesday evening in the theatre. The program on Tuesday includes Haydn's Quartet in G Minor, Opera 20, No. 3; Quartet No. 5 by Bartok; Beethoven's Quartet in E Minor, Opus 59, No. 2.

On Wednesday the gala evening benefit program for the Berkshire Music Center will take place, beginning at 3:30 p.m., with continuous performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center. At 8 p.m. there will be a gala concert in the Music Shed performed by the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras, Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland, conducting. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts will narrate Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" under the composer's direction. Veronica Tyler, second-prize winner in the recent Tchaikovsky vocal competition, will make her second Tanglewood appearance of the summer at this concert. Leinsdorf will conclude the benefit performance by conducting the combined orchestras in a performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, complete with cannons and salute guns which will be fired across the Tanglewood grounds. A display of fireworks over nearby Stockbridge Bowl will bring the gala evening to a close.

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 26,024
AUG 8 1966

Weekend Of Tchaikovsky Scheduled At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. — The seventh weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer home at Tanglewood will feature prize winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition. Jane Marsh and Stephen Kates will perform Saturday. Sunday afternoon Masuko Ushioda of Japan and the American pianist Misha Dichter, will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sixten Erhling, music director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor at Friday's Berkshire Festival concert.

Sunday afternoon's complete concert will be televised live and in color from Tanglewood by the National Broadcasting Company. This will mark the first occasion that a full-length concert has been televised in color from the Berkshire Festival.

Friday evening's Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. will begin the Tchaikovsky weekend, with Paul Hersh, Peter Marsh and Donald McCall performing the Russian composer's Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello. As an innovation at this summer's festival, the Weekend Preludes have proved to be highly popular with Tanglewood patrons. The preludes, provided at no extra cost to those holding tickets to the Friday Boston Symphony orchestra concerts, have been attended each Friday by audiences of more than 2,500.

The Lenox Quartet will give the sixth program in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series Tuesday evening in the theatre. Formed in Lenox following several summers of participation in various Berkshire Music Center activities, the quarter consists of Peter Marsh and Delmar Pettys, violins; Paul Hersh, viola, and Donald McCall, cello.

On Wednesday the Gala Evening benefit program for the Berkshire Music Center will take place beginning at 3:30 p.m. with continuous performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center. At 8 p.m. there will be a Gala Concert in the Music Shed with the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras conducted by Erick Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland. Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts will narrate Copland's Lincoln Portrait under the composer's direction. Veronica Tyler will make her second Tanglewood appearance of the summer at this concert. Erich Leinsdorf will conclude the benefit performance by conducting the combined orchestras in a performance of Tchakovsky's 1812 Overture complete with cannons and salute guns which will be fired across the Tanglewood grounds. A display of fireworks over nearby Stockbridge Bowl will bring the Gala Evening to a close.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to three events at Tanglewoodd during the Festival's seventh week. Programs of chamber music will be given on Monday at 8 p.m. and Sunday morning at 10 and a concert by the Tanglewood Choir on Thursday at 8 p.m.

The Detroit News
D. 632,934 SUN. 917,360
AUG 7 1966

EHRLING AS GUEST

Ehrling guest conducts the Boston Symphony at its summer residence, Tanglewood, Mass., Friday. The program will consist of the Sibelius First and Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphonies.

Before and after the guest stint, Ehrling figures to be eyebrow-deep in scores.

It would be easy, in view of the flurry of activity at Meadow Brook this week, to overlook the significance of the eighth and final week, for which Ehrling has done some of his most imaginative programming since arriving in Detroit.

For the Aug. 16 program he has scheduled Milhaud's Symphony No. 10, Martin's The Four Elements, Hans Werner Henze's Symphony No. 1 and Carlos Surinach's Melorhythmic Dramas.

120

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 — 742-4200
Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 25,302
AUG 10 1966

STEPHEN KATES

Tchaikovsky Featured At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. — Tanglewood will [illegible] this week as the [illegible] with the music of Tchaikovsky, the sounds of cello, with piano and voice.

Leinsdorf has again in[illegible] winners of the 196[illegible] Tchaikovsky competi[illegible] soloists. Also feature[illegible] program for the week will be the gala evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center with Aaron Copland con[illegible] own works today.

Festivities start at 4:30 p.m. with [illegible] student groups per[illegible]

Friday evening will feature Miss [illegible] Marsh, recent solo[illegible] prize winner of the [illegible] Tchaikovsky competi[illegible] voice division, singing in the 7 p.m. prelude concert.

At 9 p.m. in the shed, guest conductor Sixten Ehrling will lead the Boston Symphony in the Sibelius Symphony No. 1, and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

Saturday's concert will be highlighted by the participation of Stephen Kates, cellist, and second prize winner of the Moscow Tchaikovsky competition, cello division, playing Shostakovitch's Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 107.

Miss Marsh will sing Introduction, Willow Song, and Ave Maria from "Othello" by Verdi.

On Sunday, at 2:30, Leinsdorf brings to the stage Misha Dichter, second prize winner of the Moscow Tchaikovsky competition, piano division, playing Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor, and Miss Masuko Ushioda, second prize winner of the competition, violin division, playing the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor.

This is the first American appearance of the prize winners since winning at the competition in Moscow.

SCM

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 — 742-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,587
AUG 11 1966

Tchaikovsky Weekend at Tanglewood

The seventh weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer home, Tanglewood, will feature prize winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition. Jane Marsh, first prize winner in the voice contest, who has appeared on two previous occasions this summer at Tanglewood, and Stephen Kates, second prize winner in the cello contest, will perform at Tanglewood on Saturday, Aug. 13. The second prize winners in the violin and piano competitions, Masuko Ushioda of Japan and the American pianist Misha Dichter, will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14. Sixten Ehrling, music director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra will be guest conductor at Friday's Berkshire Festival concert.

Mr. Ehrling, who makes his Tanglewood debut at the Friday concert, will conduct two well-known symphonies. He will first direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Symphony No. 1 by Jean Sibelius to be followed by Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Erich Leinsdorf will begin Saturday's program with Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis, and then present to the Tanglewood audience cellist Stephen Kates, who will perform the Shostakovitch Cello Concerto. After the intermission Jane Marsh will join the Orchestra for a performance of Lisa's Scene and Arioso from Tchaikovsky's The Queen of Spades. Miss Marsh will also be heard in Verdi's Introduction, Willow Song, and Ave Maria from Otello. Mr. Leinsdorf will close the concert with Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from Gotterdammerung.

On Sunday afternoon the concert will begin with two works played by the Orchestra, the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's Lohengrin and Brahms' Symphony No. 1. Mr. Leinsdorf will then bring to the Music Shed stage Masuko Ushioda, who will be heard in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2. Prior to the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1, played by Misha Dichter, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Little Blue Devil and The Twittering Machine from Gunther Schuller's Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee.

Sunday afternoon's complete concert will be televised live and in color from Tanglewood by the National Broadcasting Company. This will mark the first occasion that a full length concert has been televised in color from the Berkshire Festival.

Friday evening's Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. will begin the Tchaikovsky weekend, with Paul Marsh, Peter Marsh and Donald McCall performing the Russian composer's Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello. As an innovation at this summer's Festival, the Weekend Preludes have proved to be highly popular with Tanglewood patrons. The Preludes, provided at no extra cost to those holding tickets to the Friday Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, have been attended each Friday by audiences of more than 2500 people.

SIXTEN EHRLING . . . guest conductor at Tanglewood.

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 7,764
AUG 13 1966

Tanglewood Season Nears Completion

The seventh and next to the last weekend of Tanglewood concerts will feature the music of Hindemith, Tchaikovsky and Prokofiev.

Erich Leinsdorf returns to the podium today at 8 p.m. to direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Hindemith's Mathis der Maler and Tchaikovsky's Rococo Variations. A Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto will also be performed, with a winner of the Moscow Tchaikovsky Competition as soloist.

Tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. the concert will feature Prokofiev's Symphony No. 3, Tchaikovsky's An Aria and Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto. Competition winners again will be soloists.

The programs of the season's last two concerts are as follows:

Saturday, Aug. 20, Brahms' Symphony No. 4; Liszt's Fantasy on The Ruins of Athens and Liszt's Piano Concert No. 1 with pianist Jorge Bolet as soloist.

Sunday, Aug. 21, Verdi's Te Deum and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. The festival chorus and several soloists will participate in the last concert.

Mr. Leinsdorf will be the conductor the last two weekends. Open rehearsals are held each Saturday at 10:30 a.m. for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 9, 1966

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra playing at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this weekend will feature Sixten Ehrling, director of the Detroit Symphony, [illegible] p.m. program in the Sibelius as conductor for the Friday "Symphony number 1" and the Tchaikovsky "Symphony number 4." The 7 p.m. Friday prelude program will feature the Tchaikovsky "Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello."

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Saturday 8 p.m. and the Sunday 2:30 p.m. concerts at which winners in the Moscow Tchaikovsky Competition have been invited to be soloists.

The soloists are Misha Dichter, pianist; Stephen Kates, cellist, and Masuko Ushioda, violinist. Dichter will play the Tchaikovsky "Piano Concerto number 1 in B-flat minor." Kates will play the Shostakovitch "Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, opus 107" on Aug. 13. Miss Ushioda will play the Prokofiev "Violin Concerto number 2 in G minor" on Aug. [illegible]

* * *

Ridgefield Press
RIDGEFIELD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,221
AUG 11 1966

CAIRO, N. Y.
HERALD
W. 500
AUG 11 1966

SIXTEN EHRLING, director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 19, in the Sibelius Symphony No. 1 and Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

Albany Knickerbocker News
Friday, August 12, 1966

TANGLEWOOD — Week-end Prelude of Tchaikovsky's Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello at 7 p. m. today, followed by Sixten Ehrling conducting in Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 at 9 p.m. today at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

120

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 25,302
AUG 10 1966

STEPHEN KATES

Tchaikovsky Featured At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass — Tanglewood will be busy this week as the shed resounds with the music of Tchaikovsky, the sounds of cello, violin, piano and voice.

Erich Leinsdorf has again invited the winners of the 1966 Moscow Tchaikovsky competition as soloists. Also featured on the program for the week will be the gala evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center with Aaron Copland conducting his own works today.

Festivities start at 4:30 p.m. with many student groups performing.

Friday evening will feature Miss Jane Marsh, recent soloist and first prize winner of the Moscow Tchaikovsky competition voice division, singing in the 7 p.m. prelude concert.

At 9 p.m. in the shed, guest conductor Sixten Ehrling will lead the Boston Symphony in the Sibelius Symphony No. 1, and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

Saturday's concert will be highlighted by the participation of Stephen Kates, cellist, and second prize winner of the Moscow Tchaikovsky competition, cello division, playing Shostakovitch's Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 107.

Miss Marsh will sing Introduction, Willow Song, and Ave Maria from "Othello" by Verdi.

On Sunday, at 2:30, Leinsdorf brings to the stage Misha Dichter, second prize winner of the Moscow Tchaikovsky competition, piano division, playing Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor, and Miss Masuko Ushioda, second prize winner of the competition, violin division, playing the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor.

This is the first American appearance of the prize winners since winning at the competition in Moscow.

SCM

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,587
AUG 11 1966

Tchaikovsky Weekend at Tanglewood

The seventh weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer home, Tanglewood, will feature prize winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition. Jane Marsh, first prize winner in the voice contest, who has appeared on two previous occasions this summer at Tanglewood, and Stephen Kates, second prize winner in the cello contest, will perform at Tanglewood on Saturday, Aug. 13. The second prize winners in the violin and piano competitions, Masuko Ushioda of Japan and the American pianist Misha Dichter, will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14. Sixten Ehrling, music director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra will be guest conductor at Friday's Berkshire Festival concert.

Mr. Ehrling, who makes his Tanglewood debut at the Friday concert, will conduct two well-known symphonies. He will first direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Symphony No. 1 by Jean Sibelius to be followed by Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Erich Leinsdorf will begin Saturday's program with Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis, and then present to the Tanglewood audience cellist Stephen Kates, who will perform the Shostakovitch Cello Concerto. After the intermission Jane Marsh will join the Orchestra for a performance of Lisa's Scene and Arioso from Tchaikovsky's The Queen of Spades. Miss Marsh will also be heard in Verdi's Introduction, Willow Song, and Ave Maria from Otello. Mr. Leinsdorf will close the concert with Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from Gotterdammerung.

On Sunday afternoon the concert will begin with two works played by the Orchestra, the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's Lohengrin and Brahms' Symphony No. 1. Mr. Leinsdorf will then bring to the Music Shed stage Masuko Ushioda, who will be heard in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2. Prior to the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1, played by Misha Dichter, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Little Blue Devil and The Twittering Machine from Gunther Schuller's Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee.

SIXTEN EHRLING . . . guest conductor at Tanglewood.

Sunday afternoon's complete concert will be televised live and in color from Tanglewood by the National Broadcasting Company. This will mark the first occasion that a full length concert has been televised in color from the Berkshire Festival.

Friday evening's Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. will begin the Tchaikovsky weekend, with Paul Hersh, Peter Marsh and Donald McCall performing the Russian composer's Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello. As an innovation at this summer's Festival, the Weekend Preludes have proved to be highly popular with Tanglewood patrons. The Preludes, provided at no extra cost to those holding tickets to the Friday Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, have been attended each Friday by audiences of more than 2500 people.

Ridgefield Press
RIDGEFIELD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,221
AUG 11 1966

SIXTEN EHRLING, director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 12, in the Sibelius Symphony No. 1 and Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

CAIRO, N. Y.
HERALD
W. 500
AUG 11 1966

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 7,764
AUG 13 1966

Tanglewood Season Nears Completion

The seventh and next to the last weekend of Tanglewood concerts will feature the music of Hindemith, Tchaikovsky and Prokofiev.

Erich Leinsdorf returns to the podium today at 8 p.m. to direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Hindemith's Mathis der Maler and Tchaikovsky's Rococo Variations. A Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto will also be performed, with a winner of the Moscow Tchaikovsky Competition as soloist.

Tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. the concert will feature Prokofiev's Symphony No. 3; Tchaikovsky's An Aria and Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto. Competition winners again will be soloists.

The programs of the season's last two concerts are as follows:

Saturday, Aug. 20, Brahms' Symphony No. 4; Liszt's Fantasy on The Ruins of Athens and Liszt's Piano Concert No. 1 with pianist Jorge Bolet as soloist.

Sunday, Aug. 21, Verdi's Te Deum and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. The festival chorus and several soloists will participate in the last concert.

Mr. Leinsdorf will be the conductor the last two weekends. Open rehearsals are held each Saturday at 10:30 a.m. for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 9, 1966

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra playing at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this weekend will feature Sixten Ehrling, director of the Detroit Symphony. 9 p.m. program in the Sibelius as conductor for the Friday "Symphony number 1" and the Tchaikovsky "Symphony number 4." The 7 p.m. Friday prelude program will feature the Tchaikovsky "Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello."

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Saturday 8 p.m. and the Sunday 2:30 p.m. concerts at which winners in the Moscow Tchaikovsky Competition have been invited to be soloists.

The soloists are Misha Dichter, pianist; Stephen Kates, cellist, and Masuko Ushioda, violinist. Dichter will play the Tchaikovsky "Piano Concerto number 1 in B-flat minor." Kates will play the Shostakovitch "Concerto for Violincello and Orchestra, opus 107" on Aug. 13; Miss Ushioda will play the Prokofiev "Violin Concerto number 2 in G minor" on Aug. 14.

* * *

Albany Knickerbocker News
Friday, August 12, 1966

TANGLEWOOD—Week-end Prelude of Tchaikovsky's Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello at 7 p. m. today, followed by Sixten Ehrling conducting in Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 at 9 p.m. today at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,619

AUG 13 1966

Music

Erich Leinsdorf to Conduct Lenox Concert

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Tomorrow afternoon's concert at the Berkshire Festival in Lenox will be conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra's musical director, Erich Leinsdorf. Music by Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky will be performed.

Eunic Alberts

The former composers's Symphony No. 3 will open the program and this will be followed by the latter's violin concerto and an aria. Soloists will be two winners of the recently conducted Tchaikovsky Competition.

Next week, the final, will offer excellent concerts Friday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon. Pianists, Jeanne-Marie Darre and Jorge Bolet are listed for Friday. Miss Darre will be heard in the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 2, and during the weekend prelude portion of the concert, scheduled for 7 p.m., Bolet will play Piano Transcriptions from Liszt. Jorge Bolet will again play Saturday, this time, the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1.

THE SUNDAY AFTERNOON concert will feature the Beethoven Symphony No. 9, and Verdi's Te Deum. Soloists who have been invited by Dr. Leinsdorf are Jane Marsh, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Richard Cassilly, tenor and Thomas Paul, bass.

For the first time since he became the Orchestra's musical director, Erich Leinsdorf has chosen to close the festival with the Beethoven 9th Symphony.

This evening the Boston Symphony will pass a significant milestone, for on this date in 1936, the Orchestra, under its then music director, Serge Koussevitsky, gave its first summer concert in the Berkshires at the former Vanderbilt estate, "Holmwood" (presently Foxhollow School).

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, August 14, 1966

Moscow winners to perform

Pianist and violinist in Tanglewood telecast

Two winners of the third International Tchiakovsky Competition, held last month in Moscow, will appear as soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "An Afternoon at Tanglewood," a color special on NBC-TV via WSYR from 2:30 to 5 P.M. today.

They are Misha Dichter, a 20-year-old pianist from Beverly Hills, Calif., and Miss Masuko Yushioda, a 19-year-old violinist from Japan. The two were among 240 young musicians from 37 countries who entered the month-long contest in hopes of launching professional careers.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the program to be colorcast from the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass.

Dichter will be soloist with the orchestra in Tchiakovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat, and Miss Yushioda will be soloist with the orchestra in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G. The remainder of the concert will include the Prelude to Act 3 of Wagner's "Lohengrin," Brahms's Symphony No. 1, and Ravel's "Alborada del Gracioso."

Dichter, who studies at the Juilliard School of Music in New York, finished second to a 16-year-old Soviet pianist in the competition, but was accorded the greatest ovation at the competition since Van Cliburn won the first contest in 1958. The audience seemed to think Dichter should have been named first-place winner, shouting "Bravo!" and "First prize, first prize!" when he accepted his second-place silver medal. Dichter, born in Shanghai, was brought to the United States in 1948.

Miss Yushioda won second place in the violin competition, the first prize going to a 19-year-old Soviet performer.

During the intermission NBC News correspondent Edwin Newman will interview the soloists and Leinsdorf.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

AUG 14 1966

In Music

This afternoon Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program featuring two of the Tchaikowsky Competition winners, violinist Masuko Ushioda and cellist Stephen Kates. This concert is at 2:30 in the Music Shed on the Berkshire Festival grounds. At 8:00 the first of five concerts in the Festival of Contemporary American Music will be presented in the Theatre. These concerts will be presented Sunday through Thursday evenings at 8:00 and will include four works commissioned especially for the Festival. Opening the final weekend at Tanglewood, Leinsdorf will conduct a program which will include Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2 with soloist Jeanne-Marie Darre. The concert begins at 9 p.m. The preceding Weekend Prelude, beginning at 7:00, will study Liszt's Piano Transcriptions. At 8:00 on Saturday evening Leinsdorf will conduct a program including Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 with soloist Jorge Bolet. Concluding the season on Sunday afternoon, Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra, Festival Chorus and soloists in a performance of Bruckner's Te Deum and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,771

AUG 13 1966

Tchaikovsky Contest Winners At Tanglewood

The seventh weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood will feature prize winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky music competition. Jane Marsh, first prize winner in the voice contest, who has appeared on two previous occasions this summer at Tanglewood, and Stephen Kates, second prize winner in the cello contest, will perform on Saturday (Aug. 13). Sunday (Aug. 14) afternoon the second prize winners in the violin and piano competitions, Masuko Ushioda of Japan and the American pianist Misha Dichter, will be soloists with Erich Leisdorf and the Boston Symphony orchestra. Sixten Ehrling, Music Director of the Detroit Symphony orchestra, will be guest conductor at Friday's (August 12) Berkshire Festival concert.

Mr. Ehrling, who makes his Tanglewood debut at the Friday concert, will conduct Symphony No. 1 by Jean Sibelius and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Erich Leinsdorf will begin Saturday's program with Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis, and then present cellist Stephen Kates in the Shostakovitch Cello Concert. After the intermission Jane Marsh will join the Orchestra for a performance of Lisa's Scene and Arioso from Tchaikovsky's "The Queen of Spades." Miss Marsh will also be heard in Verdi's Introduction, Willow Song, and Ave Maria from "Otello." Mr. Leinsdorf will close the concert with Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Gotterdammerung."

On Sunday afternoon the concert will begin with two work played by the Orchestra, the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin" and Brahms' Symphony No. 1. Masuko Ushioda will then be heard in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2. Prior to the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1, played by Misha Dichter, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Little Blue Devil and The Twittering Machine from Gunther Schuller's Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee.

Sunday afternoon's complete concert will be televised live and in color from Tanglewood by the National Broadcasting Company. This will mark the first occasion that a full length concert has been televised in color from the Berkshire Festival.

Friday evening's (August 12) Weekend Prelude at 7:00 p.m. will begin the Tchaikovsky weekend with Paul Hersh, Peter Marsh and Donald McCall performing the Russian composer's Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello. The Preludes, provided at no extra cost to those holding tickets to the Friday concerts, have been attended each Friday by audiences of more than 2500 people.

The Lenox Quartet will give the sixth program in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series Tuesday (August 9) evening in the Theatre.

On Wednesday (August 10) the Gala Evening benefit program for the Berkshire Music Center will take place beginning at 3:30 p.m. with continuous performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center.

BRADENTON, FLA.
HERALD
D. 17,500

AUG 1 1966

ON TV: AN AFTERNOON AT TANGLEWOOD — A Bershire Festival concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be colorcast live on the NBC Television Network Sunday, Aug. 14, in a 2½-hour program direct from Tanglewood, the orchestra's permanent Summer home at Lenox, Mass. The program, "An Afternoon at Tanglewood," is designed to give TV viewers a "total experience" of the event. Erich Leindorf (top) will conduct the concert, which will originate in the open-sided 6,027-seat Music Shed. Many auditors (bottom) picnic on the great lawn outside before or after the concert.

NBC Features Symphony Music At Tanglewood

Two winners of the Third International Tchaikovsky Competition, held last month in Moscow, will appear as soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "An Afternoon at Tanglewood," an NBC News color special on the NBC Television Network Sunday, Aug. 14 (2:30 - 5 p.m. NYT).

They are Misha Dichter, a 20-year-old pianist from Beverly Hills, Calif., and Miss Masuko Yushioda, a 19-year-old violinist from Japan. The two were among 240 young musicians from 37 countries who entered the month - long contest in hopes of launching professional careers with victories in the world - famous competition.

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the 2½-hour Aug. 14 concert, which will be colorcast live direct from the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the orchestra's permanent Summer home at Lenox, Mass.

Dichter will be soloist with the orchestra in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat, and Miss Yushioda will be soloist with the orchestra in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G. The balance of the concert will be made up of the Prelude to Act 3 of Wagner's "Lohengrin," Brahm's Symphony No. 1, and Ravel's "Alborada del Gracioso."

Dichter, who studies at the Juilliard School of Music in New York, finished second to a 16-year-old Soviet pianist in the competition, but was accorded the greatest ovation at the Tchaikovsky International Piano Competition since Van Cliburn won the first contest in 1958. The audience seemed to think Dichter should have been named first - place winner, shouting "Bravo!" and "First prize, first prize!" when he accepted his second - place silver medal. Dichter, born in Shanghai, was brought to the United States in 1948.

Miss Yushioda won second place in the violin competition, the first prize going to a 19-year-old Soviet performer.

During the intermission NBC News correspondent Edwin Newman will interview the two soloists as well as Mr. Leinsdorf. George A. Heinemann will produce the program for NBC News. Ted Nathanson will be the director, and June Reig will write the script.

THE PROGRAM

Prelude to Act 3 of "Lohengrin" — Wagner
Symphony No. 1 — Brahms
Intermission
Violin Concerto No. 2 in G — Prokofiev
Alborada del Gracioso—Ravel
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat — Tchaikovsky.

122

BRISTOL, VA.
VIRGINIA-TENNESSEAN
D. 8,500
JULY 2 1966

Youngstown Vindicator
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
D. 95,619 SUN. 147,389
JULY 1 9 1966

The Clarion-Ledger
Jackson Daily News
For Mississippians
SUN. 99,491
AUG 1 4 1966

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 7,626
JUN 2 5 1966

GOSHEN, IND.
NEWS
D. 10,000
JUNE 1 1 1966

NBC To Telecast Symphony From Tanglewood Festival

The National Broadcasting Company will present a live colorcast of a Berkshire Festival concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a two-hour program direct from Tanglewood, the orchestra's permanent Summer home at Lenox, Mass., Sunday, Aug. 14, from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., on the NBC Television Network.

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the concert, which will feature winners of the Third International Tchaikovsky Competition, now under way in Moscow, as soloists.

The program, designed to give TV viewers a "total experience" of Tanglewood, will be the first network telecast of a Tanglewood concert, the first live telecast of a Tanglewood concert, and the first colorcast of a Boston Symphony concert anywhere.

NBC News correspondent Edwin Newman will be the program commentator, and the intermission features will include an interview by Newman with Erich Leinsdorf. George A. Heinemann will produce the program for NBC News. Ted Nathanson will be the director, and June Reig will write the script.

The concert will originate in the open-sided 6,037-seat Music Shed, opened in 1938 and known for its fine natural acoustics. Thousands of additional listeners hear the concerts while seated on the surrounding lawns.

Color cameras will range over the 210-acre Tanglewood estate where in the surroundings of formal gardens, hemlock hedges, avenues of tall pine and great lawns, the Boston Symphony Orchestra each Summer gives a series of 24 Berkshire Festival concerts during an eight-week period. Before and after the concerts many auditors picnic on the grounds and ramble through the formal gardens.

The Aug. 14 concert will include two Tchaikovsky works (one of them a concerto) and selections by other composers. Details of the concert and the soloists will be announced soon.

Young musicians from 37 countries are now in Moscow hoping to launch international professional careers with victories in the month-long Third International Tchaikovsky Competition. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has invited the first prize-winners in each of four categories. Pianists, violinists, cellists and singers are taking part in the competition, the singers for the first time. In all, 240 entries have been registered, including 44 Americans.

The success of the Competition, held every four years, has been spectacular. The American pianist Van Cliburn was a winner in 1958 and his victory was a major element in making the competition world-famous. The British pianist John Ogden was a winner in 1962.

If a 1966 first-prize winner cannot the Boston Symphony Orchestra's invitation or is not permitted to enter this country (as in the case of Communist Chinese, for example), the invitation will go to the second prize winner.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is represented by Seven Arts Television in its TV activities.

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 839,735 SUN. 1,175,326
JUN 1 6 1966

The Toledo Times
TOLEDO, OHIO
D. 30,958
JUN 1 4 1966

The Cleveland Press
D. 370,759
JULY 2 7 1966

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 49,594
JUL 1 9 1966

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 273,288 SUN. 315,098
JUN 1 4 1966

Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 81,654
JUN 1 4 1966

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 839,735 SUN. 1,175,396
AUG 1 4 1966

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUN 1 5 1966

THE GARY POST-TRIBUNE
NORTHWEST INDIANA'S LEADING NEWSPAPER
D. 67,500 SUN. 67,832
AUG 1 1 1966

The Cincinnati Post
AND TIMES-STAR
D. 204,797
JUN 1 7 1966

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
JUL 3 0 1966

SANTA ANA, CALIF.
REGISTER (EVENING)
D. 67,000
JULY 9 1966

BRIDGETON, N. J.
NEWS
D. 11,500
AUG 1 3 1966

NEW YORK POST
Monday, June 27, 1966

Newsday
GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
D. 400,134
JUN 1 4 1966

BIDDEFORD, MAINE
SACO JOURNAL
D. 9,000
JUL 1 6 1966

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Saturday, July 2, 1966

Albany Knickerbocker News
Wednesday, June 15, 1966

RECORD AMERICAN, BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 13, 1966

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836
JUN 1 3 1966

MOTION PICTURE DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 3,800
JUN 1 6 1966

SUNBURY, PA.
ITEM
D. 21,500
JUL 2 3 1966

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEW YORK
D. 80,159 SUN. 86,582
JUN 1 4 1966

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,058
JUN 1 3 1966

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
JUN 1 3 1966

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 98,605
JUN 1 1 1966

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
JUN 1 3 1966

CLARKSVILLE, TENN.
LEAF-CHRONICLE
D. 10,500
JULY 1 7 1966

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Saturday, June 11, 1966

ITHACA JOURNAL
Saturday, August 13, 1966

Tanglewood concert aired Sunday on 40

Sunday at 2:30 p.m. the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take off its coat, loosen its tie and give another Berkshire Festival concert from its summer home at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. But Sunday, for the first time, television viewers tuned to NBC, Channel 40, will be among the audience in the Music Shed and on the grounds.

It's the first network telecast of a Tanglewood concert, the first live telecast of a Tanglewood concert and the first time the Boston Symphony has shown up on television in its true colors.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director for the Boston Symphony, will conduct and two winners of the Third International Tchaikovsky Competition, a violinst and a pianist, will appear as soloists. That's the contest Van Cliburn won in 1958.

The pianist is 20-year-old Misha Dichter, who will play the Tschaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat. He studied at the Juilliard School in New York and came in second at the Tschaikovsky competition (a 16-year-old Soviet pianist won).

Miss Yasuko Ushioda is the violin soloist. She will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G. She's 20, lives in Japan and was also beaten out of first place by a Soviet performer.

Both soloists and the conductor will be interviewed during intermission by NBC's delightful newsman Edwin Newman.

★ ★ ★

The concert program is:

Prelude to Act 3 of Lohengrin ..... Wagner
Symphony No. 1 ..... Brahms
Violin Concerto No. 2 in G ..... Prokofiev
Two excerpts from Seven Studies on Themes by Paul Klee ..... Gunther Schuller
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat ..... Tchaikovsky

★ ★ ★

NBC insists the telecast is planned to give viewers a "total experience" of Tanglewood. This probably means the cameras will take in everything — the orchestra from every angle, the audience and the 210-acre Tanglewood estate grounds including its formal gardens.

In the unlikely event the music doesn't please you, the scenery certainly should. NBC gets an A for this bright idea.

KIT SNEDAKER

AMARILLO, TEXAS
GLOBE TIMES
D. 40,000
AUG 1 2 1966

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 1 3 1966

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
AUG 1 3 1966

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 133,303
AUG 1 4 1966

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
AUG 1 1 1966

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836
AUG 1 4 1966

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
AUG 1 4 1966

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 1 3 1966

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
SUN-BULLETIN
D. 29,000
AUG 1 3 1966

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
AUG 1 4 1966

Lubbock Avalanche Journal
LUBBOCK, TEXAS
D. 61,523 SUN. 72,969
AUG 1 4 1966

Nashville Banner
NASHVILLE, TENN.
D. 99,525
AUG 1 3 1966

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 1 4 1966

122

NBC To Telecast Symphony From Tanglewood Festival

The National Broadcasting Company will present a live colorcast of a Berkshire Festival concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a two-hour program direct from Tanglewood, the orchestra's permanent Summer home at Lenox, Mass., Sunday, Aug. 14, from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., on the NBC Television Network.

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the concert, which will feature winners of the Third International Tchaikovsky Competition, now under way in Moscow, as soloists.

The program, designed to give TV viewers a "total experience" of Tanglewood, will be the first network telecast of a Tanglewood concert, the first live telecast of a Tanglewood concert, and the first colorcast of a Boston Symphony concert anywhere.

NBC News correspondent Edwin Newman will be the program commentator, and the intermission features will include an interview by Newman with Erich Leinsdorf. George A. Heinemann will produce the program for NBC News. Ted Nathanson will be the director, and June Reig will write the script.

The concert will originate in the open-sided 6,037-seat Music Shed, opened in 1938 and known for its fine natural acoustics. Thousands of additional listeners hear the concerts while seated on the surrounding lawns.

Color cameras will range over the 210-acre Tanglewood estate where in the surroundings of formal gardens, hemlock hedges, avenues of tall pine and great lawns, the Boston Symphony Orchestra each Summer gives a series of 24 Berkshire Festival concerts during an eight-week period. Before and after the concerts many auditors picnic on the grounds and ramble through the formal gardens.

The Aug. 14 concert will include two Tchaikovsky works (one of them a concerto) and selections by other composers. Details of the concert and the soloists will be announced soon.

Young musicians from 37 countries are now in Moscow hoping to launch international professional careers with victories in the month-long Third International Tchaikovsky Competition. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has invited the first prize-winners in each of four categories. Pianists, violinists, cellists and singers are taking part in the competition, the singers for the first time. In all, 240 entries have been registered, including 44 Americans.

The success of the Competition, held every four years, has been spectacular. The American pianist Van Cliburn was a winner in 1958 and his victory was a major element in making the competition world-famous. The British pianist John Ogden was a winner in 1962.

If a 1966 first-prize winner cannot the Boston Symphony Orchestra's invitation or is not permitted to enter this country (as in the case of Communist Chinese, for example), the invitation will go to the second prize winner.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is represented by Seven Arts Television in its TV activities.

Tanglewood concert aired Sunday on 40

Sunday at 2:30 p.m. the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take off its coat, loosen its tie and give another Berkshire Festival concert from its summer home at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. But Sunday, for the first time, television viewers tuned to NBC, Channel 40, will be among the audience in the Music Shed and on the grounds.

It's the first network telecast of a Tanglewood concert, the first live telecast of a Tanglewood concert and the first time the Boston Symphony has shown up on television in its true colors.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director for the Boston Symphony, will conduct and two winners of the Third International Tchaikovsky Competition, a violinst and a pianist, will appear as soloists. That's the contest Van Cliburn won in 1958.

The pianist is 20-year-old Misha Dichter who will play the Tschaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat. He studied at the Juilliard School in New York and came in second at the Tschaikovsky competition (a 16-year-old Soviet pianist won).

Miss Yasuko Ushioda is the violin soloist. She will play Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G. She's 20, lives in Japan and was also beaten out of first place by a Soviet performer.

Both soloists and the conductor will be interviewed during intermission by NBC's delightful newsman Edwin Newman.

★ ★ ★

The concert program is:

Prelude to Act 3 of Lohengrin ..... Wagner
Symphony No. 1 ..... Brahms
Violin Concerto No. 2 in G ..... Prokofiev
Two excerpts from Seven Studies on Themes by Paul Klee ..... Gunther Schuller
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat ..... Tchaikovsky

★ ★ ★

NBC insists the telecast is planned to give viewers a "total experience" of Tanglewood. This probably means the cameras will take in everything — the orchestra from every angle, the audience and the 210-acre Tanglewood estate grounds including its formal gardens.

In the unlikely event the music doesn't please you, the scenery certainly should. NBC gets an A for this bright idea.

KIT SNEDAKER

BRISTOL, VA. VIRGINIA-TENNESSEAN D. 8,500 — JULY 2 1966

Youngstown Vindicator, YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO D. 95,619 SUN. 147,389 — JULY 19 1966

The Clarion-Ledger Jackson Daily News, For Mississippians SUN. 99,491 — AUG 14 1966

THE TROY RECORD, TROY, N.Y. — JUN 25 1966

GOSHEN, IND. NEWS D. 10,000 — JUNE 11 1966

JUN 16 1966

The Cleveland Press D. 370,759 — JULY 27 1966

HOUSTON CHRONICLE D. 273,288 SUN. 315,038 — JUN 14 1966

Los Angeles Times, LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST D. 839,735 SUN. 1,175,396 — AUG 14 1966

JUN 17 1966

BRIDGETON, N.J. NEWS D. 11,500 — AUG 13 1966

BIDDEFORD, MAINE SACO JOURNAL D. 9,000 — JUL 16 1966

Enterprise & Times (e) BROCKTON, Mass. Circ. 49,594 — JUL 19 1966

Post (e) BRIDGEPORT, Conn. Circ. 81,654 — JUN 14 1966

Transcript (e) NORTH ADAMS, Mass. Circ. 13,503 — JUN 15 1966

Traveler (e) BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 146,293 — JUL 30 1966

NEW YORK POST Monday, June 27, 1966

ALBANY TIMES UNION Saturday

Albany Knickerbocker News Wednesday, June 15, 1966

THE GARY POST-TRIBUNE, NORTHWEST INDIANA'S LEADING NEWSPAPER D. 67,500 SUN. 67,832 — AUG 11 1966

SANTA ANA, CALIF. REGISTER (EVENING) D. 67,000 — JULY 9 1966

Newsday, GARDEN CITY, N.Y. D. 403,[illegible] — JUN 14 1966

RECORD AMERICAN, BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 13, 1966

DAILY NEWS, NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836 — JUN 13 1966

MOTION PICTURE DAILY NEW YORK, N.Y. D. 3,800 — JUN 16 1966

SUNBURY, PA. ITEM D. 21,500 — JUL 23 1966

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH, NEW YORK, N.Y. — JUN 14 1966

Evening Globe BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 149,058 — JUN 13 1966

Times (m) NEW YORK, N.Y. Circ. 635,619 — JUN 13 1966

News (e) SPRINGFIELD, Mass. Circ. 98,605 — JUN 11 1966

Traveler (e) BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 146,293 — JUN 13 1966

CLARKSVILLE, TENN. LEAF-CHRONICLE D. 10,500 — JULY 17 1966

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS Saturday, June 11, 1966

ITHACA JOURNAL Saturday, August 13, 1966

AMARILLO, TEXAS GLOBE TIMES D. 40,000 — AUG 12 1966

Herald American, SYRACUSE, N.Y. D. 133,303 — AUG 14 1966

SUNDAY NEWS, NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER SUN. 3,070,836 — AUG 14 1966

BINGHAMTON, N.Y. SUN-BULLETIN D. 29,000 — AUG 13 1966

Nashville Banner, NASHVILLE, TENN. D. 99,525 — AUG 13 1966

Transcript (e) NORTH ADAMS, Mass. Circ. 13,503 — AUG 13 1966

Herald (m) BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 159,508 — AUG 11 1966

Sunday Standard-Times NEW BEDFORD, Mass. Circ. 56,795 — AUG 14 1966

Sunday Globe BOSTON, Mass. Circ. 532,600 — AUG 14 1966

Sunday Republican SPRINGFIELD, Mass. Circ. 115,966 — AUG 14 1966

Item (e) LYNN, Mass. Circ. 34,355 — AUG 13 1966

Berkshire Eagle (e) PITTSFIELD, Mass. Circ. 29,404 — AUG 13 1966

Lubbock Avalanche Journal, LUBBOCK, TEXAS D. 61,523 SUN. 72,000 — AUG 14 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 155,060

AUG 9 1966
Boston Trav

123

NBC Tried To Sell Tanglewood Concert Live---No Takers

By ELEANOR ROBERTS
Traveler Television Editor

There were no takers!

For three months, NBC-TV has been trying to sell one of the most auspicious cultural events of the summer season.

But the two-and-a-half-hour colorcast of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Berkshire Festival concert, "live" from Tanglewood, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and featuring two of the winners of the Third International Tchaikovsky Competition, which will be seen Sunday on Ch. 4, 2:30-5 p.m., went begging.

OFFERED SHOW FOR $140,000

"We offered it for $140,000 with 12 commercial positions," NBC producer George A. Heinemann told me in an interview from Tanglewood, yesterday. "But no one was interested so we're carrying it on a sustaining basis."

Despite the cultural renaissance slated for fall, with all three networks in a race for prestige, advertisers are unwilling to lay their money on the line, even for a TV event of such magnitude, in the summertime.

"An Afternoon from Tanglewood," which will originate in the open-sided 6,027-seat Music Shed at Lenox, is not only a distinguished event but a king-sized operation.

"We're using five color cameras and we have a crew of 35," Heinemann explained. "One camera will be mounted on an electric-driven truck so we can roam the 210-acre Tanglewood estate to get the audience reaction and pick up the colorful groups who attend the concert without disturbing them. We have 1,300 feet of cable on the camera so we can get plenty of range."

Lighting the orchestra and the first five rows of the audience is one of the major problems. But Heinemann, who produced the Boston Symphony Orchestra's magnificent performance of Mozart's Requiem Mass — a memorial tribute to the late President John F. Kennedy at Holy Cross Cathedral in January of 1964 — is an expert at hurdling such difficulties.

"One of our biggest headaches is photographing the 110-piece orchestra since the men wear white suits which do not televise well," he said. "But I could hardly ask them to dye the suits blue for the occasion.

"What we're really trying to do is bring Tanglewood to television in all its natural beauty and not TV to Tanglewood. We want this to be a total experience — a blend of nature and music — for the viewers."

No restrictions have been placed on this first live telecast of a Tanglewood concert.

"Nobody could be more cooperative than Erich Leinsdorf," he said. "What a dynamo! We both have the same goal. We want the concert to bring pleasure to viewers who rarely tune in a symphony yet bring satisfaction to the true music buff."

DICHTER, YUSHIODA ARE SOLOISTS

The two soloists featured in "An Afternoon at Tanglewood" are Misha Dichter, pianist, and Miss Masuko Yushioda, violinist. Dichter finished second to a 16-year-old Soviet pianist in the Tchaikovsky International Piano Competition and Miss Yushioda won second place in the violin competition.

During the intermission, NBC correspondent Edwin Newman will interview Mr. Leinsdorf and the famous conductor will interview the two winners. The program will feature the music of Wagner, Brahms, Prokofiev, Ravel and Tchaikovsky.

Since playing the villain in a "Batman" episode has become the "in" thing to do — drawing some of the stage and screen's biggest names — fees have dropped from $5,000 to $2,500.

"It's such awful nonsense I wouldn't do it anyhow," John Carridine, the distinguished star of Broadway and Hollywood, remarked with a sniff, after imparting this tid-bit of information at a WNAC luncheon, yesterday.

Carridine, who is best known for his brilliant Shakespearian repertoire and has been featured in more than 300 films, will host Ch. 7's next Sunday night series, "The Hitler Story — Germany's Blackest Hour."

The series, which starts Aug. 28 in the 11:15 p.m. time slot, will feature such films as "Hitler with Richard Basehart; "Mein Kampf," a 1961 documentary narrated by Claude Stephenson; "Man Hunt" in which Carridine appeared with Walter Pidgeon, George Sanders and Joan Bennett; "Plot to Assassinate Hitler," with Maximilian Schell; "The Bridge"; "The Last Ten Days of Adolf Hitler," starring Oskar Werner; "The excutioners" and "Operation Eichmann."

ERICH LEINSDORF conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra at Berkshire Festival Concert from Tangelwood. Show will be seen Sunday from 2:30-5 p.m. Sunday.

One of the few actors who willingly reveals his age — he's 60 — Carridine explained that he did very little television. "For $350 they can get anyone for some of these series," he remarked. "They don't need me. When they have a strong role that requires acting, they can use me. In the old days of live television when they were doing 'Climax' and 'Studio One' it was exciting.

"Today, an hour television show is like a B movie only they take five days to make instead of two weeks."

Carridine, who has appeared in "Branded;" "Jesse James" and has done a "Beverly Hillbillies" and a "Munsters" show was frank about his reasons for doing "Beverly Hillbillies." "I'm a working actor," he said with a grin. "Even if it's junk you do your best."

Like any proud father he spent most of the interview talking about his son, David, who has the title role in ABC-TV's "Shane," which debuts Sept. 10 on Ch. 7.

LUCI JOHNSON'S WEDDING drew an audience of 55 million viewers last Saturday, a national Arbitron ratings survey revealed. The TV coverage was superb. NBC led with 13.9, CBS pulled in close with a 13.5 and ABC dragged with a 5.0.

NBC's NANCY DICKERSON, a favorite of the Johnsons, had the inside track and did the most outstanding job. But there were chuckles from the more sophisticated who enjoyed the CBS-TV special on Saturday evening with its sharp, unsentimental comentary by Harry Reasoner.

JOEY BISHOP'S late night ABC-TV show won't start until April but its a complete sell-out already.

FILMED AS BOUND

124

Newsday
GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
D. 400,124
AUG 13 1966

WHISTON PRESS CLIPPING SERVICE
BUFFALO, N. Y.
Buffalo, N. Y.
Evening News
AUG 13 1966

CASUAL CULTURE. Erick Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra, top photo, which will give a 2½-hour televised concert tomorrow from the big music shed at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home at Lenox, Mass. NBC's live colorcast will be seen on Ch. 4 at 2:30 PM. In bottom photo, outdoors-and-music lovers take their ease outside the music shed before a Tanglewood concert.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,500
BROOKLYN BAY NEWS
Saturday, August 13, 1966
AUG 13 1966

AND A ONE, AND A TWO: Sixten Ehrling (l.), director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will be gust conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass. Friday evening, Aug. 12. Masuko Ushioda, 23, second prize winner at the 1966 Tchaikovsky Competition in the Violin Division, will perform at Tanglewood two nights later, August 14. This will be her first American appearance since she captured the prize.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737
AUG 21 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY AT TANGLEWOOD
WCRO-FM broadcast, Saturday night at 8 o'clock

Sunday News
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 12,259
AUG 14 1966

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEW YORK
D. 80,159 SUN. 86,532
JULY 30 1966

Sunday Telegram
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 105,712
JUL 31 1966

AN AFTERNOON AT TANGLEWOOD—ON TV—A live colorcast of a [illegible] concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented on the NBC Television Network Sunday, Aug. 14, in a 2½-hour program direct from Tanglewood, the orchestra's permanent Summer home at Lenox, Mass. The program, "An Afternoon at Tanglewood," is designed to give TV viewers a "total experience" of the event. Erich Leinsdorf (top) will conduct the concert, which will originate in the open-sided 6,027-seat Music Shed.

Press
NAHANT, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,200
AUG 4 1966

Saugus Press
SAUGUS, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,500
AUG 4 1966

TV: AN AFTERNOON AT TANGLEWOOD—A [illegible]rkshire Festival concert of the Boston [illegible]mphony Orchestra will be colorcast live on [illegible] NBC Television Network Sunday, August 14, [illegible] a 2 1/2 hour program direct from Tanglewood, the orchestra's permanent Summer home at Lenox, Mass. The WBZ-TV program, "An Afternoon at Tanglewood," is designed to give TV viewers a "total experience" of the event. Erich Leinsdorf [illegible] will conduct the concert, which will originate in the open-sided 6,027-seat Music Shed. Many auditors (right) picnic on the great lawn outside before or after the concert.

125

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
AUG 7 1966

ATHENS, GA.
BANNER-HERALD
D. 7,500 S. 8,000
AUG 14 1966

TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, August 13, 1966

ONEONTA, N. Y.
STAR
D. 15,500
AUG 13 1966

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,817
AUG 13 1966

CHICO, CALIF.
ENTERPRISE-RECORD
D. 16,000
JULY 30 1966

TV INDEX
GREEN BAY, WIS.
E. O. MONTH 3,500
AUG 6 1966

GALVESTON, TEXAS
NEWS
D. 18,000
AUG 14 1966

SYRACUSE POST STANDARD
Saturday, August 13, 1966

An Afternoon at Tanglewood on TV NE

A Berkshire Festival concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be colorcast live on the NBC-TV network from 2:30 to 5 p.m. tomorrow direct from Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home at Lenox, Mass. Erich Leinsdorf, top, will conduct the concert which will originate in the open-sided 6,027-seat music shed. Many auditors picnic on the great lawn outside before or after the concert.

AFTERNOON AT TANGLEWOOD — A live colorcast of a Berkshire Festival concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented on NBC Aug. 14, in a 2½-hour program direct from Tanglewood. The program, "An Afternoon at Tanglewood," is designed to give TV viewers a "total experience" of the event. Erich Leinsdorf (top) will conduct the concert, which will originate in the open-sided 6,027-seat Music Shed. Many auditors (bottom) listen on the great lawn outside.

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,882
AUG 6 1966

INFORMAL LISTENING — There's nothing like Tanglewood . . . inside the Music Shed or out on the lawn, with your family or your girl all set up for a picnic. Next Sunday is the concluding concert of the Berkshire Festival. Relaxing under the tall pines at the edge of the lawn in a good way to spend next Sunday afternoon, but if you can't make it, NBC will bring Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony to you on Ch. 4 from 2:30 to 5 p.m. That's a week away.

VANCOUVER, WASH.
COLUMBIAN
D. 26,500
AUG 12 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PLAY

A Berkshire Festival concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be telecast live and in color Sunday at 2:30 p.m. over Channel 8. Erich Leinsdorf, above, will conduct the 2½-hour concert which will originate in the open-sided 6,027-seat Music Shed at Tanglewood, the orchestra's permanent summer home in Lennox, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PARK EAST
W. CIRC. N. AVAIL.
AUG 11 1966

Photo by Whitestone

Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony in works by Hindemith and Tchaikovsky this weekend at the Berkshire Festival.

12e

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 15 1966

NBC Telecasts 'An Afternoon at Tanglewood'

Whitestone

Color TV cameras were set up at several sites in the shed and on the grounds at Tanglewood while NBC broadcast yesterday's concert live and in color over the national network. The program included taped interviews with BSO conductor Erich Leinsdorf and yesterday's soloists. Attendance at Sunday's concert was 8,903.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
FORWARD TIMES
W. 26,772

AUG 6 1966

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

AUG 15 1966

Whitestone

TANGLEWOOD SOLOISTS this weekend were these three winners of second prizes at the recent Tchaicovsky Music Competition in Moscow. Left to right, they are Stephen Kates of New York City; Masuko Ushioda of Tovko, Japan. Misha Dichter of Los Angeles.

The Shreveport Times
SHREVEPORT, LA.
D. 90,294 SUN. 114,868

AUG 14 1966

All Winners

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS: Veronica Tyler, Jan Marsh and Simon Estes, the three American prize winners in the recent Tchaikovsky voice competion in Moscow, made their first United States concert appearances since the contest with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, here, July 24. Miss Marsh is the only American first prize winner since 1958. Miss Tyler was awarded second prize and Estes third prize in the Moscow contest.

Boston Symphony Orchestra members play under the elms on a live color telecast beginning 1:30 p.m. today over KTAL-TV in Shreveport. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra at Tanglewood, the group's permanent summer home in Lenox, Mass. The program will be classical music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,378
AUG 11 1966

THE POST-STANDARD
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 99,877 SUN. 246,935
AUG 13 1966

MASUKO USHIODA, Second Prize winner at the 1966 Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow in the Violin Division will play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, Aug. 14, at the Berkshire Music Festival, Lennox, Mass. Miss Ushioda will play the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 in G. Minor. This is her first American appearance since winning in the competition.

STEVEN KATES, second prize winner of the 1966 Tchaikovsky Competition in the Cello Division will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday, Aug. 13, at the Berkshire Music Festival, Lenox, Mass. He will play the Shostakovitch Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 107. This is his first American appearance since winning in the competition in Moscow.

An Afternoon at Tanglewood on TV

A Berkshire Festival concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be colorcast live on the NBC-TV network from 2:30 to 5 p.m. tomorrow direct from Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home at Lenox, Mass. Erich Leinsdorf, top, will conduct the concert which will originate in the open-sided 6,027-seat music shed. Many auditors picnic on the great lawn outside before or after the concert.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 13 1966

Whitestone

NATIONAL BROADCAST in color over the NBC television network will carry tomorrow afternoon's concert at Tanglewood live from 2:30 to 5. James Kiley, superintendent of grounds at Tanglewood, operates fork lift truck for NBC cameraman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 1,200
AUG 11 1966

Tanglewood

MASUKO USHIODA, Second Prize winner at the 1966 Tchaikovsky Competition in the Violin Division, will play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the program. This is Miss Ushioda's first American appearance since winning the competition this weekend were prizes at the recent in Moscow. Left to York City; Masuko of Los Angeles.

Whitestone

under the elms p.m. today over will conduct the manent summer classical music.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 11 1966

Jane Marsh

Music Mightier Than Missiles

By LINDA A. WINSLOW

One of America's newest and most effective Cold War weapons is 24-year-old Jane Marsh, the girl whose lovely soprano voice brought down the house during the final round of the voice competition at the recent Tchaikovsky International Music Contest in Moscow. It also brought her a first prize in the contest—the first for an American since Van Cliburn won the piano competition in 1958—and countless scores of new Russian friends who "can't wait" until she comes back.

For that matter, neither can Jane, who will be making her third appearance of the season at Tanglewood Friday. The tall, regal-looking brunette (she stands 5 feet 11 inches in her stocking feet) is planning to return to Russia this winter to appear with the Bolshoi Opera—and to renew her acquaintance with the people she "really hated to leave." "Moscow," she says, "is the one place in which I was able to thoroughly enjoy myself without having to try."

Bilingual People-Lover

Listening to Jane speak, it is difficult to imagine her ever really having to try to enjoy herself. She is a person who seems to genuinely delight in meeting other people—and lets them know it. Possessing a happy facility for learning languages, she is capable of expressing her natural warmth and friendliness fluently in German and Italian, "muddles through" in Russian and French. "I hated having to speak English for a while in Russia," the California-born singer remarks. "Ordinarily, I love to just get out and try to speak the language of whatever country I am in—even if I have to flounder."

This determination to adapt herself to new situations and surroundings, undaunted by the natural mistakes of inexperience, characterizes Jane's personality as a whole. An unusually well-poised, self-confident young woman, she turned down an offer to do graduate work in psychology following her graduation from Oberlin College in Ohio, "suddenly decided" to go into music instead, and struck out on her own for New York. Just three years later, the professional status she has presently attained is eloquent testimony to her ability and her determination, both of which she possesses in abundance.

Excellent Athlete

The only person who doesn't marvel at Jane's rapid climb to musical success is Jane, who appears to have made a lifelong habit of "looking at myself objectively," taking stock of her capabilities, and then developing them to the fullest degree. An avid swimmer, she was considered an Olympic team prospect while in high school. She is also an excellent horsewoman, having shown her own horse in registered shows all over the country.

Jane's Friday night appearance at Tanglewood will be her final one there this summer. She admits there is a warm spot in her heart for both the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with which she made her professional debut in a concert in Boston last October, and for its director, Erich Leinsdorf, whose recommendation to the State Department was one of several responsible for Jane's invitation to participate in the Moscow competition. As far as Mr. Leinsdorf is concerned, the affection is mutual. According to Jane, when the news of her victory reached him, "He was as excited as if I were his own daughter."

Librizzi

Jane Marsh chats on Tanglewood lawn

Mr. Leinsdorf certainly had just cause to feel something akin to parental pride in Jane's accomplishments. It was he who recognized her outstanding talent last year during an audition in New York and immediately signed her to perform the Beethoven Ninth Symphony for the opening concert of the BSO's 1965-66 season. Before she left for Moscow, Mr. Leinsdorf had also engaged her for two separate concert appearances at Tanglewood this summer. One of these was to have been the closing concert of the Berkshire Festival next weekend, a performance which Jane has since regretfully had to cancel because of another commitment to appear at the Hollywood Bowl in her native state that same weekend. Her additional appearances at Tanglewood this season were an unscheduled treat for both her and Mr. Leinsdorf, who had contracted with Moscow officials before the contest to have the winners perform with the BSO during the 1966 Berkshire Festival.

Wherever she goes from here — and at present the possibilities seem limitless — Jane is confident that the same philosophy which has served her so well thus far will continue to do so in the future. Her own explanation of this philosophy is founded on the premise, very emphatically stated, that "There is such a thing as intuition. Some people call instinct, or insight, she says, but however you label it, it involves the ability to "see into the future," to recognize one's own potentialities, and to know how to go about fulfilling them. This brand of "intuition" which Jane espouses is strengthened, not weakened, by the difficulties and setbacks encountered in the course of life. As she puts it, "Failures are nothing to be afraid of . . . they add to the very things that make your roots a little deeper."

In the case of this well-rounded, very gifted young musician, the "roots" are very deep already.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357
AUG 13 1966

Emphasis on Russian

Ehrling Conducts At Tanglewood

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — Sixten Ehrling, conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, soon to appear at the Worcester Festival in October, was the final guest conductor at Tanglewood for this season. He aroused last night's audience of 4,975 to prolonged excitement, which included cheers from the adults and shrill whistling from the younger music-lovers.

Gazette Review

The program, devoid of soloists, began the weekend's emphasis on Russian music by pitting the Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphony against the First of the great Finn, Sibelius. Tonight and tomorrow afternoon, Erich Leinsdorf will contrast music of Shosta-kovitch, Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky with that of various German, Italian and Americam composers. Winners in the recent competition at Moscow will appear, two tonight and two tomorrow.

Admirable soloists did appear last night in the Weekend Prelude at 7 o'clock, which drew several thousands to hear the Lenox Trio. Paul Hersh, piano, Peter Mahsh, violin, and Donald McCall, cello, play the famous Tchaikovsky "Piano Trio" in A minor.

Sibelius Symphony

Erhling's interpretation of Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E minor was tremendously vital and expressive. He captured both the ruggedness and the poetry of the music, always highly individual and by no means easy fare for players or listeners. Ehrling has a special affinity for winds and percussion and a range from smoothest phrasing to immense and crisp climaxes. His ability to shift without a break from tempo to tempo and from mood to mood placed the famous ensemble in its finest light, and left the ear tingling.

The Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4 in F minor was more familiar and easier for the average listener to absorb. The themes of fate became huge canvases, with graphic meaning. The beauties of the work were not forgotten or pressed to a too romantic vein. Nobility pervaded the performance and its leadership. Conducting, as throughout the evening, without score, Ehrling delighted the audience especially with his deft and dainty handling of the pizzicato strings in the third movement, and the ear-splitting but highly enjoyable explosions of drums, symbals and brasses in the finale.

Albany Knickerbocker News
Saturday, August 13, 1966

Week's Network Specials

Today

1:30 ⑩ WTEN SPECIAL
"What's In It for Me?" Public affairs program aimed at alerting area young people to the requirements of job hunting in today's world of modern technology.

Sunday

2:30 ⑥ NBC SPECIAL
(Color) "An Afternoon at Tanglewood." Colorcast live from the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, featuring concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 14, 1966

TV KEY PREVIEWS

Today's top television shows as previewed and selected by TV Key's staff of experts who attend rehearsals, watch screenings, and analyze scripts in New York and Hollywood.

2:30 P.M. ⑥ Special. "An Afternoon at Tanglewood." A treat for music lovers everywhere. Live from the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., NBC offers this special telecast of a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Two winners of the Third International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, a 20 year-old pianist from Beverly Hills, California, Misha Dichter, and 19 year-old violinist from Japan, Miss Masuko Ushioda, appear as soloists in the program; Mr. Dichter for Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat, and Miss Ushioda for Prokofief's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G. The Prelude to Act 3 of Wagner's opera "Lohengrin," Brahms' Symphony No. 1, and excerpts from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes by Paul Klee," make up the balance of the program. (COLOR)

129

Music: Ehrling Conducts The Boston Symphony

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Sixten Ehrling had a fine success last night at Tanglewood conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an opening conerto of the Berkshire Music Festival's seventh weekend.

Much of the same scholarly, energetic style was noted in Ehrling last night as experienced by Worcester audiences at the Worcester Music Festival where he conducted the Detroit Symphony Orchestra.

Last night's attendance was 4,975.

This weekend's Tanglewood programs are trained on the music and name of Tchaikovsky. Last night it —was Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Opus 36. The other work was an Ehrling specialty, Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E. Minor, Opus 39. The main concert's preliminary Friday night program, Weekend Prelude, beginning at 7 p.m. was Tchaikovsky's Trio in A Minor for Piano, Violin and Cello, Opus 50. Participants were Paul Hersh, piano, Peter Marsh, violin, and Donald McCall, cello.

Fine Cooperation

In the parade of guest conductors at Tanglewood this summer, none has received more conscientious cooperation from the Boston Symphony than Ehrling. It was particularly noticeable, not only in the ensembles, but the many solos of the Sibelius.

One might have expected this in the Sibelius, but not necessarily the Tchaikovsky, which has been a "specialty of the house" for the Boston Symphony since the Koussevitzky regime.

In a sense, the Sibelius and the Tchaikovsky were like twin mountain peaks: the first majestic, the second forbidding.

Ehrling knows both scores as well as he knows his own name. He conducted them from memory. During the collective movements, it takes but one weak link to break the chain of reactions. Ehrling did not permit this.

The surge and sweep of the Sibelius symphony's slow movements were matched by the high - pressured drive of the Third Movement and Finale. This was not bo the advantage of the Third movement, which sounded raced.

Gorgeous Tone

Gino Cioffi played the cornet solo as a promising opening statement. Then came a spontaneous series of developments. Tone was gorgeous. Ehrling kept the format clear.

The slo w movement was a field day for strings, woodwinds and harps. The sumptuous tonal colors of which this orchestra is capable must have been gratifying to the guest conductor.

Remainder of the symphony covered a wide panorama of effects from intended harshness to rhapsodic breadth.

In the Tchaikovsky Fourth, Ehrling built the work block by block, from the alarming "Fate" motif with which it begins. It is no easy matter to bring freedom of action to this symphony while maintaining a firm structure.

It was an emptional performance, reflecting the composer's morbid philosophy, and brief excursions into optimism. It was also extremely well played.

Soloist for tonight's concert is Jane Marsh, first prize vocal winner at the recent Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. She will be heard in arias by Tchaikovsky and Verdi.

Another Moscow winner will be Stephen Kates in the Shostakovich Cello Concerto. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in Hindemith's "Symphonic Metamorphosis," alos sequences from Wagner's opera, "Gotterdammerung."

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 61,129
AUG 13 1966

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 13 1966

Music Review

Ehrling Debuts at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Jan Sibelius wrote his First Symphony 15 years before he made his fleeting and only visit to Pittsfield, in 1914. He had come over from his native Finland to conduct a piece he had been commissioned to write by the philanthropic Stoeckel family, of Norfolk, Conn. for their annual Litchfield County Choral Society Festival.

A man singularly competent by reason of association with the composer and on the basis of experience with his music was the guest invited last night to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Sixten Ehrling was born in Sweden and is now musical director of the Detroit Symphony, but his authority in Sibelius' music derives from much more than mere propinquity. He played it with vehement assurance and a realization of it cosmic breadth.

* * *

THE EVENING was cool and fresh, and the orchestral tone was at its best. Ehrling demanded the orchestra's all, and there was a suspicion that what the Boston can deliver was more than the conductor has been accorded on other podiums, for the first movement was without a wide contrast of tone. In the succeeding movements he took greater note of the tonal potential and balance, and the andante was played with a deep and glorious sound.

In the opening statement of the symphony, Ehrling let the principal clarinetist Gino Cioffi play his solo with complete liberty and without interference, and he made it eloquent and spacious.

* * *

THE SECOND half of the program was to be the Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphony, not too dividual in their manner of far removed in time nor in language from the music which had preceded it last night. The two composers are of course in expression, but as program making it was the least ingenious sequence at Tanglewood in many a moon.

Sibelius has suffered from a lessening of attention and from a bit of blase indifference in recent years. Last year on the centennial of his birth there was a brief revival of interest in his music. Not since the regime of Koussevitzky has Sibelius been allotted a reasonable place in the Tanglewood programs. It was good both to hear it again last night and to hear it done so well.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 13 1966

Ehrling Shows Strong Hand At Tanglewood

Sibelius Symphony Conducted With Serious Intent

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—The bill of fare in the great shed at Tanglewood Friday night served the appetizer as well as the desert after intermission. All the meat and potatoes came first.

Sibelius Symphony

It was Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 conducted by Sixten Ehrling, 48, a Scandinavian of manifestly serious intent.

Ehrling has been regular conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra since 1961. Before that he was in Sweden first as student and last as conductor of the Royal Opera in Stockholm.

He is known in this area because of his annual visit with his orchestra to the Worcester Music Festival and an appearance a couple of years ago at Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley.

Ehrling is a compact, mobile man with a no-nonsense manner. He knows the Scandinavian repertory as thoroughly as he knows his mother's cooking and he shaped the Sibelius symphony with a strong hand.

It is strong music, full of sonorous brass, rumbling kettledrums and reverberating cellos and doublebasses. Ehrling let none of its strength escape.

Tchaikovsky No. 4

But to say that the main course was served first is not to say that all that followed intermission was merely canapes and cake.

It was Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4, which has a measure of similarity to the Sibelius, i.e., sections during which deeply sonorous passages alternate with light, lyrical woodwind passages.

Ehrling served up Tchaikovsky's popular war horse with care. He protected its floating melodies tenderly and kept the dramatics from becoming too theatrical, which was a blessing.

And, of course, there was the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a musical machine that produces wondrous tones no matter who is on the podium.

The program for the weekend prelude which started at 7 was taken up by the long Trio in A Minor for Piano, Violin and Cello, Op. 50 by Tchaikovsky.

Performers were three members of the Lenox Quartet, a widely known and well regarded string quartet which had its origins in the Berkshire Music Center a few years ago and which performed the regular Tuesday night chamber concert this week at Tanglewood.

They were able to play the trio because Paul Hersh, the quartet's violist, is also an accomplished pianist. The others were Peter Marsh, violin, and Donald McCall, cello.

They played with a vigorous, highly-spirited style that, combined with the vast space in the shed, eliminated the music's subtle details.

It was entertaining, even exciting, but it did not have the intimacy of chamber music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 14 1966

Tonsilitis Attacks Soprano Miss Marsh at Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—For a soprano, tonsillitis is an unfair malady. Jane Marsh was immobilized by it Saturday afternoon at Tanglewood.

First-Prize Winner

As a first-prize winner in the recent Tchaikovsky contests in Moscow, she was scheduled Saturday night to make her third appearance this summer with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf's direction.

A last-minute shuffle of the program brought in Veronica Tyler, a second-prize winner in the same Moscow contest, to repeat a couple of arias she sang on the same stage Wednesday for the annual Tanglewood "gala" audience.

Wednesday night, if we may repeat our one-word evaluation of that performance, she was magnificent. She sang the same way Saturday night.

Like Magic

It was like magic . . . pure, warm, golden tones soaring effortlessly, clean note articulation, secure pitch control, sensitive emotional expression.

Admittedly, she chose a couple of winning arias to sing. They were "Depuis le Jour" from "Louise" by Charpentier and "Si, Mi Chiamano Mimi" from "La Boheme" by Puccini.

But even winning arias have to be handled winningly to score. To put it simply, once more, they were beautiful.

Kates Cellist

The other soloist on the program, also a winner of a second prize at Moscow, was Stephen Kates, cellist. He played Shostakovitch's cello concerto, op. 107.

The tall, 23-year-old Kates loped on stage like a loose-jointed track star, busied himself with tuning his cello and, having signaled Leinsdorf he was ready, attacked the Shostakovitch concerto with frowning vigor.

His tense seriousness was in tune with the music. It is a tense, acrid work, full of busy buzzing and acid harmonies.

Flowing Lyricism

The second movement and the long solo cadenza (this time listed as a third movement) provides relief from some of the tension, but their flowing lyricism is laden with solemn seriousness.

Kates, as might be expected, played with technical virtuosity and youthful vitality. His tones were dry and businesslike (his fingers incredibly agile, his expression efficient and unemotional).

It was an exciting performance, rugged and stern.

Of the three orchestrial works on the program, Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, "Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey" from Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung" and Hindemith's "Symphonic Metamorphosis," the last named offered the most substance.

It also offered the most entertainment, which came to these ears, at least, as something of a surprise. In other hands it can be turgid and muddy. Saturday it was full of electricity.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

AUG 15 1966

The ARTS

Unhappy Selections at Tanglewood

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

LENOX — Three instrumentalists who took second prizes in the recent Moscow competition appeared with the Boston Symphony on Saturday and Sunday: the American cellist Stephen Kates, the Japanese violinist Masuko Ushioda, and the American pianist Misha Dichter.

Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted both concerts, chose the concertos, the Shostakovich for Cello, the Prokofiev No. 2 for Violin, and the Tchaikovsky No. 1 for piano, and having saddled the young players with such generally dreadful music, demonstrated that it is hard to tell much about a performer's abilities if he is given so little to do that is of musical interest.

Kates, a Leonard Rose pupil who played Saturday night was by far the most impressive of the three, and that even though the Shostakovich is a staggeringly bad composition. Vulgar ideas are mechanically dealt with, so much so that the listener is always a couple of beats, or even bars, ahead of Shostakovich, the surprises included, mainly because so many composers were ahead of him half a century earlier.

Whether or not Kates can play music I cannot, therefore, say or predict. I can, however, report that his playing in the Shostakovich bristled with virtuosity, that his intonation was secure, the tone was warm and even in all registers, that he was inclined to soft-edged attacks as though afraid of making a rough noise, and that his playing had a superb rhythmic vitality and dramatic verve.

It was Kates' vitality that set him apart from the other two players. The Prokofiev G Minor Violin Concerto is not as bad a piece as the Shostakovich for Cello, but is cheap and obvious enough even so, and the phony, contrived lyricism of the slow movement [illegible] the younger generation [illegible] it—is the most distressing feature of all. It requires lots of vigorous sawing from the violinist and Miss Ushioda went through all that dutifully, with care and accuracy, and with an attractive tone characterized by a nervous brancy. But where other violinists have struck sparks on some of the quirky rhythms and aggressive figurations or have successful suggested the gestures of a passionate singing manner, Miss Ushioda played notes that had no character and whose sequence had no life.

Dichter has a good technique that enables him to produce easy and fluent figurations, fast, sonorous, and clean octaves, and a rich, unpercussive tone. Because of Moscow and Tchaikovsky, Cliburn comes to mind. But what made Cliburn's performance of the Tchaikovsky after his Moscow triumph so remarkable was not just his exuberance and confidence, the vast tone, the easy technique, but also the musical feeling that gave those stunningly produced octave passages in the first movement such a grand shape and declamatory power and that maintained melodic tension even in the context of extreme physical quiet of the slow movement. Dichter's phrasing is unfailingly musical and, as standards for the Tchaikovsky go, he plays with taste. His rhythm is strong and accurate, but his playing is inclined to be stolid and, in spite of his hopefully suggestive name, prosaic.

The orchestral support was very good in the Tchaikovsky and Prokofiev concertos, but rather rough in the Shostakovich.

★

The soprano Jane Marsh, a first prize winner in Moscow, was to have sung Saturday night, but she was not well and Veronica Tyler who took second prize, replaced her, singing "Depuis Le Jour" from Charpentier's "Louise" and "Mi Chaimano Mimi" from Puccini's "La Boheme." The natural properties of Miss Tyler's delicate soprano are unusually lovely, but there is something dreadfully wrong with her technique so that the sound is clouded by vibration and her attack on high notes can be uncertain. I hope she can find her way out of these difficulties, for she is potentially a superb performer. "Depuis Le Jour" was stylish, atmospheric, altogether captivating the "Boheme" excerpt is, wrong for her, stylistically and linguistically, and while it was musical, its narrative parts were not effective. It suffered, too, from rhythmically shapeless playing, though the "Louise" aria was well accompanied.

Saturday's program also included Beethoven's Third "Leonore" Overture, Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis of Themes by Weber, and excerpts from Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung." Sunday's concert began with the Prelude to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin" and the Brahms Symphony No. 1 and between the concertos came the "Twittering Machine" and "Little Blue Devil" from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," in honor presumably, of Schuller's appointment as President of the New England Conservatory and his being given the 1966 Horblit Award.

★

Sunday's program was on N.B.C. television, and I watched part of the Brahms First on the screen instead of from the usual seat in the shed. The color was ghastly, the lavender-faced players seeming on the verge of apoplexy. Leinsdorf's performance of the Brahms was excellent, but the camera work was stupid, assuming to begin with that the people did not really want a performance of the symphony, but needed a counterpoint of visual entertainment, then having bad ideas, or none, as to what one ought to be looking at, indulging in cornball touches like the shots of treetops for what the director thought were the "inspiring" passages, and intruding with distracting little notices reading "Live from Tanglewood," "Boston Symphony" and "Symphony No. 1." Yeah, but whose?

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910

AUG 14 1966

MUSIC:

Veronica Tylet Sings At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's Berkshire Music Festival concert at Tanglewood was a showcase for two winners of the recent Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow.

It was not as planned, however.

Main soloist was to be Jane Marsh, winner of first prize in the Moscow Vocal Competition. She cancelled at the last moment because of a throat ailment. Her substitute was soprano Veronica Tyler, second winner in the same vocal competition.

Miss Tyler sang the same two arias with which she had such brilliant success at the Gala Concert here on Wednesday night.

They were "Depuis Le Jour" from Charpentier's opera, "Louise" and the Puccini aria, "My name is Mimi" from "La Boheme."

Last night's second soloist was Stephen Kates, second prize winner in the Cello Division of the Tchaikovsky Competition. He was heard in Shostakovich's Converto for Cello and Orchestra, Opus 107.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, gave both soloists superb accompaniements.

Because Miss Tyler's arias were considerably shorter than those scheduled for Miss Marsh, Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture, No. 3, Opus 72, was added to the program. It also consisted of Hindemith's "Symphonic Metamorphosis," and the "Dawn" and "Siegfried Rhine Journey" sequences from Wagner's opera "Die Gotterdammerung."

Kates is 23 years old and a native of New York City. His selection of the Shostakovich was risky. Not only does it digress from traditional construction, but the musical language tends to be hazy.

It was to be assumed that the young man has a dextrous technique. This proved to be so, except that his style was tense rather than intense, and the work apperared to be of magnified difficulty.

He did manifest strong impulses toward lyricism, a vibrant tone, and good carrying power. Some of the flair in his visual presentation leaned toward obvious devices of showmanship.

What Kates does not lack is youthful elan, and a sense of the theatrical. No matter how frequent the inaccuracies (and they were rather prolific in the bristling cadenza that passes for a separate movement), there was no denying the refreshing effect of his youthful exuberance.

Emotional

Whatever the result, Kates met the composer's almost absurd technical defiances with aplomb. And he did make memorably emotional, music of the slow movement.

If this young man follows a straight course, strives for more polished performance, and cultivates a greater capacity for accuracy, he should enjoy a brilliant career.

The "Leonore" introduction was firmly controlled, yet made ample allowance for variety of nuance. It had less to offer in rhythmic security.

Leinsdorf embarked on the main part of the overture at a conservative pace. Its accelerated outcome was nonetheless fiery. Strings weren't entirely impeccable in pitch, but brass helped to create the work's generally bravura effect.

The solo trumpet, generally played backstage, was heard from outside the building. Armando Ghitalla was responsible for the clear, ringing tone.

8,694 in Audience

String passages toward the end were top speed and brilliant.

Hindemith's "Metamorphosis" was played as the "fun" music that it is, and certainly was no strain on the resources of the Boston Symphony. Most fascinating was the Chinese-style dance, called "Turandot."

Last night's audience numbered 8,694.

Two more Tchaikovsky Competition winners will be soloists this afternoon. Masuko Ushioda will be soloist with the Boston Symphony and Leinsdorf in Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto. Misha Dichter will solo in the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto.

Orchestral program is the Prelude to Act III, Wagner's "Lohengrin" two movements from Schuller's "Paul Klee Studies" and Brahms' First Symphony.

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 7,764

AUG 15 1966

Tanglewood Concert

A Second Prize Winner Is First Rate

By HOWARD HEALY

These were some changes in Saturday night's performance at Tanglewood, the most significant one being soprano Veronica Tyler's substituting for Jane Marsh, who had been scheduled to sing but who was indisposed and could not appear.

Miss Marsh is, of course, the first prize winner in the Moscow Tchaikovsky International Music Competition, and she was undoubtedly the featured attraction on the program.

What this meant for Miss Tyler, then, is obvious—she not only had to sing well, which she did, but also overcome a certain disappointment which the audience would only naturally feel over Miss Marsh's absence.

And Miss Tyler could not have done better on the second count. She brought the crowded Tanglewood shed to thundering applause after singing Charpentier's "Depuis le jour," from "Louise," and Puccini's "Si, mi chiamano Mimi," from "La Boheme."

Miss Tyler has an exquisite voice of great purity and she delivered both selections in a moving and stunning way.

She is the second prize winner in the Moscow voice competition, and when one hears her sing with this fact in mind it makes one wonder at the enormous talents some people have in this world.

Another talented winner (taking second prize) at the Moscow competition is cellist Stephen Kates, who played Shostakovitch "Concerto for Cello and Orchestra," Op. 107, at Saturday's Tanglewood program.

The work is usually prefaced with an admonition that it is an integrated thing and not merely a showpiece for the cello or cellist. But for all practical purposes it is, and that is not really so bad as it sounds.

The soloist, who is only 23, went through the work in fine form and with sure footing in all the intricate demanding passages, giving the right interpretation to the more lyrical passages and the full force of youthful passion to the dynamic, turbulent passages.

In all, it looked like a very exhaustive performance for Kates, who at the end received some well earned rounds of applause and some firm handclaps from conductor Eric Leinsdorf.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Leinsdorf, played Hindemith's "Symphonic Metamorphosis of Themes by Carl Maria von Weber," and showed good strength in Wagner's "Dawn" and "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" from "Die Gotterdammerung." The orchestra opened the program with a substitution, Beethoven's "Leonore" No. 3 overture, which sounded a trifle lagging.

Vineland Times Journal
VINELAND, N. J.
D. 13,406

AUG 15 1966

* * *

Music enthusiasts had a ball yesterday when NBC television cameras went to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Massachusetts for the complete afternoon concert "live". The program was a blockbuster for the classical music fans. The camera play on the surroundings and Edwin Newman's commentary were appreciated. Channel 12 will televise a Tanglewood concert on Friday night. Consult listings for time.

* * *

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
AUG 15 1966

Music: Convulsive Weekend in Lenox

Moscow's Winners, TV and Tonsillitis Turn Up

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—In one of the more convulsive Berkshire Music Festival weekends, it is hard to count the blessings.

It was a weekend of television, in which camera crews were all over the place, hauling miles of cable and hoisting cameras hither and yon. The object was this afternoon's color broadcast of the entire concert. It was a weekend in which several winners of the recent Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow appeared. It was also the weekend in which Jane Marsh, the winner of the vocal section at Moscow, developed tonsilitis and had to cancel, necessitating a change of program and soloist.

Whitestone

Masuko Ushioda, left, a violinist; Stephen Kates, center, a cellist, and Misha Dichter, a pianist, were soloists.

•

Of the soloists, the biggest impression was made by Misha Dichter, the young Chinese-born American pianist who took second prize in his division in Moscow. Mr. Dichter played—what else—the Tchaikovsky Concerto in B flat minor, and he played it with dash and spirit and with an easy-going technique that made everything sound easy.

His performance had some points of added interest. One was the slow ending of the first movement. In days not too long past, pianists waited eagerly for this section and then took off like a jet on a runway, ending the octaves with a swoop off the ground. But ever since Sviatoslav Richter has been playing this concerto, pianists have begun to hold back on the octaves. Textually, it is more accurate, for the score gives no direction to accelerate. The Richter approach, copied by so many young pianists, somehow makes the movement sound very tame.

In the second movement, Mr. Dichter demonstrated remarkable control in the prestissimo section, played with a feathery pianissimo throughout and with perfect articulation. And at the last-movement coda, he and Erich Leinsdorf engaged in a mad spurt. It was a spurt not sanctioned by the score—and led to the question, If it was used here, why not in the first movement? Anyway, the pianist was right on top of the notes, and the concerto ended in a blazing fashion.

Sharing this afternoon's program was Masuko Ushioda, the Japanese girl who took second in the violin division. She played the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 and found herself a little overmatched. She could handle the lyric sections, and gave a beautiful, fine-spun account of the second movement. But her dainty playing was not the medium for the other two movements. It lacked bite, dynamic range and propulsive rhythm.

The rest of the unusually long program contained the prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," the Brahms First Symphony and two movements from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee." The audience, by the way, seemed to be delighted with Mr. Schuller's clever, chrome-plated serial textures.

Last night, Veronica Tyler stepped in for Miss Marsh. Miss Tyler, second-prize winner at Moscow, had appeared Wednesday at a Tanglewood concert, and she repeated her numbers—"Depuis le jour" from Charpentier's "Louise" and "Mi chiamano Mimi" from Puccini's "La Bohème." Stephen Kates, the American cellist who took second prize in Moscow, played the Shostakovich concerto on this program.

Unfortunately, "Depuis le jour" was not the aria for Miss Tyler. She was uncomfortable with the high tessitura, her French diction was unintelligible, and she sang in an edgy, unsupported manner. The Puccini went much better. As for Mr. Kates, he played the puerile Shostakovich with admirable rhythm, a fine left hand and with a tone that was rather thin and reedy.

•

Sixten Ehrling was the conductor Friday evening. He led the Boston Symphony in two standard works—the Sibelius First Symphony and the Tchaikovsky Fourth. The concert was preceded by the hour-long weekend prelude, the Tanglewood innovation that runs from 7 P.M. to 8. Music in small forms is presented here, and on Friday we had the Tchaikovsky Piano Trio in A minor, with the Lenox Trio—Paul Hersh, pianist, Peter Marsh, violinist, and Donald McCall, cellist.

The score does not turn up very often, and it was a treat to hear once again this work with salon elements mixed with moments of pure genius. It is curiously attractive, something more than a period piece, and was strongly played by the talented young instrumentalists.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, August 15, 1966

Two Artists Delight Tanglewood

By JOHN SIMMONS

LENOX, Mass.—Sixteen thousand persons came to Tanglewood this weekend to hear the Tchaikovsky Competition prize winners with the Boston Symphony Orchestra while many more watched Sunday's concert at home. Japanese violenist Masuko Ushioda and American pianist Masha Dichter made their first American concert appearances Sunday since the competition.

A second prize winner, Miss Ushioda played the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 at Tanglewood. A petite figure, she attacked her instrument with vigor, marvelously accomplishing the strenuous and difficult chords of the work. The third movement was exemplary, as soloist and orchestra worked together exploiting some of the best of Prokofief's composition. Miss Ushioda took numerous bows.

It is to Misha Dichter, a credit that he was able to transcend the familiarity of Tchaikovky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor, a perennial favorite. The theme from the first movement is one of the most commercialized, outdone perhaps only by the Warsaw Concerto. Bursting upon the audience with a big opening theme, the concerto provides lesser artists with a field day for crashing shords and showy technique. Dichter in his playing went beneath the momentous exterior to bring out what deeper content could be found, making the most notable part of the performance the observance of the 20-year old's unusual rapport with his instrument.

On Saturday evening soprano Jane Marsh, was indisposed. In her stead, Veronica Tyler sang arias from "Louise" and "La Boheme" with which she had charmed audiences Wednesday evening at the gala concert.

Also on Saturday, [illegible] was 23-year-old cellist Stephen Kates who took second prize in Performing Shostakovitch' Cello Concerto, the composer's masterpiece, Kates stunned the audience with his mature musicianship.

Next weekend will be the finale for the 1966 season at Tanglewood, coming to a conclusion with a performance of Bruckner's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festival Chorus under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
AUG 15 1966

Tchaikowsky Winners Heard

By PHILIP TREGGOR

Two young people, first-class second place winners, were soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Saturday night. Conducted by Eric Leinsdorf, the orchestra presented a program of considerable variety.

Jane Marsh, originally scheduled for the program, was indisposed and unable to sing. Veronica Tyler, second prize winner in the same Tschaikovsky International Music Competition, upon very short notice consented to appear in her colleague's place.

The orchestra opened the concert with Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture. Here, Leinsdorf chose very leisurely and free tempos; nothing was rushed. As a result, the intricate passages for brass were clearly articulated instead of "faked" as they often are. The secondary theme was beautifully singing and the whole was developed to a smashing climax.

* * *

Another second prize winner at the Russian competition was Stephan Kates who played the Shostakovitch cello concerto in this concert.

Although fully symphonic in concept, the concerto is really a chamber work. An excellent balance between orchestra and cellist has been written into the score by the composer. The cellist is accompanied in very many measures by solo instruments and woodwind ensemble alone. This allows the cello to speak clearly throughout. At no point is the cello sound inundated by orchestral sound.

It is readily apparent why Mr. Kates placed so highly in the competition. His is the energetic, secure technique of a talented young man. More importantly, he plays with musicality. The slow movement of this concerto, for example, could have been cloying. Mr. Kates played it with warmth and the necessary restraint to create some very special moments in the concert.

Following intermission, the orchestra played "Weber: Symphonic Metamorphosis" by Paul Hindemith. Here, to my mind, is a vastly underrated composer. True, he is played to some extent, but never to as great an extent as he deserves. The "metamorphosis" is a prime example of writing by a composer who is certain of his techniques and who is able to bring more than mere craftsmanship to his creations. Although never avant garde Hindemith has always made good musical sense in his work.

* * *

For her part in the concert, Miss Tyler, soprano, sang two popular operatic arias; Charpentier's "Depuis le jour" and Puccini's "Si, mi chiamano Mimi." Needless to say, she brought down the house. Her voice is of good quality and she maintains true intonation for the most part. There is room for improvement of her diction. She is young, attractive and, obviously, very musical.

The concert closed with excerpts from Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung." The audience was large and overflowed onto the lawns. If the listeners were disappointed in not hearing Miss Marsh, they did not show it as they applauded the young artists with great enthusiasm.

By GEORGE W. STOWE

The parade of Tchaikowsky Competition winners continued Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood, when close to 10,000 turned out to hear Japanese violinist Masuko Ushioda and American pianist Misha Dichter.

Even though both were second place winners there was no doubt that they are formidable technicians endowed with plenty of temperament. This was particularly true of Dichter, whom some of the Moscow judges felt had greater potentiality for a distinguished career than the first-place winner.

* * *

Dichter, with a mane of black hair hanging down his neck, brought unerring rhythmic control and a command of the "grand style" to his reading of the familiar Tchaikowsky Piano Concerto in B flat Minor. For a 20-year-old, his poise and temperament were an unbeatable combination.

In fact, there were times when my thoughts went back to the young Horowitz and his blazing performance of this old war-horse. The chordal playing was powerful and the passage work in the finale was electrifying. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony gave him staunch support.

* * *

Miss Ushioda immediately impressed the audience with her firm technical equipment and tonal warmth in the Prokofiev Second Violin Concerto. Although she took the whole work at a fast tempo, there was no loss of control at any point and the performance had a bravura seldom encountered in this concerto.

Even though the orchestral writing is perhaps not as impressive as the composer's contribution in the better-known First Violin Concerto, I think that Mr. Leinsdorf might have captured more of its mood in a less pedestrian performance than the orchestra offered Sunday afternoon.

* * *

The Boston Symphony was at its best in the thrice-familiar Brahms First Symphony, which was set forth with a warmth and intensity that were close to ideal. This was not the galvanic intensity of Toscanini, nor the autumnal warmth of Bruno Walther, but something halfway between, which I found quite satisfying to my personal taste.

For an orchestral novelty two movements of Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" were offered, which audibly amused the audience. This was particularly true of "The Twittering Machine," although many, obviously enjoyed the jazzy "Little Blue Devil." Schuller was present to accept the applause at the end.

Wagner's Prelude to Act Three of "Lohengrin" started the festivities. Sunday's program was televised by NBC in color, not only in the Shed but from the surrounding lawns outside.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
AUG 15 1966

Music: Convulsive Weekend in Lenox

Moscow's Winners, TV and Tonsillitis Turn Up

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—In one of the more convulsive Berkshire Music Festival weekends, it is hard to count the blessings.

It was a weekend of television, in which camera crews were all over the place, hauling miles of cable and hoisting cameras hither and yon. The object was this afternoon's color broadcast of the entire concert. It was a weekend in which several winners of the recent Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow appeared. It was also the weekend in which Jane Marsh, the winner of the vocal section at Moscow, developed tonsilitis and had to cancel, necessitating a change of program and soloist.

●

Of the soloists, the biggest impression was made by Misha Dichter, the young Chinese-born American pianist who took second prize in his division in Moscow. Mr. Dichter played—what else—the Tchaikovsky Concerto in B flat minor, and he played it with dash and spirit and with an easy-going technique that made everything sound easy.

His performance had some points of added interest. One was the slow ending of the first movement. In days not too long past, pianists waited eagerly for this section and then took off like a jet on a runway, ending the octaves with a swoop off the ground. But ever since Sviatoslav Richter has been playing this concerto, pianists have begun to hold back on the octaves. Textually, it is more accurate, for the score gives no direction to accelerate. The Richter approach, copied by so many young pianists, somehow makes the movement sound very tame.

In the second movement, Mr. Dichter demonstrated remarkable control in the prestissimo section, played with a feathery pianissimo throughout and with perfect articulation. And at the last-movement coda, he and Erich Leinsdorf engaged in a mad spurt. It was a spurt not sanctioned by the score—and led to the question, If it was used here, why not in the first movement? Anyway, the pianist was right on top of the notes, and the concerto ended in a blazing fashion.

Whitestone

Masuko Ushioda, left, a violinist; Stephen Kates, center, a cellist, and Misha Dichter, a pianist, were soloists.

Sharing this afternoon's program was Masuko Ushioda, the Japanese girl who took second in the violin division. She played the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 and found herself a little overmatched. She could handle the lyric sections, and gave a beautiful, fine-spun account of the second movement. But her dainty playing was not the medium for the other two movements. It lacked bite, dynamic range and propulsive rhythm.

The rest of the unusually long program contained the prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," the Brahms First Symphony and two movements from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee." The audience, by the way, seemed to be delighted with Mr. Schuller's clever, chrome-plated serial textures.

Last night, Veronica Tyler stepped in for Miss Marsh. Miss Tyler, second-prize winner at Moscow, had appeared Wednesday at a Tanglewood concert, and she repeated her numbers—"Depuis le jour" from Charpentier's "Louise" and "Mi chiamano Mimi" from Puccini's "La Bohème." Stephen Kates, the American cellist who took second prize in Moscow, played the Shostakovich concerto on this program.

Unfortunately, "Depuis le jour" was not the aria for Miss Tyler. She was uncomfortable with the high tessitura, her French diction was unintelligible, and she sang in an edgy, unsupported manner. The Puccini went much better. As for Mr. Kates, he played the puerile Shostakovich with admirable rhythm, a fine left hand and with a tone that was rather thin and reedy.

●

Sixten Ehrling was the conductor Friday evening. He led the Boston Symphony in two standard works—the Sibelius First Symphony and the Tchaikovsky Fourth. The concert was preceded by the hour-long weekend prelude, the Tanglewood innovation that runs from 7 P.M. to 8. Music in small forms is presented here, and on Friday we had the Tchaikovsky Piano Trio in A minor, with the Lenox Trio—Paul Hersh, pianist; Peter Marsh, violinist, and Donald McCall, cellist.

The score does not turn up very often, and it was a treat to hear once again this work with salon elements mixed with moments of pure genius. It is curiously attractive, something more than a period piece, and was strongly played by the talented young instrumentalists.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, August 15, 1966

Two Artists Delight Tanglewood

By JOHN SIMMONS

LENOX, Mass.—Sixteen thousand persons came to Tanglewood this weekend to hear the Tchaikovsky Competition prize winners with the Boston Symphony Orchestra while many more watched Sunday's concert at home. Japanese violenist Masuko Ushioda and American pianist Masha Dichter made their first American concert appearances Sunday since the competition.

A second prize winner, Miss Ushioda played the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 at Tanglewood. A petite figure, she attacked her instrument with vigor, marvelously accomplishing the strenuous and difficult chords of the work. The third movement was exemplary, as soloist and orchestra worked together exploiting some of the best of Prokofief's composition. Miss Ushioda took numerous bows.

It is to Misha Dichter's credit that he was able to transcend the familiarity of Tchaikovky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor, a perennial favorite. The theme from the first movement is one of the most commercialized, outdone perhaps only by the Warsaw Concerto. Bursting upon the audience with a big opening theme, the concerto provides lesser artists with a field day for crashing shords and showy technique. Dichter in his playing went beneath the momentous exterior to bring out what deeper content could be found, making the most notable part of the performance the observance of the 20-year old's unusual rapport with his instrument.

On Saturday evening soprano Jane Marsh was indisposed. In her stead, Veronica Tyler sang arias from "Louise" and "La Boheme" with which she had charmed audiences Wednesday evening at the gala concert.

Also on Saturday's program was 23-year-old cellist Stephen Kates who took second prize in Performing Shostakovitch' Cello Concerto, the composer's masterpiece, Kates stunned the audience with his mature musicianship.

Next weekend will be the finale for the 1966 season at Tanglewood, coming to a conclusion with a performance of Bruckner's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festival Chorus under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
AUG 15 1966

131

Tchaikowsky Winners Heard

By PHILIP TREGGOR

Two young people, first-class second place winners, were soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Saturday night. Conducted by Eric Leinsdorf, the orchestra presented a program of considerable variety.

Jane Marsh, originally scheduled for the program, was indisposed and unable to sing. Veronica Tyler, second prize winner in the same Tschaikovsky International Music Competition, upon very short notice consented to appear in her colleague's place.

The orchestra opened the concert with Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture. Here, Leinsdorf chose very leisurely and free tempos; nothing was rushed. As a result, the intricate passages for brass were clearly articulated instead of "faked" as they often are. The secondary theme was beautifully singing and the whole was developed to a smashing climax.

* * *

Another second prize winner at the Russian competition was Stephan Kates who played the Shostakovitch cello concerto in this concert.

Although fully symphonic in concept, the concerto is really a chamber work. An excellent balance between orchestra and cellist has been written into the score by the composer. The cellist is accompanied in very many measures by solo instruments and woodwind ensemble alone. This allows the cello to speak clearly throughout. At no point is the cello sound inundated by orchestral sound.

It is readily apparent why Mr. Kates placed so highly in the competition. His is the energetic, secure technique of a talented young man. More importantly, he plays with musicality. The slow movement of this concerto, for example, could have been cloying. Mr. Kates played it with warmth and the necessary restraint to create some very special moments in the concert.

Following intermission, the orchestra played "Weber: Symphonic Metamorphosis" by Paul Hindemith. Here, to my mind, is a vastly underrated composer. True, he is played to some extent, but never to as great an extent as he deserves. The "metamorphosis" is a prime example of writing by a composer who is certain of his techniques and who is able to bring more than mere craftsmanship to his creations. Although never avant garde Hindemith has always made good musical sense in his work.

* * *

For her part in the concert, Miss Tyler, soprano, sang two popular operatic arias; Charpentier's "Depuis le jour" and Puccini's "Si, mi chiamano Mimi." Needless to say, she brought down the house. Her voice is of good quality and she maintains true intonation for the most part. There is room for improvement of her diction. She is young, attractive and, obviously, very musical.

The concert closed with excerpts from Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung." The audience was large and overflowed onto the lawns. If the listeners were disappointed in not hearing Miss Marsh, they did not show it as they applauded the young artists with great enthusiasm.

By GEORGE W. STOWE

The parade of Tchaikowsky Competition winners continued Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood when close to 10,000 turned out to hear Japanese violinist Masuko Ushioda and American pianist Misha Dichter.

Even though both were second place winners there was no doubt that they are formidable technicians endowed with plenty of temperament. This was particularly true of Dichter, whom some of the Moscow judges felt had greater potentiality for a distinguished career than the first-place winner.

* * *

Dichter, with a mane of black hair hanging down his neck, brought unerring rhythmic control and a command of the "grand style" to his reading of the familiar Tchaikowsky Piano Concerto in B flat Minor. For a 20-year-old, his poise and temperament were an unbeatable combination.

In fact, there were times when my thoughts went back to the young Horowitz and his blazing performance of this old war-horse. The chordal playing was powerful and the passage work in the finale was electrifying. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony gave him staunch support.

* * *

Miss Ushioda immediately impressed the audience with her firm technical equipment and tonal warmth in the Prokofiev Second Violin Concerto. Although she took the whole work at a fast tempo, there was no loss of control at any point and the performance had a bravura seldom encountered in this concerto.

Even though the orchestral writing is perhaps not as impressive as the composer's contribution in the better-known First Violin Concerto, I think that Mr. Leinsdorf might have captured more of its mood in a less pedestrian performance than the orchestra offered Sunday afternoon.

* * *

The Boston Symphony was at its best in the thrice-familiar Brahms First Symphony, which was set forth with a warmth and intensity that were close to ideal. This was not the galvanic intensity of Toscanini, nor the autumnal warmth of Bruno Walther, but something halfway between, which I found quite satisfying to my personal taste.

For an orchestral novelty two movements of Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" were offered, which audibly amused the audience. This was particularly true of "The Twittering Machine," although many, obviously enjoyed the jazzy "Little Blue Devil." Schuller was present to accept the applause at the end.

Wagner's Prelude to Act Three of "Lohengrin" started the festivities. Sunday's program was televised by NBC in color, not only in the Shed but from the surrounding lawns outside.

132

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 15 1966

At Tanglewood

Concertos Played To Vast Audience

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Two more prize-winners from the Tchaikovsky contest in Moscow were on the stage at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon to be greeted by 8903 listeners in the shed and on the lawns plus an uncountable number in front of television sets across the nation.

Everyone's Favorite

Misha Dichter, 21, of Los Angeles played nearly everyone's favorite romantic concerto, Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, ("Tonight We Love.")

Masuko Ushioda, 29, of Tokyo played Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor.

It was a long program, a half hour longer than the usual two hours, but the audience did not appear to be impatient, especially since Tchaikovsky's concerto was last on the program.

TV Cameras

There was, also, some entertainment to be had by keeping track of the television cameras (two were on giant scaffoldings at the sides, one was on a platform near the rafters, another was peering from a hole in the wall behind the orchestra and, by counting the bright lights, 32 were strung across the width of the ceiling.)

Dichter played Tchaikovsky's concerto with infallible digital control and a modest manner. There was a refreshing lack of theatrical mannerism even when he was finishing high-speed, overlapping runs or sending out great, thunderous chords.

He often produced a big, full piano tone without pounding the keys and moved through limpid, sweet melodies without becoming saccharine, both common pitfalls with this piece.

Pianistic Perfection

He offered, in short, another xample of the cool, unemotional pianistic perfection so common these days among the young pianists.

Earlier, Miss Ushioda played Prokofiev's very difficult, caustic violin concerto with a pleasing, but light tone. It was a feminine tone, nice but inappropriate for most of the piece.

It made the lyrical middle movement beautiful, however liquid and smooth.

Doll-Like Girl

Miss Ushioda is a slight, doll-like girl with a boyish haircut and a graceful manner. Like Dichter, she easily won over the audience.

Between the concerts was a whimsical interlude during which two pieces from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" drew surprised giggles from the audience.

One of the pieces is called "The Twittering Machine" and, as Schuller intended, it twitters. Woodwinds with very short notes and percussion players accomplished the deed. The other piece, "Little Blue Devil," is a rhythmical work utilizing jazz rhythms and low, "blue" notes.

Something for Everybody

The pieces helped make the program, as the television network probably intended, offer something for everybody.

Before intermission, the orchestra played the brassy, sonorous prelude to act II of Wagner's "Lohengrin" and Brahms' Symphony No. 1, Op. 68.

Both fall within the limits of Leinsdorf specialties and were rolled out with the usual skill and beauty produced by Boston's orchestra.

The week's attendance was 33,211. There were 1037 Tuesday, 6635 at the gala Wednesday, 4975 Friday, 2967 at Saturday morning's rehearsal, 8694 Saturday night and 8903 Sunday afternoon.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357
AUG 15 1966

At Tanglewood

Moscow Contestants Perform

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — High interest in winners from the recent Tchaikovsky competitions in Moscow was again shown this weekend at Tanglewood, with attendance of 8,694 on Saturday and 8,903 on Sunday. All four soloists were second-prize winners. Saturday, Veronica Tyler substituted ably for the ailing Jane Marsh, singing the same arias which had caused such a furore at the Wednesday "Gala." Stephen Kates, cellist, was also heard, in the Shostakovitch Concerto.

Gazette Review

Yesterday, veritable show-stoppers were Masuko Ushioda, Japanese violinist, in the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 in G minor, and American painist Misha Dichter, in the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor.

Erich Leisndorf had built a program just safely within the 2½ hours allotted to the "live and in color" NBC telecast, and full of interest.

Played with Zest

The familiar Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with a zest which roused the audience to a festival pitch of excitement. Leinsdorf always makes Wagner sound superb, being able to bring out solid tone and sonorities which are not automatically inherent in the orchestration.

The Brahms Symphony No. 1 received a devoted and well-nigh immaculate performance. Beauties were painted with great skill and the slow movement and scherzo were especially charming.

Miss Ushioda tackled a stern assignment in the Prokovief, being given almost unceasing activity in the first movement, where the orchestration sounded sketchy but was actually very detailed. There was a lovely legato solo at the start of the second movement, before the third brought its tasks again in the strong chords for violin and percussion. Miss Ushioda, a fetching dimunitive figure in sleeveless blue gown, took many recalls in a modest manner.

Leading Figure

Gunther Schuller, a leading figure in present-day Berkshire Music Center, came onstage at the end of the two sections from his "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," putting into modern music devices his impressions of Klee pictures. The audience laughed happily at the humor in "The Twittering Machine" and also enjoyed the strong, if modern, "Blues" flavor in "Little Blue Devil."

Dichter, a marvel yet to reach 21 next month, showed the vigor of his playing at once, life without noisiness. This fine energy persisted even when he was playing softly and poetically, so that his tone was never lost, even though the orchestra might be louderthanhe chstra might be louder than he for the moment. His deportment at the piano was excellent and free of extreme mannerisms and his attitude after the concert was one of gratitude for the magnificent cooperation from Leinsdorf and the orchestra.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
AUG 15 1966

Young Moscow Talent Soloists at Tanglewood

By McLAREN HARRIS

LENOX—The weekend, next to last for the 1966 Tanglewood season, was a time for Moscow runners-up on NBC-TV.

A soprano, a violinist, a cellist and a pianist, all second prizewinners in Moscow this year, provided the solo talent. Whatever the portent of their appearance with the orchestra, it may be too early to judge them by thoroughly professional standards. After all, only one is older than the early twenties and Misha Dichter, who performed the Tchaikovsky piano concerto, will be only 21 in September.

Dichter, however, lost no time in convincing us of his accomplishment thus far. He is a solid technician; neither large chordal blocks nor rushing passages for both hands left him at a loss. Tchaikovsky's second-movement Allegro found him whipping through the digital flourishes with apparent ease, and elsewhere, thankfully, he did not need the pedal to sustain large volumes (though sometimes, not so thankfully, he used it).

Dichter's piano playing exuded a similar confidence to that of Van Cliburn following his Moscow success, but whereas the latter's work in this concerto held a measure of inspiration, Sunday's reading was simply interesting. All was secure and spoken straightforwardly, to be sure, but the melodies lacked a grand arch here, a delicate sweep there. The soloist's work was bold, but not entirely sensitive; the depth was in technical prowess. We must speak of the future when viewing Dichter's potential, but it seems that we may speak of it confidently.

Stephen Kates was the weekend's cello soloist, performing the Shostakovitch Concerto, Op. 107, a product of 1959. This work [illegible] part — unidio[illegible] the instrument; the o[illegible]nts require much hard labor, the first being a square-cornered, strict-rhythm march. Kates' attempt was — on the whole — rather unsuccessful. Forceful and metrically direct, his playing lacked clean attacks, consistent intonation or a pleasing tone. Saturday night's reading marked him as a student, albeit advance.

Veronica Tyler substituted for Jane Marsh, who was indisposed, and sang Charpentier's "Depuis Le Jour," from "Louise," and "Si, Mi Chiamano Mimi, from Puccini's "La Boheme." Miss Tyler was in good straits, producing an opulent soprano throughout her range, with facility, though her diction was nearly unintelligible from lack of clear consonants.

That Erich Leinsdorf and the Symphony had looked forward to Sunday's NBC telecast was a little too obvious. The orchestral performance on Sunday, though not superlative, ws on a much higher plane than on the days preceding. The accompaniments to the Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky concertos were precise and meticulously placed in deference to the soloists.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

AUG 15 1966

132

At Tanglewood

Concertos Played To Vast Audience

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Two more prize-winners from the Tchaikovsky contest in Moscow were on the stage at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon to be greeted by 8903 listeners in the shed and on the lawns plus an uncountable number in front of television sets across the nation.

Everyone's Favorite

Misha Dichter, 21, of Los Angeles played nearly everyone's favorite romantic concerto, Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto, ("Tonight We Love.")

Masuko Ushioda, 29, of Tokyo played Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor.

It was a long program, a half hour longer than the usual two hours, but the audience did not appear to be impatient, especially since Tchaikovsky's concerto was last on the program.

TV Cameras

There was, also, some entertainment to be had by keeping track of the television cameras (two were on giant scaffoldings at the sides, one was on a platform near the rafters, another was peering from a hole in the wall behind the orchestra and, by counting the bright lights, 32 were strung across the width of the ceiling.)

Dichter played Tchaikovsky's concerto with infallible digital control and a modest manner. There was a refreshing lack of theatrical mannerism even when he was finishing high-speed, overlapping runs or sending out great, thunderous chords.

He often produced a big, full piano tone without pounding the keys and moved through limpid, sweet melodies without becoming saccharine, both common pitfalls with this piece.

Pianistic Perfection

He offered, in short, another xample of the cool, unemotional pianistic perfection so common these days among the young pianists.

Earlier, Miss Ushioda played Prokofiev's very difficult, caustic violin concerto with a pleasing, but light tone. It was a feminine tone, nice but inappropriate for most of the piece.

It made the lyrical middle movement beautiful, however, liquid and smooth.

Doll-Like Girl

Miss Ushioda is a slight, doll-like girl with a boyish haircut and a graceful manner. Like Dichter, she easily won over the audience.

Between the concerts was a whimsical interlude during which two pieces from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" drew surprised giggles from the audience.

One of the pieces is called "The Twittering Machine" and, as Schuller intended, it twitters. Woodwinds with very short notes and percussion players accomplished the deed. The other piece, "Little Blue Devil," is a rhythmical work utilizing jazz rhythms and low, "blue" notes.

Something for Everybody

The pieces helped make the program, as the television network probably intended, offer something for everybody.

Before intermission, the orchestra played the brassy, sonorous prelude to act II of Wagner's "Lohengrin" and Brahms' Symphony No. 1, Op: 68.

Both fall within the limits of Leinsdorf specialties and were rolled out with the usual skill and beauty produced by Boston's orchestra.

The week's attendance was 33,211. There were 1037 Tuesday, 6635 at the gala Wednesday, 4975 Friday, 2967 at Saturday morning's rehearsal, 8694 Saturday night and 8903 Sunday afternoon.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357

AUG 15 1966

At Tanglewood

Moscow Contestants Perform

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — High interest in winners from the recent Tchaikovsky competitions in Moscow was again shown this weekend at Tanglewood, with attendance of 8,694 on Saturday and 8,903 on Sunday. All four soloists were second-prize winners. Saturday, Veronica Tyler substituted ably for the ailing Jane Marsh, singing the same arias which had caused such a furore at the Wednesday "Gala." Stephen Kates, cellist, was also heard, in the Shostakovitch Concerto.

Gazette Review

Yesterday, veritable show-stoppers were Masuko Ushioda, Japanese violinist, in the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 in G minor, and American painist Misha Dichter, in the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor.

Erich Leisndorf had built a program just safely within the 2½ hours allotted to the "live and in color" NBC telecast, and full of interest.

Played with Zest

The familiar Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin" was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with a zest which roused the audience to a festival pitch of excitement. Leinsdorf always makes Wagner sound superb, being able to bring out solid tone and sonorities which are not automatically inherent in the orchestration.

The Brahms Symphony No. 1 received a devoted and well-nigh immaculate performance. Beauties were painted with great skill and the slow movement and scherzo were especially charming.

Miss Ushioda tackled a stern assignment in the Prokovief, being given almost unceasing activity in the first movement, where the orchestration sounded sketchy but was actually very detailed. There was a lovely legato solo at the start of the second movement, before the third brought its tasks again in the strong chords for violin and percussion. Miss Ushioda, a fetching dimunitive figure in sleeveless blue gown, took many recalls in a modest manner.

Leading Figure

Gunther Schuller, a leading figure in present-day Berkshire Music Center, came onstage at the end of the two sections from his "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," putting into modern music devices his impressions of Klee pictures. The audience laughed happily at the humor in "The Twittering Machine" and also enjoyed the strong, if modern, "Blues" flavor in "Little Blue Devil."

Dichter, a marvel yet to reach 21 next month, showed the vigor of his playing at once, life without noisiness. This fine energy persisted even when he was playing softly and poetically, so that his tone was never lost, even though the orchestra might be louderthanhe chstra might be louder than he for the moment. His deportment at the piano was excellent and free of extreme mannerisms, and his attitude after the concert was one of gratitude for the magnificent cooperation from Leinsdorf and the orchestra.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

AUG 15 1966

Young Moscow Talent Soloists at Tanglewood

By McLAREN HARRIS

LENOX—The weekend, next to last for the 1966 Tanglewood season, was a time for Moscow runners-up on NBC-TV.

A soprano, a violinist, a cellist and a pianist, all second prizewinners in Moscow this year, provided the solo talent. Whatever the portent of their appearance with the orchestra, it may be too early to judge them by thoroughly professional standards. After all, only one is older than the early twenties and Misha Dichter, who performed the Tchaikovsky piano concerto, will be only 21 in September.

Dichter, however, lost no time in convincing us of his accomplishment thus far. He is a solid technician; neither large chordal blocks nor rushing passages for both hands left him at a loss. Tchaikovsky's second-movement Allegro found him whipping through the digital flourishes with apparent ease, and elsewhere, thankfully, he did not need the pedal to sustain large volumes (though sometimes, not so thankfully, he used it).

Dichter's piano playing exuded a similar confidence to that of Van Cliburn following his Moscow success, but whereas the latter's work in this concerto held a measure of inspiration, Sunday's reading was simply interesting. All was secure and spoken straightforwardly, to be sure, but the melodies lacked a grand arch here, a delicate sweep there. The soloist's work was bold, but not entirely sensitive; the depth was in technical prowess. We must speak of the future when viewing Dichter's potential, but it seems that we may speak of it confidently.

Stephen Kates was the weekend's cello soloist, performing the Shostakovitch Concerto, Op. 107, a product of 1959. This work [illegible] in part — unidiomatic for the instrument; the other [illegible]ments require much hard labor, the first being a square-cornered, strict-rhythm march. Kates' attempt was — on the whole — rather unsuccessful. Forceful and metrically direct, his playing lacked clean attacks, consistent intonation or a pleasing tone. Saturday night's reading marked him as a student, albeit advance.

Veronica Tyler substituted for Jane Marsh, who was indisposed, and sang Charpentier's "Depuis Le Jour," from "Louise," and "Si, Mi Chiamano Mimi, from Puccini's "La Boheme." Miss Tyler was in good straits, producing an opulent soprano throughout her range, with facility, though her diction was nearly unintelligible from lack of clear consonants.

That Erich Leinsdorf and the Symphony had looked forward to Sunday's NBC telecast was a little too obvious. The orchestral performance on Sunday, though not superlative, ws on a much higher plane than on the days preceding. The accompaniments to the Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky concertos were precise and meticulously placed in deference to the soloists.

and also enjoyed the if modern, "Blues" fla-
"Little Blue Devil."

chter, a marvel yet to 11 next month, showed r of his playing at once, hout noisiness. This fine persisted even when he aying softly and poet-
o that his tone was nev-even though the or-might be louderthanhe

might be louder than he the moment. His deportment the piano was excellent and extreme mannerisms, his attitude after the concert of gratitude for the nent cooperation from ndorf and the orchestra.

Music Review

Tschaikovsky, Brahms, Soloists, at Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf with Sixten Ehrling, Guest Conductor.

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

Friday

Had Friday's Weekend Prelude been an accurate forecast of all the music at Tanglewood this weekend, the effort might not quite have been worth the expense.

Tchaikovsky's Trio for Piano, Violin and Cello performed by the Lenox Trio filled 45 long minutes with an even measure of ennui and despair. The work was composed for Tchaikovsky's patroness, Nadejda Von Meck. The pianist at that time was none other than Claude Debussy. Friday's pianist, however, was a deceptively powerful young man named Paul Hersh whose vain but obvious efforts to attract attention to his art were never met by the valiant strivings of violinist, Peter Marsh or cellist, Donald McCall.

Russians are little known for their chamber music. This Trio with its drive for orchestral effects and coloring suggests adequate reason. However, it should be added that even Tschaikovsky described the work a "torture" to listen to.

But if there is a vulgarity to much of Tchaikovsky's music, there is also a spell. And certainly his 4th Symphony, which was also dedicated to Von Meck, is a spell binder, despite its grossness and blast. What made this performance an even greater success, was the almost finicky control Sixten Ehrling subjet to.

The Finnish born conductor has been with the Detroit Orchestra for a number of years and a regular contributor to the oldest Music Festival (107 years) in the country at Worcester, Massachusetts.

This gauche and distracting technique he exhibits to his audience is, however, admired and praised by many orchestras over the country.

The open applause and rave foot stamping exhibited by the members of the BSO Friday for his conducting of the Tchaikovsky and especially the Symphony No. 1 of Sibelius is a rather fine stamp of approval to his ability. Nor does the fact that Mr. Ehrling was a student of Sibelius hamper the success he found in creating fine tension without adding the overbearing swell that the two composers are generally smothered in.

Saturday

Saturday's concert which was to have included Jane Marsh, who won first prize at Moscow last month was revised due to an indisposition on the part of the singer. However, Mr. Leinsdorf does not easily run out of winners and certainly neither did the audience when Moscow's 2nd prize winner, Veronica Tyler, on very short notice took Jane Marsh's place. From Charpentier's Louise, she sang "Depuis le jour" and from Puccini's La Boheme, "Si, mi chiamano Mimi" with a voice that displays the clear, young sounds of youth, plus a mature confidence and remarkable vocal control.

The remainder of the program included Wagner's Rhine Journey and a pitch plagued performance of Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture. There were also two works by Hindemith and Shostakovitch that produced, despite their mild dissonance, a pleasant shock of refreshment after a summer of 19th Century romance.

* * *

By LOUIS S. CUCCINELLO

Sunday

There is no question about the power of television as was evidenced Sunday at Tanglewood. The announced network coverage of the concert with "occasional scenes of the audience" was helpful in attracting the largest Sunday attendance of the summer. Conversation in the immediate area reflected the interest in the event and the pitch of the audience, in general, was similar to that of "opning night."

The orchestra — which has been consistently good — was exceptionally effective in dynamic shadings and phrasing and with its precision of tonal attack and balance. The outstanding orchestral moment came in the brilliant conclusion of the Brahms First Symphony.

In the second half of the afternoon the audience was introduced to two second prize winners at the Tchaikovsky International Competition in Moscow last May.

Miss Masuko Ushioda chose to play Prokofiev's "Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor." This concerto — composed during the summer and autumn of 1935 — was premiered in Madrid the same year and later introduced to an American audience by Serge Koussevitzky and our own Boston Symphony Orchestra with Jascha Heifetz as soloist.

Miss Ushioda is a strong, sensitive and confident performer. Her bow control and finger dexterity were more than a match for the incisive rhythms, flashing melodic fragments and bold staccato effects.

Misha Dichter also gave a good account of himself yesterday afternoon but this reveiwer feels it would have been wiser on the part of this young man to have selected a Piano Concerto less worn than the Tchaikovsky First.

Sandwiched between the two soloists was "Two Movements from Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" by Gunther Schuller. "Little Blue Devil" was the more enjoyable of the two with the persistent jazz beat and the traditional blues passages in the Brass.

Next week—Final weekend at Tanglewood 1966.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503

AUG 15 1966

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 41,720

AUG 15 1966

Miss Tyler First Rate In Sub Role

By HOWARD HEALY

These were some changes in Saturday night's performance at Tanglewood, the most significant one being soprano Veronica Tyler's substituting for Jane Marsh, who had been scheduled to sing but who was indisposed and could not appear.

Miss Marsh is, of course, the first prize winner in the Moscow Tchaikovsky International Music Competition, and she was undoubtedly the featured attraction on the program.

What this meant for Miss Tyler, then, is obvious—she not only had to sing well, which she did, but also overcome a certain disappointment which the audience would only naturally feel over Miss Marsh's absence.

And Miss Tyler could not have done better on the second count. She brought the crowded Tanglewood shed to thundering applause after singing Charpentier's "Depuis le jour," from "Louise," and Puccini's "Si, mi chiamano Mimi," from "La Boheme."

Miss Tyler has an exquisite voice of great purity and she delivered both selections in a moving and stunning way.

She is the second prize winner in the Moscow voice competition, and when one hears her sing with this fact in mind it makes one wonder at the enormous talents some people have in this world.

Another talented winner (taking second prize) at the Moscow competition is cellist Stephen Kates, who played Shostakovitch "Concerto for Cello and Orchestra," Op. 107, at Saturday's Tanglewood program.

The work is usually prefaced with an admonition that it is an integrated thing and not merely a showpiece for the cello or cellist. But for all practical purposes it is, and that is not really so bad as it sounds.

The soloist, who is only 23, went through the work in fine form and with sure footing in all the intricate demanding passages, giving the right interpretation to the more lyrical passages and the full force of youthful passion to the dynamic, turbulent passages.

In all, it looked like a very exhaustive performance for Kates, who at the end received some well earned rounds of applause and some firm handclaps from conductor Eric Leinsdorf.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Leinsdorf, played Hindemith's "Symphonic Metamorphosis of Themes by Carl Maria von Weber," and showed good strength in Wagner's "Dawn" and "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" from "Die Gotterdammerung." The orchestra opened the program with a substitution, Beethoven's "Leonore" No. 3 overture, which sounded a trifle lagging.

Music Review

133

Moscow Winners at Lenox

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE LAST PAIR of concerts of the next to last weekend at Tanglewood was unique, and proved to be one of the most exciting brace of events ever to take place in the Berkshire Festivals. Erich Leinsdorf, the musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had invited the winners of the recent Tchaikovski competitions in Moscow to appear on his Tanglewood programs. He had to settle, it developed, for the second-place winners in all the four categories; cello, voice, violin and cello, but what a settlement! Three of them were Americans; only the violin place winner was a foreigner, Miss Masuko Ushioda of Japan.

UNFORTUNATELY, first-place vocal winner Jane Marsh was obliged to withdraw because of a throat indisposition, and so second-place winner Veronica Tyler stepped in as a substitute. What a pity Miss Marsh lost the opportunity to let her Tanglewood audiences hear her talents, the ones which won her the distinction, and which, incidentally, had been recognized previously by the Boston Orchestra. Of Miss Tyler, however, one can only say that it would have been an equal pity to deprive the same audiences of the opportunity to hear her lovely gifts.

Saturday night Leinsdorf began his necessarily altered program with the Beethoven Leonore overture No. 3, which he played with extraordinary spaciousness and poise. Next came second-prize winner Stephen Kates, cello, in the Shostakovitch concerto, an exceedingly spiteful work with insistence on putting salt in vulgarly dissonant wounds. The tall, 23-year-old prize winner showed himself, first of all, a completely mature technician. He may have pressed a trifle too much in his effort to prove himself before his first great audience, but his tone in the slow movement and his sense of symmetry in the cadenza were earnests of his potential and future.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 15 1966

* * *

IT WAS a pleasant relief from the character of Shostakovitch's music to next hear the humorous and lightly gay symphonic Metamorphosis of Hindemith. Leinsdorf ended the orchestral program with the "Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey" from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung," but in between came Miss Tyler in the two operatic excerpts she had sung with the orchestra at the Gala Evening a few days previously. Again she sang with touching poignance the "Depuis le jour" of Charpentier's "Louise" and the "Mi chiamano Mimi" of Puccini's "La Boheme."

Yesterday afternoon Leinsdorf played some more Wagner, starting with the prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin." Then came the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C Minor. After intermission came the other two prize-winners, whose performances Leinsdorf separated with two excerpts from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," one of the very few contemporary and American exhibits of the whole summer list.

* * *

THE TRANSFERENCE to sound of Klee's designs and color is accomplished with more faithfulness than might seem possible on first thought. This does not necessarily attest that one approves of Klee's imaginative work but, granted that the painter has conveyed a valid impression, Schuller has surely caught the essence of the other's art. In Schuller's work, "The Twittering Machine" and "Little Blue Devil" are No. 4 and 3, respectively, in his Studies.

It is not convincing that the two studies chosen are the most truly revealing of Schuller's music. The "Blue Devil" is the more obvious in its blues rhythm and instrumental employment. "The Twittering" serves the composer better, to our opinion, although it is almost unfair to exhibit so small a fragment of the whole.

* * *

THE TWO soloists were sensational. Miss Ushioda was born in Manchuria and got much of her early training in Tokyo and then proceeded to Leningrad for further study. The Prokofiev violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor is a popular type of work, quite different from the less grateful cello concerto of his fellow-countryman Shostakovitch; however, the young prizewinner, standing lithe and ramrod straight, made her bow bite every millimeter of its traject and her big, round tone soared out, aided immeasureably by Leinsdorf's discreet accompaniment, to dominate the situation completely. There is almost a movie-type ballad in the main theme of the first movement, but Miss Ushioda made every note effective with her strong and true fingers.

Misha Dichter, in the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor, combined a Horowitz-style of technical ease with a poetic sense of proportion. Playing apparently with the utmost sang-froid, he alternated between crisply defined displays of keyboard mastery and deeply felt turns of gentle phrases. One could not have known that he was not dashing everything off with almost nonchalance until the audience saw that he used every instant of rest to mop his brow, nape and wrists. Dichter has a month to go to his 21st birthday. Predictions are futile for a boy of his present artistic stature, but he and the other weekend performers were thrilling, one and all.

134

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JUN 26 1966

Silverstein's Observations

Musical Competitions: Noise but Real Proof?

By MARGO MILLER

Europe is competition-mad, says a Boston violinist who has won several himself.

Joseph Silverstein, the 34-year-old Boston Symphony concertmaster, returned last week from observing the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow. He was there personally to extend to the winners in violin, cello, voice and piano the orchestra's invitation to perform at Tanglewood Aug. 13-14.

NBC will televise the Sunday afternoon concert Aug. 14. The network's first color-cast from Tanglewood, it will be beamed to Russia on Telstar.

Silverstein sat in on the violin and cello sessions. Competitions, he thinks, are valuable as incentive for young talent. His own contest years were 1959, when he took third in the Queen Elizabeth of the Belgians Concours (the only American to place in the top 10), and in 1960, when he won America's Naumburg.

"You have to have a lot of music ready," Silverstein said. "Then you are under a kind of tension which no concert can duplicate. It's a once-in-a-lifetime thing: You play the best you can. And just listening to the others you are exposed to a variety of styles. Maybe it didn't show up right away in my playing, but I learned a lot in the Brussels. And I learned a lot in Moscow."

Observing was equally educational, though for quite different reasons. For one thing, many entrants and all finalists were playing for a jury of their teachers. Partisan politics comes into this kind of a set-up, Silverstein thinks. For another, despite their very different teachers, the Russians tended to play all in the same manner.

A gifted mimic, Silverstein chose to do an imitation of cellist Gregor Piatagorsky, a juror, to show thus how hard judging is. Piatagorsky: "It is like ice-skating. One judge, he watches the figure-eight, he watches the skater trace very carefully the figure. He notices the skater blur the line. He takes out the pencil. He writes down the mistake. The other judges, they see him. They take out their pencils. They write down the mistake."

Violinist Efrem Zimbalist, also welcome comic relief (as well as Silverstein's former teacher), defined the competition's restrictions in another manner.

When the Soviet Minister of Culture, a woman, entered the jury room, all rose. His function as a gallant fulfilled, Zimbalist then took his seat. "Why I keep standing? She is not MY minister of culture."

Europeans have a competition mentality, Silverstein thinks, because so much of their training is toward the goal of a first prize. "Europe has competitions we never hear of. There is a regular circuit." He suggested that the push to win prizes goes back to the Paris Conservatory notion of constant preparation there for taking a first in one's instrument.

In Moscow, the violin finalists included two Americans. Erick Friedman, 26, tied for sixth, and Braintree-native Charles Castleman, 25, was eighth, seventh place not being awarded. Russia's Viktor Tretyakov, 19, won first. A Japanese girl and a Russian shared second. In another tie, third went to a 16-year-old Japanese, the youngest entrant, and a Russian, and fourth and fifth places, also to Russians.

In general, Silverstein thought the Americans played with more concern for the text and the composer's intentions. "The Russians are in the virtuosic 19th century tradition. Their interpretations are quite free. The basic element is emotional, overt warmth."

The national characteristics aside, Silverstein questions the number of prizes. What, to take Castleman's case, does "eighth" mean, with so many ties and "seventh" left vacant? And what does competition mean, as far as careers go? For all the noise about them, they are not the proof they should be of musical superiority.

"You can count on two hands the winners you still hear anything of. Chronologically, Oistrakh, 1937, in Brussels; Kogen, '51, Brussels; Fleisher, '52, Brussels. Then Cliburn, the Tchaikovsky in 1958. Frager, 1960, Brussels. Vladimar Ashkenzi, 1962, Tchaikovsky.

"Rostropovich never entered any competition. Leslie Parnas did, and he should be heard of more. To my mind, he's one of our greatest cellists."

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

JUL 23 1966

JANE MARSH is welcomed on her arrival at Kennedy Airport, Monday (11) by Roger Hall, left, manager of Red Seal a&r for RCA Victor; Norman Racusin, right, division vice-president and operations manager for Victor, and Bud Palmer, commissioner of the New York City Department of Public Events. Miss Marsh will record exclusively for Victor.

Jane Marsh Goes RCA

NEW YORK—Soprano Jane Marsh, who was honored last week (11) and (12) on her return to the United States after winning the Tchaikovsky International Competition, will record four of her contest series for RCA Victor. The LP will be cut during Tanglewood performances on July 24 and Aug. 13 with Eric Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony.

The first recording on Miss Marsh's new exclusive Victor contract will feature the Letter Scene from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin," an aria from Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," "O Patria Mia" from Verdi's "Aida," and the "Ave Maria" from Verdi's "Otello." Victor, which plans to rush-release the disk, also may record an album with Miss Marsh and two other Tchaikovsky competitors, soprano Veronica Tyler, who shared second-place honors in the women's vocal competition, and bass Simon Estes, who was second in the men's division.

The three were honored at a City Hall reception Tuesday (12), where Mayor John Lindsay presented Miss Marsh the city's Handel medal. Miss Marsh also was the subject of a Kennedy Airport press conference on Monday (11). This year's competition was the first Tchaikovsky event open to vocalists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

AUG 16 1966

TANGLEWOOD SHOWS A TOUCH OF FATIGUE

Interest in the weekend Tanglewood concerts and the NBC telecast Sunday of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Moscow Tchaikovsky Competition winners prompts some afterthoughts on the programs.

Masuko Ushioda, a silver medal-winner in Moscow, performed the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 for her local debut — an unfortunate choice, for it is not a good showpiece for musical ends and a spurious one for technique. Except for the middle andante, the solo part is given largely to furious bowing, the notes being detached and organized more by rhythm than melody.

Miss Ushioda stayed with it a bit breathlessly and, it must be said, not very expressively. During the andante, however, she proved possession of a fine, full tone without a trace of harshness, even under stress. Her finger work is agile and generally of good accuracy, which it stands to gain with time and work. The interpretation may reflect insufficient study, though I am skeptical about what further study of the Prokofiev could reveal.

Sunday's orchestral performances, not superlative, were on a much higher plane than on the days preceding. Wagner's Prelude to Act III of "Lohengrin," which opened, was of adequate brilliance and the two movements of Gunther Schuller's "Seven Klee Studies" were clean and amusing to the audience. Brahms' First Symphony, following the Wagner, gave the program its deepest substance, poetic and triumphant.

All this was in direct contrast to some frankly shoddy performances on Friday and Saturday. Sixten Ehrling, conducting Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony on Friday in a straightforward, if unexciting, fashion, contended with uncoordinated strings and weak, inaccurate winds. On Erich Leinsdorf's Saturday night program, Hindemith's "Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes by Weber" was blunted by murky brass and Wagner's "Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey" plain fell flat. But it has been a long season for the Symphony; could this be "49th week fatigue"?

The Courier-Journal
LOUISVILLE, KY.
D. 229,925 SUN. 338,841

AUG 15 1966

Bill Ladd's TV Almanac

Tanglewood Show Excellent

NBC and Channel 3 yesterday afternoon had the intestinal fortitude to buck the sports parade with 90 minutes of Boston Symphony Orchestra from the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. And one can only hope they had an audience of respectable size.

The program was excellent and provided something sadly lacking on television—a full length program by a great orchestra. It also gave an American television debut to two young people who recently were winners in the Third International Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow.

The two winners were Masuko Ushiodo, 24, a female Japanese violinist who played Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G, and Misha Dichter, a 20-year-old pianist from Beverly Hills, who played Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat.

The first half of the program was given over to the orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, in the prelude to the third act of Lohengrin and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

This last selection lent itself remarkably to the camera treatment prescribed by producer George Heinemann and director Ted Nathanson. They divided their shots between the orchestra inside the shed, and scenic shots of the Berkshire Hills. These blended effectively with Brahms' work and even seemed to illustrate it.

During intermission, Edwin Newman interviewed Leinsdorf and the two soloists. We usually see Newman as a newsman. However, he is a most capable interviewer in the cultural field, as those who have seen him on the New York NBC station know.

It was a Sunday afternoon program reminiscent of what Edward R. Murrow used to call the "cultural ghetto." But some of this sort of program is needed to balance off the sports presentations, and the show from Tanglewood was an excellent choice.

Air Pollution Show Planned

NBC and Channel 3 plan a documentary on air pollution for Oct. 2. While the network release doesn't mention it, Louisville was paid some attention in the preparation of the film.

A source at NBC says that a film crew either has already been to Louisville or will be here. Whether or not the city and its air pollution problem is discussed in the eventual film depends on the judgment of the producer and film editor as the film isn't completed, we are told.

Peyton Place After Fight

"Peyton Place" fans, who may be upset by the fact that the Torres-Cotton fight is scheduled at "Peyton Place" time tonight on Channel 32, needn't worry.

Just wait.

As soon as the fight is over, the station will do the "Peyton Place" episode, Wilson Hatcher of Channel 32 says.

The delay should be only a short one, and "Peyton Place" will start as soon as the fight is over, we are assured.

Ruth Lyons Returns Oct. 10

Ruth Lyons will return to Cincinnati's WLW-TV and radio Oct. 10.

Miss Lyons took a leave of absenc during the latter part of her daughter's long illness and her death. The daughter, Candy Newman, died earlier this year while returning from a trip toEurope.

Music Preview at Ball Game

If you can't wait to get a preview of some of the music from the ABC musical special called "Olympus 7-0000" you can journey to the University of North Carolina homecoming football game Sept. 24.

One of the songs by Richard Adler has been adopted as the fight song for the university's football team and will be used for the first time between halves of that game, four days before the show gets on the network.

The Virginian-Pilot
NORFOLK, VA.
D. 124,468 SUN. 165,920

AUG 16 1966

Omnibus Ghost Haunts Sunday

By MAL VINCENT
Virginian-Pilot Staff Writer

COULD THE GHOST of Omnibus be revived? Judging from the programming available to televiewers Sunday, there appears to be some chance.

Omnibus, as many may remember, was the Sunday afternoon potpourri of gems from the performing arts. Its demise left a void and destroyed the hope of many that perhaps Sunday afternoon viewing would become a haven for those who wanted something more for the price of their television set than situation comedies and second-rate varity shows. As television became more universal, network officials apparently thought the audience attracted by Omnibus was not large enough. As a result, more trivial fare was offered and has remained.

This past Sunday was a notable exception. There were no less than three programs that would have been an equal match for anything on the old Omnibus show. From 2:30 until 5, a concert from the Berkshire Festival with the Boston Symphony was offered featuring two soloists who were recent winners of the third Intenational Techaikovsky Competition in Moscow.

From 6:30 until 7:30, one of the few repeats that is truly worthy of being repeated was available. It was a travelogue, The River Nile, with James Mason narrating. This enlightening odyssey along the mysterious river was always enlightening but seldom arty—a visual treat.

Out of Thin Air

NOT TO BE outdone by these two NBC programs of merit, CBS trotted out one its typically worthwhile 20th Century documentaries. This one was on Greece and the dramatic influences that brought about its Civil War and eventual defeat of Communist influences.

This doesn't sound like a vast wasteland—at least, not a complete wasteland. Even if the remainder of the week is filled with only trivia (as is highly likely), it can at least be said that television had four hours of worthwhile viewing this week.

In looking through old clippings, I recently ran across a statement made by Gilbert Seldes, critic for the Atlantic Monthly in 1937. He said, "I have a feeling that the most important thing for television is to make sure of its own popularity. Like the moving pictures and the radio, television would act against its own nature if it did not try to be virtually a universal entertainment."

He was maintaining, in effect, that the audiences for the Army-McCarthy hearings, Nixon-Kennedy debate and other public affairs programs were created in the first place by the popularity of Milton Berle, I Love Lucy, Hopalong Cassidy and Howdy Doody. He well may be right.

BUT, SINCE 1937, the popularity has certainly been established. Now that the audience is created, it seems there should be a place for more and more informational programming that will offer far more to the viewers. Sunday was a good example of what can be done. Let's have more of it.

Morning News
WILMINGTON, DEL.
D. 40,885

AUG 16 1966

Lively and Otherwise

TV men mix rock 'n' roll bit with symphony

By OTTO DEKOM
Critic-at-large

Reprinted from late edition of yesterday's Morning News

Television has come to Tanglewood, and one couldn't ask for a more eloquent demonstration of the tastelessness which rules televisionland.

Yesterday, NBC made the first full-length live network broadcast of a Berkshire Festival Concert. Culture for the millions.

What they got was something wonderful, carefully mixed with the customary trash without which television seems unable to function. NBC should be ashamed.

To begin with, announcer Edwin Newman's style is better suited to a riot or a baseball game in Pasadena. He kept calling the world-famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ErISH Leinsdorf. He spoke Wagner's first name as if the "h" were Russian or the very hard sound in Puerto Rican Spanish (as in "jota").

If the man can't pronounce the original tongue, why not say Eric or Richard in English? Everybody doesn't need to be a linguist or pretend to be.

Newman wasted much of the intermission interview with Erich Leinsdorf discussing if some musical events ought to be called "festivals." Surely, one of the most important conductors in the United States has something to talk about in music.

These are minor items; let them pass. There is not much call in television for cultural breadth.

As soon as the orchestra finished the third act prelude of "Lohengrin," Newman announced the inevitable "message." Well, ok, somebody has to pay for television. In this case, it was NBC, with a promotion for the trash it is going to present this fall.

The commercial consisted mostly of loud, strident, brassy popular music, plus loud passages of rock 'n' roll — in the middle of a symphonic concert — to promote something ungrammatically called "The Monkees Is Coming."

So it went for 2½ hours. The glorious Brahms first symphony was followed by more rock 'n' roll. The third time it was Elvis Presley. The fourth time, some stupid Peace Corps promotion largely — what else? Rock 'n' roll.

The music was, as can be expected from Leinsdorf and the Boston, excellent. The program did not shrink from Prokofiev and Gunther Schuler, a contemporary American who proves that all orchestral sounds are not music.

It would have been interesting to hear the concert through something other than the TV set. This is a key question: How effective is a symphonic program on TV? The sound is poor, since only a rare set has anything but the most primitive audio stages.

But the problem goes deeper. The small screen cannot encompass the orchestra as does the eye, which compels the director to use technical tricks for visual effects.

This movement is usually not a contribution, but a distraction. They eye at a concert follows its own pattern and rhythm, not necessarily that of the director.

The director concentrated on a lady flutist, and the oboist next to her for much of the Brahms. Women sell everything on TV, why not Brahms, eh?

There was no closeup of the violin, in a symphony rich in strings, until nearly the end of the second movement. Closeups of conductor and soloists were good. One could see Leinsdorf's technique and his occasional singing of "pam, pam, pam." Violinist Masuko Ushoda, doing the Prokofiev second concerto, came out exceptionally well.

From the musical standpoint, it is probably more effective — except for live attendance — to hear such a concert on radio or records, without the distractions of the fidgety camera.

This is not, however, the main consideration. Such a program serves a mass audience. It may be the first time most viewers see a symphony orchestra. For them the visual impact is more important.

In other words, TV provides cultural experience which may not come any other way, and which may stir up interest for further exploration.

136

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Advertiser
LIVERMORE FALLS, Maine
Weekly Circ. 1,850
AUG 18 1966

EDITORIAL

By Helen Caldwell Cushman

Bravo! NBC

[illegible] TV fan, I am definitely [illegible] watch the news daily, and now and then [illegible] choice programs on Channel 10, our ETV Station. But Sunday afternoon on NBC there was a program so good that I shouted "Bravo" with thousands of people in the live audience at Tanglewood. It was an NBC program and it was live from Tanglewood and featured the Boston Symphony in a stunning concert. Eric Leinsdorf was as magnificent as he always is conducting a Brahms Symphony in the first half. He was delightful in a taped interview during the intermission. Paul Newman of the NBC Staff asked him if he had a prescription for listening to music. He laughed and shook his head and said, sagely, "You can get a prescription for a headache but for listening to music, each person must do it in his own way." The second half featured two young winners of the recent Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. A lovely young girl, Masuko Ushioda, who had won the violin competition, played the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor, brilliantly. The young artist was followed by Misha Dichter from Los Angeles who played the most popular of all Tchaikovsky's works, the Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat Minor. He is young and was nervous. The orchestra was as exciting as the soloists and even the numbers of the Tchaikovsky symphony exploded. The audience was ecstatic. Thank you, NBC for an afternoon of television.

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,587
AUG 18 1966

TANGLEWOOD REVIEWED

TANGLEWOOD
Friday — By D. D.

A fine evening of music was afforded Tanglewood listeners by the Swedish conductor, Sixten Ehrling, and the Boston Symphony of Jean Sibelius and the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikowsky. Few conductors since Koussevitsky have succeeded in conveying the intensely Nordic character of the Finnish master's symphonic works. Mr. Ehrling is well on his way to achieving the laurels of his illustrious predecessor. His reading, powerful and, not at all, original, molded the structural elements of the symphony into a unity of profoundly felt and expressed. His handling of instrumental detail was at times astonishing. Certain passages of brasses and woodwinds had a strikingly beautiful chant-like quality, suggestive of human voices against a background of lakes and forests.

Needless to say, the Tchaikowsky Fourth Symphony was given a superb reading, from all standpoints. But even this treatment failed to play on the tonal resources of the orchestra, giving the old chestnut new life and fusing them into an intensely dramatic whole. Particularly exciting was the last movement, the orchestral voices seemed to possess an unusual unity and precision despite a whirlwind tempo and a fitting finale to a delightful musical evening.

Saturday — By C. N. D.

Saturday night's concert, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, featured two winners of the Tchaikovsky International Music Competition in Moscow — Stephen Kates, who played the Shostakovitch Cello Concerto and Veronica Tyler, who sang two operatic arias. Jane Marsh, first prize winner in the Moscow competition, was to have sung but at the last minute was disabled with tonsilitis. Miss Tyler, who placed second, appeared in her place and her fine singing, beautiful voice and bouyant personality won an ovation. Miss Tyler's two arias, Depuis le jour from Louise and Si, mi chiamano Mimi from La Boheme are surefire hits in the hands of a firstrate singer, and this talented young colored girl is already, in spite of her youth, a superb vocalist.

The Shostakovitch Cello Concerto which Mr. Kates played did not come over as well. I doubt if any cello concerto with that huge orchestra and those great open spaces can really sound well. The cello is a chamber music instrument and needs to be played with four walls surrounding it and protecting its tone. Nonetheless, Mr. Kates is a player of great ability with a large tone and should be heard in music that favors the cello.

It was a brisk cool evening and the numbers played by the Orchestra which included the Hindemith Symphonic Metamorphosis of Themes by Carl Maria von Weber and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from Gotterdammerung were magnificently played.

Sunday — By C. N. D

On Sunday afternoon, Erich Leinsdorf presented two more prizewinners from the Moscow competition and what gifted young people they turned out to be. Masuko Ushioda, born in Manchuria and trained in Japan, created a fine impression in Prokofiev's Second Violin Concerto and Misha Dichter, in the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto aroused tumultuous enthusiasm with his performance of this popular piece. This piano concerto has been played to death, but it still is one of the heaven - storming pieces for piano and orchestra, and it is to Mr. Dichter's credit that he revealed a new beauty in it in the midst of magnificent Piano concertos as a group come through quite well in orchestra much better than do concertos for strings and instruments. At Tanglewood, even the piano tone can already be heard, and as a result the pianist can always appear at his best whereas the violinist and cellist often have their best playing diluted by all that fresh air.

The Orchestra played the Brahms First Symphony with a fine feeling for the tenderness of the second movement and the heroic sweep of the first and last movements. Two amusing and witty pieces by Gunther Schuller from a set of Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee amused and delighted the audience. Mr. Gunther was brought out on the platform to acknowledge the applause. All in all it was an unusually exciting Sunday afternoon program.

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 2,267
AUG 17 1966

Fine Programs Attract Throngs At Tanglewood

Tanglewood's next to last weekend series of concerts drew as many, if not more, than the number of assorted music devotees, attending the previous weekend contests; the total including Wednesday's concert and Saturday rehearsal, being 33,211.

Friday's program was guest conducted by Swedish-born Sixten Ehrling, a contemporary and friend of Jean Sibelius whose First Symphony he commanded with the resplendent response of the Boston Symphony, a company he evidently enjoyed listening to, as well as exploring the vast, impressive impact of this composer's work. Tschaikovsky's Fourth, romantic, like the preceding symphony, an intensely personal statement, but with more tragic overtones, completed the cooly refreshing evening.

Appearing for her indisposed colleague Jane Marsh, Saturday evening, Veronica Tyler graciously and beautifully gave a delighted audience "Depuis le jour" from "Louise," and "Si, mi chiamamo Mimi," from "La Boheme." She is also one of the 1966 Moscow Tschiakovsky Competition winners Erich Leinsdorf has presented at three of the festival concerts including Sunday's.

Beethoven's Leonore overture No. 3, Op. 72, opened the partially revised concert; closing it was Wagner's Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey, haunting lovely, its changing atmospheric moods controlled and suffused by both Leinsdorf and the orchestra.

A second prize winner, cellist Stephen Kates, third generation in a family of musicians displayed a magnificent technique in his playing of Shostakovitch's Concerto, Op. 107 noteworthy especially in the cadenza, his tone quality difficult to determine rather prodigious in its formation, perhaps he himself lost the sound too quickly in the vast shed. At any rate the audience responded with great enthusiasm.

Sunday's program, extremely lengthy, but at the request of the television station broadcasting it in color across the nation, was nevertheless punctuated with two outstanding excellent performers, the last of the prize winners to appear this summer, both in the second section.

More Wagner, his Prelude to Lohengrin's Act III, and Brahms' Symphony No. 1, Op. 68, comprised the first. Again we wonder at those who reject the latter composer, when we hear, and at the master precisionist Leinsdorf's hands, such magnificent workmanship so clearly revealed, and are impelled to listen, joyously intent, so as not to miss the delicacy or profundity of each new turn, and quickly caught development of themes, and counter-themes, threaded through the instruments with freshly changing skeins of color within a perfect structure.

Prokokiev's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, No. 2, Op. 63 in Gminor composed 22 years after his first, was Masuko Ushioda's tour de force, complementing her beautifully simple yet strong and warm personality, revealed in a perfected technique that never faltered, even at fingered octaves, certain in placement, with a bow arm that didn't hesitate at any virtuosic demand.

Two Movements from "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" by Gunther Schuller, "Little Blue Devil" and "The Twittering Machine," amusingly yet seriously conceived, were relaxing but brief moments before the last but by no means least competition winner to be heard this season.

After hearing Misha Dichter play Tschaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, (it is, of course, a requirement in these competitions, and popularized Van Cliburn after his award for its performance in a previous similar event) we wonder why he only received a second prize. Marvelous hands that didn't attack his instrument (he plays the right one) but wooed every variation of sound and technique with masterful empathy, and a mateurity that believes his 21 years. We were deeply moved and excited, along with the rest of the wildly applauding audience (they did the

New England Newspaper Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

News-Advertiser
WESTFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,577
AUG 18 1966

Drama & the Arts

By NANCY FUGH
For the News Advertiser

Tanglewood — Last weekend (Aug. 13 and 14) Tanglewood audiences enthusiastically received the prize winners of the Tchaikovsky International Music Competition. The young instrumentalists who were making their first American concert appearance subsequent to the Moscow contest were: Misha Dichter, pianist; Stephen Kates, cellist, and Masuko Ushioda, Japanese violinist. Jane Marsh, first prize winner in the Tschaikovsky voice competition, was making her third appearance this season at Tanglewood. She sang two arias Saturday night — Lisa's scene and Arioso from Tschaikovsky's "The Queen of Spades," followed by the Introduction, Willow Song and Ave Maria from Verdi's "Otello," which she sang in her prize winning performance in Moscow.

Stephen Kates, the third generation in a family of professional musicians, also played his prize winning selection — Shostakovitch's Cello Concerto. Misha Dichter gave a brilliant performance, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of Tschaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1. Masuko Ushioda, who won second prize in the Tschaikovsky violin competition, captivated both audiences in Tanglewood and on live color TV on NBC's television network with a memorable performance of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2.

A very special weekend for Tschaikovsky enthusiasts!

During the week, opening Sunday evening August 14, a five-day festival of contemporary American music, featuring four world premieres, commissioned for the Berkshire Music Center by the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

If you haven't visited Tanglewood yet this season—this is your last chance, this weekend. Friday night starts with a weekend prelude at 7 o'clock of Liszt's piano transcriptions and ends on Sunday with Eric Leinsdorf conducting Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

136

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Advertiser
LIVERMORE FALLS, Maine
Weekly Circ. 1,850
AUG 18 1966

EDITORIAL

By Helen Caldwell Cushman

Bravo! NBC

[illegible]ent TV fan, I am definitely [illegible] do watch the news daily, and the weather, and now and then some choice programs on Channel 10, our ETV Station. But Sunday afternoon on NBC there was a program so good that I shouted 'Bravo' with thousands of people in the live audience at Tanglewood. It was an NBC program and it was live from Tanglewood and featured the Boston Symphony in a stunning concert. Erich Leinsdorf was as magnificent as he always is conducting a Brahms Symphony in the first half. He was delightful in a taped interview during the intermission. Paul Newman of the NBC Staff asked him if he had a prescription for listening to music. He laughed and shook his head and said, sagely, 'You can get a prescription for a headache but not for listening to music, each person must do it in his own way." The second half featured two young winners of the recent Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. A lovely Japanese girl, Masuko Ushiodo, who had won the violin competition, played the Prokofief Violin Concerto, No 2, in G Minor, brilliantly. The other young artist was Mischa Dichter from Los Angeles who played the most popular of all Tchaikovsky's works, his Piano Concerto No 1 in B flat Minor. He is only 20 and was amazing. The audience was as enthusiastic as I was, and even the members of the Boston Symphony applauded the young man. Thank you, NBC for an inspiring afternoon.

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,587
AUG 18 1966

TANGLEWOOD REVIEWED

TANGLEWOOD
Friday — By D. D.

A fine evening of music was afforded Tanglewood listeners by the Swedish conductor, Sixten Ehrling, and the Boston Symphony of Jean Sibelius, and the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikowsky. Few conductors since Koussevitzky have succeeded in conveying the intensely Nordic character of the Finnish master's symphonic works. Mr. Ehrling is well on his way to achieving the laurels of his illustrious predecessor.

His reading, powerful and, above all, original, molded the structural elements of the symphony into a unity, profoundly felt and expressed. His handling of instrumental detail was at times astonishing. Certain passages of brasses and woodwinds had a strangely beautiful, chant-like quality, suggestive of human voices against a background of lakes and forests.

Needless to say, the Tchaikowsky Fourth Symphony was given a superb reading from all standpoints. A real bravado treatment called into play all the tonal resources of the orchestra, giving the old cliches new life and fusing them into an intensely dramatic whole. Particularly exciting was the last movement; the orchestral voices seemed to possess an unusual clarity and precision despite a whislwind tempo, a fitting finale for a delightful musical evening.

Saturday — By C. N. D.

Saturday night's concert, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, featured two winners of the Tchaikovsky International Music Competition in Moscow — Stephen Kates, who played the Shostakovitch Cello Concerto and Veronica Tyler, who sang two operatic arias. Jane Marsh, first prize winner in the Moscow competition, was to have sung but at the last minute was disabled with tonsilitis. Miss Tyler, who placed second appeared in her place and her fine singing, beautiful voice and bouyant personality won an ovation. Miss Tyler's two arias, Depuis le jour from Louise and Si, mi chiamano Mimi from La Boheme are surefire hits in the hands of a firstrate singer, and this talented young colored girl is already, in spite of her youth, a superb vocalist.

The Shostakovitch Cello Concerto which Mr. Kates played did not come over as well. I doubt if any cello concerto with that huge orchestra and those great open spaces can really sound well. The cello is a chamber music instrument and needs to be played with four walls surrounding it and protecting its tone. Nonetheless, Mr. Kates is a player of great ability with a large tone and should be heard in music that favors the cello.

It was a brisk cool evening and the numbers played by the Orchestra which included the Hindemith Symphonic Metamorphosis of Themes by Carl Maria von Weber and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from Gotterdammerung were magnificently played.

Sunday — By C. N. D

On Sunday afternoon, Erich Leinsdorf presented two more prizewinners from the Moscow competition, and what gifted young people they turned out to be! Masuko Ushioda, born in Manchuria and trained in Japan, made a fine impression with Prokofiev's Second Violin Concerto, and Misha Dichter, in the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto, aroused tumultuous enthusiasm with his performance of this popular piece. This piano concerto has been played to death but it still is one of the heaven - storming pieces for piano and orchestra, and it is to Mr. Dichter's credit that he revealed new beauties to us in the second movement. Piano concertos as a group come through the orchestra much better than do concertos for string instruments at Tanglewood. The bite of a piano tone can always be heard, and as a result a pianist can always appear at his best whereas the violinist and cellist often have their best playing diluted by all that fresh air.

The Orchestra played the Brahms' First Symphony with a fine feeling for the tenderness of the second movement and the heroic sweep of the first and last movements. Two amusing and witty pieces by Gunther Schuller from a set of Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee amused and delighted the audience. Mr. Gunther was brought out on the platform to acknowledge the applause. All in all it was an unusually exciting Sunday afternoon program.

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 21,672
AUG 17 1966

Fine Programs Attract Throngs At Tanglewood

Tanglewood's next to last weekend series of concerts drew as many, if not more, than the number of assorted music devotees, attending the previous weekend contests; the total including Wednesday's concert and Saturday rehearsal, being 33,211.

Friday's program was guest conducted by Swedish-born Sixten Ehrling, a contemporary and friend of Jan Sibelius whose First Symphony he commanded with the resplendent response of the Boston Symphony, a company he evidently enjoyed listening to, as well as exploring the vast impressive impact of this composer's work. Tschaikovsky's Fourth, romantic, like the preceding symphony, an intensely personal statement, but with more tragic overtones, completed the cooly refreshing evening.

Appearing for her indisposed colleague Jane Marsh, Saturday evening, Veronica Tyler graciously and beautifully gave a delighted audience "Depuis le jour" from "Louise," and "Si mi chiamamo Mimi," from "La Boheme." She is also one of the 1966 Moscow Tschiakovsky Competition winners Erich Leinsdorf has presented at three of the festival concerts including Sunday's.

Beethoven's Leonore overture No. 3, Op. 72, opened the partially revised concert; closing it was Wagner's Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey, haunting lovely, its changing atmospheric moods controlled and subdued by both Leinsdorf and the orchestra.

A second prize winner, cellist Stephen Kates, third generation in a family of musicians displayed a magnificent technique in his playing of Shostakovitch's Concerto, Op. 107, noteworthy especially in the cadenza, his tone quality difficult to determine, rather prodigious in its formation, perhaps he himself lost the sound too quickly in the vast shed. At any rate the audience responded with great enthusiasm.

Sunday's program, extremely lengthy, buf at the request of the television station broadcasting it in color across the nation, was nevertheless punctuated with two outstanding excellent performers, the last of the prize winners to appear this summer, both in the second section.

More Wagner, his Prelude to Lohneengrin's Act III, and Brahms' Symphony No. 1, Op. 68, comprised the first. Again we wonder at those who reject the latter composer, when we hear, and at the master precisionist Leinsdorf's hands, such magnificent workmanship so clearly revealed, and are impelled to listen, joyously intent, so as not to miss the delicacy or profundity of each new turn, and quickly caught development of themes, and counter-themes, threaded through the instruments with freshly changing skeins of color within a perfect structure.

Prokokiev's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, No. 2, Op. 63 in Gminor composed 22 years after his first, was Masuko Ushioda's tour de force, complementing her beautifully simple yet strong and warm personality, revealed in a perfected technique that never faltered, even at fingered octaves, certain in placement, with a bow arm that didn't hesitate at any virtuosic demand.

Two Movements from "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" by Gunther Schuller, "Little Blue Devil" and "The Twittering Machine," amusingly yet seriously conceived, were relaxing but brief moments before the last but by no means least competition winner to be heard this season.

After hearing Misha Dichter play Tschaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, (it is, of course, a requirement in these competitions, and popularized Van Cliburn after his award for its performance in a previous similar event) we wonder why he only received a second prize. Marvelous hands that didn't attack his instrument (he plays the right one) but wooed every variation of sound and technique with masterful empathy, and a maturity that believes his 21 years. We were deeply moved and excited, along with the rest of the wildly applauding audience (they did the

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

News-Advertiser
WESTFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,577
AUG 18 1966

Drama & the Arts

By NANCY PUGH
For the News Advertiser

Tanglewood — Last weekend (Aug. 13 and 14) Tanglewood audiences enthusiastically received four prize winners of the Tschaikovsky International Music Competition. The young instrumentalists who were making their first American concert appearance subsequent to the Moscow contest were: Misha Dichter, pianist; Stephen Kates, 'cellist, and Masuko Ushioda, Japanese violinist, Jane Marsh, first prize winner in the Tschaikovsky voice competition, was making her third appearance this season at Tanglewood. She sang two arias Saturday night — Lisa's scene and Arioso from Tschaikovsky's "The Queen of Spades," followed by the Introduction, Willow Song and Ave Maria from Verdi's "Otello," which she sang in her prize winning performance in Moscow.

Stephen Kates, the third generation in a family of professional musicians, also played his prize winning selection — Shostakovitch's 'Cello Concerto. Misha Dichter gave a brilliant performance, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Tschaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1. Masuko Ushioda, who won second prize in the Tschaikovsky violin competition, captivated both audiences in Tanglewood and on live, color TV on NBC's television network with a memorable performance of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2.

A very special weekend for Tschaikovsky enthusiasts!

During the week, opening Sunday evening August 14, a five-day festival of contemporary American music, featuring four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

If you haven't visited Tanglewood yet this season—this is your last chance, this weekend. Friday night starts with a weekend prelude at 7 o'clock of Liszt's piano transcriptions and ends on Sunday with Eric Leinsdorf conducting Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

EVENING JOURNAL
WILMINGTON, DELAWARE
D. 84,006

AUG 1 8 1966

Music Notes

Symphony Program Is TV Highlight

By DAVID B. KOZINSKI

The television highlight in the summer came over NBC last Sunday afternoon.

The two and one-half hour concert by the Boston Symphony live from its summer home in Tanglewood, Mass., with two second-place winners in the recent Tschaikovsky international competition in Moscow as soloists (Van Cliburn scored his great success there some years ago) and Erich Leinsdorf conducting a comprehensive program, was an obvious effort by NBC to reach the mass audience with the best in orchestral music.

Elliott Edwin Newman, who usually operates as a newsman, interviewed the conductor and the two young soloists in a casual, human interest manner.

Camera shots aimed at the beautiful trees, sky, lake, and mountains that travelers to Tanglewood experience, were shown during sections of the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

This, for some, may have been an intrusion on the music itself. But for those who need to associate music with visual or other extra-musical ideas, the camera work was in taste.

As Leinsdorf brought out in his brief interview, taped before the live telecast, there is no way to advise people how to listen to music. There are those who like to read a book to music, others follow the score, or just listen for the sheer musical satisfactions.

He also stressed the identification with, and love of nature that was so strong in the lives of many great composers.

Leinsdorf's image was warm, human, and his parting words, when Newman noted that the conductor was returning to the orchestra rehearsal, "Yes as some say, back to the salt mines," underlined his down-to-earth qualities.

Miss Masuko Yushioda, the 24-year-old Japanese violinist was charming, and 20-year-old pianist, Mischa Dichter of California, handsome in their pre-taped interview on the lawn. Miss Yushioda's halting English precluded any kind of in-depth interview, but, oh how articulate she was through music when she performed on the violin!

Her work in Prokofieff's demanding Violin Concerto No. 2 was exemplary in discipline, posture and technique. The slow movement was most impressive in its lyrical flights.

Dichter's playing of Tschaikovsky's Piano Concerto that concluded the concert was almost effortless, and for one so young, quite individual, especially in the octaves at the end of the opening movement which he played more deliberately and with better musical and technical results than many more mature artists achieve.

The close-ups of the conductor and both soloists provided unique, on-the-spot, under-fire, studies in performance. Also, the chance for millions just to see and hear the Boston Symphony in action was invaluable.

Wagner's Prelude to Act III of Lohengrin opened the concert. Also included were two movements from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee." "Twittering Machine" with its clever aerial writing drew smiles from the delighted audience. "Little Blue Devil," depending too heavily on a square rhythmic scheme, was tiresome.

Schuller, chairman of composition at Tanglewood, took a bow. (He conducted a concert of avant garde music locally last year.)

On Friday at 8 p.m. over Channel 12, there will be more music from Tanglewood. The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will play compositions by Beethoven, Mahler, Strauss, Mozart and Debussy.

The new Chamber Symphony of Philadelphia, conducted by Anshel Brusilow, is attracting much notice these days. The orchestra will bow in style at a gala premiere concert and ball on Sunday, Oct. 2, at the Academy of Music and the Bellevue Stratford Ballroom.

One of the world's greatest conductors who will be guest conductor of the Chamber Symphony next Spring is Antal Dorati. Maestro Dorati conducted the Philadelphia orchestra at Robin Hood Dell during a week in July, and for his genuine interpretations of the great music he conducted, he received acclaim both from audiences and musicians of the orchestra.

We heard his concert of Weber's "Oberon" Overture, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegels Merry Pranks," "Hary Janos" Suite by Kodaly, and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4.

Dorati's Oberon was mystically poetic in the quiet opening measures, and breathtaking in the main, rapid sections. The Strauss was alternately meticulous, swaggering, boisterous but always precise and to the point.

The Tschaikovsky which ended the concert with standing ovations from the audience was aptly heroic, but also very imaginative in its more subtle stretches. Dorati's management of both the seething and the introspective writing of this enigmatic genius of a composer, gave it the status of its intellectual worth that many conductors simply do not grasp.

It was in his special insights into Kodaly's "Hary Janos" (or Harry John that Dorati calls the anatomy of the lie) that the conductor was most brilliant. The morale of the status hungry peasant who well knows his painful limitations, but who dreams of grand deeds, had special significance as interpreted by Dorati.

Dorati's itinerary after Robin Hood Dell includes a flying trip to conduct a three-day engagement with the Israeli Philharmonic, some time for vacation, then an engagement with the London Symphony, and finally, this fall, an extended tour as conductor of the Israeli Philharmonic of Japan and the Far East.

AMARILLO, TEXAS
GLOBE TIMES
D. 40,000

AUG 1 8 1966

Opportunity Overlooked

Sound Off:

Last Sunday, NBC-TV scheduled "An Afternoon at Tanglewood" combining the talents of the Boston Symphony, its conductor and two young soloists who distinguished themselves in the recent Tchaikowsky Competitions.

It was disappointing not to hear the young American pianist, Misha Dichter (whom many people believe was best in the piano division in Moscow), as KGNC-TV pre-empted that portion of the program in favor of the opening of the new Bank of the Southwest Building.

We have no quarrel with KGNC's airing of the opening as we realize that the station is a business which must profit where it justifiably may. However, could not the Tanglewood program have been taped and run at some other appropriate time?

Would not any Amarillo TV or radio station gain much good will be re-scheduling such programs as "Tanglewood?" Programs in this category are not frequent, and for various reasons all too often pre-empted; surely they don't deserve to be completely wasted.

Serious music lovers are generally regarded as being a smal segment of the total TV audience, but when you said the bands and orchestras of the area's grade, junior and senior high schools, colleges and university, the parents of each student-musician, their teachers and directors, members of the symphony and its supporters you have a pretty hefty segment. Isn't it worth some consideration?

Donald W. B. Stewart
3018 Washington

WABASH, IND.
PLAIN DEALER
D. 8,500

AUG 2 5 1966

Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

NBC presented Boston's Symphony Orchestra in color from Tanglewood, Mass., again Sunday afternoon. It proved the universe is a great symphony.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, was the epitome of urbanity, leading his orchestra in the superb outdoor setting. Masuko Ushioda, 24, Japanese violinist, played Prokofiev's Concerto for Violin No. 2 with the virtuosity which won the international music contest in Moscow.

Views of hemlock, pine, flowering hedges, spacious lawns and lakes of Tanglewood did justice to television's technical excellence.

Misha Dichter, 20-year-old pianist, played the Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 like an expert. Handsome, without mannerisms, he made the performance seem effortless.

Crowd shots showed an attentive audience of all ages. It filled the shell and grounds. It seemed absorbed in the music while enjoying the natural setting. Nature's beauty enhanced the musician's inspiration.

The program illustrated the heights of nobility to which mankind is capable of ascending and of comprehending.

Memphis Press Scimitar
MEMPHIS, TENN.
D. 133,258

AUG 1 7 1966

Letters TO THE EDITOR

Thanks for 'Real' Music, Says Mrs. Leland Harris

I wish through The Press-Scimitar to thank WMCT for presenting the delightful and astute Boston Symphony last Sunday.

In my opinion every home should expose such music to children of all ages. Records are beautiful, but the live coverage is much more impressive.

Thank WMCT kindly for REAL music.

Those who may have heard "An Afternoon With Tanglewood" would hardly call for a follow-up of the Beatles.

MRS. LELAND HARRIS,
814 Hamilton Avenue,
Wynne, Ark.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

AUG 20 1966

Television Excellence

To the Editor of The Herald:

The most delightful and cultural event I have seen on television was "An Afternoon at Tanglewood" on Sunday afternoon from 2:30 to 5:00 p.m., telecast live, in color, from the Berkshires.

The lush greenery of the beautiful 210 acre estate as the camera roamed the grounds, the red podium, the musician's white suits, the brilliant blue of violinist Masuko Yushioda's gown as she played the Prokofiev concerto were all lovely to behold.

The guest soloists' Miss Yushioda and Misha Dichter, both talented, winsome people, and winners of the 3rd International Tchaivosky Competition, were interviewed during intermission and we learned a bit about their lives and hopes. The interview with Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, the conductor, was simply enchanting for here is an utterly charming down-to-earth gentleman. We learned a little about the origin of Tanglewood itself.

Anyone who missed this "blue chip" program lost a great deal for in these days of substandard, run-of-the-mill television, this performance really was outatanding. But, I think it is a sad commentary to learn that this program had to be carried on a sustaining basis because when it was offered by NBC for $140,000 with 12 commercial positions, there were no takers. This was the first time a full lenght concert was offered live in color from the Berkshires and it seems incredible somehow that it went begging for the want of a sponsor.

I enjoyed it thoroughly and I fervently hope that this type concert will again be offered next year.

MRS. THEODORE GUNARIS Lincoln

138

Catholic Free Press
WORCESTER, Mass.
Weekly Religious
Circ. 43,697

AUG 26 1966

SPEAKING OF TELEVISION

By CHRIS CONDON

An 'Afternoon At Tanglewood' Shows What TV Can Do

If, on infrequent occasions, TV didn't go out of its way to demonstrate how superlatively it can perform—as in a great drama like "Death of a Salesman" or in special events coverage as of the Pope's visit to New York—there would probably be less insistance by critics and public that it live up to its potential.

From the standpoint of self interest, it could be argued that NBC succeeded only in putting itself and the industry on the spot with "An After in Tanglewood." For now we know that the medium is more than capable in still another area—classical music. We know and presumably will demand that there be more concerts presented in so enchanting a fashion. The two-and-a-half hour broadcast delightfully conveyed the very special charm of Tanglewood, the Lenox, Massachusetts, estate which serves as summer home and workshop for the Boston Symphony.

* * *

Thanks to the multiple carefully-chosen vantage points for the TV cameras, the home audience was able to savor not only the atmosphere in the music shed which houses the orchestra and a portion of the audience, but also the delights of listening to the music on the lawn outside with the rest of the music lovers against the backdrop of stunning vistas of the rolling Berkshire hills.

The TV direction by Ted Nathanson was sensitive, tasteful, and no subtle one was never consciously made aware of his artistry. The video portion perfectly complimented the music, never distracting from it. Wisely, during solos, he kept the cameras where they belonged—on the artists. The soloists were clearly chosen for their TV appeal; both young, photogenic, and both with newly-won laurels from the Tchaikovsky competition.

This national TV exposure must surely have given great impetus to the budding careers of Masuko Ushioda, the 19-year-old Japanese girl who placed second in Moscow in the violin competition, and Misha Dichter, a 20-year-old Californian who finished second in piano.

* * *

A welcome sidebar to the concert was Edwin Newman's intermission interviews with them with the accent on Tanglewood's deserved reputation for encouraging youthful musicians.

The leisurely intermission typical of the Berkshire Music Festival, also allowed for a chat with conductor Erich Leinsdorf. In addition to eliciting some informative comments on Tanglewood and the state of good music in this country (Leinsdorf was optimistic), Mr. Newman's interview also managed to provide an insight into the conductor's warm and engaging personality.

We were fortunate, too, in that the musical director of the Boston Symphony is not only one of the world's great conductors, but he is also one of the most interesting and most instructive to observe up on the podium.

Until this program, I've had reservations about the advisability of attempting to present classical music on TV. The few times I've seen a major effort in this direction in the past, what came through the tube always seem static and an altogether inadequate representation of the real thing. But this time, thanks to a happy combination of circumstances; unhurried pace, magnificent color, discerning direction by Mr. Nathanson, and most of all, perhaps, immediacy — it was broadcast live—this was a TV experience to cherish.

I did have a couple of reservations, mostly minor. The sound left something to be desired—even more so, I suppose for a trained musical ear. The audio system built into TV sets is not really first rate and certainly not designed to do justice to a symphony. But on this occasion it was at least adequate. Also, the program was perhaps too conventional in its choice of selections; overly familiar favorites Brahms Symphony No. 1 and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor as the main works.

Yet, perhaps this is asking too much. One should be properly grateful to NBC for daring to program—a two-and-one-half hour concert—in the first place.

A more serious reservation had to do with the occasional interruptions for network promotional material for NBC shows premiering this fall. They were an unpleasant intrusion into an atmosphere the program had been at pains to create. What their injection really succeeded in doing, I suspect, was to remind viewers that ahead of them lay not more "Afternoons at Tanglewood" but more dreary new formula-type series.

TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,737,900

AUG 26 1966

7

MUSIC

FESTIVALS

Testing Their Medals

The cellist was "exceptional," declared Boston Symphony Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein. The pianist played "as well as anybody need ever play," said Conductor Erich Leinsdorf. The soloists who won these praises from such rigorous judges were not big concert stars but virtually unknown American students: New York City's Stephen Kates, 23, and Los Angeles' Misha Dichter, 20, both fresh from winning silver medals at the Third International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow.

America's other Tchaikovsky prizewinners—Sopranos Jane Marsh, 24, and Veronica Tyler, 29, and Bass Simon Estes, 28—had already made impressive post-contest showings with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood last month. Now Kates and Dichter as well have added luster to their own bright promise.

No War Horse. Kates, the son and grandson of professional string musicians and a student of Gregor Piatigorsky, played the Shostakovich Cello Concerto, with which he had stirred the Moscow judges and audience in June. ("Viennese refinements were out—they wanted guts, they wanted the roof to come down," he said.) Hunching his lanky frame over the cello, Kates boldly carved out the jagged, pulsating lines of the piece with a firm tone and a left hand that skipped deftly through the most prickly technical [illegible]. The roof [illegible]

Pianist Dichter—who was born in Shanghai midway in his parents' flight from Poland in 1945—also turned on Tanglewood's audiences. He played the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1, a risky selection for any young pianist ever since Van Cliburn's powerful, sweeping version of it carried him to victory in the 1958 Moscow competition. But Dichter made the concerto his own, giving it unusual clarity and lightness. Leinsdorf noted later that Dichter approached the concerto not as if it were an old war horse but as a new piece: "He goes back to the printed instructions of the composer. He does not add a number of silly things which have become traditional." Said Concertmaster Silverstein: "Seldom has the orchestra been so impressed with a single performer."

Soprano Marsh was scheduled to sing again, but she developed tonsillitis. When the malady lingered on, a hasty call went out to Veronica Tyler. Arriving from New York a bare hour ahead of time with her yellow gown over her arm, Tyler swept onstage with complete aplomb and velvet voice to repeat two of the arias she had sung in her previous appearance with the orchestra. "These young singers and musicians are great—no pretensions, natural, enthusiastic, no pettiness," marveled Orchestra Manager Thomas Perry. Shrugged Baltimore-born Tyler: "I've learned to relax, and I love to sing. I can do it anywhere, any time."

No Rush. Their very presence at Tanglewood was evidence that the young Americans are finding their Moscow medals to be badges of admission to some of the music world's major concert stages and recording studios. Yet they are trying not to rush recklessly ahead of their still-maturing talents. Marsh turned down a chance to sing with the Metropolitan Opera because she felt she wasn't ready for it. Even the crowd-pleasing Dichter, who has just signed with Sol Hurok, plans to return to classes this fall at Manhattan's Juilliard School of Music, where he works with the grande dame of piano coaches, Rosina Lhévinne.

All of which makes good sense to Leinsdorf. Though he beamed like a proud uncle as he nudged the gifted prizewinners into the limelight at Tanglewood, he cautioned later: "An artist is never finished. No one can foretell how life is going to affect him. In years from now the Moscow winners may be international stars or forgotten men and women. Only time will tell."

PIANIST DICHTER

SOPRANO TYLER

CELLIST KATES

CLEMENS KALISCHER

Adding luster to an already bright promise.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2075, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 19 1966

Notes ... and Footnotes

TIME OUT: Perhaps the poor relations who have only black-and-white television sets may take heart from comment on the color telecast of Sunday's Tanglewood program (NBC) made by Michael Steinberg, music critic of the Boston Globe. "The color," he wrote, "was ghastly, the lavender-faced players seeming on the verge of apoplexy." Well, in black and white they had the accustomed starched-linen complexion ...

THE PLAIN DEALER
CLEVELAND, OHIO
D. 370,499 SUN. 522,391

AUG 20 1966

Last Sunday's live TV presentation, "An Afternoon at Tanglewood," was an unusually fine program. The concert intermission interview with the distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — Erich Leinsdorf—was of particular interest, as he commented eloquently on what he probably didn't know too about, i.e., the composition of "nature music." When queried regarding orchestra conducting — about which he probably knows more than any living conductor, he airily waved off the opportunity to expound. My observation of his favored mannerism to emphasize any accented orchestral phrase, I'd say, he must have learned from that poem by Coleridge—"Ancient Mariner: "He holds them with his glittering eye."

John Spanur,
8409 Euclid Avenue

Mr. George Szell is going to be vexed with you, John, for your compliment to Mr. Leinsdorf. (BJR)

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

AUG 2 7 1966

'Triple Play' Key to Disk Shop's Success

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Stock, service and display are keys to the successful classical business done by Cohen's Record Shop in the Normandale Shopping Center here. Raymond Cohen, who boasts the largest classical stock in the Montgomery area reported an interest in serious music by teenagers as well as older customers, especially when the younger customers reach college.

Also, he's found that he moves many languages sets because classical buyers, especially those interested in operas, were potential customers of language disks. He found that weekly broadcasts of Metropolitan Opera performances helped sales and expected a boost from the Aug. 14 telecast of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Tanglewood. He called such exposure "wonderful for the industry" because "so many people can enjoy them."

Classical product is pushed through window and wall display. The outlet also has 10 browser racks and bins arranged by composers. Cohen said he uses Billboard's charts and reviews in ordering recordings. He noted a big interest in budget disks and carries a full line of Nonesuch and Pickwick/33 LP's. Also selling well are classical titles in 8-track tape CARtridges, and 4-track reel-to-reel tapes.

Part of the special customer service is the mailing of Schwann catalogs monthly to some customers and bimonthly to others. Cohen's also will special order any title in the catalog. Cohen reported good service from distributorships, especially those handling Columbia and RCA Victor product. Good sellers recently were RCA Victor's "The Wonderful Waltzes of Tchaikovsky" with Morton Gould and the Chicago Symphony, and Rachmaninoff's "Concerto No. 3 in D" with Van Cliburn, and Columbia's two-record set, "Horowitz at Carnegie Hall—An Historic Return." Among top-selling classical artists at Cohen's are the Boston Symphony with Erich Leinsdorf and the New York Philharmonic with Leonard Bernstein.

Cohen [illegible] the importance of [illegible] customers a wide [illegible] of keeping classical [illegible] roll disks [illegible] from each other. He also actively pushes economy [illegible] to build up customer interest. An increase in classical interest here is shown by increasing percentage of such music played on two local radio stations, one AM and one FM. Cohen uses window signs to promote these programs, which, in turn, supply customers through exposure of classical recordings. He also has found that servicemen from nearby Maxwell Air Force Base, Gunter Air Force Base and other military installations are good customers of serious music.

Staten Island Advance
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
D. 57,734 SUN. 45,423

AUG. 2 8 1966

The Music Box

Music Unit Picks Chief

By IRVING KOLODIN

For a man with a literary turn of mind who also happened to be an orchestral musician in an opera house, there must be moments when nothing so summarizes his state as William Ernest Henley's lines: "Out of the night that covers me, Black as the Pit from pole to pole."

Irving Kolodin

There are a few, however, who have taken as seriously the final words of that same "Invictus": "I am the master of my fate; I am the captian of my soul."

One was the celebrated composer Victor Herbert, who was a cellist in the orchestra of the Metropolitan Opera in the 90s before he moved on to fame as the composer of a concerto for his instrument, as well as the many operettas from "Babes in Toyland" to "Naughty Marietta."

Another, more recent example is Gunther Schuller, who was a first-class horn player in the opera orchestra of the 50s until he found greater opportunity for exercise of his varied gifts otherwise.

He was exposed to the largest audience of his still-young life (he was born in 1925) when two sections of his music on the paintings of Paul Klee were performed in a recent telecast from Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

However, the musical community found even greater recognition in the following day's news that Schuller had been appointed president of the New England Conservatory of Music, to take effect with the beginning of the academic year in the fall of 1967.

A Boston institution whose history predates virtually all others in the country (it recently observed the hundredth year of its founding), the New England Conservatory has had eight presidents prior to Schuller, some distinguished, others not.

[illegible] mental recapitulation, Schuller comes closest to one of the most distinguished, George Whitefield Chadwick, who was an eminent composer of his day. He became director in 1897, and was identified with the school for much of the rest of his life (he died in 1931, aged 77).

Whether Schuller is destined to devote as much of his life to a single institution may be doubted. But it is a certainty that the time he spends in Boston will shake the staid institution at least somewhat, for in addition to being a composer well-versed in all the current attitudes toward serious composition, Schuller is deeply rooted in jazz (he formulated the concept called "Third Stream" more than a decade ago and has stayed with it ever since, in an effort to determine whether serious music and serious jazz can flow together in a new direction).

As one who enjoyed Schuller's acquaintance when he was toting his horn from rehearsal to recording studio and back to the Met for an evening opera (ranging from "Don Giovanni" to "Pagliacci"), his musical future was always as bright as his own keen mentality.

What he has accomplished on his own (it was only after he left the Met in 1960 that he received a Guggenheim grant and other foundation assistance) should not only be an inspiration to others, but a rebuff to those who contend there is "no place in American life" for a serious composer.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

SEPT 1966

Music on the Air

By Walter H. Stern

Tanglewood Telecast

The National Broadcasting Company captured three "firsts" with its August 14 television concert from the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood. The two-hour program focused on the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. The orchestra makes its permanent summer home at this famous festival site in Lenox, Mass.

WALTER H. STERN

The program, designed to give TV viewers a "total experience" of Tanglewood, was the first network telecast of a concert there, the first live telecast of a Tanglewood event, and the first colorcast of a Boston Symphony concert anywhere.

And a total experience it was. It originated in the open-sided, 6,000-seat Music Shed which has been enthralling music lovers since 1938 with its magnificent natural acoustics. Thousands of additional listeners heard the concert while seated on the surrounding lawns. But luckiest of all on this occasion, millions of home viewers shared the delights in their living rooms and (not unlikely) on their patios.

Color cameras ranged over the 210-acre Tanglewood estate where the surroundings of formal gardens, hemlock hedges, avenues of tall pine and great lawns have provided a unique setting for the annual series of twenty-four Boston Symphony concerts over the years.

Happily, this first Tanglewood telecast had sufficient breadth to establish the festival for what it really is in the minds of those viewers who have not previously been exposed to it. Opening with the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," it continued with Brahms' Symphony No. 1. A good rouser and a solid symphonic score for openers. Lest somebody conjecture that Tanglewood is a scenic setting for musical potboilers, there was the Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor of Prokofiev with Masuko Ushioda as soloist. For sheer quality of workmanship, this concerto should have become a potboiler long ago, for it ranks with the greatest. Few contemporaries have achieved such lyrical heights as did Prokofiev in his second movement. The soloist's tone was both rich and lacy, as if made to order for this performance. And there was plenty of muscle left for the percussive effects of the finale.

Since Tanglewood has also been the home of musical innovation and premieres, it was only appropriate that Mr. Leinsdorf should choose an unknown score. In this instance it was music by Gunther Schuller, to wit two excerpts from his Seven Studies on Themes by Paul Klee. They were "Little Blue Devil" and "The Twittering Machine." As a suitable closing, there was Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat, with Misha Dichter as soloist. This, unfortunately, is a concerto which should not be a potboiler, simply because it shines more gloriously when not overplayed. But it was a glorious choice for a first telecast; it's hard to imagine the uninitiated televiewer who was not carried away by both score and specific performance.

In other words, NBC did itself proud with this presentation which, in this reviewer's opinion, should become a permanent TV fixture. Edwin Newman's intermission interview with Erich Leinsdorf contributed mightily to that obvious hazard of televising live concerts. A news broadcast or some other inept filler would have spoiled the atmosphere. And speaking of atmosphere, substantial credit should go to George A. Heineman, who produced the program, Ted Nathanson, its director, and June Reig for her script.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

AUG 27 1966

Triple Play' Key to Disk Shop's Success

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Stock, service and display are keys to the successful classical business done by Cohen's Record Shop in the Normandale Shopping Center here. Raymond Cohen, who boasts the largest classical stock in the Montgomery area, reported an interest in serious music by teenagers as well as other customers, especially when the younger customers reach college.

Also, he's found that he moves many language sets because classical buyers, especially those interested in operas, were potential customers of language disks. He found that weekly broadcasts of Metropolitan Opera performances helped sales and expected a boost from the Aug. 14 telecast of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Tanglewood. He called such exposure "wonderful for the industry" because "so many people can enjoy them."

Classical product is pushed through window and wall display. The outlet also has 10 browser racks and bins arranged by composers. Cohen said he uses Billboard's charts and reviews in ordering recordings. He noted a big interest in budget disks and carries a full line of Nonesuch and Pickwick/33 LP's. Also selling well are classical titles in 8-track tape CARtridges, and 4-track reel-to-reel tapes.

Part of the special customer service is the mailing of Schwann catalogs monthly to some customers and bimonthly to others. Cohen's also will special order any title in the catalog. Cohen reported good service from distributorship, especially those handling Columbia and RCA Victor product. Good sellers recently were RCA Victor's "The Wonderful Waltzes of Tchaikovsky" with Morton Gould and the Chicago Symphony, and Rachmaninoff's "Concerto No. 3 in D" with Van Cliburn, and Columbia's two-record set, "Horowitz at Carnegie Hall—An Historic Return." Among top-selling classical artists at Cohen's are the Boston Symphony with Erich Leinsdorf and the New York Philharmonic with Leonard Bernstein.

Cohen stressed the importance of offering customers a wide choice and of keeping classical and rock 'n' roll disks separated from each other. He also aggressively pushes economy-priced sets to build up customer interest. An increase in classical interest here is shown by increasing percentage of such music played on two local radio stations, one AM and one FM. Cohen uses window signs to promote these programs, which, in turn, supply customers through exposure of classical recordings. He also has found that servicemen from nearby Maxwell Air Force Base, Gunter Air Force Base and other military installations are good customers of serious music.

Staten Island Advance
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
D. 57,734 SUN. 45,423

AUG 28 1966

139

The Music Box

Music Unit Picks Chief

By IRVING KOLODIN

For a man with a literary turn of mind who also happened to be an orchestral musician in an opera house, there must be moments when nothing so summarizes his state as William Ernest Henley's lines: "Out of the night that covers me, Black as the Pit from pole to pole."

Irving Kolodin

There are a few, however, who have taken as seriously the final words of that same "Invictus": "I am the master of my fate;; I am the captian of my soul."

One was the celebrated composer Victor Herbert, who was a cellist in the orchestra of the Metropolitan Opera in the 90s before he moved on to fame as the composer of a concerto for his instrument, as well as the many operettas from "Babes in Toyland" to "Naughty Marietta."

Another, more recent example is Gunther Schuller, who was a first-class horn player in the opera orchestra of the 50s until he found greater opportunity for exercise of his varied gifts otherwise.

He was exposed to the largest audience of his still-young life (he was born in 1925) when two sections of his music on the paintings of Paul Klee were performed in a recent telecast from Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

However, the musical community found even greater recognition in the following day's news that Schuller had been appointed president of the New England Conservatory of Music, to take effect with the beginning of the academic year in the fall of 1967.

A Boston institution whose history predates virtually all others in the country (it recently observed the hundredth year of its founding), the New England Conservatory has had eight presidents prior to Schuller, some distinguished, others not.

At a quick mental recapitulation, Schuller comes closest to one of the most distinguished, George Whitefield Chadwick, who was an eminent composer of his day. He became director in 1897, and was identified with the school for much of the rest of his life (he died in 1931, aged 77).

Whether Schuller is destined to devote as much of his life to a single institution may be doubted. But it is a certainty that the time he spends in Boston will shake the staid institution at least somewhat, for in addition to being a composer well-versed in all the current attitudes toward serious composition, Schuller is deeply rooted in jazz (he formulated the concept called "Third Stream" more than a decade ago and has stayed with it ever since, in an effort to determine whether serious music and serious jazz can flow together in a new direction).

As one who enjoyed Schuller's acquaintance when he was toting his horn from rehearsal to recording studio and back to the Met for an evening opera (ranging from "Don Giovanni" to "Pagliacci"), his musical future was always as bright as his own keen mentality.

What he has accomplished on his own (it was only after he left the Met in 1960 that he received a Guggenheim grant and other foundation assistance) should not only be an inspiration to others, but a rebuff to those who contend there is "no place in American life" for a serious composer.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

SEPT 1966

Music on the Air

By Walter H. Stern

Tanglewood Telecast

The National Broadcasting Company captured three "firsts" with its August 14 television concert from the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood. The two-hour program focused on the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. The orchestra makes its permanent summer home at this famous festival site in Lenox, Mass.

WALTER H. STERN

The program was designed to give TV viewers a "total experience" of Tanglewood, with the first network telecast of a concert there, the first live telecast of a Tanglewood event, and the first telecast of a Boston Symphony concert anywhere.

And a total success it was. It originated in the fan-sided, 6,000-seat Music Shed which has been enthralling music lovers since 1938 with its magnificent natural acoustics. Thousands of additional listeners heard the concert while seated on the surrounding lawns. But luckiest of all on this occasion, millions of home viewers shared the delights in their living rooms and (not unlikely) on their patios.

Color cameras ranged over the 210-acre Tanglewood estate where the surroundings of formal gardens, hemlock hedges, avenues of tall pines and great lawns have provided a unique setting for the annual series of twenty-four Boston Symphony concerts over the years.

Happily, this first Tanglewood telecast had sufficient breadth to establish the festival for what it really is in the minds of those viewers who have not previously been exposed to it. Opening with the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," it continued with Brahms' Symphony No. 1. A good rouser and a solid symphonic score for openers. Lest somebody conjecture that Tanglewood is a scenic setting for musical potboilers, there was the Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor of Prokofiev with Masuko Ushioda as soloist. For sheer quality of workmanship, this concerto should have become a potboiler long ago, for it ranks with the greatest. Few contemporaries have achieved such lyrical heights as did Prokofiev in his second movement. The soloist's tone was both rich and lacy, as if made to order for this performance. And there was plenty of muscle left for the percussive effects of the finale.

Since Tanglewood has also been the home of musical innovation and premieres, it was only appropriate that Mr. Leinsdorf should choose an unknown score. In this instance it was music by Gunther Schuller, to wit two excerpts from his Seven Studies on Themes by Paul Klee. They were "Little Blue Devil" and "The Twittering Machine." As a suitable closing, there was Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat, with Misha Dichter as soloist. This, unfortunately, is a concerto which should not be a potboiler, simply because it shines more gloriously when not overplayed. But it was a glorious choice for a first telecast; it's hard to imagine the uninitiated televiewer who was not carried away by both score and specific performance.

In other words, NBC did itself proud with this presentation which, in this reviewer's opinion, should become a permanent TV fixture. Edwin Newman's intermission interview with Erich Leinsdorf contributed mightily to that obvious hazard of televising live concerts. A news broadcast or some other inept filler would have spoiled the atmosphere. And speaking of atmosphere, substantial credit should go to George A. Heineman, who produced the program, Ted Nathanson, its director, and June Reig for her script.

140

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277

AUG 21 1966

ROCHESTER DEM. CHRONICLE
Sunday, August 21, 1966

Music

What Are Contests Worth?

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

IT was an attractive idea for the Berkshire Music Festival to present, last weekend, a group of prize-winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. International competitions are very much with us these days, but special prestige attaches to a handful of them, and the Tchaikovsky Competition is one of the most prestigious of all. Unfortunately, the Russians were not represented at Tanglewood, and Jane Marsh, the American soprano who won first prize in her division, developed tonsilitis and had to cancel her appearance.

But we did have a group of second-prize winners, the soprano Veronica Tyler, the cellist Stephen Kates, the violinist Masuko Ushioda and the pianist Misha Dichter. All, of course, were talented, though Dichter would appear to have that extra something—personality, electricity, call it what you will—that should propel him into a major career.

In the years before World War II not much was heard of competitions, though they had always been around. At the turn of the century the Rubinstein prize produced such winners as Wilhelm Backhaus, and, I believe, Emil Gilels was first mentioned because he had taken top honors in the Queen Elizabeth Competition at Brussels. In America the two big competitions were the Leventritt and the Naumburg. The former launched many of this country's best pianists and violinists.

But it remained for Van Cliburn to make the United States competition-conscious. When he took the first piano prize at Moscow in 1958, a sort of national pride was aroused. Of course the Russian element had a great deal to do with it. Leon Fleisher took all of the honors in the Queen Elizabeth Competition in 1952, but nobody paid much attention to his feat. With Cliburn's success, ticker-tape parades, adulation and enormous fees followed, all due to a large extent because a corn-fed American boy from Texas had conquered in the very lair of the world's other superpower. All of a sudden, young American artists started looking very seriously at competitions, domestic and foreign. If Cliburn could do it, why not they?

Runner-up Status

At the same time, quite a few musicians and managers were dubious abut the whole idea. Americans, they insisted, are conditioned to the winner-take-all philosophy. Suppose a highly touted American instrumentalist went to Moscow, or Brussels, or Bolzano or anywhere, and ended up in fourth or fifth place, or, horror of horrors, did not place at all, why, said the managers, this would kill his career. Word would get out that he was second-rate.

And musicians, some of them, decried competitions, saying that whatever good came out of them was more than balanced by the bad. They said that competitions could be a deleterious influence on an artist who did not obtain a high prize. His confidence would be shattered.

Of course, that was nonsense. Any artist who would have a psychic collapse because he fumbled a competition does not belong in the profession in the first place. In any case, the entire climate has changed, as witness Tanglewood last week. Miss Marsh was the only one who took first prize, but that did not make any of the others any less welcome. The very fact that so famous an institution as the Berkshire Music Festival brought in the prize winners, plus the fact that several have been signed by major managements, is not a straw in the wind, it is a haystack being blown by a gale.

We are still paying off on Cliburn's success, in short, and that is a good thing. The whole idea of competitions is to introduce major talent, and that certainly is what has happened in the last 20 years. Many of the big names in music have come from those competitions.

Possible Hazards

It can be that some competitions are rigged. It may be that some are inept ly run. It may be that some are unfair, in that an inferior panel of judges, which can happen, ignores individuality and gives an award to mediocrity.

All of that, singly or in combination, can conceivably happen. The fact remains that competition winners these days get enormous publicity and find themselves launched in a career—a career that would possibly not have come to pass, or at least would have taken much more time, had they not been prize winners.

Some criticism has been leveled against international competition juries. Often the same names have a habit of turning up, and equally often these illustrious personages have pupils who are playing in the very competition in which the teacher is appearing as a judge.

But most famous musicians teach, and it probably would be impossible to get a jury of eminent instrumentalists for a competition that does not have a scattering of their pupils. In such cases, of course, the juror will retire from the room when his pupil appears, though several years ago, in Bucharest, members of the jury were seen lobbying for their pupils.

Another criticism has been directed toward the caliber of award winners. Some musicians very strongly feel that there is such a thing as a typical competition winner. He is described as a facile technician without any alarming interpretive ideas, a literalist who plays everything just so, a talented mediocrity, in short. There is some truth to the charge. Teachers, even some great ones, are apt to put a higher premium on craftsmanship and technical expertise than on ideas. The chances are that in the great majority of competitions a smooth, unruffled, glib instrumentalist will win a higher award than one who is full of ideas but whose instrumental approach is rough.

Won't Be Fooled

But every once in a while along comes a young artist who has the expertise and also has the ideas. No jury is going to be fooled on that, and, on the whole, the record has been good. For the most part, the best young players have been winning the best competitions. And the post-Cliburn era has given them the world to shoot at. From the moment he enters a conservatory, the talented young musician today is surrounded by competitions. He will compete in one before he graduates, hoping to win his conservatory's gold medal. Then he can have his choice of American competitions to season himself before putting on armor and jousting in the international arena. Some, indeed, have made a profession of entering such events, and it is not too much to call a handful of them competition bums. Like tennis bums, they bounce from event to event, every now and then taking a prize of one kind or another. It is a way of life. Their expenses are paid, they have a chance of hitting the big time, and they hop en masse here and there, like professional golfers on the summer circuit. In a few years they get too old, most competitions do not take entrants above the age of 30, and then they disappear from concert life. It is a sad phenomenon. But one of the quickest ways of establishing a career is a high prize in a major competition, and young musicians are going to continue to follow the rainbow as long as there is a pot of gold at the end.

EIGHTH WEEK - AUGUST 19, 20, AND 21

141

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503

AUG 12 1966

Performing Next Weekend:

SOLOISTS PERFORMING NEXT WEEKEND at Tanglewood's concluding concert are pianist Jorge Bolet, Saturday; tenor Richard Cassilly, Sunday; and pianist Mme. Jeanne-Marie Darre, Friday.

Last Week at Tanglewood

tThe Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival enters its eighth and final week of the 1966 season Monday with the second concert in the Festival of Contemporary American Music. This "festival within a festival" begins this Sunday night with a program in the Tanglewood Theater. t

For the three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next weekend Erich Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Franz Liszt on each of the Friday and Saturday evening programs. Jeanne-Marie Darre will be soloist Friday and Jorge Bolet will be heard with the Orchestra Saturday. t

Mr.t Leinsdorf will close the Festival on Sunday afternoon with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Friday evening's concert will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's Totentanz with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Liszt.

Prrceding Friday's nine o'clock Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, Saturday's soloist Jorge Bolet will appear at the weekend prelude at 7. Mr. Bolet will play seven Liszt piano transcriptions of works by Schubert, Chopin, and Schumann.

The weekend prelude program will also include The Spinning Song from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto" also transcribed by Liszt and performed by Mr. Bolet.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen to begin the Saturday evening Festival concert with the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. He will then conduct Liszt's Fantasy of "The Ruins of Athens."

Saturday's program will close with Mr. Bolet joining the conductor and orchestra for a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Liszt. t

Sunday afternoon's program, which brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 85th season to a conclusion, will begin with Verdi's Te Deum. The major work at this concert will be a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly, and Thomas Paul as the soloists. The chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music. t tThis Sunday afternoon Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the last of three concerts at which the Boston SymphonyOrchestra has presented prize winners from the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition. t

Masuko Ushioda, second prize winner in the violin contest, will be heard in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2. Misha Dichter who received the second prize in the Moscow piano competition, will play Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1. t

Also to be heard on this program will be the Prelude to Act II of Wagner's "Lohengrin," Brahms' Symphony No. 1, and excerpts from Gunther Schuller' Seven Studies on Themes from Paul Klee.

This concert will be televised live and in color from Tanglewood by the National Broadcasting Company's television network.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

AUG 13 1966

TANGLEWOOD PROGRAM

LENOX—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival enters its eighth and final week of the 1966 season Monday with the second concert in the Festival of Contemporary American Music.

This "festival within a festival" begins Sunday night with a program in the Tanglewood Theater.

Two Liszt Works

For the three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next weekend (Aug. 19, 20, 21) Erich Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Franz Liszt on each of the Friday and Saturday evening programs. Jeanne-Marie Darre will be soloist Aug. 19 and Jorge Bolet will be heard with the orchestra Aug. 20. Leinsdorf will close the festival Aug. 21 with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Next Friday night's concert will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's Totentanz with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Liszt.

Preceding Friday's orchestra concert at 9, Saturday's soloist Jorge Bolet will appear at the weekend prelude at 7. Bolet will play seven Liszt piano transcriptions of works by Schubert, Chopin and Schumann.

Wagner and Verdi

The Weekend Prelude program will also include the Spinnig Song from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoetto" also transcribed by Liszt and performed by Bolet.

Leinsdorf has chosen to begin next Saturday night's concert with the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. He will then conduct Liszt's Fantasy of "The Ruins of Athens." Saturday's program will close with Bolet joining the conductor and orchestra for a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Liszt.

Next Sunday afternoon's program, which brings the orchestra's 85th season to a conclusion, will begin with Verdi's Te Deum. The major work at this concert will be a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly, and Thomas Paul as the soloists.

Full Cycle

The chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music. The performance of the Ninth Symphony Sunday brings the orchestra's season full circle as Leinsdorf opened the orchestras 85th year in Symphony Hall, Boston with this work.

Including this Sunday night's concert in the Theater the Festival of Contemporary American Music consists of five programs on successive evenings. Members of the Fellowship Program of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Fellows will take part in these concerts which will include the first performances of four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

With the exception of the concert Tuesday, each of the contemporary f estival programs through Thursday will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's summer activities.

Chamber Concerts

Concerts of chamber music are scheduled for Sunday and Wednesday. A choral program will be given Tuesday and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will give its final program of the summer Thursday under the direction of Gunther Schuller.

This Sunday Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the last of three concerts at which the orchestra has presented prize winners from the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition.

Masuko Ushioda, second prize winner in the violin contest, will be heard in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, and Misha Dichter will play the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1. Dichter received the second prize in the Moscow piano competition.

Also to be heard on this program will be the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin,". Brahms' Symphony No. 1, and excerpts from Gunther Schuller's Seven Studies on Themes from Paul Klee. This concert will be televised live and in color from Tanglewood by the National Broadcasting Company's television network.

Italian Echo
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Weekly Circ. 2,780

JUL 22 1966

YWCA Plans Tanglewood Trip

The YW-Travel Club has announced plans for a one-day trip to Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphny Orchestra at Lenox, Mass., on Sunday, August 21. The afternoon concert will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Reservations must be made in advance, either by mail or in person, at the YWCA of Greater Rhode Island, United Fund agency at 54 Jackson St., Providence. A flyer giving all information will be mailed upon request.

Plans call for the group to leave 10:30 a.m. on the trip date, returning by approximately the same hour at night. The trip will be made by air conditioned charter bus, with luncheon and dinner stops along the way.

Times
BARRINGTON, R. I.
Weekly Circ. 3,132
JUL 21 1966

Observer
GREENVILLE, R. I.
Weekly Circ. 3,400
JUL 21 1966

Rhode Island Pendulum
EAST GREENWICH, R. I.
Weekly Circ. 2,455
JUL 21 1966

Standard
NO. KINGSTOWN, R. I.
Weekly Circ. 2,400
JUL 28 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277

JULY 21 1966

JANE MARSH DROPS TANGLEWOOD DATE

Phyllis Curtin will replace Jane Marsh as soprano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony Aug. 21 at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass.

Miss Marsh, the 24-year-old Californian who won first prize in the first voice competition of the Tchaikovsky International Contest in Moscow last month, will sing Aug. 20 in the Hollywood Bowl instead Miss Marsh has been signed to an exclusive three-year contract with RCA Victor Record Division. Victor will record her Tanglewood appearances this Sunday and Aug. 13.

Also appearing Sunday will be two other prize winners, Veronica Tyler, soprano, who won a second prize, and Simon Estes, bass, who placed third. With Miss Marsh on the Aug. 13 concert will be Stephen Kates, cellist, a second prize winner. On Aug. 14 Masuko Ushioda, Japanese violinist and Mischa Dichter, American pianist, both second prize winners, will play.

Miss Marsh will sing Aug. 6 in Mozart's "The Magic Flute."

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 14 1966

Berkshire Festival to Close With Beethoven Symphony

LENOX — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival enters its eighth and final week of the 1966 season tomorrow, with the second concert in the Festival of Contemporary American Music. This "festival within a festival" begins this evening with a program in the Tanglewood Theater.

Three Concerts

For the three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next weekend (Aug. 19, 20, 21) Erich Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Franz Liszt on each of the Friday and Saturday evening programs.

Jeanne-Marie Darre will be soloist on Friday (Aug. 19), and Jorge Bolect will be heard with the orchestra on Saturday (Aug. 20). Mr. Leinsdorf will close the Festival on Sunday afternoon with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Friday evening's concert will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's Totentanz with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Liszt.

Weekend Prelude

Preceding Friday's 9 p. m. Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, Saturday's soloist Jorge Bolet will appear at the Weekend Prelude at 7.00 p. m. Mr. Bolet will play seven Liszt piano transcriptions of works by Schubert, Chopin, and Schumann.

The Weekend Prelude program will also include The Spinning Song from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto" also transcribed by Liszt and performed by Mr. Bolet.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen to begin the Saturday evening Festival concert with the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. He will then conduct Liszt's Fantasy of "The Ruins of Athens." Saturday's program will close with Mr. Bolet joining the conductor and orchestra for a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Liszt.

Begin With Verdi

Sunday afternoon's program, whichb rings the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Eighty-fifth season to a conclusion, will begin with Verdi's Te Deum. The major work at this concert will be a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly, and Thomas Paul as the soloists. The chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music. The performance of the Ninth Symphony on Sunday brings the orchestra's season full circle as Mr. Leinsdorf opened the orchestra's eighty-fifth year in Symphony Hall, Boston with this work.

Including tonight's concert in the Theatre the Festival of Contemporary American Music consists of five programs on successive evenings. Members of the Fellowship Program of the Berkshire Music Center and the Fromm Fellows will take part in these concerts which will include the first performances of four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center in co-operation with the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

Festival Programs

With the exception of the concert on Tuesday (Aug. 16) each of the contemporary festival programs through Thursday (Aug. 18) will be open to the Frierids of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Center's summer activities.

Concerts of chamber music are scheduled for tonight and Wednesday. A choral program will be given on Tuesday (Aug. 15), and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will give its final program of the summer on Thursday (Aug. 18) under the direction of Gunther Schuller.

* * *

This afternoon Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the last of three concerts at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has presented prize winners from the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition. Masuko Ushioda, second prize winner in the violin contest, will be heard in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, and Misha Dichter will play the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1.

Mr. Dichter received the second prize in the Moscow piano competition. Also to be heard on this program will be the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," Brahms' Symphony No. 1, and excerpts from Gunther Schuller's Seven Studies on Themes from Paul Klee.

This concert will be televised live and in color from Tanglewood by the National Broadcasting Company's television network.

RICHARD CASSILLY

MME. JEANNE-MARIE DARR

JORGE BOLET

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 13 1966

Festival in Last Week As 85th BSO Season Ends

LENOX — Tomorrow afternoon Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the last of three concerts at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has presented prize-winners from the 1966 Tchaikovsky Music Competition. Masuko Ushioda, second-prize winner in the violin contest, will be heard in Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 2, and Misha Dichter will play the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1. Dichter received the second prize in the Moscow piano competition.

Also to be heard on this program will be the Prelude to Act III of Wagner's "Lohengrin," Brahms' Symphony No. 1, and excerpts from Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes From Paul Klee." This concert will be televised live and in color from Tanglewood by the National Broadcasting Co.'s television network.

For the three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next weekend, Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Franz Liszt on each of the Friday and Saturday evening programs. Jeanne-Marie Darre will be soloist on Friday Aug. 19, and Jorge Bolet will be heard with the orchestra on Saturday, Aug. 20. Leinsdorf will close the Festival on Sunday afternoon with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Friday evening's concert will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's "Totentanz," with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Liszt.

Leinsdorf has chosen to begin the Saturday evening festival concert with the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. He will then conduct Liszt's Fantasy of "The Ruins of Athens." Saturday's program will close with Bolet joining the conductor and orchestra for a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Liszt.

Sunday afternoon's program, which brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 85th season to a conclusion, will begin with Verdi's Te Deum. The major work at this concert will be a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly, and Thomas Paul as the soloists. The chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music. The performance of the Ninth Symphony on Sunday brings the orchestra's season full circle as Leinsdorf opened the orchestra's 85th year in Symphony Hall, Boston, with this work.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737
AUG 14 1966

MUSIC

MASSACHUSETTS

LENOX (Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival enters its final week of the season tomorrow night with the second concert in the Festival of Contemporary American Music. This "festival within a festival" begins this evening with a program in Tangelwood Theater. For the three concerts next weekend Erich Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Liszt on each of the Friday and Saturday evening programs. Jeanne-Marie Darre will be soloist on Friday and Jorge Bolet will be heard with the orchestra on Saturday. Mr. Leinsdorf will close the Festival on Sunday afternoon with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
AUG 12 1966

Richard Cassilly

. . . will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 at Tanglewood on Aug. 21. This will be the final concert of the orchestra's 29th season in Lenox, Mass.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
AUG 14 1966

Beethoven's 9th Tanglewood Finale

The Boston Symphony will give its closing concerts Aug. 19-21 at the Berkshire Festival. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

FRIDAY at 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude, with pianist Jorge Bolet performing Liszt's transcriptions of music by Schubert, Chopin, Schumann, Wagner and Verdi.

FRIDAY at 9 p.m. Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, Liszt's "Totentanz" (pianist Jeanne-Marie Darree), Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 (Daree).

SATURDAY at 8 p.m. — Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde"; Brahms' Symphony No. 4; Liszt's Fantasy of "The Ruins of Athens" (Jorge Bolet, piano) and Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Bolet).

SUNDAY at 2:30 p.m. Verdi's Te Deum and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, with the Tanglewood Choir, soprano Phyllis Curtin, contralto Eunice Alberts, tenor Richard Cassilly and basso Thomas Paul.

The orchestra then goes on vacation. Symphony Hall concerts resume Sept. 23-24.

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
AUG 13 1966

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL, Tanglewood. Lenox, Mass.

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony pull into the eighth and final week of their 1966 summer season in the western forest. The last program will be given Aug. 21. This week's schedule at the Music Shed:

Sun. at 2:30:
The romantic concerto theme continues with an aria and a violin concerto by Tchaikovsky, plus Prokofiev's Symphony No. 3. The Moscow Tchaikovsky Competition winners will solo at this concert.

Fri. at 9:
The orchestra moves through Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, Liszt's "Totentanz" and Piano Concerto No. 2 with Jeanne-Marie Darre soloing on the latter. This program follows the 7 p.m. weekend prelude, Jorge Bolet performing Liszt's Piano Transcriptions.

Sat. at 8:
Maestro Leinsdorf takes the baton for the third time this week to conduct Brahms' Symphony No. 4 and Liszt's Fantasy on "The Ruins of Athens" and Piano Concerto No. I (Bolet solos).

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
AUG 16 1966

Tanglewood to Feature Leinsdorf Final Weekend

The final weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will feature Erich Leinsdorf as director.

* * *

Guest soloist on Friday will be Jeanne-Marie Darre and on Saturday the soloist will be Jorge Bolet. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will close the Berkshire Festival season on Sunday afternoon.

The Friday 9 p.m. concert will begin with Bruckner's "Symphony number 4" and continue with Liszt's "Tortentanz" with Miss Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the "Piano Concerto number 1" by Liszt. The 7 p.m. weekend prelude program on Friday will feature Bolet in seven Liszt piano transcriptions of works by Schubert, Chopin and Schumann. The prelude program will also include "The Spinning Song" from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto," also transcribed by Liszt and performed by Bolet.

The Saturday 8 p.m. Festival concert will open with the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and Brahms' "Symphony number 4." Leinsdorf will then conduct Liszt's Fantasy on "The Ruins of Athens." The Saturday program will close with Bolet joining the conductor and orchestra in a performance of the "Piano Concerto number 2" by Liszt.

The Sunday 3 p.m. program, which brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 85th season to a conclusion, will begin with Verdi's "Te Deum." Soloists for the Beethoven "Symphony number 9" will be Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul. The chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,587
AUG 18 1966

Tanglewood Grand Finale

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will close its eight-week season at Tanglewood this weekend, Aug. 19-21. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Franz Liszt on each of the Friday and Saturday evening programs. Jeanne-Marie Darre, French pianist, will be soloist on Friday, Aug. 19, and Jorge Bolet, Cuban-American pianist, will perform on Saturday, Aug. 20. Mr. Leinsdorf will close the Festival on Sunday, Aug. 21, with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

Friday evening's concert will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's Totentanz, with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in Piano Concerto No. 1 by Liszt.

Preceding Friday's 9 p.m. concert, Saturday's Soloist, Jorge Bolet, will appear at the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude. He will play seven Liszt piano transcriptions of lieder by Schubert, Chopin and Schumann, as well as a Liszt transcription of the Spinning Song from Wagner's Flying Dutchman and a Liszt concert paraphrase of Verdi's Rigoletto.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen to begin Saturday's concert with the Prelude to Tristan und Isolde by Wagner and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. The program will close with Liszt's Fantasy on the Ruins of Athens and his Piano Concerto No. 2, with Jorge Bolet as soloist.

Sunday afternoon's program, which brings the Boston Symphony's 85th season to its conclusion, will begin with Verdi's Te Deum. The major work on the program will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul. The chorus will be composed of members of the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school for the advanced study of music. The concert on Sunday brings the Boston Orchestra's season full circle, as Mr. Leinsdorf opened the year in Boston with Beethoven's Ninth.

Amherst Record
AMHERST, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,162
AUG 18 1966

TANGLEWOOD PERFORMERS this weekend will include French pianist Mme. Jeanne-Marie Darre (above) who will play with the BSO in Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 and pianist Jorge Bolet who will play with the BSO in Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
AUG 17 1966

Final Concerts Slated

LENOX, Mass.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will end its 1966 Tanglewood season this weekend with the highlight being a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on Sunday afternoon.

Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul will be soloists with chorus being members of the Berkshire Music Center.

Verdi's Te Deum is scheduled to lead off the concerrt.

On Friday pianist Jeanne-Marie Darre will perform in Liszt's Totentanz and Piano Concerto No. 1.

Pianist Jorge Bolet will be the soloist Saturday with Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2.

Other works Saturday will be the prelude to Wagne "Tristan and Isolde," Brahm's Symphony No. 4 and Liszt's "The Ruins of Athens."

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 115,186
AUG 14 1966

● The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival enters its eighth and final week of the 1966 season Monday with the second concert in the Festival of Contemporary American Music. This "festival within a festival" begins this evening with a program in the Tanglewood Theatre. For the three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next weekend Erich Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Franz Liszt on each of the Friday and Saturday evening programs. Jeanne-Marie Darre will be solist on Friday and Jorge Bolet will be heard with the Orchestra on Saturday. Leinsdorf will close the Festival on Sunday afternoon with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Friday evening's concert will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's Totentanz with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Liszt Preceding Friday's nine o'clock Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, Saturday's soloist Jorge Bolet will appear at the Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. Bolet will play seven Liszt piano transcriptions of works by Schubert, Chopin, and Schumann. The Weekend Prelude program will also include The Spinning Song from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto" also transcribed by Liszt and performed by Bolet.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,378
AUG 18 1966

JORGE BOLET, the Cuban-American pianist, will play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2, on Saturday evening, Aug. 20. Also on the program will be the Brahms Symphony No. 4 and the Liszt Fantasy on "The Ruins of Athens."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Ridgefield Press
RIDGEFIELD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,221
AUG 18 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,259
AUG 17 1966

Berkshire Music Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists, through Aug. 22, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Sing Out '66 returns to Eslo Pinza Theatre in Stamford Aug. 15 through 20 to mark the first official performance of the Sing Outs, which have since been performed on 326 college campuses, and at army bases around the world.

CAIRO HERALD
Thursday, August 18, 1966
RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, August 19, 1966
ATHENS, N. Y.
HERALD
W. 500
AUG 18 1966

Thomas Paul, Basso, in his fourth season with the New York City Opera, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in this season's final concert. Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 on Sunday afternoon, August 21.

News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 1,200
AUG 18 1966

Tanglewood This Weekend

The final weekend of concerts at Tanglewood will begin Friday with the featured soloist being Mme. Jeanne-Marie Darre, French pianist. She will play List's Piano Concerto No. 1. Eric Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Other features of the weekend program include the presentation of Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening with Jorge Bolet, the Cuban-American pianist. Also on the program will be Brahms Symphony No. 4 and Liszt Fantasy on "The Ruins of Athens."

For the final concert of the season Sunday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Mr. Leinsdorf, will present Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 and also the Te Deum of Verdi. Featured soloists for the symphony include Thomas Paul, Basso, and Richard Cassilly, tenor.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766

AUG 1 6 1966

Tanglewood to Feature Leinsdorf Final Weekend

The final weekend of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will feature Erich Leinsdorf as director.

* * *

Guest soloist on Friday will be Jeanne-Marie Darre and on Saturday the soloist will be Jorge Bolet. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will close the Berkshire Festival season on Sunday afternoon.

The Friday 9 p.m. concert will begin with Bruckner's "Symphony number 4" and continue with Liszt's "Tortentanz" with Miss Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the "Piano Concerto number 1" by Liszt. The 7 p.m. weekend prelude program on Friday will feature Bolet in seven Liszt piano transcriptions of works by Schubert, Chopin and Schumann. The prelude program will also include "The Spinning Song" from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto," also transcribed by Liszt and performed by Bolet.

The Saturday 8 p.m. Festival concert will open with the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and Brahms' "Symphony number 4." Leinsdorf will then conduct Liszt's Fantasy on "The Ruins of Athens." The Saturday program will close with Bolet joining the conductor and orchestra in a performance of the "Piano Concerto number 2" by Liszt.

The Sunday 3 p.m. program, which brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 85th season to a conclusion, will begin with Verdi's "Te Deum." Soloists for the Beethoven "Symphony number 9" will be Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul. The chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,587

AUG 1 0 1966

Tanglewood Grand Finale

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will close its eight-week season at Tanglewood this weekend, Aug. 19-21. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Franz Liszt on each of the Friday and Saturday evening programs. Jeanne-Marie Darre, French pianist, will be soloist on Friday, Aug. 19, and Jorge Bolet, Cuban-American pianist, will perform on Saturday, Aug. 20. Mr. Leinsdorf will close the Festival on Sunday, Aug. 21, with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

Friday evening's concert will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's Totentanz, with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in Piano Concerto No. 1 by Liszt.

Preceding Friday's 9 p.m. concert, Saturday's Soloist, Jorge Bolet, will appear at the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude. He will play seven Liszt piano transcriptions of lieder by Schubert, Chopin and Schumann, as well as a Liszt transcription of the Spinning Song from Wagner's Flying Dutchman and a Liszt concert paraphrase of Verdi's Rigoletto.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen to begin Saturday's concert with the Prelude to Tristan und Isolde and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. The program will e[illegible] the program on the [illegible]'s Fantasy on the Ruins of Athens and his Piano [illegible] No. 2, with Jorge [illegible].

Sunday's program, which [illegible] Boston Symphony's [illegible] to its conclusion [illegible] with Verdi's Te Deum, the pro[illegible] work on Symphony [illegible] Beethoven's Curtin, [illegible] with Phyllis [illegible]ard Cassilly, [illegible] Paul. The chorus [illegible] composed of members [illegible] Berkshire Music Center, [illegible] Orchestra's summer school [illegible] the advanced study of music. The concert on Sunday brings the Boston Orchestra's season full circle, as Mr. Leinsdorf opened the year in Boston with Beethoven's Ninth.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425

AUG 1 7 1966

Final Concerts Slated

LENOX, Mass.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will end its 1966 Tanglewood season this weekend with the highlight being a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on Sunday afternoon.

Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul will be soloists with chorus being members of the Berkshire Music Center.

Verdi's Te Deum is scheduled to lead off the concerrt.

On Friday pianist Jeanne-Marie Darre will perform in Liszt's Totentanz and Piano Concerto No. 1.

Pianist Jorge Bolet will be the soloist Saturday with Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2.

Other works Saturday will be the prelude to Wagne "Tristan and Isolde," Brahm's Symphony No. 4 and Liszt's "The Ruins of Athens."

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 115,186

AUG 1 4 1966

● The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival enters its eighth and final week of the 1966 season Monday with the second concert in the Festival of Contemporary American Music. This "festival within a festival" begins this evening with a program in the Tanglewood Theatre. For the three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next weekend Erich Leinsdorf will conduct two works by Franz Liszt on each of the Friday and Saturday evening programs. Jeanne-Marie Darre will be solist on Friday and Jorge Bolet will be heard with the Orchestra on Saturday. Leinsdorf will close the Festival on Sunday afternoon with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Friday evening's concert will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's Totentanz with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Liszt Preceding Friday's nine o'clock Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, Saturday's soloist Jorge Bolet will appear at the Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. Bolet will play seven Liszt piano transcriptions of works by Schubert, Chopin, and Schumann. The Weekend Prelude program will also include The Spinning Song from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto" also transcribed by Liszt and performed by Bolet.

Amherst Record
AMHERST, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,162

AUG 1 8 1966

TANGLEWOOD PERFORMERS this weekend will include French pianist Mme. Jeanne-Marie Darre (above) who will play with the BSO in Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 and pianist Jorge Bolet who will play with the BSO in Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,378

AUG 1 8 1966

JORGE BOLET, the Cuban-American pianist, will play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2, on Saturday evening, Aug. 20. Also on the program will be the Brahms Symphony No. 4 and the Liszt Fantasy on "The Ruins of Athens."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Ridgefield Press
RIDGEFIELD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,221

AUG 1 8 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,259

AUG 1 7 1966

Berkshire Music Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists, through Aug. 22, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Sing Out '66 returns to Ezio Pinza Theatre in Stamford Aug. 15 through 20 to mark the first official performance of the Sing Outs, which have since been performed on 326 college campuses, and at army bases around the world.

CAIRO HERALD
[illegible] 1966
RAVENNA NEWS HERALD
Friday, August [illegible], 1966

ATHENS, N. Y.
HERALD
W. 500

AUG 1 8 1966

Thomas Paul, Basso in his fourth season with the New York City Opera, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in this season's final concert, Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 on Sunday afternoon, August 21.

News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 1,200

AUG 1 8 1966

Tanglewood This Weekend

The final weekend of concerts at Tanglewood will begin Friday with the featured soloist being Mme. Jeanne-Marie Darre, French pianist. She will play List's Piano Concerto No. 1. Eric Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Other features of the weekend program include the presentation of Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2 on Saturday evening with Jorge Bolet, the Cuban-American pianist. Also on the program will be Brahms Symphony No. 4 and Liszt Fantasy on "The Ruins of Athens."

For the final concert of the season Sunday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Mr. Leinsdorf, will present Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 and also the Te Deum of Verdi. Featured soloists for the symphony include Thomas Paul, Basso, and Richard Cassilly, tenor.

144

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 19 1966

Liszt in Final Tanglewood Billing

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood concludes its 1966 season with three concerts this this weekend.

Tonight's concert at 9 will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's Totentanz with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Listz.

Preceding tonight's concert, tomorrow's soloist Jorge Bolet will appear at the weekend prelude at 7. Mr. Bolet will play seven Liszt piano transcriptions of works by Schubert, Chopin, and Schumann.

The weekend prelude program will also include The Spinning Song from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto" also transcribed by Liszt and performed by Mr. Bolet.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen to begin tomorrow evening's festival concert with the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. He will then conduct Liszt's Fantasy of "The Ruins of Athens."

Tomorrow's program will close with Mr. Bolet joining the conductor and orchestra for a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Liszt.

Sunday afternoon's program, which brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 85th season to a conclusion, will begin with Verdi's Te Deum. The major work at this concert will be a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly, and Thomas Paul as the soloists. The chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music.

NEW YORK TIMES
Friday, August 19, 1966

Music: Traditional Tanglewood Finale

Beethoven 9th Restored to Its Climactic Place

Miss Darre Is a Soloist in Weekend's Events

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

LEE, Mass., Aug. 21—For some years, it had been the custom to end the Berkshire Music Festival with a Sunday afternoon performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony. Last summer, the custom went by the boards, when Wagner's "Lohengrin," all of it, was spread over the weekend, an act at a time. Today the old custom was restored, bringing sighs of relief to the tradition-minded. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's monumental work. The soloists were Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul.

For the most part, the repertory of the final weekend was conventional, but each program did have one work that was a little unusual. This afternoon, it was Verdi's "Te Deum," that short but beautiful, simple and intense choral work of the composer's old age. It was a more fitting accompaniment to the Ninth Symphony than the Beethoven symphony or overture that is nearly always juxtaposed.

•

For the Verdi is a choral work that, like the last movement of the Ninth, breathes humanity and compassion. Tightly organized, not extravagant in its resources, it has no solos, except for two phrases toward the end that come from within the chorus, and it is a long way from the melodramatic splendors of the Verdi Requiem. Verdi himself was a freethinker, but the "Te Deum" has the kind of inner passion and belief that is infinitely bigger than conventional religious mouthings.

It was extremely well sung by the festival chorus, the group of students at the Berkshire Music Center, and was conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf with characteristic clarity and intelligence. The music proceeded in a straight line, without any attempt at expressive devices. This is a score that has no use for romantic frills or the extroversion of Italian opera, and Mr. Leinsdorf wisely avoided both.

Whitestone
Erich Leinsdorf

In a weekend that contained the Bruckner Fourth Symphony, the Brahms Fourth, the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" and the two Liszt piano concertos, there were two works that call for special discussion. Both were Liszt works for piano and orchestra, and both are seldom encountered any more — the Fantasy on Themes From Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and the "Totentanz."

The Fantasy caused something of an amused sensation when it was resurrected here two summers ago. Jorge Bolet was the pianist then as he was again Saturday night. That summer, Mr. Leinsdorf programed Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" in its entirety, and he thought it would be interesting to present Liszt's commentary on it for piano and orchestra. It had not been played in public for generations, though old-timers at least knew it from an old Petri recording.

It is Liszt pretty much at his worst, and it is so bad it turns out the highest of high camp — a wonderful chromo that can be listened to with a most satisfactory feeling of superiority. Its old-fashioned bravura rings magnificently false, and when the silly "Turkish March" arrives, all embroidered and dress-up, there are audience grins all over the place. And so it turns out great fun. It is interesting to note that Mr. Leinsdorf did not conduct it in its entirety. The "tempo di marcia" section was cut. Perhaps the serious Mr. Leinsdorf could take just so much and no more.

•

But the "Totentanz" is an entirely different kettle of fish. It is a set of variations on the "Dies Irae" and represents Liszt at his most flamboyant, his most daring, his most exciting. This, too, has its old-fashioned moments, but the work has authentic sweep in the hands of a big virtuoso, and some of its harmonies are breathtaking. Liszt was one of the most daring innovators of his age, and in a way even greater as a seminal force than Wagner.

Jeanne-Marie Darré was the pianist on Friday evening, and she also played the Liszt E flat Concerto. She played both works with the particular elan that is hers and hers alone. Her piano playing has immense vitality, propelled by a phenomenal technique. But she is made of blood, bone and brain, like most of us, and she is not a piledriver. Mr. Leinsdorf used the entire string section of the Boston Symphony, and often seemed to forget that there was a soloist. Nobody could play through the racket, and in the "Totentanz," and somewhat less in the concerto, Miss Darré resorted to desperate pounding.

Liszt did not have this kind of orchestra in mind, and Mr. Leinsdorf should have cut his forces, sending some violinists home for the night. Even the powerful Mr. Bolet, in the second concerto, had his troubles coming through. Otherwise, the accompaniments were perfectly dovetailed with the keyboard, and both pianists turned in superior examples of romantic playing. Miss Darré with typical bounce and ebullience, Mr. Bolet with eloquence and style.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,378
AUG 18 1966

RICHARD CASSILLY, tenor, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, Aug. 21, in Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. Also on the program will be the Te Deum of Verdi. This is the final concert of the 29th season of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 7

WHISTON PRESS
CLIPPING SERVICE
BUFFALO, N. Y.
Schenectady, N. Y.
Gazette
AUG 19 1966 047

WAMC-FM Will Air Berkshire Festival Sun.

The final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1966 season will be heard live on WAMC-FM (90.3 mc.) Sunday starting at 2:30 p.m.

* * *

Broadcast direct from the Music Shed at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra Erich Leinsdorf, Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be heard.

Joining the orchestra in both works will be the full Berkshire Festival Chorus and four distinguished soloists: Jane Marsh, soprano and winner of the recent Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Richard Cassilly, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass.

With this performance, WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College, concludes its first season of live Tanglewood broadcasts. A few performances were recorded due to time conflicts and these will be heard later in the week. Monday through Thursday chamber and baroque music will be heard at 8 p.m. over WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 31,564
AUG 20 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY Tanglewood concerts in Lenox, Mass., conclude this weekend. Erich Leisdorf conducts at 8 tonight in a program by Brahms and Liszt; and on Sunday at 2:30 he will conduct Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Tickets: $7, $6.50, $6, $5.50, $4.50, $4 and $3.50. Box office: 1-413-637-1600.

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Saturday, August 20, 1966

Leinsdorf To Conduct At Festival

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight. The program will include the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," Brahms' "Symphony No. 4," Liszt's "The Ruins of Athens" and Liszt's "Piano Concerto No. 2" with Jorge Bolet as soloist.

The program tomorrow afternoon, which Leinsdorf also will conduct, will include Verdi's "Te Deum," and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul as soloists. The chorus for the Beethoven work will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 19 1966

Liszt in Final Tanglewood Billing

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood concludes its 1966 season with three concerts this this weekend.

Tonight's concert at 9 will begin with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and continue with Liszt's Totentanz with Jeanne-Marie Darre as soloist. Miss Darre will also be heard in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 by Listz.

Preceding tonight's concert, tomorrow's soloist Jorge Bolet will appear at the weekend prelude at 7. Mr. Bolet will play seven Liszt piano transcriptions of works by Schubert, Chopin, and Schumann.

The weekend prelude program will also include The Spinning Song from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto" also transcribed by Liszt and performed by Mr. Bolet.

Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen to begin tomorrow evening's festival concert with the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and Brahms' Symphony No. 4. He will then conduct Liszt's Fantasy of "The Ruins of Athens."

Tomorrow's program will close with Mr. Bolet joining the conductor and orchestra for a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Liszt.

Sunday afternoon's program, which brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 85th season to a conclusion, will begin with Verdi's Te Deum. The major work at this concert will be a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly, and Thomas Paul as the soloists. The chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music.

NEW YORK TIMES
Friday, August 19, 1966

Music: Traditional Tanglewood Finale

Beethoven 9th Restored to Its Climactic Place

Miss Darre Is a Soloist in Weekend's Events

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

LEE, Mass., Aug. 21—For some years, it had been the custom to end the Berkshire Music Festival with a Sunday afternoon performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony. Last summer, the custom went by the boards, when Wagner's "Lohengrin," all of it, was spread over the weekend, an act at a time. Today the old custom was restored, bringing sighs of relief to the tradition-minded. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's monumental work. The soloists were Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul.

For the most part, the repertory of the final weekend was conventional, but each program did have one work that was a little unusual. This afternoon, it was Verdi's "Te Deum," that short but beautiful, simple and intense choral work of the composer's old age. It was a more fitting accompaniment to the Ninth Symphony than the Beethoven symphony or overture that is nearly always juxtaposed.

•

For the Verdi is a choral work that, like the last movement of the Ninth, breathes humanity and compassion. Tightly organized, not extravagant in its resources, it has no solos, except for two phrases toward the end that come from within the chorus, and it is a long way from the melodramatic splendors of the Verdi Requiem. Verdi himself was a freethinker, but the "Te Deum" has the kind of inner passion and belief that is infinitely bigger than conventional religious mouthings.

It was extremely well sung by the festival chorus, the group of students at the Berkshire Music Center, and was conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf with characteristic clarity and intelligence. The music proceeded in a straight line, without any attempt at expressive devices. This is a score that has no use for romantic frills or the extroversion of Italian opera, and Mr. Leinsdorf wisely avoided both.

Whitestone
Erich Leinsdorf

In a weekend that contained the Bruckner Fourth Symphony, the Brahms Fourth, the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" and the two Liszt piano concertos, there were two works that call for special discussion. Both were Liszt works for piano and orchestra, and both are seldom encountered any more — the Fantasy on Themes From Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and the "Totentanz."

The Fantasy caused something of an amused sensation when it was resurrected here two summers ago. Jorge Bolet was the pianist then as he was again Saturday night. That summer, Mr. Leinsdorf programed Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" in its entirety, and he thought it would be interesting to present Liszt's commentary on it for piano and orchestra. It had not been played in public for generations, though old-timers at least knew it from an old Petri recording.

It is Liszt pretty much at his worst, and it is so bad it turns out the highest of high camp — a wonderful chromo that can be listened to with a most satisfactory feeling of superiority. Its old-fashioned bravura rings magnificently false, and when the silly "Turkish March" arrives, all embroidered and dress-up, there are audience grins all over the place. And so it turns out great fun. It is interesting to note that Mr. Leinsdorf did not conduct it in its entirety. The "tempo di marcia" section was cut. Perhaps the serious Mr. Leinsdorf could take just so much and no more.

•

But the "Totentanz" is an entirely different kettle of fish. It is a set of variations on the "Dies Irae" and represents Liszt at his most flamboyant, his most daring, his most exciting. This, too, has its old-fashioned moments, but the work has authentic sweep in the hands of a big virtuoso, and some of its harmonies are breathtaking. Liszt was one of the most daring innovators of his age, and in a way even greater as a seminal force than Wagner.

Jeanne-Marie Darré was the pianist on Friday evening, and she also played the Liszt E flat Concerto. She played both works with the particular elan that is hers and hers alone. Her piano playing has immense vitality, propelled by a phenomenal technique. But she is made of blood, bone and brain, like most of us, and she is not a piledriver. Mr. Leinsdorf used the entire string section of the Boston Symphony, and often seemed to forget that there was a soloist. Nobody could play through the racket, and in the "Totentanz," and somewhat less in the concerto, Miss Darré resorted to desperate pounding.

Liszt did not have this kind of orchestra in mind, and Mr. Leinsdorf should have cut his forces, sending some violinists home for the night. Even the powerful Mr. Bolet, in the second concerto, had his troubles coming through. Otherwise, the accompaniments were perfectly dovetailed with the keyboard, and both pianists turned in superior examples of romantic playing. Miss Darré with typical bounce and ebullience, Mr. Bolet with eloquence and style.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,378
AUG 18 1966

RICHARD CASSILLY, tenor, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, Aug. 21, in Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. Also on the program will be the Te Deum of Verdi. This is the final concert of the 29th season of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

WHISTON PRESS
CLIPPING SERVICE
BUFFALO, N. Y.
Schenectady, N. Y.
Gazette
AUG 9 1966

WAMC-FM Will Air Berkshire Festival Sun.

The final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1966 season will be heard live on WAMC-FM (90.3 mc.) Sunday starting at 2:30 p.m.

* * *

Broadcast direct from the Music Shed at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra Erich Leinsdorf. Verdi's "Te program will be conducted by Deum" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be heard.

Joining the orchestra in both works will be the full Berkshire Festival Chorus and four distinguished soloists: Jane Marsh, soprano and winner of the recent Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Richard Cassilly, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass.

With this performance, WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College, concludes its first season of live Tanglewood broadcasts. A few performances were recorded due to time conflicts and these will be heard later in the week. Monday through Thursday chamber and baroque music will be heard at 8 p.m. over WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College.

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 31,564
AUG 20 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY Tanglewood concerts in Lenox, Mass., conclude this weekend. Erich Leisdorf conducts at 8 tonight in a program by Brahms and Liszt; and on Sunday at 2:30 he will conduct Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Tickets: $7, $6.50, $6, $5.50, $4.50, $4 and $3.50. Box office: 1-413-637-1600.

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Saturday, August 20, 1966

Leinsdorf To Conduct At Festival

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight. The program will include the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," Brahms' "Symphony No. 4," Liszt's "The Ruins of Athens", and Liszt's "Piano Concerto No. 2" with Jorge Bolet as soloist.

The program tomorrow afternoon, which Leinsdorf also will conduct, will include Verdi's "Te Deum," and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul as soloists. The chorus for the Beethoven work will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center

145

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
AUG 20 1966

Music: Old Wine in Lenox

Jorge Bolet Uncorks Some Vintage Liszt

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 19—There is going to be an awful lot of Franz Liszt's music during the final week of the Berkshire Music Festival, and the amenities were launched at this evening's weekend prelude. Jorge Bolet devoted an hour to Liszt piano music, and, if that were not enough, he devoted his program to the kind of repertory not heard for at least a generation.

Mr. Bolet played nothing but transcriptions. Including the encores, there were five Schubert songs, two of the Chopin songs, the famous two—"The Maiden's Wish" and "My Joys"—that Josef Hofmann used to play all the time, and two of the Schumann, Paganini's "La Campanella" and the wonderful paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto."

Some fifty years ago, these were the bread and butter of pianists. Then they fell on evil days. In the nineteen-thirties they were scorned as meretricious "tinsel." No respectable musician would be caught dead playing them. And to the young generation of the West in the period right after World War II, they were completely unknown territory, despised but never heard.

●

Those of us who grew up with them and had a sneaking admiration for the transcriptions—we would never admit to it in public, of course—developed an inferiority complex. What was wrong with our taste?

But there are signs of change. Some of the operatic paraphrases have been turning up, and here and there a pianist will dip into this or that aspect of Liszt. Jorge Bolet always has been something of a Lisztianer, and in the past he has played his share of the composer. But he has never come heavily in for this material, "The Paraphrases," which still are considered de trop in many circles.

The trouble is that people have a tendency to listen to them the wrong way. When we hear one of the transcriptions that Bach made of Vivaldi music, we never think of Vivaldi. We accept the music as by Bach. Why, then, when we hear a transcription of a Schubert song by Liszt, should we think of Schubert?

The songs are translations into the keyboard idiom, in which the melodic content is for the most part left uncharged. But the mind of Liszt throws new light on the harmonies, and the music suddenly becomes as idiomatic for the piano as it had been for the voice. The time has passed when we should feel ashamed of liking these ingenious, likable products of a vanished age.

Jorge Bolet

As for the various operatic paraphrases, they are transcendental. They take material from the opera in question and create entirely original superstructures, during which the pianist is posed a series of problems that still are challenging, exciting and even heroic.

Nobody is saying that this kind of music is to be taken as seriously as a Beethoven quartet. Of course, it isn't. But in the hands of a proper pianist, one with a grand line and unlimited technique, the music can still sound wonderful and make a thrilling impact.

Mr. Bolet is that kind of pianist. His technique is quite on the Horowitz order, and while he does not have that special kind of sonority, his tone is deep, full and capable of much nuance. He is a pianist who constantly has been growing, and he is one of the relatively few pianists who feels comfortable in the kind of literature he played this evening.

●

One thing is that he takes it not as a stunt, though he does not try to dodge the acrobatic element that is so much a part of the writing. He plays it with the kind of simplicity that makes the virtuoso passages fall into place as music.

Once in a while he is tempted to linger and become a bit sentimental. That happened in the Chopin-Liszt "My Joys." A faster tempo would have helped. But seldom during the course of the little recital was there anything but dignified, poetic playing that had shape, cohesion and a singing line.

In all respects it was beautiful, and, in the "Rigoletto" paraphrase, it was simply immense. We need this kind of approach to the piano, just as we still need this literature to show what the piano can do.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
AUG 21 1966

Today's Radio Notes

The final Berkshire Festival concert of the season will be heard on WGBH-FM at 2:30 p.m., with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony in two works: Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Jane Marsh, soprano, winner of the recent Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, will be among the soloists.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
AUG 20 1966

Music Review

BSO Nears End of 85th Season

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FINAL WEEKEND of the Tanglewood season began last night with two novelties on the compact program. Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first Berkshire performance of the Bruckner fourth symphony and introduced to the festival audiences the eminent French pianist Jeanne-Marie Darre, one of a short but celebrated list of mature artists who for one reason or another have not been known to the United States.

* * *

BRUCKNER was a slightly older contemporary of Brahms. He was a sort of pathetic fellow evidently, in some ways denied or at least reluctantly granted acceptance by his own colleagues. It pleased him to call this symphony his "Romantic". I have named it in my own catalogue the "nicht zu schnell" ("not too fast") symphony for it is so that he asked that three of the four movements be played. It wanders amiably but interminably among more pleasant, even epic, thoughts than one usually finds in the work of the always pious but often gloomy man, who always remained personally a rustic, back-countryman in his social relationships.

Leinsdorf played it with leisurely pace and ample space between sections large and small. James Stagliano played his French horn solos, notably the opening drop of a fifth, without breaking it. The conductor singled him out after the completion of the hour-long symphony to take special credit.

* * *

ONE OF the features advanced this season by Leinsdorf has been a survey of the romantic concertos—mainly for piano it developed—and so we have had a fairly complete hearing of the concertos of Schumann, Saint-Saens and, starting last night, of Liszt. How far apart could two men live on the same planet at the same time? Liszt wrote his first concerto at about the same relative age as Bruckner did his fourth symphony. Liszt, however, was the paradoxical religio- sophisticate frequenting feudal courts and entertaining their ladies, the heroic darling of the century much as Byron had been the center of that type society in his day.

Madame Darre is an ideal interpreter of Liszt. A formidable pianist and a master of bravura, she played with lucidity and dramatic strength. I dislike the phrases which might be applied here as a paraphrase of 'enry 'iggins: "Why does a woman play like a man?" Yet there is nothing else which quite conveys the nature of Madame Darre's playing so well. There is a style in pianism which is appropriately epicene, and Darre proved herself a prime exponent.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 21 1966

At Tanglewood

Romantic Flurry Brings Season Close to End

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—It is fitting, in a way, that a musical season which has the romantic concerto as its theme should near its end with a flurry of Liszt.

4 Works of Liszt

Liszt was probably the most romantic of the musical romancers of the romantic 19th century, and Erich Leinsdorf chose to present four of his concerto-like works for piano and orchestra at Tanglewood this weekend.

Friday night there was "Todtentantz" ("Dance of Death"), a frightful work, and the Piano Concerto No. 1.

Saturday night Jorge Bolet was soloist for the piano concerto which was assigned No. 2, even though composed first, and for the fantasia on themes from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens."

Lyrical Sections

The No. 2 concerto is a one-movement symphonic poem with several gracefully lyrical sections.

There are also, many opportunities for a pianist to bang and thump the keys and stretch his finger muscles with great chords, runs and densely chromatic cascades.

Bolet, who is known for his affinity for Liszt, demonstrated his facility for it Friday evening when he played a group of Liszt's song transcriptions for the [illegible] audience with a wealth of agility and expression.

His success with the Beethoven fantasia Saturday was not so felicitous, and there were passages during both the fantasia and the concerto that were deadened by thumping, but for the most part they were as flowery and sentimental and spectacular as Liszt could have intended.

Before intermission the orchestra played a Brahms Symphony No. 4 that was filled with massive strength.

Leinsdorf lost no time in exhorting the musicians to full effort at the outset, and he never let them fall into a routine posture.

Packed With Energy

The first movement was packed with energy and tension, the middle movements were unusually propulsive and the last was brawny with the power of kettledrums and brass.

There was no hint that the symphony is one of the most frequently played. It was full of life.

The concert opened with a prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" which insinuated itself through the audience with quiet relentlessness and consummate beauty of tone.

It is unlikely that those sitting in the best acoustical areas at Tanglewood and Symphony Hall in Boston these days have ever heard an orchestra that can produce beautiful tones more consistently.

Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 61,129
AUG 20 1966

Music:

Berkshire Festival Features 2 Pianists

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — It is a rare event when two distinguished pianists perform individually from the same platform at a festival concert.

This was the case at the opening concert last night of the Berkshire Music Festival's eighth and final weekend at Tanglewood. Attendance was 5,174.

The reason for this odd circumstance was the combination of Tanglewood events on Friday nights. Weekend Prelude, beginning at 7 p.m., featured Jorge Bolet in a set of piano transcriptions by Franz Liszt.

Main concert was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, at 9 p.m. Soloist was Jeanne-Marie Darre, pianist in the Liszt "Todtentanz" or "Dance of Death" and Piano Concerto No. 1 in E Flat Major. Orchestral work was Symphony No. 4 in E Flat, "Romantic," by the Austrian composer Anton Bruckner.

Bolet created a sensation with his scholarly, unfettered, brilliant performances of the Liszt transcriptions.

Three by Schubert

In three by Schubert ("Hark, Hark, the Lark," "Linden Tree," and "Where") Bolet kept sentiment and fanfare to a minimum although he couldn't quite disguise the flossiness of "Where."

Others by Chopin and Schumann were fine displays of technical control that could not entirely redeem the simple melodies that Liszt embellished to the hilt. Chopin's "Maiden's Wish" was a typical example.

Bolet played the "Spinning Song" from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" rhythmically and incisively. The concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto" was a fireworks display in the "Old War Horse" tradition.

Heavy applause and shouts of "bravo" were rewarded with several encores, including a dazzling performance of Paganini-Liszt's "La Campanella."

One doesn't find an excess of "romance" in Bruckner's 4th, but to some, this is a long, tiresome romance. Last night's performance took more than one hour.

It had plenty of lift, even brilliant sound, and Leinsdorf exacted it so that scattered patterns were strongly allied. Moods ranged from rhapsodic to sprightly and tender.

The slow movement was a memorable experience in rich nuance, notably from violas, flutes and cellos. Tricky byplays in woodwinds and brasses were under Leinsdorf's command.

Heavy brass proclamations in the finale were most compelling.

There were a number of Bruckner devotees in last night's audience, and they were loud in their enthusiasm. To others, it must have been eventless, at least in part. To all, the most impressive feature was Leinsdorf conducting the work from memory.

Liszt's "Todtentanz" revels in the best and worst of the composer's style. It is said to have been inspired by a fresco Liszt saw in Pisa, Italy. He must have been possessed of a terse, diabolical mood. "Todtentanz" tortures the lugubrious theme "Dies Irae" or "Day of Wrath" to death. Two reasons for its rare performance are its weak value, and the fact that even virtuosos have a sense of prudence.

Justified

Last night's results justified the act. While the orchestra, especially brasses, sounded out the dire theme of final retribution, Miss Darre toiled away brilliantly at Liszt's keyboard absurdities. This served to prove that Miss Darre is well supplied with technical ammunition, and remarkable strength. Poetic fragments also disclosed a sensitive artist.

Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in tonight's progam, which includes the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Opus 98.

Bolet will be soloist in the "Fantasia" from Beethoven's "The Ruins of Athens" and Liszt's Piano Concerto in A Major, No. 2.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277

AUG 20 1966

Music: Old Wine in Lenox

Jorge Bolet Uncorks Some Vintage Liszt

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 19—There is going to be an awful lot of Franz Liszt's music during the final week of the Berkshire Music Festival, and the amenities were launched at this evening's weekend prelude. Jorge Bolet devoted an hour to Liszt piano music, and, if that were not enough, he devoted his program to the kind of repertory not heard for at least a generation.

Mr. Bolet played nothing but transcriptions. Including the encores, there were five Schubert songs, two of the Chopin songs, the famous two—"The Maiden's Wish" and "My Joys"—that Josef Hofmann used to play all the time, and two of the Schumann, Paganini's "La Campanella" and the wonderful paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto."

Some fifty years ago, these were the bread and butter of pianists. Then they fell on evil days. In the nineteen-thirties they were scorned as meretricious "tinsel." No respectable musician would be caught dead playing them. And to the young generation of the West in the period right after World War II, they were completely unknown territory, despised but never heard.

●

Those of us who grew up with them and had a sneaking admiration for the transcriptions—we would never admit to it in public, of course—developed an inferiority complex. What was wrong with our taste?

But there are signs of change. Some of the operatic paraphrases have been turning up, and here and there a pianist will dip into this or that aspect of Liszt. Jorge Bolet always has been something of a Lisztianer, and in the past he has played his share of the composer. But he has never come heavily in for this material, "The Paraphrases," which still are considered de trop in many circles.

The trouble is that people have a tendency to listen to them the wrong way. When we hear one of the transcriptions that Bach made of Vivaldi music, we never think of Vivaldi. We accept the music as by Bach. Why, then, when we hear a transcription of a Schubert song by Liszt, should we think of Schubert?

The songs are translations into the keyboard idiom, in which the melodic content is for the most part left uncharged. But the mind of Liszt throws new light on the harmonies, and the music suddenly becomes as idiomatic for the piano as it had been for the voice. The time has passed when we should feel ashamed of liking these ingenious, likable products of a vanished age.

Jorge Bolet

As for the various operatic paraphrases, they are transcendental. They take material from the opera in question and create entirely original superstructures, during which the pianist is posed a series of problems that still are challenging, exciting and even heroic.

Nobody is saying that this kind of music is to be taken as seriously as a Beethoven quartet. Of course, it isn't. But in the hands of a proper pianist, one with a grand line and unlimited technique, the music can still sound wonderful and make a thrilling impact.

Mr. Bolet is that kind of pianist. His technique is quite on the Horowitz order, and while he does not have that special kind of sonority, his tone is deep, full and capable of much nuance. He is a pianist who constantly has been growing, and he is one of the relatively few pianists who feels comfortable in the kind of literature he played this evening.

●

One thing is that he takes it not as a stunt, though he does not try to dodge the acrobatic element that is so much a part of the writing. He plays it with the kind of simplicity that makes the virtuoso passages fall into place as music.

Once in a while he is tempted to linger and become a bit sentimental. That happened in the Chopin-Liszt "My Joys." A faster tempo would have helped. But seldom during the course of the little recital was there anything but dignified, poetic playing that had shape, cohesion and a singing line.

In all respects it was beautiful, and, in the "Rigoletto" paraphrase, it was simply immense. We need this kind of approach to the piano, just as we still need this literature to show what the piano can do.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

AUG 20 1966

Music Review

BSO Nears End of 85th Season

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FINAL WEEKEND of the Tanglewood season began last night with two novelties on the compact program. Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first Berkshire performance of the Bruckner fourth symphony and introduced to the festival audiences the eminent French pianist Jeanne-Marie Darre, one of a short but celebrated list of mature artists who for one reason or another have not been known to the United States.

* * *

BRUCKNER was a slightly older contemporary of Brahms. He was a sort of pathetic fellow evidently, in some ways denied or at least reluctantly granted acceptance by his own colleagues. It pleased him to call this symphony his "Romantic". I have named it in my own catalogue the "nicht zu schnell" ("not too fast") symphony for it is so that he asked that three of the four movements be played. It wanders amiably but interminably among more pleasant, even epic, thoughts than one usually finds in the work of the always pious but often gloomy man, who always remained personally a rustic, back-country-man in his social relationships.

Leinsdorf played it with leisurely pace and ample space between sections large and small. James Stagliano played his French horn solos, notably the opening drop of a fifth, without breaking it. The conductor singled him out after the completion of the hour-long symphony to take special credit.

* * *

ONE OF the features advanced this season by Leinsdorf has been a survey of the romantic concertos—mainly for piano it developed—and so we have had a fairly complete hearing of the concertos of Schumann, Saint-Saens and, starting last night, of Liszt. How far apart could two men live on the same planet at the same time? Liszt wrote his first concerto at about the same relative age as Bruckner did his fourth symphony. Liszt, however, was the paradoxical religio- sophisticate frequenting feudal courts and entertaining their ladies, the heroic darling of the century much as Byron had been the center of that type society in his day.

Madame Darre is an ideal interpreter of Liszt. A formidable pianist and a master of bravura, she played with lucidity and dramatic strength. I dislike the phrases which might be applied here as a paraphrase of 'enry 'iggins: "Why does a woman play like a man?" Yet there is nothing else which quite conveys the nature of Madame Darre's playing so well. There is a style in pianism which is appropriately epicene, and Darre proved herself a prime exponent.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966

AUG 21 1966

At Tanglewood

Romantic Flurry Brings Season Close to End

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX—It is fitting, in a way, that a musical season which has the romantic concerto as its theme should near its end with a flurry of Liszt.

4 Works of Liszt

Liszt was probably the most romantic of the musical romancers of the romantic 19th century, and Erich Leinsdorf chose to present four of his concerto-like works for piano and orchestra at Tanglewood this weekend.

Friday night there was "Todtentantz" ("Dance of Death"), a frightful work, and the Piano Concerto No. 1.

Saturday night Jorge Bolet was soloist for the piano concerto which was assigned No. 2, even though composed first, and for the fantasia on themes from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens."

Lyrical Sections

The No. 2 concerto is a one-movement symphonic poem with several gracefully lyrical sections.

There are, also, many opportunities for a pianist to bang and thump the keys and stretch his finger muscles with great chords, runs and densely chromatic cascades.

Bolet, who is known for his affinity for Liszt, demonstrated his facility for it Friday evening when he played a group of Liszt's song transcriptions for the prelude audience with a wealth of agility and expression.

His success with the Beethoven fantasia Saturday was not so felicitous, and there were passages during both the fantasia and the concerto that were deadened by thumping, but for the most part they were as flowery and sentimental and spectacular as Liszt could have intended.

Before intermission the orchestra played a Brahms Symphony No. 4 that was filled with massive strength.

Leinsdorf lost no time in exhorting the musicians to full effort at the outset, and he never let them fall into a routine posture.

Packed With Energy

The first movement was packed with energy and tension, the middle movements were unusuaally propulsive and the last was brawny with the power of kettledrums and brass.

There was no hint that the symphony is one of the most frequently played. It was full of life.

The concert opened with a prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" which insinuated itself through the audience with quiet relentlessness and consummate beauty of tone.

It is unlikely that those sitting in the best acoustical areas at Tanglewood and Symphony Hall in Boston these days have ever heard an orchestra that can produce beautiful tones more consistently.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

AUG 21 1966

Today's Radio Notes

The final Berkshire Festival concert of the season will be heard on WGBH-FM at 2:30 p.m., with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony in two works: Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Jane Marsh, soprano, winner of the recent Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, will be among the soloists.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 61,129

AUG 20 1966

Music:

Berkshire Festival Features 2 Pianists

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — It is a rare event when two distinguished pianists perform individually from the same platform, at a festival concert.

This was the case at the opening concert last night of the Berkshire Music Festival's eighth and final weekend at Tanglewood. Attendance was 5,174.

The reason for this odd circumstance was the combination of Tanglewood events on Friday nights. Weekend Prelude, beginning at 7 p.m., featured Jorge Bolet in a set of piano transcriptions by Franz Liszt.

Main concert was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, at 9 p.m. Soloist was Jeanne-Marie Darre, pianist in the Liszt "Todtentanz" or "Dance of Death" and Piano Concerto No. 1 in E Flat Major. Orchestral work was Symphony No. 4 in E Flat. "Romantic," by the Austrian composer Anton Bruckner.

Bolet created a sensation with his scholarly, unfettered, brilliant performances of the Liszt transcriptions.

Three by Schubert

In three by Schubert ("Hark, Hark, the Lark," "Linden Tree," and "Where") Bolet kept sentiment and fanfare to a minimum although he couldn't quite disguise the flossiness of "Where."

Others by Chopin and Schumann were fine displays of technical control that could not entirely redeem the simple melodies that Liszt embellished to the hilt. Chopin's "Maiden's Wish" was a typical example.

Bolet played the "Spinning Song" from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" rhythmically and incisively. The concert paraphrase from Verdi's "Rigoletto" was a fireworks display in the "Old War Horse" tradition.

Heavy applause and shouts of "bravo" were rewarded with several encores, including a dazzling performance of Paganini-Liszt's "La Campanella."

One doesn't find an excess of "romance" in Bruckner's 4th, but to some, this is a long, tiresome romance. Last night's performance took more than one hour.

It had plenty of lift, even brilliant sound, and Leinsdorf exacted it so that scattered patterns were strongly allied. Moods ranged from rhapsodic to sprightly and tender.

The slow movement was a memorable experience in rich nuance, notably from violas, flutes and cellos. Tricky byplays in woodwinds and brasses were under Leinsdorf's command.

Heavy brass proclamations in the finale were most compelling.

There were a number of Bruckner devotees in last night's audience, and they were loud in their enthusiasm. To others, it must have been eventless, at least in part. To all, the most impressive feature was Leinsdorf conducting the work from memory.

Liszt's "Todtentanz" revels in the best and worst of the composer's style. It is said to have been inspired by a fresco Liszt saw in Pisa, Italy. He must have been possessed of a terse, diabolical mood. "Todtentanz" tortures the lugubrious theme "Dies Irae" or "Day of Wrath" to death. Two reasons for its rare performance are its weak value, and the fact that even virtuosos have a sense of prudence.

Justified

Last night's results justified the act. While the orchestra, especially brasses, sounded out the dire theme of final retribution, Miss Darre toiled away brilliantly at Liszt's keyboard absurdities. This served to prove that Miss Darre is well supplied with technical ammunition, and remarkable strength. Poetic fragments also disclosed a sensitive artist.

Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in tonight's progam, which includes the Prelude to Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Opus 98.

Bolet will be soloist in the "Fantasia" from Beethoven's "The Ruins of Athens" and Liszt's Piano Concerto in A Major, No. 2.

146

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910
AUG 21 1966

Music: Pianist Jorge Bolet Plays at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's Tanglewood concert, next to the last of this Berkshire Music Festival, was a romantic splurge. It was attended by 9,178.

Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Prelude to Wagner's opera "Tristan and Isolde" and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Opus 98.

Pianist Jorge Bolet created much the same furor as he did at Friday night's weekend Prelude with a recital of Liszt' transcriptions.

Last night, his efforts remained with Liszt — Fantasia on Themes from Beethoven's "The Ruins of Athens" and Piano Concerto No. 2 in A Major.

With all due respect to Leinsdorf's discerning treatment of the Brahms' Fourth, the more memorable music was Wagner's Prelude. Leinsdorf's specialty is Wagner, just as his predecessors, Koussevitsky and Munch, rose to greatest heights with Tchaikovsky and the French impressionists, respectively.

Four Seasons

During his four seasons as conductor of the Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf has worn well. His Beethoven, Brahms and Bruckner have been typical of his astuteness, lucid thought, and clear transmission.

Last night Wagner was much more than these surface assets. The music had marvelous emotional impact — the kind that must be inspired as well as conducted.

The Prelude was brought to a mighty peak of volume and tension; then receded as steadfastly to whispered sound. There was beautiful control over disgressions of volume, not only within phrases but on single tones.

Speed was unusually slow, but with such beauty of sound, haste would have damaged, or at least lessened the effect.

There was valid reason to take issue with Leinsdorf over some of his tempos in the Brahms' symphony. However, a fringe benefit was articulation, also instrumental superiority. We've rarely heard the Boston Symphony brasses played with such penetration. Even the quiet chorale of the third movement came out right.

Leinsdorf's approach to the total work was a monument of contemplation, a philosophical recital by the composer.

First Movement

The first movement was somewhat elastic, but remained sweeping and noble. In the remaining three movements, symphony progressed through tenderness and gaiety to heroic statement as a crowning finale.

Bolet brings to Liszt's music stern suppression of flamboyance and sentimentality.

The man has such a brilliant technique that Liszt's most hazardous "booby traps" are seemingly handled without effort.

Liszt pulled out all the stops in an effort to use Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" as a super spectacular. It can easily be used as an arena for the colorful virtuoso, but Bolet and the orchestra preserved musical values to the fullest.

In spite of this, when Bolet tackled the concluding "Turkish March" with his powerful hands and flashy finger work, it guaranteed that audience reaction would be ecstatic.

The festival ends this afternoon with an orchestral choral program.

Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony and Tanglewood Chorus will perform Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, opus 125.

Soloists for the latter will be Phyliss Curtin, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Richard Cassilly, tenor and Thomas Paul, bass.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 21, 1966

FINALE AT TANGLEWOOD—Soprano Phyllis Curtin and tenor Richard Cassilly will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, in a performance of Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. The concert, scheduled for this afternoon at 2:30, will conclude the 1966 season at Tanglewood.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 21, 1966

In Music

The 1966 season at Tanglewood closes this afternoon with a performance of Verdi's Te Deum" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festival Chorus. The concert begins at 2:30 p.m. in the Music Shed on the Berkshire Festival grounds, Lenox, Mass.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 20 1966

SATURDAY

BSO Faultless In Performing Bruckner Work

Leinsdorf Conducts Symphony No. 4 In Tanglewood Shed

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Once again the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the guidance of Erich Leinsdorf has introduced an audience to a world which overshadowed that presented by a soloist on the same program.

Bruckner Symphony

Friday night the orchestra opened the program at Tanglewood with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, a work of vast scope which, although about 75 minutes long, is not one of Bruckner's long symphonies.

Leinsdorf conducted it from memory, and it is difficult to believe he could have shaped its spacious sonorities and paced its endless depths with greater understanding.

The orchestra's members performed as if they had never played separately. The ensemble was at least esthetically, if not scientifically, perfect.

Patience Well Rewarded

And the soloists (the woodwinds in the second movement, for instance, and the brass choirs in the third) were virtually faultless.

As is common with Bruckner, the early moments of the symphony aroused a mild sense of impatience. The music takes its own sweet, profound time in indicating where it might be going.

But patience was well rewarded. The almost palpable substance of the performance was cumulative. It was superlative.

Liszt Concerto

Miss Jeanne-Marie Darre was the piano soloist who followed intermission. She played Liszt's "Todtentanz" and his Piano Concerto No. 1.

It was not her fault that the Bruckner Symphony overshadowed her Liszt. She charged into the windy, bombastic passages of the "Todtentanz" with a verve and power surprising in a white-haired lady.

Admittedly, she might have been able to draw somewhat more subtlety of expression from the slower, melodic passages in Liszt, but it was ultimately the comparative lack of substance in the Liszt that made the Bruckner seem so much more satisfying.

However, Miss Darre exhibited great agility on the keyboard, and it will be interesting to see what she chooses to play with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra when she performs with it next season.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737
AUG 21 1966

MUSIC

MASSACHUSETTS

LENOX (Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood) — Today's program at 2:30 p.m., which brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra's season to a conclusion, will begin with Verdi's Te Deum. The major work at this concert will be a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 with Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul as the soloists. The chorus will consist of members of the Berkshire Music Center.

Prelude Program

Jorge Bolet, pianist, who is scheduled to play Liszt's other piano concerto (No. 2) Saturday night, appeared at 7 for the prelude program to play a collection of the transcriptions Liszt wrote for his own use.

He made about 500 of them and they were highly successful dazzlers. They were successful again Friday, Bolet being called back with bravos several times. He played nine, plus two encores.

There were three Schubert songs, two by Chopin, two from Schumann and one each from Wagner and Verdi.

Mostly Bolet avoided the heavy pounding he has fallen into at other times and concentrated on the incredibly busy and delicate fingering these pieces require.

Difficult to Play

Part of the reason they are not heard on regular programs (aside from the fact that they are 75 years out of style) must be that they are so difficult to play.

Indeed, Bolet, who is a Liszt specialist, seemed to have a little difficulty in getting his fingers warmed up and there were a few slight fumbles during the first piece, Schubert's "Hark, Hark, the Lark."

But the rest of the program was an almost unbelievable demonstration of dexterity and by the time Bolet was involved in his second encore, a transcription of Paganini's "La Campanella," his music was flying.

He is a big, hulking man and it seemed as if he was too big for the nimble speed required.

But Liszt's infinite variety of runs, glissandos, swoops and swirls, heavily chromatic textures and flowery flurries fared very well indeed.

It would be a mistake, however, to downgrade these transcriptions simply because they are flowery and sometimes grandiose. There are many passages of lyrical abundance in them, and Bolet spread them across the great shed with fine grace and sensitivity.

It was a distinct pleasure to hear these melodramatic pieces played with such skill and beauty.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 22 1966

In Brief . . .

The highly successful Berkshire Festival season concluded yesterday indicates that fine music is nurturing a growing audience capable of supporting the 31-year-old institution at Tanglewood as well as the newcomers . . . One of the particular satisfactions voiced by persons who have been close to the Berkshire Music Center over the years was the high quality of the students attending the school this summer. They came from all over the world, with Japan contributing some especially brilliant performers.

That big billboard on Route 7 south of Great Barrington extolling the attractions of Essex County may or may not be a spite sign penalizing the town for its disapproval of a similar atrocity a few miles north. In any case, it is uncalled for . . . The precedent for the Essex County sign was set some years ago when the state Department of Commerce put up a billboard touting the delights of Massachusetts on the east-bound lane of the Massachusetts Turnpike near State Line. The sign is still there, despite protests about its inappropriateness and bad taste.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 61,129
AUG 22 1966

Music: Berkshire Festival Comes to a Close

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The 29th Berkshire Music Festival ended in a blaze of glory yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood with an orchestral-choral program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Tanglewood Chorus conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

It was also the closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 85th season.

Program was Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor, Opus 125.

Soloists for the Finale of the Beethoven Ninth were Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Richard Cassilly, tenor; Thomas Paul, bass.

Yesterday's audience of 14,178 made a weekend total of 32,602 for the festival's eighth and final weekend.

Receipts Up

Attendance for the entire festival was 236.196 with receipts of $625.944. Figures for the summer festival of 1965 were 242,005 attendance, and box-office proceeds of $605.718.

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony has been a frequent, if not traditional closing work for this festival. Yesterday's performance was neither the greatest (due to the quartet and a mishap in low strings) — nor was it by any means the least impressive.

It was obvious from the tremulant opening of the violins, soon growing to full participation, that the orchestra was in rare form — as was Leinsdorf.

Taking a retrospective view of the entire performance, Leinsdorf's dedication was to the composer's objective. No could one have asked for more total participation by the chorus.

In something more than one hour's performance time, Beethoven built this great monument to the brotherhood of man. Start of terminal elation is that moment in the Finale when the chorus proclaims, from Schiller's "Ode to Joy," "Joy, thou spark from heav'n immortal." Incidentally, it was sung in the original German, and clearly.

Glowing Tone

Discussing an orchestra like the Boston Symphony, perfected mechanics of performance are almost assumed — glowing tone, marvelous precision, immediacy of dynamic changes, polished and unanimous phrasing.

During the Finale, one low string instrument anticipated the beat, and it took on the proportion of a scandal in such a magnificent performance.

Over and above the instrumental virtues, the experience of Beethoven's titanic struggle did materialize. It was initiated in the opening movement with agitation, and a persuasion that the human spirit must prevail.

Reverting to a brighter side, the Scherzo revelled in merriments, then explored the mystical. Here was some of the festival's most exalted music (third movement, Adagio). Each variation had its own brand of serenity.

When this ethereal mood was shattered, full forces embarked on a rather uneven Finale.

Paul gave a wavering announcement of the vocal entreaty, "Oh friends, no longer these tones of sadness" The quartet was balanced to the degree that all voices were articulate, with slight domination in soprano. Pitch was not always relative.

Powerful Voice

Tenor Cassilly discharged his role with an attractively lyrical, powerful voice. The two women's solo voices were adequately functional.

The chorus was superb. It not only supplemented orchestral quality and verve, but produced resonant, balanced parts, and sang the text as if that was all that really mattered.

Had the order of performance been reversed, the Verdi's "Te Deum" would not have suffered a total eclipse. It was reverent, compelling. And, for a change, it did not sound like a sacred work by Verdi in which he brought his religious characters too close to the operatic stage.

Singing in Latin, the men's voices brought a richly modulated quality to the opening sequence. Sudden transition to the hugeness of the 'Sanctus" was overwhelming.

Progress was smooth in alternating men's and women's voices of the double chorus. Character of the text and music was vividly upheld from the full-voiced "In te speravi" to the deveoutly powerful "Dignare, Domine."

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 22 1966

Season Closes At Tanglewood On Exalted Note

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — There were 14,178 listeners at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon to help raise a great shout of approval when the final chords of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 came to an end.

31st Summer

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 31st summer at Tanglewood (and its 85th year of life) also came to an end.

The performance of the famous choral symphony earned its ovation. The symphony is a great one and it was given first-class treatment.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, gave it a touch of Toscaninni. There was an aura of electric urgency about it that was reminiscent of that conductor's driving force.

Inner Melodies

And there was a glowing transparency that let the inner melodies be illuminated beautifully. The little woodwind ensembles that appear during the first and second movements, for instance, were clearly articulate.

We don't recall having heard the rhythmic second moveemnt played with more hypnotic momentum nor the third with more flowing, leisurely grace.

Beethoven must have known that he had to come up with a dramatic fourth movement to avoid an anticlimax.

Thundering Drums

Sunday it began with thundering drums and the first voice, Thomas Paul's bass, boomed out with forthright strength. It was soli din the lowest register, too, a blessing when one remembers how baritones sound on this assignment.

Richard Cassilly, tenor, sang his solo with a hint of wobble and a ringing, heroic power that was a match for Paul's strength.

The two ladies, Phyllis Curtin, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, were not allowed by the score to display their voices in solos, but they easily matched the men's voices in vigor and style during the quartets.

Bright Soprano

Miss Curtin's bright soprano was especially evident, as were the sopranos in the 125-member chorus, during the late passages that require them to soar persistently and brilliantly high above everyone.

Earlier the chorus already had acquitted itself handsomely with a performance of the beautiful Te Deum for double chorus and orchestra from Verdi's "Quattro pezzi sacri."

It was an exalted afternoon, a noble way to end the season.

LBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, August 22, 1996

147

Tanglewood Closes With a Triuphant Ninth

By JOAN SIMMONS

The season at Tanglewood closed on a triumphant note Sunday afternoon as 14,178 people took advantage of their last opportunity to enjoy the Boston Symphony in its rural home this summer.

In keeping with the occasion the program consisted of Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. Both works could be described as triumphant.

The Festival Chorus, made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center, joined Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the performance. Opening with the a cappella male voices of the "Te Deum laudamus," the concert came to a thunderous halt with the final chords of Beethoven's "Chorus Symphony" amidst tumultuous applause.

Verdi, ever the master of composition for the voice, makes his hymn of praise a combination of solemnity and celebration. The voices of the chorus alternate in restrained prayer-like passages and full - voiced rejoicing. Written for a double chorus, the work at times seemed a bit too demanding for the Tanglewood voices in some of the middle passages but for most of the second half they performed admirably, ending in a high crescendo of hope followed by the shrill whisper of violins.

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, his masterpiece, is a traditional choice for occasions of celebration. A "final movement" symphony, as opposed to the usual method of making the first movement the most prominent, the Ninth has an intense quality of building to a climax. A very fitting way to end a season.

Leinsdorf, seeming in a particularly festive mood, conducted the orchestra and chorus with vibrance. The inordinant demands of the final movement on the vocalists were handled with apparent ease. Phylis Curtin soprano and Thomas Paul, bass along with contralto Eunice Roberts and tenor Richard Cassilly performed the solo and quartet passages with usual clarity, backed by the sureness of the chorus prepared by Iva Dee Haitt.

The concluding weekend opened Friday evening with the Prelude concert devoted to the piano transcriptions of Liszt performed by Jorge Bolet. Friday evening's concert included Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 and Liszt's Piano Concerto in E flat major, No. 1 with Jeanne-Marie Darre soloist. Saturday the orchestra played Brahms Symphony No. 4 and Liszt's Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2 with Jorge Bolet as soloist.

In all, 32,602 people attended the concluding concerts of the Tanglewood season.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 22 1966

Music Review

Mixed Moments as Tanglewood Adjourns – Like Unto the Entire Summer Season

Boston Symphony Orchestra in its final weekend of concerts at Tanglewood. Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

Friday

The final weekend of concerts by the orchestra at Tanglewood was much like unto the entire summer season. Azure sky, scented zephyrs, woodland trysts, flowered meadows, warm charity, fine romance and good grief.

However, with all this accent on the high color and filmy trappings of sister nature, more than the presence of propriety is required to maintain her presentable. Should one doubt the ability of Boston's fastidious orchestra under its equally fastidious conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, to be capable of managing proper demeanor in so compromising an environment, he is all wet.

There was a time, perhaps, but indulgence has been replaced with a detached air that flirts with knowing concern.

Thus it was not at Friday's Prelude that the B.S.O. or the masterful playing of pianist, Jorge Bolet, created over-hoydenish paths with the lieder of Schubert or Schumann.

It was rather the gross persistence of Franz Liszt's technical genius carrying some appropriate and more inappropriate art towards an occasional artful, but more frequently artless end. Bach perhaps, Verdi likely, Wagner indeed, but such lieder as "Hark, Hark, the Lark", "Der Lindenbaum" and "Wohin" — no. These are indeed pitiful match for the exploitive fingers of piano virtuosi Liszt.

It wasn't until late Friday night that anything like the true Franz Liszt was heard. Certainly there had been a finger fracturing performance of his "Todtentanz". But this too has the character of transcription on that most frequently quoted theme in music literature, "Dies Irae".

It was the E-flat Piano Concerto that displayed the extent of his ability. There is still insignificant bombast, more pomp than circumstance, however, taken as architectural sonority with sensations as a chaser, one may become a trifle intoxicated. The vulgarity is at least momentarily masked by the musical violence.

The finest surprise of the evening was provided by the fact that both these pieces were tackled by a woman. The works demand the heroic, muscular, unhesitating decision of at least two extraordinary pianists. Mme Jeanne-Marie Darre is not two pianists, but neither is she an ordinary woman. She has at least proven that the hiring of men only for Liszt concerti is definitely a breach of the laws of fair hiring practices.

By LOUIS S. CUCCINELLO

Saturday

Perhaps the strain of the summer season had begun to take its toll Saturday night, for while the concert was generally satisfying the orchestra was not up to the standard of previous weeks. The lack of precision at the entrances were far too many and at times the cohesion within the orchestra left something to be desired.

The opening half of the Saturday night concert featured Brahms' "Symphony No. 4 in E minor." This symphony is more economically written than the other three. In the third movement marked Allegro giocoso Brahms used a sonata-form instead of the expected scherzo. Some feel the symphony should end at this point but Brahms saw fit to complete the work with a movement constructed in the form and tempo of the Chaconne

Following the intermission two works by Liszt were performed — "Fantasia on Themes from Beethoven's 'The Ruins of Athens,' " for Piano and Orchestra and "Piano Concerto in A Major, No. 2." with Jorge Bolet as soloist.

Mr. Bolet plays with a strong touch indicative of his massive frame. He has an energetic approach to the music but at times his trills and octave passages seem somewhat labored.

* * *

Sunday

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra and company had any worries about attendance Sunday's audience obviated any such concern. The largest audience this reviewer has seen at Tanglewood this year and perhaps the most enthusiastic swarmed over the grounds earlier than usual for this final day of the 1966 season. Nor were they disappointed, for long after the first vehicles left the parking area the chanting and applause could still be heard coming from the Shed.

The orchestra made amends for any inaccuracies of the previous night and returned to the precise and sensitive instrument exhibited all summer.

The final program was Verdi's "Te Deum for Double Chorus and Orchestra" and Beethoven's Ninth. Special mention should be made of Iva Dee Hiatt who prepared Festival Chorus for Sunday. This chorus of youngsters is as fine as any comparable group anywhere. With the exception of a few isolated "S" sounds the diction was most commendable. Phrasing an intonation were all executed and the unified dynamic shadings was evidence of much preparation

The soloists who contributed to this successful afternoon were Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Richard Cassilly, tenor and Thomas Paul, bass. Of the four Mr. Cassilly was the only stranger to the followers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His career has been largely in opera — primarily with the New York City Opera.

148

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

AUG 22 1966

The ARTS

Tanglewood Breaks Box-Office Record

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

LENOX—The 85th season of the Boston Symphony began last September in Symphony Hall and ended Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood with performances of Beethoven's Ninth. The Berkshire Festival part of the orchestra's operation showed its usual increase in box office receipts—236,196 persons paying $625,944.50. The 1965 totals were 242,005 and $605,718.

Records are a Tanglewood constant. The grand-daddy of American festivals was aided by eight week-ends of clear skies, itself a record unmatched in Tanglewood's 29 years. Despite the prolonged drought, the great lawns are as green and lush as ever, and in the wildlife department the visitations of birdsong, pleasant if distracting, have been replaced by a stroll of skunks in the ambulatory of the music shed.

Music festivals, by nature conservative, are carried in programming by the war horses and guided in ticket buying by the popular soloist or conductor. Erich Leinsdorf, no longer the Boston Symphony's "new man," drew, Detroit's Ehrling and Minneapolis' Skrowaczewski did not.

Among the soloists only Van Cliburn is sure box office (Stern and Serkin were missing this summer). Opera goes, a staged, concert version of Mozart's "The Magic Flute" brought over 10,000 — 4000 of these sprawled on the lawns. For the annual pops concert there was saxophonist Stan Getz and Arthur Fiedler, for the Berkshire Music Center gala cannon in the 1812 Overture and Teddy Kennendy reciting Copland's "Lincoln Portrait."

The 1966 festival had a theme, The Romantic Concerto. What this turned out to have meant, only music center students, orchestra wives, the local press know, for Tanglewood is a single ticket, or possibly a weekend ticket, market. The finale of the season belonged to the Liszt piano concertos. And as has become customary now on Friday evenings, the 7 p.m. weekend prelude is given over to seldom-played music of the featured composer. This Friday's prelude had Jorge Bolet playing nine of Liszt's piano transcriptions, of Schubert lied and Wagner and Verdi arias.

Friday's soloist was Jeanne-Marie Darre and her Liszt concerto was No. 1 in E. Flat Major. On Saturday Bolet did No. 2 in A Major. Each pianist also did a complementary work for piano and orchestra. So the grand rhetoric of the E. Flat was preceded by "Dance of Death," Liszt's grandiose paraphrase on a gruesome 14th century fresco, "Triumph of Death." And the gentle, lyric A. Major was introduced by Litzt's adroit, amusing Fantasia on Themes from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens."

Mme. Darre's work was, I thought, not nearly as illuminating of either Liszt or of pianism. Both the "Todtentanz" and the E-Flat passed as keyboard crushers. And the Baldwin Piano Company's new concert grand favors the booming bass register. This sonority was appropriate to the "Dies Irae" theme of "Todtentanz" but proved unwieldy, or untamed by Mme. Darre, in the Concerto. Bolet, on the other hand, had an easier task, in repertory, at least. And he succeeded in the extraordinary aplomb of the music.

Sunday's concert was made up of two works. The Ninth closed the season, and Verdis "Te Deum," which opened the program, can in retrospect be regarded as a hymn of praise by the box office. Just over 14,000 attended, or what is known by the natives as "having a few people down at Tanglewood." The performances, unhappily were the work of tired men. Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted, delivered a static Verdi and an immobile Beethoven. Berkshire music Center students made up by the chorus for both works. Solists in the Ninth were Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Richard Cassilly, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass.

Tanglewood over, the orchestra goes now on vacation. The 86th season begins Sept. 23-24, with Mahler's Symphony No. 3.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 22 1966

Music Review

Another Tanglewood Finale

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

AN AUDIENCE of 14,178 started to cheer before the last note of the Beethoven's ninth symphony had ceased to sound at the final concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. The thrilling performance which Erich Leinsdorf had conducted at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a glorious finish to the season.

Leinsdorf had started his program with a very impressive "Te Deum" from "Quattro Pezzi Sacri" of Verdi. The festival chorus, trained by Iva Dee Hiatt, made an ominous entrance unaccompanied, and when the orchestra joined them soon after, the tonal effect was tremendous. A short opportunity for soprano solo was notably done by Jo-Anne Lanier.

* * *

THE BEETHOVEN choral symphony, in relation to his other symphonies, stands as a cathedral to its parish churches. It has the grandeur of great simplicity in the major themes of all four movements. It is the only one of his symphonies which enlists voices. It calls for four soloists and a choir that yesterday did sing their hearts out and heads off.

The symphony is in D minor but, as the voices become involved, the mode turns to a reverent jubilation expressed in the major key on the same tone. Beethoven could not have known this would be the last of his symphonies, but its construction seems to have been conceived as though it were knowingly to be the keystone of his arch. None other of his works yields to inspection and analysis so clearly. After the eloquent cello recitative in the final movement, the themes of the first three movements are reviewed before the last great principal theme is played.

* * *

BEETHOVEN wrote as though he sensed he were writing for eternity, and Leinsdorf played him as though he, too, so understood him. This might have been the reason for taking the scherzo at such a moderate and comfortable tempo, maintaining the same speed in the presto. In the big last movement, the conductor's deliberate poise purloined a little of the recitative character from the cellos. Later, when it became the moment for baritone Thomas Paul to sing the same declaration from the Schiller "Ode to Joy," it resumed its intended inflections.

The soloists were highly effective. Soprano Phyllis Curtin and contralto Eunice Alberts sang only in quartet but tenor Richard Cassilly had a short individual assignment which was on the same high plane established at the outset. The choral movement snowballs in dramatic tension as all the elements of the score focus on a climatic goal. Leinsdorf played it as a surveyor or an architect might have built.

* * *

ON THE PRECEDING evening, an audience of 9178 came to hear the orchestra play the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and the Brahms fourth symphony, and to hear Jorge Bolet as piano soloist in Liszt's Fantasia on themes from Beethoven "The Ruins of Athens" and the same composer's A Major concerto. Bolet's hands literally gobbled up any and every fistful of notes. He has uncanny technical competence and wields it most often in the service of the music although this Liszt is like an upside-down iceberg, with eight-ninths, if that is the right percentage, of its substance superficial.

The Tristan prelude gave the orchestra one of its best chances to show its caliber. The tone in the cellos in the initial phrase grew tangibly before our ears. Leinsdorf himself seemed a bit mesmerized by it and took an extra long pause before resuming his progress. And in the Brahms E Minor, his deliberateness, which vexed me otherwheres, could not have pleased me more.

* * *

ATTENDANCE figures for this season, we would guess, will prove gratifying to the Tanglewood box-office, but the audience has reason for equal satisfaction. The programs have not been particularly venturesome, but the performances have been, for the most part, superlative. The invitation extended to the prize winners of the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow was an inspiration, and their subsequent acceptance and appearance was of the greatest interest. At any other level than that on which the festival operates, the qualification "routine" might be construed as damning; however, when "routine" is "superlative," it has another significance. We who are so zealous for "our" festival do not foresee that it will become repetitive.

In addition to the two Liszt works Saturday evening, the program included Wagner's Prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" and the Brahms Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98. Leinsdorf's control and the orchestra's precision perhaps hindered the romantic sweep of this symphony, the most favored of the Brahms symphonies but despite the tight performance, both orchestra and conductor performed magnificently. A special recognition must go to the Tympanist, Charles Smith, whose performance and amazing sense of rhythm and total control of the beat has been consistently excellent and exciting throughout the entire season, though most profoundly so this weekend in the Brahms.

Mr. Leinsdorf's affinity for and fondness of Wagner has been much in evidence, both this season and last. His love of this German master's compositions even interceeded last year, when the traditional concluding performance of Beethoven's Ninth was replaced by the complete performance of Wagner's "Lohengrin" in concert form, spread over the weekend, an act for each concert. This year, Beethoven's Ninth was back in all its resounding splendor. The Boston Symphony orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center School's Chorus as well as the soloists, Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, Richard Cassily, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass, and the conductor gave this final work the magnificent treatment it deserved. This truly is Beethoven's masterpiece. . .a masterpiece of construction as well as sheer musical beauty and the fourth and final movement unfolds to the verses of Schiller's "Ode to Joy," ending on a poignant, profound and hopeful note. A fitting farewell to a glorious season at Tanglewood and the applause of the large audience was thunderous, calling back Director Leinsdorf and the soloists again and again.

This summer's festival at Tanglewood included 24 concerts in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, seven programs of chamber music, eight open rehearsals, two benefit concerts and five programs in the Festival of Contemporary American Music, plus 25 performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center. This year's festival had a total attendance of 182,838 to the 24 regular Boston Symphony programs. 7,696 attended the seven Chamber Music programs. A total of 24,369 attended the eight open rehearsals on Saturday mornings for the benefit of the Orchestra's pension fund The Gala Evening given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center attracted 7,035 and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood had an attendance of 14,258. Grand total attendance this year for all performances was 236,196 and ticket sales amounted to $625,944.50. In contrast, in 1936 the Boston Symphony Orchestra first performed in the Berkshires, giving three concerts in a large tent before audiences totaling 15,000.

The 1967 Tanglewood season will begin on June 30 and continue until Augl 20. It can be expected and sincerely hoped that the Boston Symphony, with Erich Leinsdorf at its head, will continue to make music together in the beautiful Berkshires with the superb grace and flawless musicianship that have become their symbol, for many years to come.

S.M.

WATERBURY CONN.
MERIDEN

14,178 Hear Finale At Tanglewood

The final weekend of Tanglewood concluded with the grand and traditional performance of Beethoven's glorious Ninth Symphony on Sunday afternoon. The audience of 14,178 was also treated to the premiere Tanglewood performance of the seldom-heard Verdi "Te Deum," for Double Chorus and Orchestra.

Friday and Saturday evenings' programs were devoted primarily, in the style of the Romantic Concerto, to concerto-like works for the keyboard of Franz Liszt, perhaps the most romantic of composers of that era. Both evenings featured pianists, Friday, the alert and technically proficient Jeanne-Marie Darre, performed Liszt's "Todtentanz" Paraphrase on the "Dies Irae," and his Piano Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1. Saturday, Cuban-born Jorge Bolet, played "Liszt's Fantasia on Themes" from Beethoven's "The Ruins of Athens," and his "Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2." Bolet also performed nine of Liszt's "Paino Transcriptions" as well as two encores on Friday evening at the 7 o'clock Prelude Concert.

Friday night's concert began with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 in E-flat, "Romantic." This is a long syphony, in the style of Bruckner, lasting for a good 75 minutes. It is not, however, his longest.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 22 1966

Tanglewood 1966:

'Weekend Prelude' Among Highlights

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — Attendance totals at Tanglewood — which ended its season Sunday — have been a matter of interest (especially to Berkshire shopkeepers) for 31 summers, but this summer the "weekend prelude" gave them stiff conversational competition.

The possibility that the all-time seasonal attendance record might be broken (it wasn't) often took second place in speculation about the prelude experiment.

Receipts Set Record

Nobody talked about the possibility that the record for receipts from ticket sales might be broken (it was).

Last year the Boston Symphony Orchestra administrative staff agreed that it might be helpful if weekend travelers to Tanglewood did not have to rush to be on time for the Friday night starting time at 8. It was decided to start this year at 9.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, suggested that a 45 or 50-minute concert of small-scale music be offered at 7 for nearby residents. It would, they agreed, also provide opportunity to present seldom-heard music composed by the principal composer appearing on the regular weekend programs.

Certain Amount of Tension

There was no precedent for the early (prelude) programs at Tanglewood and there was a certain amount of tension concerning their success.

On the first couple of Fridays

See TANGLEWOOD Page Two

son progressed, experienced lawn-watchers were also talking about how there had been no weekend rains to reduce attendance at the big concerts. Optimists were predicting another record-breaking year.

Total Attendance 236,196

As it turned out the attendance was 236,196 and the ticket sales $625,944.50.

The figures set a record for ticket sales and fall into second place for attendance.

Still in first place for attendance is 1965 with 242,005. There were 233,845 in 1963 and 224,320 in 1964.

Difficult to Explain

The fall-off this year is difficult to explain, although it can be partially identified. The 24 major weekend concerts in the shed were up from 178,987 to 182,838, but the seven Tuesday-night chamber-music programs, the eight open rehearsals, the Pops concert and the Gala evening all were down a few hundred so the net loss was 5909.

There was speculation, also, that the newly established summer season of the Philadelphia Orchestra in its new amphitheater at Saratoga Springs would encroach on Tanglewood's audiences.

Only nine of Saratoga's concerts coincide with weekend concerts at Tanglewood, but inasmuch as attendance at the big weekend concerts at Tanglewood increased by 3851 while the decrease in the other events dropped by 9760. it would seem that no loss can be attributed to Saratoga this year.

Esthetic Success

But aside from the head count, the season was considered an esthetic success by members of the orchestra staff.

Special events included a concert version Aug. 6 of Mozart's "Magic Flute," performances on three occasions by some of the winners in the Tchaikovsky competitions this year in Moscow, and the live color telecast of the Aug. 14 program.

"The Magic Flute" program was recorded on tape for telecast from Boston and the Bell Telephone Hour filmed Tanglewood activities during five weeks for telecast this fall.

Six Members Retire

Six members of the orchestra retired with the Sunday program: Richard Burgin, associate conductor and former concertmaster; Henri Girard, bass; Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet; Osbourne McConathy, horn; Georges Moleux, principal bass; K Vinal Smith,, tuba.

It was the orchestra's 85th year, its 31st summer at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,771
AUG 22 1966

14,000 Attend Final Tanglewood Performance

The mighty music of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony concluded the Berkshire Festival's 31st season at Tanglewood in Lenox, with more than 14,000 present for the last Boston Symphony orchestra concert on Sunday afternoon. Director Erich Leinsworf led the orchestra and the Berkshire Festival chorus of 125 voices, plus four soloists, Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassily, and Thomas Paul.

Tis symphony was a favorite of the last Serge Koussevitzky for presentation toward the end of the Berkshire Festival, where the great music shed and open spaces provide room for its powerful sweep. It was received with cheers on Sunday afternoon.

This has been an especially successful Berkshire Festival, blessed wtih rain-free weekends and marked by the appearance of unusually fine soloists, among them winners of the Moscow competition. Mr. Leinsdorf's choice of romantic concertos to highlight each program turned out to be a popular one. The attention paid to a variety of instrumental soloists in no way dimmed the brilliance of the orchestra. There were also this year an interesting variety of vocal music, both choral and solo.

The innovation of the Friday "weekend prelude" brought interesting music and talented performers to the attention of concert-goers who could manage to arrive early on that night. There were usually somewhat more than 2000 listeners on hand for this extra offering, many of them picnicking on the lawns, and they heard some musical treats.

The idea was to delay the opening of the main Friday night concert for the benefit of late-arriving weekenders. The prelude was a compensation for those in the area who could come earlier, and it worked out well in just that way.

The Festival broke all records in ticket sales this year, although attendance was just under last year's record. This seeming disparity was due to the fact that fewer people attended the Berkshire Center student concerts and the mid-week chamber music concerts although attendance was up for the high-price weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony. Competition from the new music festival at Saratoga, N.Y., is discounted. Tanglewood is now so easy to reach for Massachusetts and Connecticut music lovers that it does not have to depend on New York, though obviously it has a large New York clientele. There is room for both programs.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,168
AUG 22 1966

FINAL CONCERT — The last concert of the 29th Berkshire Festival Season at Tanglewood ended on a dramatic note Sunday afternoon when Erich Leinsdorf brought his baton down on the final notes of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" and Schiller's "Ode to Joy" and the crowd of 14,180 music lovers burst forth in waves of unending applause.

(Beaumont)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,771
AUG 22 1966

14,000 Attend Final Tanglewood Performance

The mighty music of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony concluded the Berkshire Festival's 31st season at Tanglewood in Lenox, with more than 14,000 present for the last Boston Symphony orchestra concert on Sunday afternoon. Director Erich Leinsworf led the orchestra and the Berkshire Festival chorus of 125 voices, plus four soloists, Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassily, and Thomas Paul.

Tis symphony was a favorite of the last Serge Koussevitzky for presentation toward the end of the Berkshire Festival, where the great music shed and open spaces provide room for its powerful sweep. It was received with cheers on Sunday afternoon.

This has been an especially successful Berkshire Festival, blessed wtih rain-free weekends and marked by the appearance of unusually fine soloists, among them winners of the Moscow competition. Mr. Leinsdorf's choice of romantic concertos to highlight each program turned out to be a popular one. The attention paid to a variety of instrumental soloists in no way dimmed the brilliance of the orchestra. There were also this year an interesting variety of vocal music, both choral and solo.

The innovation of the Friday "weekend prelude" brought interesting music and talented performers to the attention of concert-goers who could manage to arrive early on that night. There were usually somewhat more than 2000 listeners on hand for this extra offering, many of them picnicking on the lawns, and they heard some musical treats.

The idea was to delay the opening of the main Friday night concert for the benefit of late-arriving weekenders. The prelude was a compensation for those in the area who could come earlier, and it worked out well in just that way.

The Festival broke all records in ticket sales this year, although attendance was just under last year's record. This seeming disparity was due to the fact that fewer people attended the Berkshire Center student concerts and the mid-week chamber music concerts although attendance was up for the high-price weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony. Competition from the new music festival at Saratoga, N.Y., is discounted. Tanglewood is now so easy to reach for Massachusetts and Connecticut music lovers that it does not have to depend on New York, though obviously it has a large New York clientele. There is room for both programs.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,168
AUG 22 1966

FINAL CONCERT — The last concert of the 29th Berkshire Festival Season at Tanglewood ended on a dramatic note Sunday afternoon when Erich Leinsdorf brought his baton down on the final notes of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" and Schiller's "Ode to Joy" and the crowd of 14,180 music lovers burst forth in waves of unending applause. (Beaumont)

Continued From Page 1

2300 or 2400 listeners showed up at 7, and Leinsdorf said he was "pleased and delighted with the acceptance by the audience of this idea."

Near the end of the season, after Harry Stedman, head usher, estimated that the average prelude attendance was about 2000, Leinsdorf found no reason to change his mind.

Many Surprised

Sandford Sistare, chief of the press office, said many on the orchestra staff have been surprised that the size of the prelude audiences reached 2000 and, he said, there has been no indication that plans for the 1967 season won't include more preludes.

"There has been an increase in the number of picnickers on Fridays," he said, "and the orchestra likes that."

In the meantime, as the season progressed, experienced lawn-watchers were also talking about how there had been no weekend rains to reduce attendance at the big concerts. Optimists were predicting another record-breaking year.

Total Attendance 236,196

As it turned out the attendance was 236,196 and the ticket sales $625,944.50.

The figures set a record for ticket sales and fall into second place for attendance.

Still in first place for attendance is 1965 with 242,005. There were 233,845 in 1963 and 224,320 in 1964.

Difficult to Explain

The fall-off this year is difficult to explain, although it can be partially identified. The 24 major weekend concerts in the shed were up from 178,987 to 182,838, but the seven Tuesday-night chamber-music programs, the eight open rehearsals, the Pops concert and the Gala evening all were down a few hundred so the net loss was 5909.

There was speculation, also, that the newly established summer season of the Philadelphia Orchestra in its new amphitheater at Saratoga Springs would encroach on Tanglewood's audiences.

Only nine of Saratoga's concerts coincide with weekend concerts at Tanglewood, but inasmuch as attendance at the big weekend concerts at Tanglewood increased by 3851 while the decrease in the other events dropped by 9760. it would seem that no loss can be attributed to Saratoga this year.

Esthetic Success

But aside from the head count, the season was considered an esthetic success by members of the orchestra staff.

Special events included a concert version Aug. 6 of Mozart's "Magic Flute," performances on three occasions by some of the winners in the Tchaikovsky competitions this year in Moscow, and the live color telecast of the Aug. 14 program.

"The Magic Flute" program was recorded on tape for telecast from Boston and the Bell Telephone Hour filmed Tanglewood activities during five weeks for telecast this fall.

Six Members Retire

Six members of the orchestra retired with the Sunday program: Richard Burgin, associate conductor and former concertmaster; Henri Girard, bass; Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet; Osbourne McConathy, horn; Georges Moleux, principal bass; K Vinal Smith,, tuba.

It was the orchestra's 85th year, its 31st summer at Tanglewood.

Show Support

Borucki said there was movement within the ranks of

Philippine Campaigner

White was a member of a cavalary regiment that trained across the United States from Ethan Allen, Vt., to Seattle, Wash., back in 1899 and from there boarded a ship to serve in the Philippine campaign.

"I can't go along with it," White said of the anti-war movement. "There are a lot of poor people over here and no one knows the situation. Yes, we are doing the right thing."

Other support came from Harold Patterson of 143 West St., Easthampton, past-commander of the World War I Barracks of Easthampton and Edward Borucki of Southampton, past-commander of the Pearl Harbor Veterans.

Grim Determination

A few moments before, the veterans—set off by a variety of organizational caps — had worked their way up the hillside through the trees separating the parking lot and the midway with the same grim determination that filled them years earlier on the hills of Cuba, Europe and the Pacific—when it was their turn to answer the call of their nation.

But Sunday they came, not because their nation summoned them again, but because of a number of the young men who [illegible] sets veterans' tribute to fighting men in Viet Nam.

The laughing, shouting vo[illegible] of the amusement seekers, [illegible] ging with honking, blaring tu[illegible] of the rides filtered in through [illegible] the open doors of the ballroo[illegible] to clash with the voices of the veterans as they sang "Our Na[illegible] tional Anthem," led by the First Naval District Band of Boston.

Continued From Page 1

2300 or 2400 listeners showed up at 7, and Leinsdorf said he was "pleased and delighted with the acceptance by the audience of this idea."

Near the end of the season, after Harry Stedman, head usher, estimated that the average prelude attendance was about 2000, Leinsdorf found no reason to change his mind.

Many Surprised

Sandford Sistare, chief of the press office, said many on the orchestra staff have been surprised that the size of the prelude audiences reached 2000 and, he said, there has been no indication that plans for the 1967 season won't include more preludes.

"There has been an increase in the number of picnickers on Fridays," he said, "and the orchestra likes that."

In the meantime, as the season progressed, experienced lawn-watchers were also talking about how there had been no weekend rains to reduce attendance at the big concerts. Optimists were predicting another record-breaking year.

Total Attendance 236,196

As it turned out the attendance was 236,196 and the ticket sales $625,944.50.

The figures set a record for ticket sales and fall into second place for attendance.

Still in first place for attendance is 1965 with 242,005. There were 233,845 in 1963 and 224,320 in 1964.

Difficult to Explain

The fall-off this year is difficult to explain, although it can be partially identified. The 24 major weekend concerts in the shed were up from 178,987 to 182,838, but the seven Tuesday-night chamber-music programs, the eight open rehearsals, the Pops concert and the Gala evening all were down a few hundred so the net loss was 5909.

There was speculation, also, that the newly established summer season of the Philadelphia Orchestra in its new amphitheater at Saratoga Springs would encroach on Tanglewood's audiences.

Only nine of Saratoga's concerts coincide with weekend concerts at Tanglewood, but inasmuch as attendance at the big weekend concerts at Tanglewood increased by 3851 while the decrease in the other events dropped by 9760. it would seem that no loss can be attributed to Saratoga this year.

Esthetic Success

But aside from the head count, the season was considered an esthetic success by members of the orchestra staff.

Special events included a concert version Aug. 6 of Mozart's "Magic Flute," performances on three occasions by some of the winners in the Tchaikovsky competitions this year in Moscow, and the live color telecast of the Aug. 14 program.

"The Magic Flute" program was recorded on tape for telecast from Boston and the Bell Telephone Hour filmed Tanglewood activities during five weeks for telecast this fall.

Six Members Retire

Six members of the orchestra retired with the Sunday program: Richard Burgin, associate conductor and former concertmaster; Henri Girard, bass; Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet; Osbourne McConathy, horn; Georges Moleux, principal bass; K Vinal Smith,, tuba.

It was the orchestra's 85th year, its 31st summer at Tanglewood.

150

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357

AUG 22 1966

At Tanglewood

Final Concert Heard by 14,000

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — For the third time this summer, attendance at Tanglewood exceeded 14,000, the drawing card being yesterday's final concert. Other occasions have been the Saturday Cliburn played, and the Wednesday Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" put on their annual program to benefit the Pension Fund.

Gazette Review

The big item yesterday was Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with the Festival Chorus of 120 voices prepared by Iva Dee Hiatt, and the full Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, assisted by splendid soloists, Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul. Before intermission, the double chorus and orchestra gave the first Tanglewood performance of Verdi's "Te Deum." The afternoon was one continuous thrill, in terms of excellent music as well as excitement.

Boxoffice Record

The eight weeks just concluded set a new boxoffice record of $626,000, and narrowly failed to equal the record total attendance of [illegible]. This season total attendance was 236,136. Open rehearsals and Tuesday chamber music programs did not draw as well, but the 24 major concerts improved about two per cent over last year.

Yesterday's concert concluded the 8th season of the orchestra, during which 211 orchestral performances have been given.

[illegible] chorus was beautifully hushed yet clear in the opening lines of the "Te Deum," and [illegible] to the majestic climaxes [illegible] by the operatically inclined Verdi with tremendous [illegible]. The spiritual message of [illegible] seemed foremost in [illegible] mind, and he did [illegible] with his choral and orchestral forces. Near the end of [illegible] chorus member Jo[illegible]nier contributed an effective solo soprano phrase.

[illegible] Beethoven Ninth had a [illegible] part in the early history of the orchestra, and was [illegible] favorite for years. Leinsdorf, who gave the symphony seven times at the beginning of this season, was admirable [illegible] steps of the unique work [illegible] prefatory and explanatory moments with great skill, and dwelt with just enough [illegible] on the serenities and [illegible] accord of the third movement. The "Ode to Joy" theme in the final movement became, before the glowing entrance of bass Paul, like a grand [illegible] march.

Cassilly was impressive in his tenor solo, and Miss Curtin and Miss Alberts wove their parts of the quartet passages with richness. The alert chorus was a continual delight. At times it was only part of a mighty whole, then again it sang exposed passages beautifully and softly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 29 1966

[illegible] One of the spicy reports in belatedly, on the [illegible] incident at the [illegible] Tanglewood concert. An [illegible] dressed middle-aged lady was next to her in a row with many empty seats. Since it was a sell-out, the seat-owners just hadn't bothered to come. The overdressed one said what a pity, since lots of music-lovers were unable to get in. "I gave one of my tickets away," said she severely, "and the party hasn't even used it." She proceeded to primp and powder through the first number, left during the brief intermission, and never returned.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Wednesday, August 24, 1966

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,587

AUG 25 1966

Last Tanglewood Reviews

TANGLEWOOD
Friday — By A. C. S.

Whoever was responsible for inaugurating the series of "Weekend Preludes" that has been a Friday evening feature at Tanglewood this year deserves a vote of thanks. The performers have varied from soloists to groups; from purely instrumental to purely vocal; the composers ranged from Bach to Rachmaninoff. Furthermore, they have offered excellent performances of works that are too seldom heard. Let us hope that the idea will be continued next season.

Franz Liszt was the featured composer Friday night. The "Weekend Prelude" presented nine of his piano transcriptions played with great elan by Jorge Bolet. We preferred Schubert's Der Lindenbaum, Chopin's Maedschens Wunsch, and the "Spinning Song" from the Flying Dutchman by Wagner. Mr. Bolet gave two encores, one of which was the famous Campanella etude.

The second concert had two Liszt works for piano and orchestra: Todtentanz and the Concerto No. 1 in E-flat major with Jeanne-Marie Darré as soloist. Mme. Darré belies both age and sex in her approach to the piano. Her tone is big and her fingers steely. The music demands bravura playing, and it was. From the very first notes of the powerful and macabre variations on the "Dies Irae" of the Todtentanz she was in supreme command. The excitement generated here continued in the concerto. Needless to say, the sweep and imagination of the solo playing was fully matched by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

The program began with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, in E-flat. This so-called "Romantic" Symphony is ideal for Tanglewood. It is filled with outdoor sounds which [illegible] the setting of the Berkshire Festival, [illegible] natural surroundings. The horns, calls of the first movement, the hunting scene of the Scherzo, and other allusions [illegible] throughout the work were made vivid for the listener. Beautiful playing [illegible] chestra and a most [illegible] reading by the conductor made this one of the more gratifying concerts of the season.

TANGLEWOOD
Sunday—By J. B.

Really, one begins to despair, of hearing music at Tanglewood. What with the sultry weather, and the crowds of music students exchanging knowing looks, smiles, and binoculars, and the babes in arms (one presumes) crying outside on the greensward, it was very difficult to concentrate on the music being performed Sunday afternoon. But perhaps one should blame the occasion rather than despair of the Festival itself: it was after all the final concert of the summer, and once again it featured the inevitable Beethoven Ninth, which seems to attract music-lovers and curiosity-seekers the way honey attracts bears.

Perhaps I am being hypercritical, but it seemed to me that, on the whole, the orchestra sounded tired, which would hardly be surprising after the eight strenuous weeks they have just completed. With the exception of the slow movement, which was beautifully played, none of the music seemed to come through as it should. The audience clearly did not share this opinion: there were the customary roars of applause at the end of the concert.

The program opened with the Verdi Te Deum, performed for the first time at Tanglewood. One wonders why. Although it has little of the drama and fire of, say, Bruckner's setting of this great medieval Latin Hymn, it contains some splendid writing for chorus, and the Tanglewood Chorus, prepared by Iva Dee Hyatt, did itself proud, as indeed it did in the Beethoven that followed.

It is hard to think of anything new to [illegible] about the Beethoven Ninth. I suspect the reason it enjoys the high reputation it does is that it is a musician's symphony: it is better on paper than in performance. Like many other artists, Beethoven appears not to have had very good taste when it came to an art other than his own. The portions of Schiller's "Ode to Joy" that he chose to [illegible] are quite simply bad poetry. [illegible] to know [illegible] treated to the "Seid umschlungen, Millionen" passage.

Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 7,914.

SEP 2 1966

'66 Berkshire Festival Beethoven Ends Season

With a performance of Beethoven's 9th the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought to a close its 85th season and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Sunday afternoon's August 21 concert was the 211th performance by the orchestra since the season began on October 1, 1965 in Symphony Hall, Boston.

This summer's festival at Tanglewood included 24 concerts in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, seven programs of chamber music, eight open rehearsals, two benefit concerts, and five programs in the Festival of Contemporary American Music plus 25 performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center.

On August 6 Erich Leinsdorf conducted a concert version of Mozart's "The Magic Flute," and on three occasions winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky International Music Competition appeared as soloists.

Two complete concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were televised this summer. WGBH-TV, video taped Mozart's "The Magic Flute." The National Broadcasting Company televised for the first time a complete orchestra concert live and in color from Tanglewood on August 14.

In 1936 when the Boston Symphony Orchestra first performed in the Berkshires, it gave three concerts in a large tent before audiences totaling 15,000. The 1966 festival grand total is 236,196. The 1967 season will begin on June 30.

The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 211,932 SUN. 310,264

AUG 28 1966

Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will enter its 8th and final week tomorrow with a program of contemporary American music.

AROUND THE TOWN
by Edgar S. Van Olinda

A Spiritual Smorgasbord

Competition may be the life of trade, but it also functions in the cultural arts. Albany has been suspended during July and August between the horns of a musical dilemma with Tanglewood to the east and the Saratoga Performing Arts Center to the north. Both have been eminently successful and now the two major American orchestras fold their tents like the Arabs, and silently steal away to their respective headquarters in the city of the bean and the cod, and the city of Brotherly Love.

Thirty-two summers ago, I attended the premier of the Berkshire Music Festival in the horse ring of the Hanna Farm, when Henry Hadley conducted two seasons of orchestral music provided by some 75 members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. When Mr. Hadley passed away, the late Gertrude Robinson Smith, heart and soul of the project, persuaded the late Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra to take over what Mr. Hadley had inaugurated. The rest is musical history.

The closing concert of the 1966 season of superb musical events was a magnificent performance of the Beethoven 9th Symphony, with 104 instrumentalists and a chorus of some 200 young, virile vocalists [illegible] every inch of the vast stage. Erich Leinsdorf was in [illegible] throughout the afternoon and at the conclusion was given a tremendous ovation as a tribute to his conductorship of the Bostonians. It was a veritable love feast and a fitting spiritual smorgasbord to quicken the soul.

THE MORNING CALL
PATERSON, N. J.
D. 20,932

SEPT 3 1966

RCA Victor missed a bet if it didn't record the final Tanglewood concerts, August 20 and 21. Erich Leinsdorf, rapidly rising to first place among American conductors, put on virtuoso performances with the Boston Symphony that should have been preserved. His Brahms Fourth on Saturday night was better even than the old R. C. A. recording of Toscanini's and the N. B. C. Symphony and if this be heresy, do me something.

[illegible] on Sunday afternoon, he shook up the audience with a reading of Verdi's "Te Deum" for double chorus and orchestra that was a first for the Festival concerts. Just when people

TROY TIMES RECORD
Wednesday, August 24, 1966

Mrs. Isabell Murphy and Mrs. Florence McCullough of Cohoes, spent the weekend touring New England. They attended a concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

150

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357

AUG 22 1966

At Tanglewood

Final Concert Heard by 14,000

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — For the third time this summer, attendance at Tanglewood exceeded 14,000, the drawing card being yesterday's final concert. Other occasions have been the Saturday Cliburn played, and the Wednesday Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" put on their annual program to benefit the Pension Fund.

Gazette Review

The big item yesterday was Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with the Festival Chorus of 120 voices prepared by Iva Dee Hiatt, and the full Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, assisted by splendid soloists, Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul. Before intermission, the double chorus and orchestra gave the first Tanglewood performance of Verdi's "Te Deum." The afternoon was one continuous thrill, in terms of excellent music as well as excitement.

Boxoffice Record

The eight weeks just concluded set a new boxoffice record of $626,000, and narrowly failed to equal the record total attendance of 1965. This season, total attendance was 236,136. Open rehearsals and Tuesday chamber music programs did not draw as well, but the 24 major concerts improved about two per cent over last year.

Yesterday's concert concluded the 8th season of the orchestra, during which 211 orchestral performances have been given.

The chorus was beautifully hushed yet clear in the opening lines of the "Te Deum," and rose to the majestic climaxes imposed by the operatically inclined Verdi with tremendous power. The spiritual message of the work seemed foremost in Leinsdorf's mind, and he did [illegible] with his choral and orchestral forces. Near the end of the work, chorus member Jo [illegible]anier contributed an effective solo soprano phrase.

The Beethoven Ninth had a prominent part in the early history of the orchestra, and was Muncl's favorite for years. Leinsdorf, who gave the symphony seven times at the beginning of this season, was admirable at all steps of the unique work. He wove its prefatory and exploratory moments with great skill, and dwelt with just enough love on the serenities and perfect accord of the third movement. The "Ode to Joy" theme in the final movement became, before the glowing entrance of bass Paul, like a grand stately march.

Cassily was impressive in his tenor solo, and Miss Curtin and Miss Alberts wove their parts of the quartet passages with richness. The alert chorus was a continual delight. At times it was only part of a mighty whole, then again it sang exposed passages beautifully and softly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 29 1966

. . . One of our spies reports in belatedly, on a revealing incident at the final Tanglewood concert. An overdressed middle-aged lady sat next to her in a row with many empty seats. Since it was a sell-out, the seat-owners just hadn't bothered to come. The overdressed one said what a pity, since lots of music-lovers were unable to get in. "I gave one of my tickets away," said she severely, "and the party hasn't even used it." She proceeded to primp and powder through the first number, left during the brief intermission, and never returned.

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,587

AUG 25 1966

Last Tanglewood Reviews

TANGLEWOOD
Friday — By A. C. S.

Whoever was responsible for inaugurating the series of "Weekend Preludes" that has been a Friday evening feature at Tanglewood this year deserves a vote of thanks. The performers have varied from soloists to groups; from purely instrumental to purely vocal; the composers ranged from Bach to Rachmaninoff. Furthermore, they have offered excellent performances of works that are too seldom heard. Let us hope that the idea will be continued next season.

Franz Liszt was the featured composer Friday night. The "Weekend Prelude" presented nine of his piano transcriptions played with great elan by Jorge Bolet. We preferred Schubert's Der Lindenbaum, Chopin's Maedschens Wunsch, and the "Spinning Song" from the Flying Dutchman by Wagner. Mr. Bolet gave two encores, one of which was the famous Campanella etude.

The second concert had two Liszt works for piano and orchestra: Todtentanz and the Concerto No. 1, in E-flat major with Jeanne-Marie Darré as soloist. Mme. Darre belies both age and sex in her approach to the piano. Her tone is big and her fingers steely. The music demands bravura playing, and it was. From the very first notes of the powerful and macabre variations on the "Dies Irae" of the Todtentanz, she was in supreme command. The excitement generated here continued in the concerto. Needless to say, the sweep and imagination of the solo playing was fully matched by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

The program began with Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, in E-flat. This so-called "Romantic" Symphony is ideal for Tanglewood. It is filled with outdoor sounds which, in the setting of the Berkshire Festival, are enhanced by natural surroundings. The horns, calls of the first movement, the hunting scene of the Scherzo, and other allusions to all nature throughout the work were made vivid for the listener. Beautiful playing by the orchestra and a most convincing reading by the conductor made this one of the more gratifying concerts of the season.

TANGLEWOOD
Sunday—By J. B.

Really, one begins to despair, of hearing music at Tanglewood. What with the sultry weather, and the crowds of music students exchanging knowing looks, smiles, and binoculars, and the babes in arms (one presumes) crying outside on the greensward, it was very difficult to concentrate on the music being performed Sunday afternoon. But perhaps one should blame the occasion rather than despair of the Festival itself: it was after all the final concert of the summer, and once again it featured the inevitable Beethoven Ninth, which seems to attract music-lovers and curiosity-seekers the way honey attracts bears.

Perhaps I am being hypercritical, but it seemed to me that, on the whole, the orchestra sounded tired, which would hardly be surprising after the eight strenuous weeks they have just completed. With the exception of the slow movement, which was beautifully played, none of the music seemed to come through as it should. The audience clearly did not share this opinion: there were the customary roars of applause at the end of the concert.

The program opened with the Verdi Te Deum, performed for the first time at Tanglewood. One wonders why. Although it has little of the drama and fire of, say, Bruckner's setting of this great medieval Latin Hymn, it contains some splendid writing for chorus, and the Tanglewood Chorus, prepared by Iva Dee Hyatt, did itself proud, as indeed it did in the Beethoven that followed.

It is hard to think of anything new to say about the Beethoven Ninth. I suspect the reason it enjoys the high reputation it does is that it is a musician's symphony: it is better on paper than in performance. Like many other artists, Beethoven appears not to have had very good taste when it came to an art other than his own. The portions of Schiller's "Ode to Joy" that he chose to set are quite simply bad poetry. Even so, one is relieved to know that it will be at least another year before one is treated to the "Seid umschlungen, Millionen" passage.

Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 7,914.

SEP 2 1966

'66 Berkshire Festival Beethoven Ends Season

With a performance of Beethoven's 9th the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought to a close its 8th season and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Sunday afternoon's August 21 concert was the 211th performance by the orchestra since the season began on October 1, 1965 in Symphony Hall, Boston.

This summer's festival at Tanglewood included 24 concerts in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, seven programs of chamber music, eight open rehearsals, two benefit concerts, and five programs in the Festival of Contemporary American Music plus 25 performances by the members of the Berkshire Music Center.

On August 6 Erich Leinsdorf conducted a concert version of Mozart's "The Magic Flute," and on three occasions winners of the 1966 Tchaikovsky International Music Competition appeared as soloists.

Two complete concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were televised this summer. WGBH-TV, video taped Mozart's "The Magic Flute." The National Broadcasting Company televised for the first time a complete orchestra concert live and in color from Tanglewood on August 14.

In 1936 when the Boston Symphony Orchestra first performed in the Berkshires, it gave three concerts in a large tent before audiences totaling 15,000. The 1966 festival grand total is 236,196. The 1967 season will begin on June 30.

The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 211,932 SUN. 310,264

AUG 28 1966

Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will enter its 8th and final week tomorrow with a program of contemporary American music.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Wednesday, August 24, 1966

AROUND THE TOWN
by Edgar S. Van Olinda

A Spiritual Smorgasbord

Competition may be the life of trade, but it also functions in the cultural arts. Albany has been suspended during July and August between the horns of a musical dilemma with Tanglewood to the east and the Saratoga Performing Arts Center to the north. Both have been eminently successful and now the two major American orchestras fold their tents like the Arabs, and silently steal away to their respective headquarters in the city of the bean and the cod, and the city of Brotherly Love.

Thirty-two summers ago, I attended the premier of the Berkshire Music Festival in the horse ring of the Hanna Farm, when Henry Hadley conducted two seasons of orchestral music provided by some 75 members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. When Mr. Hadley passed away, the late Gertrude Robinson Smith, heart and soul of the project, persuaded the late Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra to take over what Mr. Hadley had inaugurated. The rest is musical history.

The closing concert of the 1966 season of superb musical events was a magnificent performance of the Beethoven 9th Symphony, with 104 instrumentalists and a chorus of some 200 young, virile vocalists, preempting every inch of the vast stage. Erich Leinsdorf was in rare form throughout the afternoon and at the conclusion was given a tremendous ovation as a tribute to his conductorship of the Bostonians. It was a veritable love feast and a fitting spiritual smorgasbord to quicken the soul.

THE MORNING CALL
PATERSON, N. J.
D. 20,932

SEPT 3 1966

RCA Victor missed a bet if it didn't record the final Tanglewood concerts, August 20 and 21. Erich Leinsdorf, rapidly rising to first place among American conductors, put on virtuoso performances with the Boston Symphony that should have been preserved. His Brahms Fourth on Saturday night was better even than the old R. C. A. recording of Toscanini's and the N. B. C. Symphony and if this be heresy, do me something.

Then, on Sunday afternoon, he shook up the audience with a reading of Verdi's "Te Deum" for double chorus and orchestra that was a first for the Festival concerts. Just when people

[illegible] TIMES UNION
[illegible] 1966

Mrs. Isabel Murphy and [illegible] Florence McCullough of Cor[illegible] spent the weekend touring New England. They attended a concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 22 1966

Whitestone

FINAL AUDIENCE of the season at Berkshire Festival yesterday heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra and festival chorus in Verdi's "Te Deum" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The concert marked the closing of the 30th year of the orchestra in the Berkshires.

Tanglewood, Saratoga Play Happy Tune

Sunday's presentation at Tanglewood of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony marked the end of the 85th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Final attendance figures for the Berkshire Music Festival portion of the orchestra's season indicated its ability to co-exist comfortably with its new neighbor, the Philadelphia Orchestra at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center.

A new Tanglewood box office record was set this season with receipts of $625,994.50 paid by 236,196 patrons. The comparable figures for 1965 were $605,718 paid by 242,005 persons. A weather record for the Festival's 30 years was also established, with eight weekends of clear conditions.

The largest-drawing soloist for the Tanglewood season was pianist Van Cliburn, whose performance on Saturday, July 23, drew 14,375 persons. The total for that weekend was 32,291. Van Cliburn also provided Saratoga with its best day of the season on Saturday, Aug. 6, when he attracted 11,000 out of a weekend high total there of 25,000. The Saratoga Center's capacity is 12,100, with 5,100 inside and 7,000 on the lawn. Tanglewood capacity is 6,037 in the Shed.

152

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910
SEP 11 1966

Music

Tanglewood Tops Saratoga Attendance

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Now that all returns are available, it can be definitely established that the new Saratoga Performing Arts Festival had no appreciable effect on attendance at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Saratoga's total attendance for 42 performers (including matinees and open rehearsals) by the New York City Ballet and Philadelphia Orchestra was 169,255.

At Tanglewood 236,196 persons attended 41 events, including chamber music programs, open rehearsals, Boston Pops, and gala for the Berkshire Music Center.

Attendance Increase

The average increase in attendance at Tanglewood was approximately 1,730 for each event.

Saratoga Springs is 75 miles from Tanglewood. The cities of Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Amsterdam and Glens Falls are all within a radius of 30 miles of Albany.

Actually, attendance at Tanglewood fell 5,809 short of the 1965 summer festival. Proceeds were $20,000 more in 1966, due to the increased price of tickets.

Some alarm was expressed over the effect Saratoga would have on Tanglewood.

The 1967 Berkshire Music Festival has been announced for eight weeks from June 30 through Aug. 20.

Saratoga's future plans include some form of weather protection for its amphitheater, lengthening of the season by three or four weeks, and a revision of box-office facilities.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 30, 1966

47

Tanglewood Festival's Total Attendance 236,196

NE

Total attendance for all events of the summer Tanglewood Festival, near Lenox, Mass., was 236,196, slightly lower than the 242,005 of last year and more than the 224,320 who attended in 1964.

* * *

Ticket sales this year amounted to $625,944.50, an increase over the sales of last year, which amounted to $605,718.

Breakdown of attendance figures for this season show that 190,534 persons attended the orchestra and chamber music programs; 38,627 attended the open rehearsals and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood, and 7,035 attended the gala evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

* * *

The 1966 Tanglewood festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf, closed on Aug. 21 following 24 concerts in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, seven programs of chamber music, eight open rehearsals, two benefit concerts and five programs in the Festival of Contemporary Music in addition to 25 performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center.

A total of 41 soloists participated as well as six guest conductors.

Berkshire Music Center enrollment this summer was 350.

Six members of the orchestra retired at the conclusion of the Tanglewood season, which also concluded the orchestra's 85th season. They are Henri Girard, bass; Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet; Osbourne McConathy, horn; George Moleux, principal bass, and K. Vinal Smith, tuba. Also retiring is associate conductor Richard Burgin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Springfield Herald
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 111,573
AUG 25 1966

TANGLEWOOD

By MICHAEL A. DELIZIA

The great Wagner vs. Brahms debate which raged among critics, conductors and public long after the deaths of both composers, and which has been known to raise tempers to this day, was of little concern Saturday night to the Tanglewood audience. The first half of the program consisted of the Prelude to Wagner's Tristan and Isolde, and Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98; great compositions flawlessly performed.

The Prelude to Tristan and Isolde sounds rather tame, perhaps even a little dull, to our ears nowadays, but there was a time when the critics found its chromaticism outrageous. This chromaticism, by which Wagner meant to express "longing, insatiable longing, forever springing up anew, pining and thirsting," reminded one 19th Century critic of the painting of an Italian martyr whose intestines are slowly being wound out on a spool! Neither was Brahms' 4th Symphony very well received by his contemporaries, who found it too "classical" and "cerebral."

The distinction between Wagner the radical and Brahms the conservative was not evident Saturday night, however. The years have brought a certain amount of cool limpidity to the Wagner score, while the Brahms symphony has come to be recognized as, to put it bluntly, an immortal masterpiece. Brahms' 4th Symphony is part of music's high canon. It is one of the most beautiful pieces of music ever written. It is one of those compostions about which it can be said that hearing it performed is genuinely ennobling; one is a better human being for having heard it.

Composer-pianists have a habit of writing concerti, etudes, fantasies, and the like, which go beyond mere virtuosity into the realm of the near-unplayable. Liszt, Rachmaninoff and Bartok come to mind.

It is one thing for a master pianist like Liszt to sit down and perform one of his own compositions, but it is quite another for a performer to pick up an unfamiliar score by Liszt, master it, and then perform it without error.

Pianist Jorge Bolet's dazzling performance of two compositions by Liszt, Saturday night, was analogous to a backward triple mid-air somersault performed by a crack aerialist. There was little room for error left by the savage energy with which Bolet attacked Liszt's Fantasia of Themes from Beethoven's "The Ruins of Athens." He was able to summon up a good deal of sensitivity and finesse, too, where these things were required in the A major piano concerto. But one listens to

JORGE BOLET

Liszt to be dazzled, not to be moved, and there was plenty of exciting virtuosity in Bolet's performance. The response of the audience, needless to say, was overwhelming.

Conversation overheard at intermission, after the performance of Brahms' 4th:

Middle-aged Lady: (evidently ennobled) . . . every instrument. That Leinsdorf! I could hear every single instrument in the orchestra.

Middle-aged Gentleman: The composition was very well orchestrated, too, you know.

Middle-aged Lady: How true! That's the genius of Beethoven for you. He was deaf, did you know that?

157

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910

SEP 11 1966

Music — Tanglewood Tops Saratoga Attendance

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Now that all returns are available, it can be definitely established that the new Saratoga Performing Arts Festival had no appreciable effect on attendance at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Saratoga's total attendance for 42 performers (including matinees and open rehearsals) by the New York City Ballet and Philadelphia Orchestra was 169,255.

At Tanglewood 236,196 persons attended 41 events, including chamber music programs, open rehearsals, Boston Pops, and gala for the Berkshire Music Center.

Attendance Increase

The average increase in attendance at Tanglewood was approximately 1,730 for each event.

Saratoga Springs is 75 miles from Tanglewood. The cities of Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Amsterdam and Glens Falls are all within a radius of 30 miles of Albany.

Actually, attendance at Tanglewood fell 5,809 short of the 1965 summer festival. Proceeds were $20,000 more in 1966, due to the increased price of tickets.

Some alarm was expressed over the effect Saratoga would have on Tanglewood.

The 1967 Berkshire Music Festival has been announced for eight weeks from June 30 through Aug. 20.

Saratoga's future plans include some form of weather protection for its amphitheater, lengthening of the season by three or four weeks, and a revision of box-office facilities.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 30, 1966

Tanglewood Festival's Total Attendance 236,196

Total attendance for all events of the summer Tanglewood Festival, near Lenox, Mass., was 236,196, slightly lower than the 242,005 of last year and more than the 224,320 who attended in 1964.

* * *

Ticket sales this year amounted to $625,944.50, an increase over the sales of last year, which amounted to $605,718.

Breakdown of attendance figures for this season show that 190,534 persons attended the orchestra and chamber music programs; 38,627 attended the open rehearsals and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood, and 7,035 attended the gala evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

* * *

The 1966 Tanglewood festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf, closed on Aug. 21 following 24 concerts in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, seven programs of chamber music, eight open rehearsals, two benefit concerts and five programs in the Festival of Contemporary Music in addition to 25 performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center.

A total of 41 soloists participated as well as six guest conductors.

Berkshire Music Center enrollment this summer was 350.

Six members of the orchestra retired at the conclusion of the Tanglewood season, which also concluded the orchestra's 85th season. They are Henri Girard, bass; Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet; Osbourne McConathy, horn; George Moleux, principal bass, and K. Vinal Smith, tuba. Also retiring is associate conductor Richard Burgin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Springfield Herald
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 111,573

AUG 25 1966

TANGLEWOOD

By MICHAEL A. DELIZIA

The great Wagner vs. Brahms debate which raged among critics, conductors and public long after the deaths of both composers, and which has been known to raise tempers to this day, was of little concern Saturday night to the Tanglewood audience. The first half of the program consisted of the Prelude to Wagner's Tristan and Isolde, and Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98; great compositions flawlessly performed.

The Prelude to Tristan and Isolde sounds rather tame, perhaps even a little dull, to our ears nowadays, but there was a time when the critics found its chromaticism outrageous. This chromaticism, by which Wagner meant to express "longing, insatiable longing, forever springing up anew, pining and thirsting," reminded one 19th Century critic of the painting of an Italian martyr whose intestines are slowly being wound out on a spool! Neither was Brahms' 4th Symphony very well received by his contemporaries, who found it too "classical" and "cerebral."

The distinction between Wagner the radical and Brahms the conservative was not evident Saturday night, however. The years have brought a certain amount of cool limpidity to the Wagner score, while the Brahms symphony has come to be recognized as, to put it bluntly, an immortal masterpiece. Brahms' 4th Symphony is part of music's high canon. It is one of the most beautiful pieces of music ever written. It is one of those compostions about which it can be said that hearing it performed is genuinely ennobling; one is a better human being for having heard it.

Composer-pianists have a habit of writing concerti, etudes, fantasies, and the like, which go beyond mere virtuosity into the realm of the near-unplayable. Liszt, Rachmaninoff and Bartok come to mind.

It is one thing for a master pianist like Liszt to sit down and perform one of his own compositions, but it is quite another for a performer to pick up an unfamiliar score by Liszt, master it, and then perform it without error.

Pianist Jorge Bolet's dazzling performance of two compositions by Liszt, Saturday night, was analogous to a backward triple midair somersault performed by a crack aerialist. There was little room for error left by the savage energy with which Bolet attacked Liszt's Fantasia of Themes from Beethoven's "The Ruins of Athens." He was able to summon up a good deal of sensitivity and finesse, too, where these things were required in the A major piano concerto. But one listens to

JORGE BOLET

Liszt to be dazzled, not to be moved, and there was plenty of exciting virtuosity in Bolet's performance. The response of the audience, needless to say, was overwhelming.

Conversation overheard at intermission, after the performance of Brahms' 4th:

Middle-aged Lady: (evidently ennobled) . . . every instrument. That Leinsdorf! I could hear every single instrument in the orchestra.

Middle-aged Gentleman: The composition was very well orchestrated, too, you know.

Middle-aged Lady: How true! That's the genius of Beethoven for you. He was deaf, did you know that?

POPS AT TANGLEWOOD-AUGUST 3

153

TROY MORNING RECORD
Monday, July 25, 1966

Stan Getz Tanglewood Soloist Aug. 3

Arthur Fiedler has announced the program he will conduct at the annual Boston Pops, concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3. Stan Getz, who will be saxaphone soloist, will join the celebrated Pops conductor and the orchestra for the world premier of Sauter's Tanglewood Concerto, dedicated to the soloist and conductor.

The Aug. 3 concert will begin with Sousa's Washington Pots March followed by the Overture to William Tell by Rossini In addition to the Tanglewood Concerto the first ha on the concert will also include the final dance from Ginastera's "Estancia."

After intermission Mr. Fiedler will conduct the waltzes from Strauss' "Tales of the Vienna Woods" with Toni Noichi as the zither soloist. Stan Getz will conclude the Pops concert with selections from "My Fair Lady" by Loewe.

The annual appearance of Mr. Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra at Tanglewood is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund. The three concerts since 1963 have been heard by more than 40,000 persons. A large attendance in the huge music shed and on the lawns is expected.

KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN
D. 18,000

JUL 26 1966

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,202

JUL 29 1966

AMSTERDAM RECORDER
Thursday, July 28, 1966

Boston Pops Program Set By Fiedler

Arthur Fiedler has announced the program he will conduct at the annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert on Aug. 3. Stan Getz, who will be saxophone soloist, will join the celebrated conductor and the orchestra for the world premiere of Sauter's Tanglewood Concerto, dedicated to the soloist and conductor.

The Aug. 3 concert will begin with Sousa's Washington Post March followed by the Overture to "William Tell" by Rossini. In addition to the Tanglewood Concerto the first half of the concert will also include the Final Dance from Ginastera's "Estancia."

Following the intermission Fiedler will conduct the Waltzes from Strauss' Tales of Vienna Woods with Toni Noichl as the zither soloist. Stan Getz will then perform five compositions for saxophone and orchestra. Fiedler will conclude the Pops concert with selections from "My Fair Lady" by Loewe.

The annual appearance of Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra at Tanglewood is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund. The three concerts since 1963 have been heard by more than 40,000 persons. Tickets for the Pops concert are now available at the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., 01240. Telephone (413) 637-1600. General admission tickets to the lawns will be available at 4 p.m. on Wednesday, the day of the performance.

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,168

JUL 25 1966

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Friday, July 29, 1966

Tanglewood Schedules Four Major Concerts

Four major orchestral concerts will highlight the busiest week of the 1966 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opening Wednesday with the "Boston Pops at Tanglewood" program at 8 p.m.

* * *

Arthur Fiedler has invited saxophonist Stan Getz to be soloist in this annual program for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund. Several favorite encores will be presented for the special occasion.

Three Boston Symphony Orchestra programs will be given on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minneapolis Symphony, will be the guest conductor on Friday and Sunday and Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a concert version of Mozart's "The Magic Flute" Saturday evening.

The Friday 9 p.m. program will open with Prokofiev's second suite from "Romeo and Juliet" and 'cellist Leslie Parnas will perform the Saint-Saens "Cello Concerto" with the orchestra. The Friday evening concert will close with Schumann's "Symphony number 4." Skrowaczewski will make his first appearance at Tanglewood on Friday.

* * *

The Weekend Prelude program on Friday at 7 p.m. will consist of songs by Mozart for soprano and piano performed by Phyllis Curtin and Richard Woitach and the "Organ Fantasia in F minor, K. 608," Mozart, with John Ferris as organist.

The cast for the Saturday 8 p.m. performance of "The Magic Flute" includes George Shirley as Tamino; Jane Marsh,

AT TANGLEWOOD — Leslie Parnas, 'cellist, will be the soloist in the Saint-Saens 'Cello Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for the 9 p.m. program on Friday. Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will conduct the performance.

Joanna Simon and Batyah Godfrey as the three ladies; John Reardon as Papageno; and Beverly Sills as the Queen of the Night. Monostatos will be sung by Nico Castel and Pamina by Judith Raskin. The Three Spirits will be sung by Miss Marsh, Miss Simon and Miss Godfrey with the Priests sung by Robert Jones and Ara Berberian. Ezio Flagello will be Sarastro, Anne Elgar will sing Papagena and Jones and Berberian will be the two men in armor.

* * *

Grant Johannesen will be soloist in the Saint-Saens "Piano Concerto number 4" Sunday in the 2:30 p.m. program. This concert will also include Medea's "Meditation and Dance of Vengeance" by Samuel Barber and Beethoven's "Symphony number 3."

The two and a half hour open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Syhphony Orchestra's pension fund will be held Saturday, opening at 10:30 a.m.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,475

AUG 4 1966

PENSIVE MOOD—Jazz saxophonist Stan Getz thinks about the sound in his solo performance last night at Tanglewood with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Getz as Soloist

By R. E. KRIEGER

LENOX, Mass.—The Boston Pops moved in for a one-night stand last night at Tanglewood under the direction of Arthur Fiedler and with jazz saxophonist Stan Getz in the soloist spot.

The feature of the concert that attracted some 14,258 people into the shed and on the lawns around it, was Eddie Sauter's "Tanglewood Concerto," a world premiere recorded on the spot by RCA Victor.

The concerto was undistinguished and Getz's solos seemed few and far between with that liquid, limpid tone that he is famous for, being submerged behind the full force of the "Pops" Orchestra.

Hit Number

The big hit before intermission was "The Girl From Impanema," the recording of which some years back brought Getz to the attention of people not jazz-oriented.

In the jazz firmament, he had been known for years for his earlier work with the "Four Brothers", a wild swinging group that eventually was absorbed, (Getz and all) into one of Woody Herman's innumerable herds.

For "The Girl", Getz brought on stage some of the men in his group and they in turn were backed by sections of the Boston Pops.

It was enough to make the mind boggle, yet finally we could hear Getz at his best and swingingest.

The concert opened with the Pops' rousing version of the "Washington Post March" followed by the overture to "William Tell", the quieter portions indistinguishable under the cries and talk of writhing humanity outside the shed.

Waltz Section

Some Strauss waltzes filled the void after intermission until Mr. Getz returned in four compositions for saxophone and orchestra.

The waltz section, incidentally, showed off the "Pops" orchestra to perfection, bringing a roar of applause from the crowd.

Getz, bespectacled and serious and looking more like a college professor than what most people think a jazz musician looks like, was absolutely splendid in his second appearance.

His "Three Ballads for Stan" and "Where Do You Go?" had him at his inventive best and showing that astonishing control and technique for which he is justly famous.

Other numbers in this section were "The Bad and the Beautiful" and "A Song After Sundown."

The Pops closed out the evening with scads of selections from "My Fair Lady" . . . a foolproof way to end the evening.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 2, 1966

Fiedler Pops Concert At Lenox Tomorrow

The annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert will be presented tomorrow evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with Arthur Fiedler conducting.

Stan Getz will be the featured saxophone soloist for the event with Toni Noichl as zither soloist in the "Waltzes" from Strauss' "Tales of the Vienna Woods."

During the three appearances of the Boston Pops Tanglewood since 1963, they have been heard by more than 40,000 persons. The concerts are given as a benefit for the Boston Symphony's pension fund.

The program will feature the world premiere of Sauter's "Tanglewood Concerto," dedicated to Getz and Fiedler.

Also included are the Sousa "Washington Post March," the Overture to "William Tell" by Rossini and the "Final Dance" from Ginastera's "Estancia."

Following the "Tales of the Vienna Woods," Getz will perform five compositions for saxophone and orchestra. Fiedler will conclude the Pops concert with selections from "My Fair Lady" by Loewe.

Tickets for the Pops concert are available at the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. General admission tickets to the Tanglewood Lawns will be available at 4 p.m. on Wednesday.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 26 1966

POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Tuesday, August 2, 1966

Program Listed For 'Pops' Concert

Arthur Fiedler, who makes his annual appearance at Tanglewood with the Boston Pops Orchestra tomorrow, has listed additions to the program for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund. As made known previously Mr. Fiedler will begin the concert at Lenox, Mass., with Sousa's "Washington Post March," then the overture to "William Tell" by Rossini.

Stan Getz, soloist for tomorrow night's program, will perform the world premier of Eddie Sauter's "Tanglewood Concerto" which was dedicated to the soloist and Mr. Fiedler. Mr. Fiedler also has invited Mr. Getz to play "The Girl from Ipanema" by Gimbel-Jobim.

The five compositions for saxophone and orchestra to be played by the soloist and the Boston Pops under Mr. Fiedler's direction now will include the traditional "Eili, Eili"; "Three Ballads for Stan" and "Where Do You Go?" by Wilder; "The Bad and the Beautiful" and "A Song After Sundown" by Raksin. Mr. Fiedler and the Pops also will play "Tales from the Vienna Woods," waltzes by Strauss and selections from "My Fair Lady" by Loewe. Included in the selections from the popular musical and motion picture are "Get Me to the Church on Time," "Wouldn't It Be Loverly," "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face," "I Could Have Danced All Night," "On the Street Where You Live," "The Rain in Spain" and "With Little Bit of Luck."

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,615

JULY 26 1966

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 34,306 SUN. 37,581

JULY 31 1966

'Pops' Concert Set at Tanglewood

Arthur Fiedler has made known the program he will conduct at the annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert on Wednesday at Lenox, Mass. Stan Getz, who will be saxophone soloist, will join the Pops conductor and the orchestra for the world premiere of Sauter's Tanglewood Concerto, dedicated to the soloist and conductor.

Wednesday's concert will begin with Sousa's Washington Post March, after which the Overture to "William Tell" by Rossini will be presented. In addition to the Tanglewood Concerto the first half of the concert also will include the Final Dance from Ginastera's "Estancia."

After the intermission Mr. Fiedler will conduct the Waltzes from Strauss' Tales of the Vienna Woods, with Toni Noichl as the zither soloist. Mr. Getz then will perform five compositions for saxophone and orchestra.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 26 1966

CATSKILL MAIL
Friday, August 5, 1966

Chit Chat

Among those from this area attending the Boston Pops Concert, Arthur Fiedler conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on Wednesday night were Mrs. Harold E. Gardner, Spring Street, and Mrs. George W. Brown, Prospect Ave. A delightful program, including Overture from William Tell, Tales from Vienna Woods, and concluding numbers of the hits from "My Fair Lady", was enjoyed by a large audience.

134

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 S. 127,627

AUG 5 1966

Saxophonist Stan Getz Plays at Disadvantage

By JOAN SIMMONS

A formula that combines the Boston Pops Orchestra with traditional popular favorites as the "William Tell" Overture and selections from "My Fair Lady" is bound to be a box office success as it was proved Wednesday evening when 14,258 attended the annual Boston Pops concert at Tanglewood.

Unfortunately what makes a splash in ticket sales need not be of much note in quality, as was also the case at Tanglewood Wednesday evening.

The concert, an annual benefit for the Boston Symphony Orchestra pension fund, was the occasion of the world premiere of Eddie Sauter's Tanglewood Concerto for Saxophone and Orchestra. The Concerto would perhaps make effortless listening if it were not for the temptation to see how many tunes incorporated in the conce to could be identified.

Stan Getz as saxophone soloist was at a disadvantage from the beginning. Even in the Music Shed he could barely be heard beneath the overwhelming sound of the orchestra. From areas of the lawn he did not seem to be heard at all.

In addition to the concerto, which is dedicated to Getz and Arthur Fiedler, director of the Pops, Getz played the "Girl from Ipanema," in which his own quartet joined the orchestra, and several brief compositions for saxophone and orchestra. All of these suffered from a setting not suited to this type of music.

Despite its artistic failures, the concert was a rousing success if viewed as the money raising project that it is. Crowds jammed the lawns and swarmed around the Music Shed where all of the reserved seats were occupied. But even as a crowd pleaser it had its failings as the constant rumbling from the lawn expressed discontent with the accoustics.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

AUG 9 1966

The Teenager's Viewpoint—

Tanglewood Bossa Nova

By TOM TALKS TURKEY

Like many of my teenaged counterparts, I had never attended a Tanglewood concert, until last Wednesday, that is. Now I kick myself for not going up there sooner. Perhaps what I am going to describe will send you up there soon for what will probably be one of the more entertaining and thoroughly enjoyable evenings of this or any other summer.

I was the guest of Mr. Lee Goldman and his family, partly, I think, out of a certain amount of sympathy toward my limited background in the field of classical entertainment, and mostly because they were sure I would enjoy the concert. They were correct on both counts.

Pleasant Ride

The ride up to Lee is a pleasant one which takes only 45 minutes or so along the Massachusetts Turnpike. The scenery is grand, green and gorgeous (pretty neat, huh?), and that is by no means an exaggeration, just bad poetry.

The concert this evening featured Arthur Fielder and his Boston Pops Orchestra with guest saxophone soloist, Stan Getz. Steady readers of this column know of my admiration for Mr. Getz, who is definitely one of the great jazz leaders of our time. The combination promissed to be an interesting one, and needless to say, I was not disappointed, but more of that later.

The grounds of the concert area are indeed beauiful and a perfect site for such goings-on. The Big Shed, a huge, tent-like, sideless affair was the showplace for the artists and had a seating capacity for thousands (ten, I think, but I may be wrong). Much of the audience, however, is seated outside the Shed, on the grass — more precisely, on chairs and blankets which in turn are on the lawn. Dress is varied and always colorful. Some men wear suits, others wear sports jackets, still others wear sports shirts, and there are even some who wear dungarees and sweat shirts.

Oh, yes, it does get cold up there in those scenic Berkshires, and most people bring an extra coat or sweater for the later-in-the-evening-chills that have a habit of of setting in at about 9 or so.

Just a last few words about the grounds. The grass is lush and soft and, wonder of wonders, green. For you local readers, this may be hard to believe, but take my word for it. There are lots of trees around the perimeter of the grounds, as well as a few fountains and the such thrown in for good measure. For the literary-minded, the house of Nathaniel Hawthorne is visible from the Big Shed, and may prove interesting, although I did not take time out to pay a visit.

The concert itself was really something. Although I'll probably get killed for it, I'll say something that's been itching to get out all week: that Boston Pops really swings. They play a march the way it should be played, and don't let anyone fool you, it's not as easy as it sounds. The William Tell Overture was rousing and really moved. Stan Getz was barely audible on his first number, "Tanglewood Concerto," but he made up for it on "The Girl From Ipanema." He was really brilliant during the second half of the concert, and it was a sheer delight for me to hear him.

So much for the review of the concert; the really important thing here is the entire mood at Tanglewood. It is friendly and casual. Picnic baskets are all over the place, and this seems the most popular way to eat dinner up there. The sights and sounds are fabulous and definitely worth the trip alone, without the music.

Tanglewood is not square. What it is is an experience in enjoyment. If you want to enjoy some of the finest music in the world (in my opinion), and I do mean enjoy, go up to Tanglewood some evening. Your time couldn't be better spent.

Have any problems? Maybe Tom can help. Address all letters to Tom Talks Turkey, care of The Springfield Union. Letters of a general interest will be printed. No names used, unless desired.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 8 1966

Bud-Nipping Needed

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:

I commend Mr. Rosenfeld for his accurate review of the Boston Pops concert at Tanglewood Aug. 3. Like so many others, we had anticipated a pleasant evening enjoying the Pops program in the beautiful quiet setting which has always pervaded, but, instead, we could hear nothing but the squeals, laughter, and cacophony of a certain contingent of teen-agers. We waited until well after the intermission thinking that surely by then they would quiet down, but we were mistaken.

Must Tanglewood be taken over by rowdyism or will it be nipped in the bud now before it blossoms into riot or disorder?

I hope some steps will be taken before the Gala Evening of Tanglewood on Parade.

MAMIE STARKS,
211 Walker St.,
Lenox.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Thursday, July 14, 1966

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503

JUL 13 1966

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

JUL 13 1966

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 14 1966

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 13 1966

Tickets on Sale For Boston Pops With Stan Getz

LENOX — The ticket sale for the annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert begins at the Festival Ticket Office today. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Pops Orchestra in a concert Aug. 3 for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund. Fiedler has invited saxophonist Stan Getz to be soloist with him.

All seats in the Tanglewood Music Shed will be reserved. The ticket office is open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays and from 9 a.m. through intermission on Berkshire Festival concert nights. Mail orders may be sent to the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01241.

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355

SEP 3 1966

GETZ AND FIEDLER ON CHANNEL 2 — Jazz saxophonist Stan Getz (left), teams with conductor Arthur Fiedler when the Boston Pops performs on Channel 2 Tuesday, at 8 PM. Recorded last month at Tanglewood, the full-length concert includes the premiere of "Tanglewood Concerto" by Sauter, a work the composer dedicated to Getz and Fiedler.

Jazz 'n Symphony On 'Pops' Special

Jazz great Stan Getz teams with conductor Arthur Fiedler for a special Boston Pops concert Tuesday, at 8 PM on Channel 2.

Recorded by WGBH-TV in the Music Shed at Tanglewood last month, the program marks the first time saxophonist Getz has appeared with the Pops.

Fiedler himself flew in from San Francisco for this one concert, and National Educational Television asked Channel 2 to produce the television program for national distribution.

Highlight of the concert is the "Tanglewood Concerto" by Sauter, a work the composer dedicated to Getz and Fiedler. Sauter's Concerto received its world premiere at Tanglewood and Sept. 6 will mark the first telecast of the work.

To open his program Fiedler chose the "Washington Post March" by Sousa. This will be followed by Rossini's "William Tell" Overture, the Tanglewood Concerto and Gimbel-Jobin's "The Girl from Ipanema."

After intermission comes Tales from Vienna Woods, waltzes by Johann Strauss with zither soloist Toni Noichl, four compositions for saxophone and orchestra (soloist: Stan Getz) and concludes with a medley of songs from "My Fair Lady."

The concert was produced for television by Jordan Whitelaw and directed by William Cosel.

ngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
78, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
SEP 4 1966

Nets Ready to Shift Into High Gear

By ELIZABETH SULLIVAN

With practically everyone away over Labor Day, ABC elected Tuesday to start its new season, thus jumping ahead of CBS and NBC; although NBC is throwing in a few premieres on Thursday.

There are 34 new shows on the agenda. ABC has 16, NBC 10, and CBS eight.

Not all the shows will be successes. Come January and the duds will be off the air.

All the new ABC shows are covered in today's TV Week magazine, a pullout section in the Sunday Globe Magazine.

A glimpse of the week's highlights favors sports. Football is no longer associated with cold weather. The N.F.L., A.F.L. and N.C.A.A. football games get under way this week (Groans from the womenfolk!)

The Clay - Mildenberger heavyweight championship fight is scheduled for Saturday afternoon, via satellite from Frankfurt, Germany.

What's for milady?

The Miss America Pageant Saturday night.

And the children?

Both NBC and CBS have revamped their Saturday morning programs so that there are cartoons by the carload.

Notations for today, and throughout the week:

The N.F.L. game hits the air at 4:30 p.m. on Ch. 4—Buffalo and San Diego.

If the Red Sox game is finished by 6 p.m., "What's Happening in China?" may be seen on Ch. 5. There will be five sessions in all on this topic. Roving Ambassador W. Averell Harriman and Edwin O. Reischauer are among the participants.

Also for today: A. Philip Randolph, A.F.L.-C.I.O. vice president, is Face the Nation guest at 12:30 p.m. on Ch. 4 with the repeat on WBZ at 6:30 p.m.

Atty. Gen. Edward W. Brooke, who was to appear on Issues and Answers last week, will make the appearance today—on Ch. 7 at 2:30 p.m. He got caught in a Virgin Island storm last week and was unable to get back to the states in time for the telecast.

William P. Bundy, Asst. Sec. of State for Far Eastern Affairs, will be interviewed on Meet the Press at 1 p.m. (Ch. 10) and the usual repeat on Ch. 5 at 11:30 p.m. today. He'll discuss the election in South Viet Nam.

Monday — Good news for cooks. Julia Child, the French Chef, resumes her delicious recipes on Ch. 2 at 8 p.m. Coming up: entrees and crepes for dessert.

Ch. 5 inaugurates a special full-hour of news, weather and sports beginning at 11 p.m., and viewers will see Bob Copeland (formerly of Ch. 4) delivering the weather forecasts. Don Gillis will be on hand with sports, while Roger Goodrich (of Syracuse, Rochester, N.Y.; Cleveland, Toronto) and Dick Wood, a native of Quincy, two new faces, will cover the news.

Meteorologist Norman J. Macdonald returns to Ch. 4 for the Mon.-Fri. weather reports at 11 p.m.

Tuesday—A Boston Pops concert, with Arthur Fiedler, conductor, taped at Tanglewood last month, is the special on Ch 2 at 8 p.m. Stan Getz, saxophonist, made his first appearance with the Pops in the concert.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
JULY 13 1966
TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JULY 26 1966

Tanglewood Concerto To Premiere Aug. 3

The annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert on Aug. 3 will be the occasion for the world premiere of the Tanglewood Concerto of Sauter. Saxophone soloist Stan Getz will join conductor Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra in the performance of this work dedicated to the soloist and conductor.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

The annual appearance of Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund. The three concerts held since 1963 have been attended by more than 40,000 people.

The concert will also include Sousa's Washington Post March, Rossini's Overture to "William Tell," the Final Dance from Ginastera's "Estancia" and selections from "My Fair Lady." Toni Noichl will be zither soloist in waltzes from Strauss' Tales of Vienna Woods. In addition to the Concerto, Stan Getz will perform five selections for saxophone and orchestra.

Tickets for the Pops concert are available at the Festival Box Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. General admission tickets to the lawns will be available at 4:00 on the afternoon of the performance.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 200,259
SEP 4 1966

FM Music for This Week

JAZZ SAXOPHONIST Stan Getz will join Arthur Fiedler for a special Boston Pops concert recorded in the Music Shed at Tanglewood last month, Tuesday at 8 p.m. on Channel 2. Highlight of the concert is the Tanglewood Concerto by Sauter, a work the composer dedicated to Getz and Fiedler. The program will also include works by Sousa, Rossini, Johann Strauss and Loewe.

WPJB-FM's At the Opera, Friday at 7 p.m., will feature a recording of Donizetti's Lucia Di Lammermoor, played by the Rome Opera House Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. Soloists will be Roberta Peters as Lucia, Jan Peerce as Edgardo, Philip Maero as Lord Enrico, Giorgio Tozzi as Raimondo, Piero De Palma as Lord Arturo Bucklaw and Mario Carlin as Normanno.

Haydn's Symphony No. 99, Strauss' Death and Transfiguration, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 8 in G will be played by the Cleveland Orchestra under the direction of George Szell, Monday at 9 p.m. on WCRQ-FM.

MORE REVIEWS AND PICTURES
ON PAGE 191

ngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
78, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

SEP 4 1966

Nets Ready to Shift Into High Gear

By ELIZABETH SULLIVAN

With practically everyone away over Labor Day, ABC elected Tuesday to start its new season, thus jumping ahead of CBS and NBC; although NBC is throwing in a few premieres on Thursday.

There are 34 new shows on the agenda. ABC has 16, NBC 10, and CBS eight.

Not all the shows will be successes. Come January and the duds will be off the air.

All the new ABC shows are covered in today's TV Week magazine, a pullout section in the Sunday Globe Magazine.

A glimpse of the week's highlights favors sports. Football is no longer associated with cold weather. The N.F.L., A.F.L. and N.C.A.A. football games get under way this week (Groans from the womenfolk!)

The Clay - Mildenberger heavyweight championship fight is scheduled for Saturday afternoon, via satellite from Frankfurt, Germany.

What's for milady?

The Miss America Pageant Saturday night.

And the children?

Both NBC and CBS have revamped their Saturday morning programs so that there are cartoons by the carload.

Notations for today, and throughout the week:

The N.F.L. game hits the air at 4:30 p.m. on Ch. 4—Buffalo and San Diego.

If the Red Sox game is finished by 6 p.m., "What's Happening in China?" may be seen on Ch. 5. There will be five sessions in all on this topic. Roving Ambassador W. Averell Harriman and Edwin O. Reischauer are among the participants.

Also for today: A. Philip Randolph, A.F.L.-C.I.O. vice president, is Face the Nation guest at 12:30 p.m. on Ch. 5, with the repeat on WBZ at 6:30 p.m.

Atty. Gen. Edward W. Brooke, who was to appear on Issues and Answers last week, will make the appearance today—on Ch. 7 at 2:30 p.m. He got caught in a Virgin Island storm last week and was unable to get back to the states in time for the telecast.

William P. Bundy, Asst. Sec. of State for Far Eastern Affairs, will be interviewed on Meet the Press at 1 p.m. (Ch. 10) and the usual repeat on Ch. 5 at 11:30 p.m. today. He'll discuss the election in South Viet Nam.

Monday — Good news for cooks. Julia Child, the French Chef, resumes her delicious recipes on Ch. 2 at 8 p.m. Coming up: entrees and crepes for dessert.

Ch. 5 inaugurates a special full-hour of news, weather and sports beginning at 11 p.m., and viewers will see Bob Copeland (formerly of Ch. 4) delivering the weather forecasts. Don Gillis will be on hand with sports, while Roger Goodrich (of Syracuse, Rochester, N.Y.; Cleveland, Toronto) and Dick Wood, a native of Quincy, two new faces, will cover the news.

Meteorologist Norman J. Macdonald returns to Ch. 4 for the Mon.-Fri. weather reports at 11 p.m.

Tuesday—A Boston Pops concert, with Arthur Fiedler, conductor, taped at Tanglewood last month, is the special on Ch 2 at 8 p.m. Stan Getz, saxophonist, made his first appearance with the Pops in the concert.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425

JULY 13 1966

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JULY 26 1966

Tanglewood Concerto To Premiere Aug. 3

The annual Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert on Aug. 3 will be the occasion for the world premiere of the Tanglewood Concerto of Sauter. Saxophone soloist Stan Getz will join conductor Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra in the performance of this work dedicated to the soloist and conductor.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

The annual appearance of Fiedler and the Boston Pops at Tanglewood is for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund. The three concerts held since 1963 have been attended by more than 40,000 people.

The concert will also include Sousa's Washington Post March, Rossini's Overture to "William Tell," the Final Dance from Ginastera's "Estancia" and selections from "My Fair Lady." Toni Noichl will be zither soloist in waltzes from Strauss' Tales of Vienna Woods. In addition to the Concerto, Stan Getz will perform five selections for saxophone and orchestra.

Tickets for the Pops concert are available at the Festival Box Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. General admission tickets to the lawns will be available at 4:00 on the afternoon of the performance.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 200,259

SEP 4 1966

FM Music for This Week

JAZZ SAXOPHONIST Stan Getz will join Arthur Fiedler for a special Boston Pops concert recorded in the Music Shed at Tanglewood last month, Tuesday at 8 p.m. on Channel 2. Highlight of the concert is the Tanglewood Concerto by Sauter, a work the composer dedicated to Getz and Fiedler. The program will also include works by Sousa, Rossini, Johann Strauss and Loewe.

WPJB-FM's At the Opera, Friday at 7 p.m., will feature a recording of Donizetti's Lucia Di Lammermoor, played by the Rome Opera House Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. Soloists will be Roberta Peters as Lucia, Jan Peerce as Edgardo, Philip Maero as Lord Enrico, Giorgio Tozzi as Raimondo, Piero De Palma as Lord Arturo Bucklaw and Mario Carlin as Normanno.

Haydn's Symphony No. 99, Strauss' Death and Transfiguration, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 8 in G will be played by the Cleveland Orchestra, under the direction of George Szell, Monday at 9 p.m. on WCRQ-FM.

MORE REVIEWS AND PICTURES
ON PAGE 191

GALA-AUGUST 10

KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN
D. 18,000

AUG 1 1966

Sen. Kennedy Will Narrate Lincoln Portrait, Tanglewood

The annual Gala Evening at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will take place Sunday, Aug. 10 with a special appearance of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts.

Beginning at 3:30 p. m. there will be continuous performances by members of the Music Center through the supper hour. The Gala Concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland will begin 8 p. m. in the music shed.

Mr. Copland will conduct his own Lincoln Portrait with Sen. Kennedy as the narrator.

Tickets for the Gala Evening are currently available at the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Reserved and general admission tickets will admit the holder to all events on Aug. 10.

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970

AUG 4 1966

TED TO NARRATE FOR MUSIC

LENOX (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., is scheduled to appear as the narrator when the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" at Tanglewood Aug. 10, it was announced today. The composer will conduct.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755

AUG 3 1966

Tanglewood plans gala

A gala evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., is planned for Aug. 10, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. Beginning at 3:30 there will be continuous performances by members of the center through the supper hour. A concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland will begin at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed.

There will be separate performances by each orchestra, but the two will combine in the Copland work "El Salon Mexico."

Mr. Leinsdorf will close the concert with Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" and Tchaikovsky's "Overture, 1812." George Bisacca is providing real cannon and the personnel to fire them at the appropriate places in the score. Weather permitting, there will also be fireworks immediately after the concert.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 3 1966

Gala Evening

Ted Kennedy Will Narrate Lincoln Tale at Tanglewood

AP

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy

Composer Aaron Copland

Tanglewood's gala evening Aug. 10, will mix politics and fireworks with extensive musical offerings.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will narrate Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," while Mr. Copland himself conducts.

Mr. Copland, who retired last year as chairman of faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, will begin the 8 p.m. main concert, by conducting Brahms' "Variations on a Theme of Hyadn."

The evening will have an explosive windup with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the combined Boston Symphony and BMC orchestras in Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" and Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture."

Cannons To Be Fired

During the performance of the "1812 Overture," several cannons and salute guns placed on the lawn near Tanglewood's main house will be fired at appropriate places in the score.

The cannons and the personnel to fire them will be

Ted Kennedy
Continued on Page 19

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,771

AUG 4 1966

Copland, Kennedy On Gala Program At Tanglewood

The gala evening at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will take place on Aug. 10. Beginning at 3:30 in the afternoon there will be continuous performances by the members of the Music Center through the supper hour. The gala concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland will begin at 8 in the music shed. Mr. Copland, who last year retired as chairman of the faculty of the Music Center, will begin the concert with Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn. Veronica Tyler, who placed second in the Tchaikovsky voice competition this year, will be soloist with Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Korngold's Marietta's Lied (3C) and SI, MI Chiamano Mimi from Puccini's "La Boheme."

Mr. Copland will then conduct his own Lincoln Portrait with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy as narrator.

At the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will award prizes to the members of this summer's Music Center, who have distinguished themselves at this summer's session.

Following the interval the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras will be on stage in the great music shed, and Aaron Copland will conduct the nearly 200 instrumentalists in his El Salon Mexico. Mr. Leinsdorf will close the concert with Wagner's Ride of the Valgyries and Tchaikovsky's Overture, 1812. In the Tchaikovsky work several cannons and salute guns will be fired at the appropriate places in the score. The guns will be in place on the lawn near the Main House of Tanglewood. The cannon and personnel to fire them have been provided by George Bisacca of Eastover in Lenox. Immediately after the concert (weather permitting) there will be a display of fireworks.

Tickets for the gala evening are now available at the festival ticket office, Tanglewood, Lenox.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 66,826

AUG 4 1966

KENNEDY AT CONCERT

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., is scheduled to appear as the narrator when the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" at Tanglewood next Wednesday, it was announced yesterday. The composer will conduct. The Copland work will be part of the annual benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,168

AUG 4 1966

Senator To Narrate at Tanglewood

LENOX — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will narrate Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," while Composer Copland conducts at the gala evening at Tanglewood next Wednesday. The program starts at 3:30 p.m. and will include extensive musical offerings, fireworks, etc. The combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center orchestras conducted by Erich Leinsdorf will provide the windup of the evening.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
D. 4.000

AUG 4 ,1966

Sen. Kennedy Will Narrate Lincoln Portrait, Tanglewood

The annual Gala Evening at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center takes place Sunday, Aug. 10 with a special appearance of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts. Beginning at 3:30 p.m. there will be continuous performances by members of the Music Center through the supper hour. The Gala Concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland begins at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed. Mr. Copland will conduct his own Lincoln Portrait with Sen. Kennedy as the narrator.

Post
WALLINGFORD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 6,975

AUG 4 1966

Boston Orchestra

The Tanglewood Music Festival has scheduled a gala evening for Wednesday, Aug. 10. At 4 p.m. there will be benefit performances by the departments of the Berkshire Music Center and at 8 p.m. in the shed the Boston Symphony Concert Orchestra will perform. Ticket prices range fom $2.50 to $6 and may be purchasd at the main gate.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 133,303

AUG 5 1966

Gala Evening slated

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. - The Gala Evening at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will take place Wednesday. Beginning at 3:30 in the afternoon there will be continuous performances by the members of the music center through the supper hour.

The Gala Concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland will begin at 8 in the music shed.

Copland, who last year retired as chairman of the faculty of the music center, will begin the concert with Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn.

Veronica Tyler, who placed second in the Tchaikovsky Voice Competition this year, will be soloist with Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Korngold's Marietta' Lied and Si, Mi Chiamano Mimi, from Puccini's "La Boheme."

Copland will then return to the podium to conduct his own Lincoln Portrait with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts as the narrator.

At the intermission, Leinsdorf will award prizes to the members of this summer's music center, who have participated in session.

Following the interval, the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras will be on stage in the great music shed, and Copland will conduct the nearly two hundred instrumentalists in his "El Salon Mexico."

Leinsdorf will close the concert with Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries and Tchaikovsky's Overture, 1912. In the Tchaikovsky work several cannons and salute guns will be fired at the appropriate places in the score. The guns will be in place on the lawn near the Main House of Tanglewood. The cannon and personnel to fire them have been provided by George Bisacca of Eastover in Lenox. Immediatily after the concert (weather permitting) there will be a display of fireworks.

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,095

AUG 5 1966

Kennedy To Narrate 'Lincoln Portrait'

LENOX, Mass. (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., is scheduled to appear as the narrator when the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" at Tanglewood Aug. 10, it was announced yesterday. The composer will conduct.

The Copland work will be part of the annual benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass
Circ. 15,882

AUG 6 1966

Gala Evening At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX — The Gala Evening at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Ctr. will take place Aug .10. Beginning at 3:30 in the afternoon, there will be continuous performances by the members of the Music Center through the supper hour. The Gala Concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland will begin at 8 in the music shed. Mr. Copland, who last year retired as chairman of the faculty of the Music Center, will begin the concert with Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn. Veronica Tyler, who placed second in the Tchaikovsky Voice Competition this year, will be soloist with Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Korngold's Marietta's Lied (3C) and SI, MI Chiamano Mimi from Puccini's "La Boheme."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503

AUG 5 1966

Kennedy Narrates 'Lincoln Portrait'

... 'Gala' Bill Wednesday

The Gala Evening at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will take place Wednesday.

Beginning at 3:30 in the afternoon there will be continuous performances by the members of the music center through the supper hour.

The Gala Concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland will begin at 8.00 in the music shed.

Mr. Copland, who last year retired as chairman of the faculty of the music center, will begin the 8 o'clock concert with Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn.

Veronica Tyler, who placed second in the Tchaikovsky Voice Competition this year, will be soloist with Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Korngold's Marietta's Lied (3C) and SI, MI Chiamano Mimi from Puccini's "La Boheme."

Mr. Copland will then return to the podium to conduct his own Lincoln Portrait with Senator Edward M. Kennedy as the narrator.

At the intermission of the evening concert Mr. Leinsdorf will award prizes to the members of this summer's Music Center who have distinguished themselves at this summer's session.

Following the interval the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras will be on stage in the music shed, and Aaron Copland will conduct the nearly two hundred instrumentalists in his El Salon Mexico.

Mr. Leinsdorf will close the concert with Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries and Tchaikovsky's Overture, 1812. In the Tchaikovsky work several cannons and salute guns will be fired at the appropriate places in the score.

The guns will be in place on the lawn near the main house of Tanglewood. The cannon and personnel to fire them have been provided by George Bisacca of Eastover in Lenox.

Immediately after the concert (weather permitting) there will be a display of fireworks.

Tickets for the Gala Evening are now available at the festival ticket office, Tanglewood, Lenox.

Reserved seat and general admission tickets will admit the holder to all events Aug. 10.

Albany Knickerbocker News
Tuesday, August 9, 1966

HERALD TRIBUNE GAZETTE
Tuesday, August 9, 1966

Cannon to Salute Gala Evening at Tanglewood

Several real cannon and salute guns will be fired from places on the lawn near the main house of the Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., grounds for a performance of Tchaikovsky's "Overture, 1812," a part of the Gala Evening at Tanglewood program tomorrow.

* * *

The cannon and personnel to fire them have been provided by George Bisacca of Eastover in Lenox.

The Gala Evening at Tanglewood opens at 3:30 p.m. with continuous performances by members of the Music Center through the supper hour.

The Gala Concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will begin at 8 p.m. in the music shed and will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland.

The Tanglewood Gala is an annual benefit for the Berkshire Music Center.

* * *

Copland, who last year retired as chairman of the faculty of the Music Center, will begin the evening concert with Brahms' "Variations on a Theme of Haydn." Veronica Tyler, who placed second in the Tchaikovsky voice competition this year, will be solist with Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Korngold's "Marietta's Lied (3C)" and "Si, Mi Chiamano Mimi" from Puccini's "La Boheme."

Copland will then return to the podium to conduct his own "Lincoln Portrait" with Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts as the narrator.

During the intermission Leinsdorf will award prizes to those members of this summer's Music Center who have distinguished themselves during the summer's session.

* * *

Then the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will play Copland's "El Salon Mexico" with Copland conducting. Leinsdorf will conduct the final part of the concert, including Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" and the "Tchaikovsky Overture." With over 200 instrumentalists and the cannon and salute guns, the affair should be unusual.

Tickets for the Gala Evening are now available at the Festival ticket office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. General admission tickets will be available on the day of the program.

A Kennedy Will Narrate For Tanglewood Gala

LENOX, MASS.—Fireworks, real cannon for Tchaikovsky's Overture, 1812, Senator Edward M. Kennedy narrating Aaron Copland's Lincoln Portrait, the Ride of the Valkyries, and a performance by Veronica Tyler, one of the Moscow competition winners, all will be part of the gala evening at Tanglewood tomorrow.

Actually there will be continuous performances beginning at 3:30 p.m. and continuing into the evening.

The gala concert will begin at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed with Mr. Copland conducting Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn.

Miss Tyler will be soloist with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Korngold's Marietta Lied and "Si, mi, chiamano Mimi from Puccini's "La Boheme."

Mr. Copland will then conduct his Lincoln Portrait with Senator Kennedy narrating.

During intermission there will be the awarding of prizes by Mr. Leinsdorf to members of this year's Music Center, followed by the combined Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestras (some 200 instrumentalists) under Mr. Copland who will conduct his El Salon Mexico.

Mr. Leinsdorf will chose the concert with The Ride of the Valkyries and the 1812 overture.

Immediately after there will be a display of fireworks.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 279,780 SAT. 292,741

AUG 6 1966

STRING ART QUARTET of Buffalo will perform Wednesday and Thursday evenings at 8:30 in the Circle Art Theater, works of Debussy, Rossini and Schubert, in a recital in addition to the film "Electra."

* * *

UB CHORUS director R. S. Beckwith had the treasurable opportunity of meeting with famed composer Igor Stravinsky during the recent Lincoln Center Summer Music Festival, and discussing details of the Stravinsky "Oedipus Rex," which Dr. Beckwith will present here in October, with the UB Men's Glee Club.

The recent festival was devoted to Stravinsky works and related composers, with Lukas Foss as artistic director, Richard Dufallo assisting as conductor.

* * *

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL annual "Gala Evening" for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be held Wednesday evening, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy will be narrator in the Copland "Lincoln Portrait." Soloist will be soprano Veronica Tyler, who won second prize in the recent Tchaikowsky Competition in Moscow.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

AUG 6 1966

TANGLEWOOD BENEFIT SLATED WEDNESDAY

LENOX—The Gala Evening at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be Wednesday, Aug. 10.

Starting at 3:30 p.m. there will be continuous performances by members of the music center through the supper hour. The Gala Concert, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra conducted by Eric Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland, will begin at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed.

his "El Salon Mexico." Mr. Leinsdorf will close the concert with Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" and Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture.

In the Tchaikovsky work several cannons and salute guns will be fired at the appropriate places in the score. The guns will be in place on the lawn near the main house of Tanglewood. The cannon and personnel to fire them have been provided by George Biacca of Eastover in Lenox. Following the concert a fireworks display will be held, weather permitting.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737

AUG 7 1966

MUSIC

MASSACHUSETTS

LENOX (Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood)—Wednesday, 8 p.m., Gala Concert in the Music Shed with the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Friday, 9 p.m., Sixten Ehrling will conduct Symphony No. 1 by Sibelius and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Saturday, 8 p.m., Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis, Lisa's Scene and Arioso from Tchaikovsky's The Queen of Spades and Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from Gotterdammerung. Jane Marsh and Stephen Kates, winners in the Tchaikovsky Music Competition, will also perform.

Sunday, 2:30 p.m., Masuko Ushioda of Japan and the American pianist Misha Dichter, winners in the Tchaikovsky Music Competition, will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

158

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 7, 1966

CAREERS IN THE MAKING — Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, discusses next weekend's Tanglewood programs with Veronica Tyler, left, and Jane Marsh, second and first place winners in the annual Tchaikovsky Voice Competition. Miss Marsh has just signed an exclusive contract with RCA Victor.

'Gala Concert' Wednesday

Special guests at the annual Gala Evening at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will include Aaron Copeland and Senator Edward M. Kennedy.

Begginning at 3:30 there will be continous performances by the members of the Music Center through the supper hour. The Gala Concert, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland, will begin at 8:00 p.m. in the Music Shed on the Lenox, Mass., grounds.

Copland, who resigned last year as Chairman of he faculty of the Music Center, will open the concert with Brahm's Variations on a Theme of Hayden. Later in the evening he will conduct his own Lincoln Portrait which will be narrated by Senator Kennedy.

Soprano Veronica Tyler, who placed second in this year's Tchaikovsky Voice Competition, will be soloist with Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony in Korngold's "Marietta's Lied" and in an aria from Puccini's "La Boheme."

During intermission, Leinsdorf will award prizes to members of the Center who have distinquished themselves at this summer's session.

Following the interval, the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras will be led by Copland in a performance of the latter's El Salon Mexico.

The concert will close with Leinsdorf conducting the rearly 200 musicians in Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries and Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture.

Several cannon and salute guns will be fired during the Tchaikovsky work at approprite places in the score. The guns will be placed on the lawn near the Main House of Tanglewood. A fireworks display will follow the concert.

Tickets for the Gala Evening are available at the Tanglewood box office in Lenox, Mass. Reserved seats are $6, $5, $4, and $3.50 with general admissions on sale for $2.50 on the day of the program.

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 153,000
AUG 13 1966

Sen. Kennedy Reads Copland's 'Lincoln'

LENOX, Mass.—(UPI)—Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, in a new role as a dramatic narrator, read a touching tribute Wednesday night to an assassinated President at the Tanglewood Music Festival.

About 6,000 persons sat in the Festival shed or sprawled on the grass outside to hear Kennedy read Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" to a background of music performed by the Boston Symphony. He was given a standing ovation and brought back for four bows.

Proceeds from the concert went to the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer music school.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
AUG 12 1966

Edward Kennedy Does A Role at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11 (UPI)—Senator Edward M. Kennedy appeared last night in a new role as a dramatic narrator at the Tanglewood music festival, reading a touching tribute to an assassinated President.

About 6,000 persons sat in the festival shed or sprawled on the grass outside to hear the brother of President Kennedy narrator in Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" with the Boston Symphony. He was given a standing ovation.

Proceeds from the concert went to the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer music school.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 11 1966

Sen. E. M. Kennedy And Soprano Share Tanglewood Gala

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and Soprano Veronica Tyler were the stars at the Gala Evening at Tanglewood last night.

Sen. Kennedy narrated Aaron Copeland's "Lincoln Portrait", while the composer conducted the work.

Veronica Tyler sang "Dupuis le Jour" from Charpentier's "Louise" and "Si, Mi Chiamano Mimi" from Puccni's "La Boheme," as Ehrich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Awards were presented to the prize winners at the Berkshire Music Center at intermission.

In the program's second half, Aaron Copland conducted his "El Salon Mexico" and Mr. Leinsdorf directed Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture."

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
AUG 12 1966

6,000 Hear Ted's 'Lincoln Portrait'

LENOX (UPI) — There stood Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., reading a touching tribute to an assassinated President.

And in the background was the moving music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Some 6,000 persons sat in rows or sparwled on the dewy grass or munched on box lunches.

It was The Gala Evening at the Berkshire Music Center Wednesday and Kennedy was the honored guest. He read Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait."

A standing ovation brought Kennedy back for four bows.

Proceeds from the concert went to the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer music school. The center was set up in 1940 when Serge Koussevitsky was director of the symphony.

An official at Tanglewood said Kennedy was invited because of the slose connection between the family and the orchestra, and his friendship with conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

The spokesman said, "The orchestra performed the mass in the cathedral after the death of Presidnet John F. Kennedy and of course there was that benefit this year for the mentally retarded children's fund in Symphony Hall."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 13 1966

'1812 Overture'

Performance This Week a First For Both Eastover and the BSO

Whitestone

Light from two cannons firing a split second apart made it seem as though BSO assistant conductor Charles Wilson, at right, had two left arms as he cued cannoneers.

LENOX — George Bisacca, impressario of the cannon section in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" at Tanglewood Wednesday, has been firing cannons on his Eastover resort for several years, but this was his first performance with a symphony orchestra.

It was also a first for the use of live cannon fire by the BSO, or its Pops Orchestra, according to its public relations official, Sanford Sistare. He said that when the orchestra decided to play the overture, someone suggested that cannons be used, as called for by Tchailkovsky. The orchestra contacted Bisacca and he agreed to perform.

Bisacca used six cannons and had six assistants. Though none had performed with an orchestra before, according to officials of the orchestra, they performed perfectly.

One of the problems was the time it took for the sound of the music to travel from the stage in the Shed, where the orchestra was set up, to the lawn in front of the main house, where the cannoneers were set up. It was necessary to make some arrangement to eliminate this time lag for a flawless performance.

George Biscacca
Cannon impressario

To accomplish this, BSO assistant conductor Charles Wilson, at the site of the cannons, was equipped with earphones bringing the orchestra's performance to him instantaneously, and a closed-circuit TV picture of BSO conductor Erich Leinsdorff on the podium. With these and a copy of the score, Wilson gave the cannoneers their cues.

The cannoneers instruments included a large Civil War cannon, a 12-pound naval howitzer, two Civil War six pounders, and a small Naval brass-tube cannon, all more than 100 years old, and a sixth cannon of more recent vintage. The last was the first one Bisacca had bought in acquiring his collection. It was manufactured by the Dixie Gun Works.

Five of the six cannons were loaded with nearly a pound of powder, according to John Valeri of Eastover, a member of the crew. Aluminum foil was used to pack the charges and accounted for the brilliant flashes that were even seen by those facing the orchestra in the shed. The sixth cannon was loaded with a small bag of powder.

Bisacca fired the two largest cannons himself and directed the firing of the other four. After Wednesday's performance it could be they will be in demand by the several other symphony orchestras which play outdoor concerts during the summer. The question then will be, will the cannoneers have to join the musician's union?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 11 1966

Whitestone

GALA GUEST at last night's annual Tanglewood concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center was Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, second from right, here chatting with Boston Symphony Orchestra director Erich Leinsdorf, Mrs. Kennedy and composer Aaron Copland.

PAGE ONE

Tanglewood Gala Concert Draws 6,635

A crowd of 6,635 was on hand for last night's firework-studded gala concert at Tanglewood, performed by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras.

Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the BSO, and Aaron Copland, professor emeritus of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, shared the conducting honors for the program, which is presented annually for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center's scholarship fund.

A feature of the evening was Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's narration of Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" while Copland conducted.

A highlight of the evening was the awarding, at intermission, of several prizes to students of the Berkshire Music Center, many of whom participated in the gala concert. The Henry B. Cabot award for excellence of performance, established by the BSO membership association in honor of the orchestra's long-time chairman of the board of trustees, was presented by George Zazofsky, president of the association. The award was shared by Per Andreas Brevig, a Norwegian trombonist who is currently completing a graduate course of study at the Juilliard School of Music, and Don A. Erlich, a violist from Roslyn Heights, N.Y.

Other Awards

Leinsdorf presented the remainder of the awards, which included the High Fidelity Magazine prize, awarded each year to a talented member of any department at the Berkshire Music Center. Miss Phyllis M. Bryn-Julson of Moorhead, Minn., a student at Syracuse (N.Y.) University, was the recipient of this year's prize.

The Albert Spalding prize for outstanding instrumental accomplishment was presented to Rob Roy McGregor Jr., trumpet, of Midland, Mich. The combined Koussevitzky memorial conducting prize and the Eleanor R. Crane memorial prize was awarded to Lawrence Foster of Los Angeles, Calif.

Several other prizes were awarded back stage before the intermission. They included the Stuart Haupt memorial prize, to John R. Fenstermaker of Indianapolis; the Benjamin Silverstein prize, to Masako Yandgida of Tokyo; and the Gregor Piatigorsky prize, which was shared by James B. Kregor of Beverly Hills, Calif., and Jerome Patterson of Easton, Conn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 14,186
AUG 12 1966

Tanglewood's Gala Evening

It was the annual Gala Evening Benefit Program at Tanglewood, Wednesday; actually starting at 3:15 in the afternoon, with simultaneous and continuous performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center. First, the Berkshire Music Center Fellowship singers in a delightfully rendered program of Schutz, Scarlatti, Beethoven, Debussy, Granados, Ravel and Webern in the chamber music hall.

On the main house porch, a wind quintet and sextet alternately performed Mozart and Nielsen, the Tanglewood Institute Orchestra giving good account of assorted works in the theatre-concert hall. String quartets and contemporary, music more avant garde, really, preceded the always charming choral cocktail before and during picnic lunches enjoyed on and around the main house lawns.

About 7,000 attendants, behaving in definitely more orderly manner than for the Pops Concert, were undoubtedly awed and impressed by the appearance of Sen. Edward Kennedy, who narrated, very simply, the text for Aaron Copland's stirring "Lincoln Portrait," directed by the composer.

Beginning the evening's program at 8:00 Copland also conducted the laudable Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn." Leinsdorf took over then for a thrilling and deeply touching performance by Veronica Tyler, (and the orchestra), second prize winner in the recent Tschaikowsky vocal competition, of Korngold's "Marietta's Lied," and Puccini's "Si, Mi Chipmano Mimi" from La Boheme. As Leinsdorf later said during the prize-awarding intermission, Miss Tyler has an "uncanny ability to sing any intervals with perfect pitch" and placement.

Surprisingly clear and companionably integrated was the second half, when the BSO was joined by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, about 180 in all together. Copland happily directed his stringless "El Salon Mexico" in which he captures the Mexico of the tourists, admittedly through themes borrowed from collections of various authors, erudite and otherwise, the works connected with a popular dance hall in Mexico City.

Again Leinsdorf took the podium, for Wagner's swinging "Ride of the Valkyries," which was definitely topped by Tschaikowsky's 1812 Overture, complete with Civil War cannons and salute guns borrowed from Eastover, the cannoneers directed Charles Wilson. Signifying a great historical event, the French siege of Moscow, progress and retreat was easily followed, the national anthems ringing out with grand spirit, the final victorious hymn, "God Preserve Thy People," an uplifting climax. But the cannonades were the high point, aimed over Stockbridge Bowl, no casualties reported as yet, until a brilliant display of fireworks brought the popular-classico celebration to a light-hearted close.

Concerning the Berkshire Music Center, Erich Leinsdorf noted that since 1940, 5700 students had attended, 650 from foreign countries, with 18 singers in the current Metropolitan roster, others as heads of schools, orchestra directors, performers and teachers all over the world. Before the actual student awards, Leinsdorf also singularly thanked the guest artists with appropriate and heartfelt phrases.

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,168
AUG 12 1966

Down in Berkshire

Tanglewood Concert Successful

LENOX — The fireworks - studded concert at Tanglewood Wednesday was attended by a crowd of 6,635. The combined forces of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestras presented the program for the benefit of the Center's scholarship fund. A feature of the evening was Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's narration of Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" while the composer conducted. Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of BSO, and Copland of the Center faculty shared the conducting honors.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
AUG 11 1966

Vein of Tragedy Marks Reading By Senator 'Ted'

By DAVID R. ELLIS

LENOX—The vein of tragedy in American politics was touched Wednesday night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as Sen. Edward M. Kennedy read Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait."

There was an ironic interplay with Sen. Kennedy, the brother of a martyred president, reading a work about another martyr.

Senator "Ted" won the best hand of the night from an audience of more than 6000 people at The Gala Evening of the Berkshire Music Center. Kennedy was called back for four bows.

(Continuel on Page Eleven)

Tragedy Marks Reading by 'Ted' hony orchestra, would prove a powerful drawing card on any stage, entertainment or political.

The concert was held for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's Summer music school. The center was established in 1940, when the symphony was under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

The weather was hot and muggy, bringing out the best and the worst in feminine attire.

In the acres of parking area, every other car seemed to be from New York, people coming across the line, only 10 miles or so west, to hear how the brother of their Senator Kennedy sounded.

A Tanglewood official said that Sen. Kennedy had been invited to join in the benefit performance because of the connection between the family and the orchestra, as well as his friendship with Erich Leinsdorf.

WIFE, SISTERS ATTEND

"The orchestra performed the Mass in the Cathedral after the death of President Kennedy and of course there was that benefit this year for the mentally retarded children's fund in Symphony Hall," he said.

Sen. Kennedy flew in from Washington to Barnes Airport in Westfield about 6:30 p.m. and drove the rest of the way to Lennox.

In addition, his wife, Joan and two sisters, Mrs. Patricia Lawford and Mrs. Eunice Shriver, came from Hyannisport to attend the concert.

Following the performance, a reception for the principals was given by Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky in her home.

160

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357

AUG 11 1966

'A Gala Evening' At Tanglewood

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — "A Gala Evening" at Tanglewood, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, last night mingled tradition with highly novel aspects. The attendance of 6,635 below the phenomenal totals of the past two years was several times as great as throngs drawn before the present regime.

Gazette Review

Tradition began at 3:15 with student programs. Heard were soloists and a choral group from the Fellowship Singers, the Tanglewood Institute Orchestra, and separate wind and string programs by the Instrumental Fellows. Tanglewood composers displayed their music.

Evening Concert

In the eveing concert, the committee headed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky showed its ability to mingle showmanship with sound musical values and inspiration. It presented such potent performers as Aaron Copland, Veronica Tyler, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, in addition to the full forces of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf.

Copland, who retired last year from leadership of the Center, appeared in the dual role of conductor and composer. What he did with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brahms' "Variations on a Theme of Haydn" was excellent, but still the least exciting thing on the program.

'Lincoln Portrait'

As composer and conductor, Copland produced a tremendously effective "Lincoln Portrait," building up from thoughts of the land and folk from which Lincoln sprang, and bringing in hints of "Camptown Races" before the stirring words of Lincoln on slavery and other national matters were pronounced with the utmost simplicity and meaning by Senator Kennedy. He did not make the mistake of trying to produce a "Lincoln voice." He let the might words speak for themselves.

Veronica Tyler, soprano who recently won second prize at Moscow, earned and received the evening's finest salute. Her tones in familiar arias from "Louise" and "La Boheme" were an ecstatic mingling of purity and richeness. She seemed at all times to be singing with her whole being.

Devoted Support

Leinsdorf and the orchestra gave Miss Tyler the most devoted support.

The rest of the evening was an experience in sound, from the highly varied rhythms of Copland's "El Salon Mexico" to Leinsdorf's eloquent reading of the "Ride of the Valkyries" and the "1812 Overture," all done by the combined student and Boston orchestras of about 175 players. The sonorities were tremendous and given highly appropriate musical vehicles. The Overture was climaxed with the firing of a cannon and salute guns and fireworks on the lawn. Firewarks over the lake kept the audience from rushing away too quickly.

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Circ. 2,750

AUG 12 1966

Brother Reads Tribute To Late President

LENOX, Mass. UPI — There stood Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., reading a touching tribute to an assassinated President.

And in the background was the moving music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Some 6,000 persons sat in rows or sprawled on the dewy grass or munched on box lunches.

It was The Gala Evening at the Berkshire Music Center Wednesday and Kennedy was the honored guest. He read Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait."

A standing ovation brought Kennedy back for four bows.

Proceeds from the concert went to the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer music school. The center was set up in 1940 when Serge Koussevitsky was director of the symphony.

An official at Tanglewood said Kennedy was invited because of the close connection between the family and the orchestra, and his friendship with conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

The spokesman said, "The orchestra performed the Mass in the Cathedral after the death of President John F. Kennedy and of course there was that benefit this year for the mentally retarded children's fund in Symphony Hall."

Among those in attendance were Kennedy's wife Joan and his two sisters, Mrs. Patricia Lawford and Mrs. Eunice Shriver.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 11 1966

Music Review

Exciting Gala at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE ANNUAL "evening" of the Berkshire Music Center started in mid-afternoon yesterday with a voice recital by fellowship singers in the Tanglewood Chamber Music Hall. It continued with demonstrations to show every facet of the school's training resources, culminating in a display of fireworks over Stockbridge Bowl after the "gala" concert in the Shed.

This is not quite an accurate description, for the fireworks actually began at the concert in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra combined in a program conducted alternately by Aaron Copland, the first director of the Center, and Erich Leinsdorf, the music director of the Boston orchestra.

* * *

AFTER THE FIRST program of the afternoon, there followed a proud parade of exhibits to show what the Center accomplishes — and how well it does so. The Tanglewood Institute Orchestra gave the next program in the Theatre-concert hall, then came a program of wind music by instrumental fellows on the porch of the main house, then, in succession, a string chamber music program in the chamber music hall, the Tanglewood Composers Forum, a choral concert on the porch and finally, the main event, the gala concert.

Copland led the orchestra in the Brahms "Variations on a Theme by Haydn," and in two of his own compositions, "Lincoln Portrait" and "El Salon Mexico." Leinsdorf did the accompaniments to two arias by Moscow prize winner Veronica Tyler, and the Wagner "Ride of the Valkyries" and the Tchaikovsky "1812 Overture" — with real cannon off in the gardens.

* * *

THE CONCERT was exciting from beginning to end. Miss Tyler, whose talents the Boston Orchestra had appreciated and commandeered long before she gained Moscow recognition, sang just plain exquisitely. The first phrase of her "Depuis le jour" from Charpentier's "Louise" was intoned and shaped to display all her abaundant natural talent and her concentrated discipline. The young lady makes an exceptionally appealing impact, both in her appearance and in her manner. She continued to intrance her audience with "Si, mi chiamano Mimi," from Puccini's "La Boheme." They may call her "Mimi," but the poignancy of her art warrants an expression denoting beauty.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy needs no instructions on appearnig before a large audience, but his participation in musical events has not been a great part of his activities, it would seem, for he was not prepared for the ovation he received on entering and at the completion of his task as the narrator in the "Lincoln Portrait." The short text which Copland himself had selected and written was delivered not only with excellent voice and impressive articulation but, we thought we discerned, a deep appreciation of the message and its significance.

* * *

COPLAND'S MUSIC itself stands tall and erect, and the short musical epilogue after the narration rises to a spirit of sublimity that does things to one's spine.

Before the second half of the program got under way, Leinsdorf awarded the various prizes which have been established by individuals and institutions to the outstanding members of the Center's students. The president of the Boston orchestra members association, violinist George Zazofsky, was called upon to award the prizes the orchestra personnel have established in honor of orchestra president Henry B. Cabot, who has served on the board of trustees 34 years, and as chairman 21 years.

Trans[illegible] Telegram (e)
H[illegible]KE, Mass.
Cir[illegible],771

AUG 11 1966

Gala Evening Said Festive At Tanglewood

The annual Gala Evening at Tanglewood was a more festive occasion than ever Wednesday night. The threatening clouds kept their distance and picknickers by the hundreds started arriving in mid-afternoon to enjoy varied musical events that went right through the evening to a 10.30 display of fireworks.

This event is given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center and the gifted students of this summer school performed in a series of instrumental and choral programs held in the various buildings and on the porch of the main house. For the main concert in the big music shed at night, the student orchestra — "all our kids," as director Erich Leinsdorf called them — played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second part of the program.

It was a short bright program with two especially interesting features. One was the magnificent singing of Veronica Tyler, second prize winner at the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow, who sang "Depuis le Jour" from Louise by Charpentier and "Si, Mi Chiamano Mimi" from La Boheme, by Puccini. This young soprano has a strong mellow voice without a trace of sharpness in it. Her presentation was a delight.

The major advance billing was for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, who appeared with the orchestra as narrator in Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait." This highly dramatic composition combines the spoken word with the full orchestra in a most impressive way. The composer led the orchestra and Sen. Kennedy spoke the glowing words of Lincoln's polemic against slavery in a clear, strong voice—an excellent performance which the senator had not rehearsed with the orchestra.

Mr. Copland also conducted the opening piece, Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a.

During the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf and George Zazofsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented awards to Berkshire Music Center students who have done outstanding work as instrumentalists and conductors. These were all students in their 20's who have remarkable musical careers already on their record. They won their deserved applause from an audience of 6635 [illegible] was predominantly young people.

[illegible] super-orchestra, the stu[illegible] and the BSO, played a very [illegible] and catchy "El Salon Mexico" by Aaron Copland under the composer's baton. It was gay and fun, in keeping with the tome of the gala. Then Leinsdorf returned to the podium to lead a bold "Ride Of The Valkyrie." The finale was a great choice presented with style — Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, with five real cannon shooting from the lawn of the main house, followed by fireworks from the lake.

[illegible] Knickerbocker News
Wednesday, August [illegible], 1966

TANGLEWOOD — The gala evening (which began with continuous performances at 3:30 p.m. today) features Aar-

Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brahms 'Variations on a Theme of Haydn at 8 p.m. today, followed by Veronica Tyler's soloist with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the orchestra in Korngold's Lied and 'Si, mi, chiamano Mimi from Puccini's "La Boheme." Senator Edward M. Kennedy narrates Copland's Lincoln Portrait. At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Thursday, August 11, 1966

T-U at the Concert

A Gala Evening At Tanglewood

By JOAN SIMMONS

LENOX, Mass.—Although the word "gala" is generally overworked, when applied to Wednesday evening's extravaganza, "Gala evening at Tanglewood" it is indeed apt.

A marathon concert beginning at 3:30 p.m. ended shortly after 10 p.m. with a burst of fireworks, the only way to cap a performance that included a vast array of musical talent, Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Aaron Copland conducting his own work, and the 1812 Overture done up in splendor with two full orchestras, cannon and salute guns.

An annual event, the gala evening is essentially a recital for students at the Berkshire Music Center. For three hours the students performed, displaying all areas of performance, culminating in a vocal supper program at 6:30.

At 8 p.m., conductor Eric Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra took the stage joined by guests Aaron Copland, Senator Kennedy and Soprano Veronica Tyler to present the evening's formal concert amidst a general atmosphere which pervaded the festival grounds.

Brahm's superb set of "Variations on a Theme of Haydn" conducted by Mr. Copland, opened the concert. Copland appeared as a wizard evoking magical sounds form the instruments with a flourishing wave of his wand. His purely orchestral master-piece is a perennial concert favorite for reasons quite obvious in the lyrical beauty of Wednesday's performance.

Switching the emphasis to the vocal, Miss Tyler sang Charpentier'a "De puis le jour" from "Louise." and Puccini's "Si, mi chiamano Mimi" with all of the finesse which won her second prize in this year's Tchaikowsky Competition in Moscow, a rich vocal charm that has become familiar to Tanglewood audiences this summer.

EDWARD KENNEDY

As Mr. Leinsdorf again surrendered the podium to Mr. Copland, Senator Kennedy came forward to narrate the dramatic Copland composition, "Lincoln Portrait."

The brass and percussion underlined and accentuated the poetic narration of the words of the 16th President.

At the intermission, the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra joined the Boston Symph9uy on stage as Leinsdorf presented awards to students at the center who have distinguished themselves this summer.

The joint orchestras wound up the concert with booming performance of Copland's "El Salon Mexico" under his own direction. Leinsdorf then came forward a final time leading Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" and Tchaikowsky's "1812 Overture" assisted by cannon and salute guns from the lawn. All three of the works employ a crash and thunder emphatically and expertly handled by the musicians which gave the concluding fireworks the air of an anticlimax.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 10 1966

Tanglewood Rehearses 1812 Overture

PAGE ONE

Whitestone

Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, equipped with a TV monitor and earphones as well as the score, gives cue for firing of cannons to be used during performance of the 1812 Overture at tonight's gala evening at Tanglewood. George Bisacca of Eastover loaned seven cannons and crew to fire them.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 10 1966

Tanglewood Gala Tonight

LENOX—Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky of Lenox has announced the members of her committee for tonight's gala performances at Tanglewood.

Supper Program

Honorary members are Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mrs. Silvio O. Conte, Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf and Mrs. John A. Volpe. Members of the committee are Miss Anna R. Alexadre, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mme. Anna de Leuchteberg, Mrs. Paul K. Fodder, Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mrs. William Krol, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Stephen V. C. Morris, Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Mrs. John H. Rice, Mrs. J. C. Rosenfeld, Mrs. John L. Senior, Mrs. Joseph Silverstein, Mrs. Louis Speyer, Mrs. Albert Sterner, Mrs. Roger Voisin and Mrs. Willem Willeke.

Beginning at 3.15 the Berkshire Music Center will display all areas of performance in a series of concerts culminating in a supper program at 6.30. At 8 in the Music Shed the gala concert will begin with Aaron Copland, chairman emeritus of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn.

The concert will continue with Erich Leinsdorf conducting Korngold's Marietta's Lied and "Si, mi chiamano Mimi" from Puccini's "La Boheme." Veronica Tyler, who has made two appearances at Tanglewood this summer, will be the soloist. Miss Tyler received the second prize in the recent Tchaikovsky Music Competition in Moscow.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will join Copland and the orchestra to narrate the composer's Lincoln Portrait. At the intermission Leinsdorf will award prizes to the members of the Music Center who have done distinguished work this summer.

Following intermission the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will be on stage and Copland will conduct his "El Salon Mexico." Leinsdorf will close the concert with performances of Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries and Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture. At the appointed places in the 1812 Overture cannons and salute guns will be fired from the Tanglewood lawns. The evening's festivities will conclude with a display of fireworks over the lake.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
AUG 10 1966

Kennedy Tanglewood Narrator

Composer Aaron Copland will conduct his "Lincoln Portrait," with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy as narrator, in the feature of the Berkshire Music Center's gala concert at 8 tonight.

The program also includes Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," whose finale will be enlivened by cannon and salute guns.

The concert will begin at 3:30 p.m., running through a display of fireworks over the lake at the conclusion of the program.

The student orchestra will perform by itself and with the Boston Symphony, which opens the Festival for eight weeks.

Several Boston area musicians have received fellowships for Summer study at Tanglewood.

Pianist Judith R. Geber of Brighton has been active in the instrumental performing department under a grant from Chappel. Baritone Francis Hester, often a soloist with Boston choruses, has been performing with the Tanglewood Choir, under the Edgar B. Stern fellowship.

Virginia Leguia of Brookline is playing flute in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, under a Fromm Foundation grant. Composer David Borden, also of Brookline, holds a fellowship from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP).

Trombonist Richard Raum of Weymouth is a member of the center orchestra, and Donald Teeter of Boston is in the organ and piano division and active in rehearsals and concerts of the Tanglewood Choir.

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
AUG 12 1966

Edward Kennedy Does A Role at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11 (UPI)—Senator Edward M. Kennedy appeared last night in a new role as a dramatic narrator at the Tanglewood music festival, reading a touching tribute to an assassinated President.

About 6,000 persons sat in the festival shed or sprawled on the grass outside to hear the brother of President Kennedy as narrator in Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" with the Boston Symphony. He was given a standing ovation.

Proceeds from the concert went to the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer music school.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
AUG 21 1966

Musical Imbalance

To the Editor of The Herald:

It has been reported that the Wednesday (Aug. 10) performance at Tanglewood attracted so many from New York that every other car was registered in that state.

This should not come as a surprise. It is generally true at all concerts at Tanglewood. White Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic play in New York's Central Park and in Brooklyn to crowds estimated as high as 80,000, the Boston Symphony entertains more New Yorkers at Tanglewood.

Boston, and the heavily populated cities are being deprived while New Yorkers have a choice of many musical programs.

The distance to and from Tanglewood is too great for many and it would seem that a change in the musical programming and location is called for.

ESTHER O'BRIEN

Springfield

ewood

the orchestra in "Variations on a Haydn," and in two compositions, "Lin-" and "El Salon Leinsdorf did the ac- to two arias by winner Veronica Wagner "Ride of" and the Tchai- Overture" — with in the gardens.

* *

CERT was exciting to end. Miss talents the Boston appreciated and long before she recognition, exquisitely. The her "Depuis le Charpentier's intoned and all her abaun- and her con- ne. The young exceptionally ap- both in her ap- her manner. intrance her mi chiamano uccini's "La Bo- may call her poignancy of an expression

M. Kennedy ructions on appear- large audience, but in musical been a great part it would seem, prepared for the eived on entering completion of his narrator in the ail." The short pland himself had was deliv- with excellent pressive articula- thought we dis- appreciation of and its signifi-

* *

MUSIC itself nd erect, and the epilogue after the to a spirit of does things to econd half of the under way, Leins- the various prizes en established by institutions to members of the ts. The president orchestra mem- ciation, violinist sky, was called the prizes the or- have esta- nor of orchestra y B. Cabot, who the board of gus- and as chairman

Albany Times Union
Thursday, August 11, 1966

T-U at the Concert

A Gala Evening At Tanglewood

By JOAN SIMMONS

LENOX, Mass.—Although the word "gala" is generally overworked, when applied to Wednesday evening's extravaganza, "Gala evening at Tanglewood" it is indeed apt.

A marathon concert beginning at 3:30 p.m. ended shortly after 10 p.m. with a burst of fireworks, the only way to cap a performance that included a vast array of musical talent, Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Aaron Copland conducting his own work, and the 1812 Overture done up in splendor with two full orchestras, cannon and salute guns.

An annual event, the gala evening is essentially a recital for students at the Berkshire Music Center. For three hours the students performed, displaying all areas of performance, culminating in a vocal supper program at 6:30.

At 8 p.m., conductor Eric Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra took the stage joined by guests Aaron Copland, Senator Kennedy and Soprano Veronica Tyler to present the evening's formal concert amidst a general atmosphere which pervaded the festival grounds.

Brahm's superb set of "Variations on a Theme of Haydn" conducted by Mr. Copland, opened the concert. Copland appeared as a wizard evoking magical sounds form the instruments with a flourishing wave of his wand. His purely orchestral master-piece is a perennial concert favorite for reasons quite obvious in the lyrical beauty of Wednesday's performance.

Switching the emphasis to the vocal, Miss Tyler sang Charpentier'a "De puis le jour" from "Louise." and Puccini's "Si, mi chiamano Mimi" with all of the finesse which won her second prize in this year's Tchaikowsky Competition in Moscow, a rich vocal charm that has become familiar to Tanglewood audiences this summer.

EDWARD KENNEDY

As Mr. Leinsdorf again surrendered the podium to Mr. Copland, Senator Kennedy came forward to narrate the dramatic Copland composition, "Lincoln Portrait."

The brass and percussion underlined and accentuated the poetic narration of the words of the 16th President.

At the intermission, the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra joined the Boston Symphony on stage as Leinsdorf presented awards to students at the center who have distinguished themselves this summer.

The joint orchestras wound up the concert with booming performance of Copland's "El Salon Mexico" under his own direction. Leinsdorf then came forward a final time leading Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" and Tchaikowsky's "1812 Overture" assisted by cannon and salute guns from the lawn. All three of the works employ a crash and thunder emphatically and expertly handled by the musicians which gave the concluding fireworks the air of an anticlimax.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838

AUG 10 1966

Kennedy Tanglewood Narrator

Composer Aaron Copland will conduct his "Lincoln Portrait," with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy as narrator, in the feature of the Berkshire Music Center's gala concert at 8 tonight.

The program also includes Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," whose finale will be enlivened by cannon and salute guns.

The concert will begin at 3:30 p.m., running through a display of fireworks over the lake at the conclusion of the program.

The student orchestra will perform by itself and with the Boston Symphony, which opens the festival for eight weeks.

Several Boston area musicians have received fellowships for Summer study at Tanglewood.

Pianist Judith R. Geber of Brighton has been active in the instrumental performing department under a grant from Chappel. Baritone Francis Hester, often a soloist with Boston choruses, has been performing with the Tanglewood Choir, under the Edgar B. Stern fellowship.

Virginia Leguia of Brookline is playing flute in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, under a Fromm Foundation grant. Composer David Borden, also of Brookline, holds a fellowship from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP).

Trombonist Richard Raum of Weymouth is a member of the center orchestra, and Donald Teeter of Boston is in the organ and piano division and active in rehearsals and concerts of the Tanglewood Choir.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 10 1966

161

Tanglewood Rehearses 1812 Overture

PAGE ONE

Whitestone

Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, equipped with a TV monitor and earphones as well as the score, gives cue for firing of cannons to be used during performance of the 1812 Overture at tonight's gala evening at Tanglewood. George Bisacca of Eastover loaned seven cannons and crew to fire them.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

AUG 10 1966

Tanglewood Gala Tonight

LENOX—Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky of Lenox has announced the members of her committee for tonight's gala performances at Tanglewood.

Supper Program

Honorary members are Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mrs. Silvio O. Conte, Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf and Mrs. John A. Volpe. Members of the committee are Miss Anna R. Alexadre, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mme. Anna de Leuchteberg, Mrs. Paul K. Fodder, Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mrs. William Krol, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Stephen V. C. Morris, Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Mrs. John H. Rice, Mrs. J. C. Rosenfeld, Mrs. John L. Senior, Mrs. Joseph Silverstein, Mrs. Louis Speyer, Mrs. Albert Sterner, Mrs. Roger Voisin and Mrs. Willem Willeke.

Beginning at 3.15 the Berkshire Music Center will display all areas of performance in a series of concerts culminating in a supper program at 6.30. At 8 in the Music Shed the gala concert will begin with Aaron Copland, chairman emeritus of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn.

The concert will continue with Erich Leinsdorf conducting Korngold's Marietta's Lied and "Si, mi chiamano Mimi" from Puccini's "La Boheme." Veronica Tyler, who has made two appearances at Tanglewood this summer, will be the soloist. Miss Tyler received the second prize in the recent Tchaikovsky Music Competition in Moscow.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will join Copland and the orchestra to narrate the composer's Lincoln Portrait. At the intermission Leinsdorf will award prizes to the members of the Music Center who have done distinguished work this summer.

Following intermission the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will be on stage and Copland will conduct his "El Salon Mexico." Leinsdorf will close the concert with performances of Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries and Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture. At the appointed places in the 1812 Overture cannons and salute guns will be fired from the Tanglewood lawns. The evening's festivities will conclude with a display of fireworks over the lake.

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619

AUG 12 1966

Edward Kennedy Does A Role at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11 (UPI)—Senator Edward M. Kennedy appeared last night in a new role as a dramatic narrator at the Tanglewood music festival, reading a touching tribute to an assassinated President.

About 6,000 persons sat in the festival shed or sprawled on the grass outside to hear the brother of President Kennedy as narrator in Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" with the Boston Symphony. He was given a standing ovation.

Proceeds from the concert went to the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer music school.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099

AUG 21 1966

Musical Imbalance

To the Editor of The Herald:

It has been reported that the Wednesday (Aug. 10) performance at Tanglewood attracted so many from New York that every other car was registered in that state.

This should not come as a surprise. It is generally true at all concerts at Tanglewood. White Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic play in New York's Central Park and in Brooklyn to crowds estimated as high as 80,000, the Boston Symphony entertains more New Yorkers at Tanglewood.

Boston, and the heavily populated cities are being deprived while New Yorkers have a choice of many musical programs.

The distance to and from Tanglewood is too great for many and it would seem that a change in the musical programming and location is called for.

ESTHER O'BRIEN

Springfield

162

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

AUG 11 1966

Tanglewood Gala Excites Crowd With Intensity

Audience of 6635 Hears Kennedy And Veronica Tyler

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — The glamorous game at Tanglewood Wednesday night was Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, but his was not the only exciting voice from the stage of the great shed. The other belonged to Veronica Tyler, soprano.

Kennedy Narrates

Kennedy's voice generated excitement because of its surroundings. He was narrator for Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," a dramatic setting of excerpts from Lincoln's writings conducted Wednesday by the composer.

There was electricity in the air as he recited the words, deeply embedded in Copland's music and the Boston Symphony Orchestra's sumptuous sound.

Even so, it was preceded by a musical excitement of a different sort, equally as intense. Veronica Tyler, accompanied by the orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, sang "Depuis le Jour" from Charpentier's "Louise" and "Si, Mi Chiamano Mimi," from Puccini's "La Boheme."

She was magnificent.

Milk and Honey

She sang with sure control and a warmth of tone that was pure milk and honey.

The occasion was the annual "gala" series of one day concerts that present performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center and provide an opportunity to present awards to the summer's prize-winners at the center.

The awards were announced by Erich Leinsdorf, music director, and George Zazofsky, chairman of Boston Symphony Orchestra members, during the intermission of the evening concert.

Phyllis M. Bryn-Julson of Morehead, Minn., high fidelity prize.

Andreas Brevig of Norway and Don A. Ehrlich of Roslyn Heights, N. Y., Henry B. Cabot Prizes.

Rob Roy McGregor, Jr., of Midland, Mich., Albert Spalding Prize for "most promising and outstanding instrumentalist."

Lawrence Foster of Los Angeles, Koussevitzky Memorial Prize for conducting and the Eleanor R. Crane Memorial Prize.

John R. Fenstermaker of Indianapolis, Stuart Haupt Memorial Prize.

John H. Cohen of France, Benjamin H. Delson Prize.

Masako Yanagida of Tokyo, Joseph Silverstein Prize.

James B. Kreger of Beverly Hills, Cal., and Jerome Patterson of Easton, Conn., Gregor Piatigorsky Prizes.

Unusual Sounds

In addition to the excitement of Veronica Tyler's voice and Sen. Kennedy's presence at the evening concert, the air was enlivened by a couple of unusual sounds.

One was the fulsome luxuriousness of the sound from the 180 instrumentalists that made up the orchestra for the second half of the evening concert — the combined Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center Orchestras.

Under Copland's direction they played his "El Salon Mexico" with surprising clarity and agility for so large an ensemble.

"1812 Overture"

And under Leinsdorf's direction the giant orchestra lent an appropriate vastness to the Tchaikovsky "1812 Overture."

Also there were cannons, five of them.

The cannons were there to supply reality to the explosions written into Tchaikovsky's overture. They were of civil war vintage, operated by lanyards and pointed across the valley of Stockbridge Bowl. They were augmented by aerial bombs, but they were loud enough by themselves.

It was a spectacular finish.

Soaring Fireworks

But there was more . . . the fireworks soaring over Mahkeenac Lake were visible (and audible) for many miles.

The day's festivities began about 15 minutes after the gates opened at 3.

There were 300 in the chamber music hall when the first concert began. It was a voice recital by Berkshire Music Center Fellowship singers.

Seven Composers

Seven composers from three centuries were on the program — Schutz, Scarlatti, Beethoven, Debussy, Ravel, Granados and Webern. The works presented, except for the first, were for soloists. The first was a rarely heard trio for basses by Schutz.

Then, as the audience grew, two concerts were given at 4.30. A wind sextet and a wind quintet played music by Mozart and Nielsen on the porch of the main house while the Tanglewood Institute Orchestra (about 55 youths played Wagner's overture to "Die Meistersinger," Handel's "Water Music" and Copland's "Outdoor Overture" in the theater concert-hall.

About 1200 had entered the grounds for the 4.30 concerts and by 5.30 when a string quartet began to play Mozart (K. 458) and Beethoven (Op. 59,O. 1) in the chamber music hall and a group of musical adventurers began to play avant garde music in the theater-concert hall, there were about 3000 in the auditoriums and wandering about the spacious lawns.

And when the 8 o'clock choral concert began on the porch of the main house, the audience, many of them with picnic supplies and joyfulness, had grown to 4000.

The total gate count for the day was 6635.

Count Variable

The musical count for the day was variable. Some of it was of student level, some of it casual, some of it surprisingly superior (such as the performance of Beethoven's Op. 59 string quartet), some of it entertaining in the Boston Pops manner (such as Copland's "El Salon Mexico") and some of it really great (most notably Veronica Tyler's vocal magnificence.

The annual Tanglewood gala is becoming more and more impressive. More listeners should try it. Somewhere in eight hours of music in seven concerts there must be something right.

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 25,302

AUG 16 1966

Tchaikovsky Featured At Tanglewood

Tchaikovsky and the winners of the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow have been a continuous feature of the concerts for the past few weekends at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This past week was no exception. The "Gala" Wednesday evening was marked by an inspired performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, complete with five firing cannons. It was, in the full sense of the word, a gala evening, with Aaron Copland conducting his eloquent "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," played to the moving narration by Sen. Edward Kennedy. Copland returned to the podium to conduct his spirited, Spanish dance-syncopated "El Salon Mexico.

The program began with the Brahme Variation on a theme by Haydn, Op. 56a, also conducted by Aaron Copland, and two arias by Charpentier and Puccini, sung by Miss Veronica Tyler, second prize winner of the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow, voice division.

The weekend programs were hardly less glorious. Friday's concert brought the illustrious Sixten Ehrling, director of the Detroit Symphony, to the stage conducting Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36. This was by far one of the least creative programs of the festival in many years; however, it was played with confidence and expert musicianship of the Boston, and a vigor that served to make the performance of both works, especially the Sibelius, interesting.

Saturday evening's program was changed due to sudden tonsilitis which attacked Miss Jane Marsh Saturday afternoon. Her place was graciously and mastenfully filled by Miss Vernonica Tyler, repeating her performance of Wednesday night with the two popular arias from the operas "Louise" and "La Boheme." She was, with her lyric tone and assured pitch, quite simply, magnificent.

The orchestral program included Hindemith's "Symphonic Metamorphosis of Themes by Carl Maria von Weber, the beautiful Beethovan Overture to Lenore, No. 3, Op. 72, and Wagner's Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey from "Die Gotterdammerun."

The star of Saturday evening's concert was cellist Stephen Kates, also a Tchaikovsky competition second prize winner at Moscow, in his first appearance in the U.S. since he won his award. His tone, in the difficult and demanding Shostakovitch Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 107, was brittle, hard and stern, assumedly just what the work's rough texture calls for. His technical brilliance and virtuoso musicianship made the performance of this concerto electrifying.

Sunday's program itself started with Wagner's Prelude to Act III, "Lohengrin," and the Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, before intermission. After the break came the desert and candy part of the program. . .a bit rich, but supremely satisfying and exciting. Masuko Ushioda, Manchurian-born Japanese Violinist, also a second prize winner at the Tchaikovsky's competition in Moscow, played with spirit and talented mastery, the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2 in G. minor.

Misha Dichter, who played the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1, in B-flat minor, Op. 23, was also a second prize winner in Moscow. Dichter's performance was stirring and exciting. This concerto, though not at all popular when it was composed in 1875, has become one of the standardized concertos of many pianists' repetoires. . at least those who possess technical brilliance. It is one of Van Cliburn's showpieces and it was with Tchaikovsky's First, as well as Rachmaninoff's Third that he won first prize in Moscow in 1958.

Sandwiched in-between the two ambitious concertos was Gunther Schuller's Two Movements forom "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee." Like the artist about and for whose paintings this piece was written, it is something of an enigma. However, both selections, The Twittering Machine, which really did twitter to the amusement of orchestra and audience, and Little Blue Devil, a creative jazz piece, were enjoyable and just plain fun. Schuller was on hand to recieve the audience's applause and appreciation. He was awarded the Mark M. Horblit Award for 1966 on Saturday. This award, established in 1947 by Horblit, is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States..." Starting Sunday evening, and continuing during this entire week, there is a Contemporary Music Festival being conducted nightly. This is considered a festival within a festival and attracts many contemporary musicians and composers from all parts of the world. Next weekend marks the 8th and final weekend of the Tanglewood Festival, winding up with performance of Beethovan's Ninth Symphony next Sunday afternoon.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 61,129

AUG 11 1966

Music: Sen. Kennedy Reads With Orchestra

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX —Last night's gala concert at Tanglewood may have broken all records as an extravaganza.

The was the big summer event to raise funds for the Bershire Music Center, educational department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Attendance was 6,635.

Headliner was Sen. Edward M. Kennedy as narrator for the Boston Symphony in Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," based on letters and speeches of Abraham Lincoln. Copland conducted.

Vocal soloist was Veronica Tyler, second prize winner in the Tchaikovsky vocal competition in Moscow.

To cap the climax, the Berkshire Center Orchestra of 80 players joined the Boston Symphony under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf and Copland.

The latter conducted the combined orchestra of 180 players in "El Salon Mexico." Leinsdorf led the huge orchestra in a clattering, volume - packed performance of Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" from the opera, "Die Walkure" and a performance to end all performances of Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" during which a cannon salute was fired on the Tanglewood grounds near the main house and some 200 yards from the Music Shed where the orchestra performed.

It as probably the biggest sound heard in Massachusetts since the Battle of Bunker Hill.

To fittingly crown all this sensationalism, there was a display of fireworks over nearby Stockbridge Bowl.

The orchestra's performance of Brahm's "Variations on a Theme of Haydn" had something less than its usual luster. In part, at least, this can be explained by placid directives from the podium. Copland was conductor.

His workable direction for "El Salon Mexico" was better adjusted to the increased volume of both orchestras, and the slap-dash of this parading folk tunes.

Kennedy

This is the first time that Senator Kennedy has given a major address without being introduced. His entrance on stage was greeted with the usual cordiality shown a Tanglewood soloist.

The performance of "A Lincoln Portrait" was given without benefit of rehearsal.

The senator read Lincoln's words attentively, expressively and with conviction. He watched Copland closely. There were no faltering, retarded, or delayed lines. It was a remarkable performance — additionally so without rehearsal. The reason was that the senator had a commitment in Washington and arrived only shortly before concert time.

Inspired Soloist

Miss Tyler sang as one inspired. She gave a splendid account of herself a couple of years ago in Worcester when she sang in Handel's "Messiah." The young lady has come a long way since then. Last night she sang "Depuis Le Jour" from Charpentier's opera "Louise" with a voice of dramatic intensity. The aria was beautiful of voice and mood.

The lesser test, in this instance, was "My Name is Mimi" from the Puccini opera. She encompassed the spirit of the aria from plaintive to ecstatic. Miss Tyler received an ovation in which conductor Leinsdorf joined. It's a wonder that Leinsdorf wasn't lifted off the podium by the volume of the "Valkyries" and "1812 Overture."

Certainly the Valkyries have never spurred their battlesteeds with so much clangor. Tchaikovsky himself regarded the "1812" as very noisy.

Pop Guns

Even Peter would have been overwhelmed by the splintered uproar of last night. Historically, it was performed as intended. The later fireworks sounded like so many pop guns after that musical bombardment. From 3:15 in the afternoon until the concert time, the Berkshire Center departments gave a demonstration of their achievements in Tanglewood's various concert halls.

Sixten Ehrling of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra conducted the Boston Symphony Friday night in the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival's seventh weekend. The program included Symphony No. 1 by Sibelius and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony.

163

dy Reads
chestra

n all this sen-
e was a display nearby Stocks performance ariations on a n" had some-

ts usual luster.
this can be ex-acid directives
n. Copland was direction for co" was better increased vol-estras, and the parading folk edy time that Sen-given a major being intro-ance on stage

the usual cora Tanglewood

ce of "A Lin-as given withearsal.
ead Lincoln's expressively onviction. He closely. There
, retarded, or was a remark-
— additional ehearsal. The he senator had in Washington shortly before

Soloist
g as one ina splendid aca couple of Worcester when Handel's "Meslady has come nce then. Last
"Depuis Le rpentier's opera
a voice of dra
The aria was and mood.
st, in this in-
My Name
Puccini opera
d the spirit plaintive to received an onductor Le a wonder t lifted off, th
volume of th
d "1812 Over

Valkyries h heir battlestee much clango himself regarded ery noisy.

Guns would have bee
y the splintesin night. Historical erformed as later firework many pop gu usical bombin
he afternoon un he, the Berkshi tments gave of their achieve glewood's variou

ng of the Detro chestra conduc ymphony Frida pening concert
Festival's seven program includ
1 by Sibelius an
Fourth Sym

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

AUG 10 1966

Kennedy Tanglewood Narrator

Composer Aaron Copland will conduct his "Lincoln Portrait," with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy as narrator, in the feature of the Berkshire Music Center's gala concert at 8 tonight.

The program also includes Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," whose finale will be enlivened by cannon and salute guns.

The concert will begin at 8:30 p.m., running through a display of fireworks over the lake at the conclusion of the program.

The student orchestra will perform by itself and with the Boston Symphony, which operates the Festival for eight weeks.

Several Boston area musicians have received fellowships for Summer study at Tanglewood.

Pianist Judith R. Geber of Brighton has been active in the instrumental performing department under a grant from Chappel. Baritone Francis Hester, often a soloist with Boston choruses, has been performing with the Tanglewood Choir, under the Edgar B. Stern fellowship.

Virginia Leguia of Brookline is playing flute in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, under a Fromm Foundation grant. Composer David Borden, also of Brookline, holds a fellowship from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP).

Trombonist Richard Raum of Weymouth is a member of the center orchestra, and Donald Teeter of Boston is in the organ and piano division and active in rehearsals and concerts of the Tanglewood Choir.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838

AUG 11 1966

Today in Society

Ted 'Lincoln' Makes a Hit

By MARJORIE SHERMAN

Last night the Kennedys stole the annual Berkshire Music Center Gala right out from under the noses of Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to say nothing of composers both living and dead.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, who flew to Westfield from Washington and drove to Tanglewood for the annual program benefiting the Berkshire Music Center, arrived too late to rehearse his role as Narrator in composer Aaron Copland's masterly "Lincoln Portrait." Copland conducted the performance.

Sen. Kennedy even edged Abe Lincoln a little for some of the youthful listeners, like 3-year-old Barry Gould of Maine, who whispered from the corner of the family picnic blanket, "I LIKE Mr. Lincoln, why isn't he President?"

As the senator started: "Fellow citizens, we cannot escape history. That is what Abraham Lincoln said," more than 8000 persons quietly craned their necks to see blonde Joan Kennedy and her sisters-in-law; Mrs. Sargent Shriver, Mrs. Peter Lawford and Mrs. Stephen Smith arrive at their center box seats with Mrs. Leinsdorf and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky. The Kennedy sisters all wore short chich cotton and bright colors, and Mrs. Koussevitzky looked like a Fragonard painting in her soft grey and white chiffon. She gave a party for 200 after the concert.

Narrator Kennedy captivated the crowd that listened in reverent stillness, both inside the big Shed and for a half mile around on the green lawn outside. In a clear and ringing voice he continued:

"For on the battleground at Gettysburg, this is what he said. He said 'that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion, that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.'"

The audience burst into cheers and applause that stopped the program and held players and people together in a trance of timelessness.

The 1966 award prizes at Tanglewood were:

The Henry Cabot Prize went to Per Brecig, 29-year-old trombone player from Norway and Don Ehrlich, 23-year-old viola player from Roslyn Heights, New York. The Albert Spalding prize for the most promising instrumentalist was awarded to Rob McGregor Jr., 22-year-old trumpeter from Midland, Mich. The Koussevitzky Memorial Conducting Prize and the Eleanor Crane Memorial Prize were received by Lawrence Foster, 24, who was a Conducting Fellow at this Summer session at the Music Center.

SHARING HER childhood memories of Summers at the beautiful Brooks place in Lenox, which her mother gave to the Boston Symphony, Mrs. Curtis Prout (Daphne Brooks), her husband, Dr. Prout, and their daughter Rosamond, of Dover, enjoy a Tanglewood stroll before the concert. (Whitestone)

Among the other prize winners was Masako Yanagida, a 22-year-old violinist from Tokyo who auditioned for Mr. Leinsdorf in Japan last May. Miss Yanagida won the Joseph Silverstein Award. Violinist, John Cohen, 22 (of Morocco) also received an award.

The Music Center, which was founded by the late Serge Koussevitzky in 1940, has offered experience and valuable training to some 5700 young musicians, and alumni are members of orchestras around the world, 32 of them serving in the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Last night's memorable program closed with the Tschaikovsky 1812 Overture played with cannon and salute guns and fireworks which were mirrored in the lake in brilliant color.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

AUG 21 1966

Mme. Serge Koussevitzky entertains following the 'gala,' greeting Conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

Composer Aaron Copland (top) conducts his "Lincoln Portrait" at Tanglewood, with Senator Edward Kennedy as narrator. The Boston Symphony Orchestra joined the capacity audience in a standing ovation for this impressive part of the "Gala" benefiting the Berkshire Music Center. Dutchess Anna de Leuchtenberg (above) and Harry Kraut enjoy the party.

Tanglewood:

Brilliant Programs Keep Koussevitsky's Dreams Alive

By Marjorie W. Sherman

When Mrs. Gorham Brooks turned to her young daughter Daphne, during a Boston Symphony Hall concert intermission 30 years ago, to tell her she had decided to give "Tanglewood," the family place in the Berkshires, to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra for Summer concerts, the little girl wanted the beloved conductor to know right away.

Immediately after the concert, they went backstage where the familiar figure, wrapped in his after-concert cape, was, as always, surrounded. with friends. When they told him, he embraced them with tears of joy and told them "this day a most cherished dream is come true."

He lived to see that dream materialize, and hundreds of Boston devotees, joined by thousands of music-minded men and women, make their way to this beautiful heart of the Berkshires from far places.

And here, among the same magnificent hemlocks, elms, and birches where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales," when he was the guest of William Aspinwall Tappan in 1848, Serge Koussevitzky opened the

Sherman continued on Page A-34

★

$10 peri Syn

anot with and

Tl youn them great perfo

La welco millio season figure.

The week's Music
gram t
Music
Choral
Patter
ductor

FILMED AS BOUND

Senator Kennedy's two sisters, Eunice Smith and Patricia Lawford, are Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf's box guests for the Gala at Tanglewood, where they also attended the handsome party at Mme. Koussevitzky's.

Successfull Tanglewood Gala

★ SHERMAN

Continued from Page A-25

$100,000 Music Shed with a memorable performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in 1938.

In 1940, the Berkshire Music Center, another cherished dream, was opened with a theatre, a Chamber Music Hall, and five small studios.

This Center was to draw talented young composers and players and with them, to share their finest skills, the greatest conductors, composers, and performing artists of the world.

Last year the Berkshire Festival welcomed more than a quarter of a million visitors during its eight-week season. This Summer will surpass that figure.

The audience at Tanglewood for this week's annual "Gala" benefitting the Music Center heard an outstanding program that began at 3:15 in the Chamber Music Hall, continued at 6:30 with a Choral Concert, for which Alfred Nash Patterson and Iva Dee Hiatt were conductors, and to the Music Shed at eight, where Senator Edward Kennedy was the narrator and Aaron Copland the conductor for Copland's "Lincoln Portrait."

The brilliant evening ended with cannon and salute guns booming over the lake for the Tchaikovsky 1812 Overture, followed by the burst of fireworks.

Senator Kennedy, who flew from Washington to Westfield and drove over to Tanglewood with his wife, arrived barely in time to take his place on the stage. Joan Kennedy watched from backstage, intent and serious, as her husband read the immortal Lincoln message from Gettysburg.

They joined the senator's sisters, Eunice (Smith) and Patricia (Lawford) in Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf's box, applause still coming from the vast audience of nearly 8000.

The Leinsdorfs and Kennedys, composer Copland, members of the orchestra and the Music Center were among Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky's guests at an after-concert party at her handsome house nearby, as were the dozen prize-winners of this season's awards at the Music Center.

(William H...)

MRS. DENNIS E. DRISCOLL

Virginia Ann Losordo Marries Lt D. E. Dris...

Miss Virginia Ann Losordo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis E. Driscoll, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Losordo, of Falmouth, were married in St. Anne's Church, Falmouth, by Rev. Thomas Driscoll, S.J. A reception followed at the Towers Motor Inn, Falmouth. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a peau de soie dress with a princess bodice, accented on the skirt. A beaded pillbox and pearls completed her ensemble. After a trip to Bermuda, the couple will live in Coronado, Calif. Mrs. Driscoll is a graduate of Stoughton High School and attended Bryant College. Her husband, a graduate of Stoughton High School, is a graduate of the Tower Coll... Air Force Officer's Candidate School, Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. He is a graduate of Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., and is a member of the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps. Lt. Driscoll is serving at Offutt Air Force Base, Nebraska.

MRS. GEORGE COMEAUX

(Hardina-Guidden)

Reilly, Stoughton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Tex, were married in Immaculate Conception Church, Stoughton, by Msgr. William Reilly Jr. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, William Reilly, Stoughton, was her sister's maid of honor. Christine Comeaux, Beverly Germano, Bridesmaids were Barbara Kelly, Bernice Bartown; Angelica Masis, Norwood; and Kathleen Walham, Stoughton, were bridesmaids. Corpus Christi Tex., was his brother's best man. Ushers were Robert Comeaux, Barytown; Edwin Comeaux, Stoughton; Paul Comeaux, Stamford, Ct.; Daniel Donovan, Millton; Robert Lauzeno, Dedham; and Robert McReilly, Stoughton. Frances Comeaux, Stoughton, was maid of honor. Ushers were Paul Comeaux, Bayrown; Edwin Comeaux, Millton; Daniel Donovan, Stamford, Ct.; Paul Lauzeno, Dedham; and Robert McReilly, Stoughton. After a trip to Bermuda the couple will live in Coronado, Calif. Mrs. Comeaux is a graduated from Stoughton High School of Education, Stoughton, and Daniel Comeaux is a graduate of the Tower College, Galesburg, Ill. Mrs. Comeaux is a member of the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps. Lt. Comeaux is a graduate of Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., and is a member of the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps.

MRS. BOGISLAV VON WENTZEL

Roberta Nolan Wed to Mr. Gray

Eleanor A. O'Leary Weds Lt. Boremann

Daughter Elizabeth Weds Mr. von Wentzel

Tracy City, Mrs. Fortique was her sister's matron of honor. She wore multicolor chiffon with a matching chiffon band in her hair. The bridesmaids were Phalaenopsis orchids and stephanopsis. Her bouquet was interwoven with orchids and white silk ribbon veil was fastened to her hair. The bridesmaids were Mrs. John Moors Washington, Mrs. John Moors Cabot, sister of the bridegroom, Mrs. Manchester and Mrs. Bogislav von Wentzel, West Germany, sister of Bertram Emmanuel Manchester. Mrs. Lewis Cabot, mother of the bridegroom, was in Mauldin of Ambassador Cabot of Washington, D.C., and Mrs. Lewis Cabot, the bride's brother, John G. L. Cabot, the bride's brother. The bridegroom's father, Mr. Lewis Cabot, is a graduate of Milton Academy and Yasser, the bride received an M.A.T. degree from Wesleyan University. Mr. von Wentzel, son of the late Ernst Hasso von Wentzel of Schwerin, Germany, is a graduate of the Freie Universität, Berlin, where he took his doctorate in political science. He and his bride will live in Berlin.

FILMED AS BOUND

TUESDAY CHAMBER MUSIC

165

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503

JUL 1 1966

...Brahms Weekend

The July 2 (8 p.m.) program will feature the Tanglewood and Boston Symphony Orchestra debut of Shmuel Ashkenasi who will join Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra in performing Brahms' Violin Concerto. The concert will begin with Wagner's Overture to Stravinsky's Suite from the ballet "Petrouchka."

Two of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's principla players, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Jules Eskin, cello, will be soloists in Brahms' Concerto for Violin and Cello July 3 (2.30 p.m.). Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 4 with Anne Elgar as soloist will complete the program.

Mr. Leinsdorf will begin the holiday concert July 4 (2:30) with Prokofiev's Symphony No. 1 which will be followed by the American composer Roger Session's Psalm 140 with Miss Elgar as soloist. Richard Strauss' tone poem Till Eulenspiegel will conclude the first half of the program. Following the intermission, the pianist Abbey Simon will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Brahms.

...Chamber Concerts To Open

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will open the Tuesday evening Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series of seven programs Tuesday in the Tanglewood Theater, Lenox.

Claude Frank will be pianist with the Chamber Players at Tuesday's concert which begins at 8. The program will consist of Mozart's Piano Quartet, Poulenc's Trio for Oboe, Bassoon, and Piano (1926), the Duo for Flute and Bassoon by Villa Lobos, and Schubert's Trio No. 1 for Violin, Cello and Piano.

Two Berkshire Music Center concerts this week will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Music Center's activities.

Sir Adrian Boult is scheduled to conduct the first concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in the Tanglewood Theater, Thursday at 8. His program will include Walton's Portsmouth Point Overture, the Horn Concerto No. 2 by Strauss with William Lane as soloist, and Vaughn Williams' London Symphony.

Next Sunday morning a concert of Baroque music will be presented in the theater at 10. Tannhauser and also include

LARAMIE, WYO.
BOOMERANG
D. 5,500

JULY 1 1966

Lenox String Quartet Sets Tuesday Concert

Protagonists of modern music, the Lenox String Quartet will appear Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Arts and Sciences auditorium at the University of Wyoming.

Formed in Lenox, Mass., the quartet consists of Peter Marsh, violin; Delmar Pettys, violin; Paul Hersh, viola; and Donald McCall, cello.

During four seasons residency at Berkshire Music Center, Mass., the four were on the staff of the composition department and acted in an advisory capacity to student composers as well as performing for a seminar in contemporary music various composers' forums.

The quartet has also been in residence at Princeton University and performed several concerts there for the school's seminar in advanced musical studies, as well as participating in readings of new compositions of seminar members.

Lenox Quartet members have been artists - in - residence at Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, since 1962. They achieved national prominence following a Nov. 23, 1959, concert sponsored by the Fromm Foundation and given at the New School in New York. The concert featured the first performances of works by Sessions, Kirchner, Babbitt, and Kremek.

The quartet has appeared on virtually every major chamber music series in the United States and recently completed a tour of Europe highlighted by several concerts at the Spoleto Festival in Italy.

There will be no admission charge for the Tuesday concert.

LARAMIE, WYO.
BOOMERANG
D. 5,500

JULY 3 1966

Lenox Quartet Plays Tuesday

Members of the Lenox string quartet, artists - in - residence at Grinnell College since 1962, will play in the University of Wyoming's arts and sciences auditorium Tuesday evening beginning at 7:30. The recital is open to the public as another in the series of events sponsored by the University's summer school.

The string quartet was organized in Lenox, Mass., where its associates were on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, better known as "Tanglewood."

Appearing here Tuesday evening will be Peter Marsh, violin; Delmar Pettys, violin; Paul Hersh, viola; and Donald McCall, cello.

Their program will include Mozart's Quartet in D Major, K. 575; Bela Bartok's Quartet No. 4 and Beethoven's Quartet in C Major, Opus 59, No. 3.

During their four seasons residency at Tanglewood they were on the staff of the composition department and acted in an advisory role to student composers as well as performing for the seminar in contemporary music and various composer's forums.

The quartet has also been in residence at Princeton University and gave several concerts there for the school's seminar in advanced musical studies, as well as participating in readings of new compositions of seminar students.

The quartet's schedule of American engagements has grown year after year with recitals in New York's Town Hall, University of California, San Francisco's museum of art, the Aspen Music Festival and Music School and in many other locales throughout the United States.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

JUL 6 1966

Music Review

BSO Chamber Players Open Tanglewood Series

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE CHAMBER music concerts at Tanglewood—a series of seven Tuesday evening programs—began last night with a performance by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Between two deeply ensconced favorites by Mozart and Schubert, a trio of Francis Poulenc for oboe, bassoon and piano and a duo by Heitor Villa-Lobos for flute and bassoon were fresh and new to the stage of the Theatre-Concert hall and provided unusual exhilaration to the evening.

The Mozart G minor piano quartet, played by Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, viola, Jules Eskin, cello, and Claude Frank, piano, and the Schubert B flat trio are like the most treasured permanent exhibits in a famous museum in the gallery where old masters are displayed. As music they need no further comment to enhance their place in musical history, but beside the more nearly contemporary pieces which required wind instruments, in this instance they were approached last night with admirable dignity, and a consistent search for tonal quality. They succeeded superlatively in this, to a point where caution seemed an obsession. In the Schubert which ended the program, there was an early release which allowed a little more robust style of playing; however, the Schubert is essentially a dainty morsel and the artists insisted on an exquisite tonal mood to the exclusion of eloquence.

* * *

THE POULENC trio, on the other hand, had the spontaneous exuberance of a children's playground. In addition, it was a sort of confutation, if anyone chooses to maintain that music is exhausted as a means of expression, that all has been said and that one must go to extremes—to freakishness— for the sake of novelty. The Poulenc trio is 40 years old (both he and Villa-Lobos died within the past decade) but the bouncy gaiety of the score is matched by the uncanny insight into the tonal possibilities of the instruments.

Pianist Frank was joined here by Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Sherman Walt, bassoon. They were far more than mere conveyors of a load of dew-fresh garden products. They were the embodiment of a zestful spirit in which Poulenc was raised far above the degree of clever pleasantness which some of his other music depicts. It was a riot of color and agility and would have to be placed in the modern gallery if music could be placed in a museum.

* * *

SO, TOO, would the Villa-Lobos. Doriot Anthony Dwyer joined her fellow-bassoonist Mr. Walt in a virtuoso display in which their consummate skill was brilliantly apparent. The music is an exploration of the potential limits of the instruments and exposes the scholarly curiosity of the composer. As with all the other works on the program, applause mingled with wild "Bravos!" followed the performance.

CHEYENNE, WYO.
WYOMING EAGLE
D. 11,000

JULY 5 1966

Lenox Quartet At UW Tonight

A public concert featuring the Lenox Quartet will be presented tonight at 7:30 o'clock in the University of Wyoming Arts and Sciences auditorium.

Members of the quartet are Peter Marsh, violin; Delmar Pettys, violin; Paul Hersh, viola; and Donald McCalla, cellist.

Presented by the UW summer school, the string quartet was formed in Lenox, Mass., where its members were on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, better known as "Tanglewood." During their four seasons' residency, they were on the staff of the composition department and acted in an advisory capacity to student composers as well as performing for a seminar in contemporary music and various composers' forums.

The quartet also has been in residence at Princeton university and performed several concerts there for the school's seminar in advanced musical studies, as well as participating in readings of new compositions of seminar members.

Lenox Quartet members have been artists-in-residence at Grinnell college, Grinnell, Iowa, since 1962. Their program tonight will include Quartet in D major, K. 575, Mozart; Quartet No. 4 (1928), Bartok; and Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, Beethoven.

There will be no admission charge.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

JUL 5 1966

Chamber Group Will Perform At Tanglewood

LENOX—The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will be heard in the first concert of the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series tonight at 8 in the Tanglewood Theatre. The Chamber Players, formed from the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1964, gave several concerts in the eastern part of the country during the winter and this spring made their first transcontinental tour.

The concert will begin with the Quartet in G Minor for Piano and Strings, K. 478, by Mozart, and will continue with Poulenc's Trio for Oboe, Bassoon and Piano (1926) and the Bachianas Brasileira No. 6 for Flute and Bassoon by Villa-Lobos. The second half of the concert will consist of Schubert's Trio No. 1 in B flat for Violin, Cello, and Piano, Op. 99.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, July 5, 1966

* * * NE

The Tuesday Evening Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series of seven programs opens at 8 tonight in the Tanglewood Theater at Lenox, Mass. The program will be presented by the Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 19644, with Claude Franke as pianist. It will consist of Mozart's "Piano Quarter, K. 478"; Poulenc's "Trio for Oboe, Bassoon and Piano (1926)"; the "Duo for Flute and Bassoon" by Villa Lobos, and Schubert's "Trio number 1 for violin, 'cello and piano, opus 99."

* * *

TUESDAY CHAMBER MUSIC

165

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503

JUL 1 1966

...Brahms Weekend

The July 2 (8 p.m.) program will feature the Tanglewood and Boston Symphony Orchestra debut of Shmuel Ashkenasi who will join Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra in performing Brahms' Violin Concerto. The concert will begin with Wagner's Overture to Stravinsky's Suite from the ballet "Petrouchka."

Two of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's principla players, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Jules Eskin, cello, will be soloists in Brahms' Concerto for Violin and Cello July 3 (2.30 p.m.). Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 4 with Anne Elgar as soloist will complete the program.

Mr. Leinsdorf will begin the holiday concert July 4 (2:30) with Prokofiev's Symphony No. 1 which will be followed by the American composer Roger Session's Psalm 140 with Miss Elgar as soloist. Richard Strauss' tone poem Till Eulenspiegel will conclude the first half of the program. Following the intermission, the pianist Abbey Simon will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Brahms.

...Chamber Concerts To Open

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will open the Tuesday evening Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series of seven programs Tuesday in the Tanglewood Theater, Lenox.

Claude Frank will be pianist with the Chamber Players at Tuesday's concert which begins at 8. The program will consist of Mozart's Piano Quartet, Poulenc's Trio for Oboe, Bassoon, and Piano (1926), the Duo for Flute and Bassoon by Villa Lobos, and Schubert's Trio No. 1 for Violin, Cello and Piano.

Two Berkshire Music Center concerts this week will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Music Center's activities.

Sir Adrian Boult is scheduled to conduct the first concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in the Tanglewood Theater, Thursday at 8. His program will include Walton's Portsmouth Point Overture, the Horn Concerto No. 2 by Strauss with William Lane as soloist, and Vaughn Williams' London Symphony.

Next Sunday morning a concert of Baroque music will be presented in the theater at 10. Tannhauser and also include

LARAMIE, WYO.
BOOMERANG
D. 5,500

JULY 1 1966

Lenox String Quartet Sets Tuesday Concert

Protagonists of modern music, the Lenox String Quartet will appear Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Arts and Sciences auditorium at the University of Wyoming.

Formed in Lenox, Mass., the quartet consists of Peter Marsh, violin; Delmar Pettys, violin; Paul Hersh, viola; and Donald McCall, cello.

During four seasons residency at Berkshire Music Center, Mass., the four were on the staff of the composition department and acted in an advisory capacity to student composers as well as performing for a seminar in contemporary music various composers' forums.

The quartet has also been in residence at Princeton University and performed several concerts there for the school's seminar in advanced musical studies, as well as participating in readings of new compositions of seminar members.

Lenox Quartet members have been artists - in - residence at Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, since 1962. They achieved national prominence following a Nov. 23, 1959, concert sponsored by the Fromm Foundation and given at the New School in New York. The concert featured the first performances of works by Sessions, Kirchner, Babbitt, and Krenek.

The quartet has appeared on virtually every major chamber music series in the United States and recently completed a tour of Europe highlighted by several concerts at the Spoleto Festival in Italy.

There will be no admission charge for the Tuesday concert.

LARAMIE, WYO.
BOOMERANG
D. 5,500

JULY 3 1966

Lenox Quartet Plays Tuesday

Members of the Lenox string quartet, artists - in - residence at Grinnell College since 1962, will play in the University of Wyoming's arts and sciences auditorium Tuesday evening beginning at 7:30. The recital is open to the public as another in the series of events sponsored by the University's summer school.

The string quartet was organized in Lenox, Mass., where its associates were on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, better known as "Tanglewood."

Appearing here Tuesday evening will be Peter Marsh, violin; Delmar Pettys, violin; Paul Hersh, viola; and Donald McCall, cello.

Their program will include Mozart's Quartet in D Major, K. 575; Bela Bartok's Quartet No. 4 and Beethoven's Quartet in C Major, Opus 59, No. 3.

During their four seasons residency at Tanglewood they were on the staff of the composition department and acted in an advisory role to student composers as well as performing for the seminar in contemporary music and various composer's forums.

The quartet has also been in residence at Princeton University and gave several concerts there for the school's seminar in advanced musical studies, as well as participating in readings of new compositions of seminar students.

The quartet's schedule of American engagements has grown year after year with recitals in New York's Town Hall, University of California, San Francisco's museum of art, the Aspen Music Festival and Music School and in many other locales throughout the United States.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

JUL 6 1966

Music Review

BSO Chamber Players Open Tanglewood Series

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE CHAMBER music concerts at Tanglewood—a series of seven Tuesday evening programs—began last night with a performance by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Between two deeply ensconced favorites by Mozart and Schubert, a trio of Francis Poulenc for oboe, bassoon and piano and a duo by Heitor Villa-Lobos for flute and bassoon were fresh and new to the stage of the Theatre-Concert hall and provided unusual exhilaration to the evening.

The Mozart G minor piano quartet, played by Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, viola, Jules Eskin, cello, and Claude Frank, piano, and the Schubert B flat trio are like the most treasured permanent exhibits in a famous museum in the gallery where old masters are displayed. As music they need no further comment to enhance their place in musical history, but beside the more nearly contemporary pieces which required wind instruments, in this instance they were approached last night with admirable dignity, and a consistent search for tonal quality. They succeeded superlatively in this, to a point where caution seemed an obsession. In the Schubert which ended the program, there was an early release which allowed a little more robust style of playing; however, the Schubert is essentially a dainty morsel and the artists insisted on an exquisite tonal mood to the exclusion of eloquence.

* * *

THE POULENC trio, on the other hand, had the spontaneous exuberance of a children's playground. In addition, it was a sort of confutation, if anyone chooses to maintain that music is exhausted as a means of expression, that all has been said and that one must go to extremes—to freakishness— for the sake of novelty. The Poulenc trio is 40 years old (both he and Villa-Lobos died within the past decade) but the bouncy gaiety of the score is matched by the uncanny insight into the tonal possibilities of the instruments.

Pianist Frank was joined here by Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Sherman Walt, bassoon. They were far more than mere conveyors of a load of dew-fresh garden products. They were the embodiment of a zestful spirit in which Poulenc was raised far above the degree of clever pleasantness which some of his other music depicts. It was a riot of color and agility and would have to be placed in the modern gallery if music could be placed in a museum.

* * *

SO, TOO, would the Villa-Lobos. Doriot Anthony Dwyer joined her fellow-bassoonist Mr. Walt in a virtuoso display in which their consummate skill was brilliantly apparent. The music is an exploration of the potential limits of the instruments and exposes the scholarly curiosity of the composer. As with all the other works on the program, applause mingled with wild "Bravos!" followed the performance.

CHEYENNE, WYO.
WYOMING EAGLE
D. 11,000

JULY 5 1966

Lenox Quartet At UW Tonight

A public concert featuring the Lenox Quartet will be presented tonight at 7:30 o'clock in the University of Wyoming Arts and Sciences auditorium.

Members of the quartet are Peter Marsh, violin; Delmar Pettys, violin; Paul Hersh, viola; and Donald McCalla, cellist.

Presented by the UW summer school, the string quartet was formed in Lenox, Mass., where its members were on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, better known as "Tanglewood." During their four seasons' residency, they were on the staff of the composition department and acted in an advisory capacity to student composers as well as performing for a seminar in contemporary music and various composers' forums.

The quartet also has been in residence at Princeton university and performed several concerts there for the school's seminar in advanced musical studies, as well as participating in readings of new compositions of seminar members.

Lenox Quartet members have been artists-in-residence at Grinnell college, Grinnell, Iowa, since 1962. Their program tonight will include Quartet in D major, K. 575, Mozart; Quartet No. 4 (1928), Bartok; and Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, Beethoven.

There will be no admission charge.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

JUL 5 1966

Chamber Group Will Perform At Tanglewood

LENOX—The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will be heard in the first concert of the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series tonight at 8 in the Tanglewood Theatre. The Chamber Players, formed from the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1964, gave several concerts in the eastern part of the country during the winter and this spring made their first transcontinental tour.

The concert will begin with the Quartet in G Minor for Piano and Strings, K. 478, by Mozart, and will continue with Poulenc's Trio for Oboe, Bassoon and Piano (1926) and the Bachianas Brasileira No. 6 for Flute and Bassoon by Villa-Lobos. The second half of the concert will consist of Schubert's Trio No. 1 in B flat for Violin, Cello, and Piano, Op. 99.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, July 5, 1966

* * * NC

The Tuesday Evening Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series of seven programs opens at 8 tonight in the Tanglewood Theater at Lenox, Mass. The program will be presented by the Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 19644, with Claude Franke as pianist. It will consist of Mozart's "Piano Quarter, K. 478"; Poulenc's "Trio for Oboe, Bassoon and Piano (1926)"; the "Duo for Flute and Bassoon" by Villa Lobos, and Schubert's "Trio number 1 for violin, 'cello and piano, opus 99."

* * *

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JULY 1 2 1966

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 1 2 1966

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
JULY 1 1 1966

CHAMBER GROUP AT TANGLEWOOD—The Guarneri Quartet, including Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley, violins; Michael Tree, viola, and David Soyer, cello, will make its first appearance in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series tonight at 8 o'clock in the Tanglewood Theatre. The quartet, formed as a professional group in 1965 after several summers of playing together in the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont, will perform Mozart's Quartet, K. 589, Five Pieces by Webern, and Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 127.

Trans[illegible]
NORTH A[illegible] Mass.
Circ [illegible]
JUL 1 1 1966

Guarneri Quartet To Play Tomorrow

The Guarneri Quartet, first formed as a professional chamber music group in 1965, will give the second concert in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series tomorrow in the Tanglewood Theater at 8 p. m.

The collaboration of the four players is a result of several summers of playing together at the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont. The members of the Guarneri Quartet are: Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley, violins; Michael Tree, viola; and David Soyer, cello.

For their first appearance at Tanglewood the Quartet will play Mozart's Quartet, K. 589, Five Pieces by Webern, and Beethoven's Quartet in E-flat, Op. 127.

The members of the Quartet chose the name "Guarneri" for their group since all four play instruments made by the famous Guarneri. In addition to extensive playing throughout the country the Guarneri Quartet is also quartet in-residence at Harpur College, Binghamton, New York.

Next week's chamber music concert will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, in a sonata recital. Mr. Totenberg is a member of the faculty of Boston University and is taking part in the Boston University at Tanglewood program this summer.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
JUL 1 9 1966

Roman Totenberg Is Evening Soloist

Roman Totenberg, violinist, will be the guest artist for the music concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight.

His program: Handel's Sonata a Cinque, with several of his students; Beethoven's Sonata in G, Op. 96, a sonata by Debussy, and the Sonata in D major by Prokofiev.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JULY 1 9 1966

Totenburg Featured

Violinist Roman Totenburg will be featured artist in tonights Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert at Tanglewood Lenox, Mass. at 8 p.m. A member of the Boston University faculty, Totenburg is teaching this summer at Tanglewood in the Boston University School of Fine Arts program at the Berkshire Music Center.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JUL 7 1966

Berkshire Chamber Series Opener Delightful

By JOAN SIMMONS

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players with Claude Frank opened the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Series Tuesday evening with a completely delightful program.

The ensemble was formed in 1964 from among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in order to allow the instrumentalist an extra measure of individuality not usually possible in a large orchestra. This freedom obviously pays extra dividends for both musician and audience.

The highlight of the performance was the Villa-Lobos Bachianas Brasileira No. 6, for Flute and Bassoon, which earned the musicians three curtain calls as Dorothy Anthony Dwyer on flute and Sherman Walt on bassoon took full advantage of the unusual combination of sound resulting form the pairing of the two instruments.

The Poulenc Trio for Oboe, Bassoon and Piano, with its fanciful composition, gave each of the musicians an opportunity to express individual humor. The first Presto movement drew laughs of amusement from the audience while the Andante contrasted the mood with a lyric melancholy and the final Rondo movement returned to the gaity of the first.

Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and Claude Frank, piano, were called back twice by an audience quite taken by the spirit of the work.

Other pieces on the program were Mozart's Quartet in G Minor for Piano and Strings, K. 478, with Frank, violinists Joseph Silverstein and Burton Fine, and cellist Jules Eskin, and Schubert's Trio No. 1 in B flat, for Violin, Cello and Piano, Op. 99.

The Chamber Music Series will include violinist Roman Totenberg and soprano Phyllis Curtin. The Boston Symphony Players, with Claud Frank, will appear again July 26.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
JUL 1 2 1966

Guarneri Quartet Featured Today At Tanglewood

LENOX — The Guarneri Quartet, first formed as a professional chamber music group in 1965, will give the second concert in the Berkshire Festival chamber music series tonight in the Tanglewood Theater at 8.

The collaboration of the four players is a result of several summers of playing together at the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont.

Members of the Guarneri Quartet are: Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley, violins; Michael Tree, viola; and David Soyer, cello.

For their first appearance at Tanglewood the quartet will play Mozart's Quartet, K. 589, Five Pieces by Webern, and Beethoven's Quartet in E-flat, Op. 127.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 1 9 1966

Chamber Concert Will Feature Mr. Totenberg

Violinist Roman Totenberg will be the featured artist in tonight's Berkshire Festival chamber music concert. Mr. Totenberg is a member of the Boston University faculty and is teaching this summer at Tanglewood in the Boston University School of Fine Arts program at the Berkshire Music Center.

With a chamber orchestra formed from members of the Music Center, Mr. Totenberg will begin the concert by performing the American premiere of the Concerto in G Minor for Violin. Two Oboes, and Strings by Johann Georg Pisendel (1687-1755).

The program will also include Beethoven's Sonata in G Major for Piano and Violin, Opus 96. After the intermission, Mr. Totenberg will be heard in Debussy's Sonata No. 3 in G Minor, and the Sonata No. 2 for Violin and Piano in D Major. Richard Corbett will be the pianist in this concert.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
JUL 1 9 1966

Violonist Tonight Gives Tanglewood Concert

Violinist Roman Totenberg will be the featured artist in tonight's Berkshire Festival chamber music concert at Lenox.

Totenberg is a member of the Boston University faculty and is teaching this summer at Tanglewood in the Boston University School of Fine Arts program at the center. With a chamber orchestra formed from members of the center, Totenberg will begin the concert by performing the American premiere of the Concerto in G minor for Violin, Two Oboes, and Strings by Johann Georg Pisendel (1687-1755).

The program will continue with Beethoven's Sonata in G major for Piano and Violin, Op. 96. After the intermission Totenberg will be heard in Debussy's Sonata No. 3 in G minor and the Sonata No. 2 for Violin and Piano in D major. Richard Corbett will be the pianist.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
JULY 1 9 1966

Totenberg Concert Set At Berkshire Festival

Roman Totenberg, violinist, will be the guest artist for the Berkshire Festival chamber music concert at 8 tonight at the Theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

The program will open with Handel's "Sonata a Cinque," in which Totenberg will be joined by several of his students. The chamber music program will continue with Beethoven's "Sonata in G, opus 96," a sonata by Debussy and the "Sonata in D major" by Prokoffiev.

Three Berkshire Music Center concerts will be available this week to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's activities. A program of chamber music will be presented at 8 p.m. tomorrow in the Chamber Music Hall and Sunday there will be a Baroque program in the Tanglewood Theater.

Erich Leinsdorf and Charles Wilson, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new assistant conductor, will share the conducting for the Thursday 8 p.m. Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JULY 1 2 1966

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 1 2 1966

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
JULY 1 1 1966

CHAMBER GROUP AT TANGLEWOOD—The Guarneri Quartet, including Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley, violins; Michael Tree, viola, and David Soyer, cello, will make its first appearance in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series tonight at 8 o'clock in the Tanglewood Theatre. The quartet, formed as a professional group in 1965 after several summers of playing together in the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont, will perform Mozart's Quartet, K. 589, Five Pieces by Webern, and Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 127.

Transcript-Tel.
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 1 1 1966

Guarneri Quartet To Play Tomorrow

The Guarneri Quartet, first formed as a professional chamber music group in 1965, will give the second concert in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music series tomorrow in the Tanglewood Theater at 8 p. m.

The collaboration of the four players is a result of several summers of playing together at the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont. The members of the Guarneri Quartet are: Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley, violins; Michael Tree, viola; and David Soyer, cello.

For their first appearance at Tanglewood the Quartet will play Mozart's Quartet, K. 589, Five Pieces by Webern, and Beethoven's Quartet in E-flat, Op. 127.

The members of the Quartet chose the name "Guarneri" for their group since all four play instruments made by the famous Guarneri. In addition to extensive playing throughout the country the Guarneri Quartet is also quartet in-residence at Harpur College, Binghamton, New York.

Next week's chamber music concert will feature Roman Totenberg, violin, in a sonata recital. Mr. Totenberg is a member of the faculty of Boston University and is taking part in the Boston University at Tanglewood program this summer.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
JUL 1 9 1966

Roman Totenberg Is Evening Soloist

Roman Totenberg, violinist, will be the guest artist for the music concert at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight.

His program: Handel's Sonata a Cinque, with several of his students; Beethoven's Sonata in G, Op. 96, a sonata by Debussy, and the Sonata in D major by Prokofiev.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JULY 1 9 1966

Totenburg Featured

Violinist Roman Totenburg will be featured artist in tonights Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Concert at Tanglewood Lenox, Mass. at 8 p.m. A member of the Boston University faculty, Totenburg is teaching this summer at Tanglewood in the Boston University School of Fine Arts program at the Berkshire Music Center.

TIMES [illegible]
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635
JUL 7 1966

Berkshire Chamber Series Opener Delightful

By JOAN SIMMONS

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players with Claude Frank opened the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music Series Tuesday evening with a completely delightful program.

The ensemble was formed in 1964 from among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in order to allow the instrumentalist an extra measure of individuality not usually possible in a large orchestra. This freedom obviously pays extra dividends for both musician and audience.

The highlight of the performance was the Villa-Lobos Bachianas Brasileira No. 6, for Flute and Bassoon, which earned the musicians three curtain calls as Dorothy Anthony Dwyer on flute and Sherman Walt on bassoon took full advantage of the unusual combination of sound resulting form the pairing of the two instruments.

The Poulenc Trio for Oboe, Bassoon and Piano, with its fanciful composition, gave each of the musicians an opportunity to express individual whims. The first Presto movement drew laughs of amusement from the audience while the Andante contrasted the mood with a lyric melancholy and the final Rondo movement returned to the gaity of the first.

Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and Claude Frank, piano, were called back twice by an audience quite taken by the spirit of the work.

Other pieces on the program were Mozart's Quartet in G Minor for Piano and Strings, K. 478, with Frank, violinists Joseph Silverstein and Burton Fine, and cellist Jules Eskin, and Schubert's Trio No. 1 in B flat, for Violin, Cello and Piano, Op. 99.

The Chamber Music Series will include violinist Roman Totenberg and soprano Phyllis Curtin. The Boston Symphony Players, with Claud Frank, will appear again July 26.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
JUL 1 2 1966

Guarneri Quartet Featured Today At Tanglewood

LENOX — The Guarneri Quartet, first formed as a professional chamber music group in 1965, will give the second concert in the Berkshire Festival chamber music series tonight in the Tanglewood Theater at 8.

The collaboration of the four players is a result of several summers of playing together at the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont.

Members of the Guarneri Quartet are: Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley, violins; Michael Tree, viola; and David Soyer, cello.

For their first appearance at Tanglewood the quartet will play Mozart's Quartet, K. 589, Five Pieces by Webern, and Beethoven's Quartet in E-flat, Op. 127.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 1 9 1966

Chamber Concert Will Feature Mr. Totenberg

Violinist Roman Totenberg will be the featured artist in tonight's Berkshire Festival chamber music concert. Mr. Totenberg is a member of the Boston University faculty and is teaching this summer at Tanglewood in the Boston University School of Fine Arts program at the Berkshire Music Center.

With a chamber orchestra formed from members of the Music Center, Mr. Totenberg will begin the concert by performing the American premiere of the Concerto in G Minor for Violin. Two Oboes, and Strings by Johann Georg Pisendel (1687-1755).

The program will also include Beethoven's Sonata in G Major for Piano and Violin, Opus 96. After the intermission, Mr. Totenberg will be heard in Debussy's Sonata No. 3 in G Minor, and the Sonata No. 2 for Violin and Piano in D Major. Richard Corbett will be the pianist in this concert.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
JUL 1 9 1966

Violonist Tonight Gives Tanglewood Concert

Violinist Roman Totenberg will be the featured artist in tonight's Berkshire Festival chamber music concert at Lenox.

Iotenberg is a member of the Boston University faculty and is teaching this summer at Tanglewood in the Boston University School of Fine Arts program at the center. With a chamber orchestra formed from members of the center, Totenberg will begin the concert by performing the American premiere of the Concerto in G minor for Violin, Two Oboes, and Strings by Johann Georg Pisendel (1687-1755).

The program will continue with Beethoven's Sonata in G major for Piano and Violin, Op. 96. After the intermission Totenberg will be heard in Debussy's Sonata No. 3 in G minor and the Sonata No. 2 for Violin and Piano in D major. Richard Corbett will be the pianist.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
JULY 1 9 1966

Totenberg Concert Set At Berkshire Festival

Roman Totenberg, violinist, will be the guest artist for the Berkshire Festival chamber music concert at 8 tonight at the Theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

The program will open with Handel's "Sonata a Cinque," in which Totenberg will be joined by several of his students. The chamber music program will continue with Beethoven's "Sonata in G, opus 96," a sonata by Debussy and the "Sonata in D major" by Prokoffiev.

Three Berkshire Music Center concerts will be available this week to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's activities. A program of chamber music will be presented at 8 p.m. tomorrow in the Chamber Music Hall and Sunday there will be a Baroque program in the Tanglewood Theater.

Erich Leinsdorf and Charles Wilson, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new assistant conductor, will share the conducting for the Thursday 8 p.m. Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert.

MOUNT KISCO TRADER
Sunday, July 10, 1966

Tanglewood Offers 3 Chamber Concerts

LENOX, Mass. — The second series of three concerts by a chamber orchestra of the Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians will take place at Tanglewood Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, July 15, 16, 17.

The three programs entirely devoted to the music of Johann Sebastian Bach will have Symon Goldberg and Erich Leinsdorf sharing the conducting. Mr. Goldberg, making his first appearance at the Berkshire Festival, will conduct and also be soloist at Friday evening's concert. The St. John Passion will be conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf Saturday evening.

Bach's Violin Concerto in E major with Mr. Goldberg, founder and conductor of the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra, as conductor and soloist will begin Friday's program at 9 p.m. For the balance of his program with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Goldberg has chosen the Suite No. 2, the first four fugues from "Art of the Fugue," and the Suite No. 4.

As soloists in Saturday's 8 p.m. performances of the St. John Passion, Mr. Leinsdorf has invited Walter Carriger, Phyllis Curtin, Ernst Haefliger, Thomas Paul, Norman Triegle, and Beverly Wolff. The chorus consists of the Tanglewood Choir, and the text will be sung in German.

SUNDAY at 2:30 p.m., Mr. Leinsdorf will begin the concert with the Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 and continue with the Cantata No. 55, "Ich armer Mensch" with Mr. Haefliger as soloist. Sunday's program and the Bach weekend at Tanglewood conclude with the Magnificat with Miss Curtin, Mr. Haefliger, Mr. Treigle, and Miss Wolff as soloists.

The weekend prelude Friday at 7 p.m. will consist of two brandenburg Concerti Nos. 6 and 3 performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Admission to the weekend prelude is provided at no extra cost for those holding tickets to Friday's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert.

Saturday morning at 10:30 the regular open rehearsal for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund will be held in the Music Shed.

The Guarneri Quartet will be the guest artists for the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert Tuesday, July 12 at 8 p.m. Their program in the Tanglewood Theatre will include Mozart's Quartet, K. 589; Five Pieces by Webern and Beethoven's Quartet in E-flat, Op. 127. The members of the Guarneri Quartet are Arnold Steinhardt, violin; John Dailey, violin; Michael Tree, viola; and David Soyer, cello.

DURING THE Berkshire Festival's third week the members of the Berkshire Music Center will present three concerts. The programs given by the Music Center are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Center's summer activities. Chamber music concerts will be given Wednesday July 13 at 8 and Sunday, July 17 at 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall, and a program of contemporary music will be presented in the Theatre Thursday, July 14 at 8 p.m.

Program and ticket information on all Tanglewood concerts may be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Mass., 01240 or by calling Tanglewood (413) 637-1600.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,897

JUL 26 1966

Boston Chamber Players At Tanglewood Tonight

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will make their second summer appearance in a chamber music concert at Tanglewood tonight at 8:00. Earlier in the Berkshire Festival season the Chamber Players played to an overflow audience at Tanglewood. That concert was their first public performance following the group's month-long transcontinental tour in the spring.

Tonight's concert will begin with Mozart's Flute Quartet, K. 285, performed by Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute. Fine and Everett Firth will be heard in Michael Colgrass' Variations for Four Drums and Viola, and Ralph Gomberg and Sherman Walt will play Alexei Haieff's Three Bagatelles for Oboe and Bassoon. Following the intermission pianist Claude Frank and James Stagliano, French horn, will join Silverstein for Brahms' Trio in E flat for Piano, Violin and Horn, Op. 40.

This concert will be the last Tanglewood program this summer by the group, all principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On Aug. 2 soprano Phyllis Curtin will be heard in recital at Tanglewood. She already has sung with the orchestra in Berkshire Festival concerts and also will be heard in the closing concert in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony Aug. 21.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766

JULY 2 6 1966

Chamber Music Tonight By Symphony Players

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will present their second concert in the Berkshire Festival chamber music series at 8 tonight in the Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Theater.

* * *

Their program with Claude Frank at the piano will include Mozart's "Flute Quartet, K. 478"; the "Variations for Four Drums and Viola" by Colgrass; Haieff's "Duo for Oboe and Bassoon" and the "Trio for Piano, Violin and Horn, opus 40," Brahms.

Two programs of chamber music and one by the Tanglewood Choir will be available this week for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center . . . The chamber music concerts will be given by members of the Music Center's fellowship program tomorrow at 8 p.m. and Sunday morning at 10 a.m. The Tanglewood choir program will be at the theater Thursday at 8 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503

JUL 26 1966

Symphony Chamber Players at Lenox

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will make their second summer appearance in a chamber music concert at Tanglewood this evening at 8 p.m.

Earlier in the current Berkshire Festival season the Chamber Players played to an overflow audience in the Tanglewood theater. That concert was their first public performance following the group's month long transcontinental tour in the spring.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN 122,607

JULY 2 1 1966

Tanglewood Crowd Hears An American Premiere

By JOAN SIMMONS

An enthusiastic Tanglewood audience received a triple treat Tuesday evening as violinist Roman Totenberg performed the American premiere of the two-hundred - year - old Concerto in G Minor for Violin, Two Oboes and Strings by Johann Pisendel, assisted by a truly outstanding student orchestra.

Pisendel, a well - known violinist in his time, was a contemporary of Handel and his music exhibits a certain relationship to that of Handel.

Totenberg is an accomplished technician but the most remarkable element in his performance is the interpretion and emotion which emanates from his gentility which overcame the cold dampness of the theater.

The string ensembles, all students from the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, where Totenberg is teaching this summer, most beautifully seconded the soloist.

The remainder of the concert consisted of sonatas by Beethoven, Dubussy and Prokofiev with Richard Corbett as piano accompanist. Corbett is an accomplished pianist and with Totenberg he became part of a most effective team.

In the Beethoven Sonata in G Major for Piano and Violin, Op. 96, as in all of his playing, Totenberg displayed a workmanship befitting a teacher, as he is, combined with the showmanship of a concert violinist, which he is also, in an almost perfect blend.

The Berkshire Chamber Music Festival continues on Tuesday evenings throughout the Tanglewood season in the theater on the grounds in Lenox, Mass. Next week's concert will present the Boston Symphony Chamber players with Claude Frank, piano. This group opened the chamber festival season two weeks ago with a completely enjoyable performance.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766

JULY 2 1 1966

Violinist Totenberg, Pianist Corbett In Masterful Debut at Tanglewood

By D. E. RITZ

Roman Totenberg, violinist, with Richard Corbett, pianist, presented three violin and piano sonatas, and Totenberg introduced a concerto by Pisendel in a first performance in this country at the Tuesday evening Chamber Music program in the Theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Totenberg, whom we had heard on one other occasion 14 years ago in this city, has a tremendous left-hand technique and probably the most complete mastery of bow intricacies we've ever come across. His approach to interpretation is entirely from the intellect; we could wish it had more warmth.

The Pisendel "Concerto in G minor" is written for violin, two oboes and chamber orchestra with harpsichord. The ensemble of Tuesday evening included 11 violins, three violas, two cellos and one bass. William Christie was at the harpsichord. Johann George Pisendel, who lived from 1687 to 1755, was a famous violinist and concertmaster of the Dresden Hofkappele. He was also a friend of Antonio Vivaldi and his writing was obviously greatly influenced by the latter.

* * *

Unfortunately, because of storm conditions, we were a bit late at the concert and so missed the opening "Largo" of the first movement. The work includes three movements, a "Largo-allegro," "Largo" and final "'Allegro." The two allegro movements were reminiscent of the Vivaldi idiom and the "Largo" movement was particularly lovely. Theoboe and harpsichord both play a very minor role in the work.

The Prokofiev "Sonata number 2 for violin and piano in D major, opus 94-bis" was written in consultation with Violinist David Oistrakh and is an amazing combination of fireworks and unusual melodies. Extremely interesting, it has a fascination of its own. We particularly admired the "Scherzo" and "'Allegro con brio" movements. The work is one that can only be played by persons endowed with fantastic techniques and Totenberg certainly has that.

Te Debussy "Sonata number 3 in G Minor," the only violin sonata by that master, is marked by his unmistakable impressionistic idiom throughout. Most impressive of its three movement is the "Intermede (fantasque et leger." with its inherent whimsy.

* * *

The Beethoven "Sonata in G major, opus 96," the last written by him for violin and piano, is a happy combination for the two solo instruments. In this we particularly admired the en rapport between Totenberg and Corbett in the opening movement with its bird-trill phrase that is dominant. The rich tone of Totenberg's instrument was most striking in the "Adagio" movement, and the doublestop passages in the opening and closing movements were true and full-toned.

The Tuesday evening series, which begin at 8 o'clock, includes seven programs. Other programs to be given this year include one by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players with Claude Frank at the piano, next Tuesday evening; Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Aug. 2; Lenox Quartet, Aug. 9; and the Composers' Quartet, a part of a Festival of Contemporary American Music, on Aug. 16.

168

PULASKI, VA.
SOUTHWEST TIMES
D. 5,000

JULY 22 1966

String Quartet To Appear At College On August 10

RADFORD -- The Lenox String Quartet, a distinguished young instrumental ensemble composed of former faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center (better known as Tanglewood) in Lenox, Mass., will appear at Radford College Aug. 10.

The group will present the final concert of the college's 1965-66 concert series at 8 p.m. at Preston Hall Auditorium.

During their four seasons residency at Tanglewood, they were on the staff of the composition department and acted in an advisory capacity to student composers as well as performing for the seminar in contemporary music and various composer's forums.

The quartet, consisting of Peter Marsh and Delmar Pettys on the violin, Paul Hersh performing on the viola and Donald McCall playing cello, also has been in residence at Princeton University and performed several concerts there for the school's seminar in advanced musical studies.

Since 1962, the quartet has been in residence at Grinnell College in Iowa. The group which has a reputation as protagonists of modern music has appeared on virtually every major chamber music series in the U. S. including New York's Town Hall, the University of California, San Francisco Museum of Art and the Aspen Music Festival and Music School.

Tickets for Radford College's 1966-67 concert series will be sold Aug. 10 at the Lenox Quartet Concert. All concerts will be at 8 p.m. at Preston Hall Auditorium.

The series includes "The Tempest" by the American Classic Theatre, Sept. 30; the Munich Chamber Orchestra, Nov. 10; the Goldovsky Opera, Feb. 8, 1967 and Jose Molina, "Bailes Espanoles," April 15, 1967. The fifth and final concert of the season will be announced later.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 20 1966

Music Review

BMC Chamber Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THERE HAVE BEEN few instances at Tanglewood in which a soloist has used his violin so much to make music, in distinction from seeking to make an effect with his instrument, as did Roman Totenberg in his recital with pianist Richard Corbett in the theatre last night.

The third concert in the chamber music series consisted of sonatas for "piano and violin," as Beethoven indicated, and examples by Debussy and Prokofieff for "violin and piano." These were preceded by a concerto for violin of Johann Georg Pisendel, with the accompaniment of an ensemble of 20 of the students Totenberg brought with him to the Berkshire Music Center in the first year of the plan whereby part of the music department of Boston University is utilized in conjunction with the Tanglewood school.

Pisendel was one of the leading violinists of Bach's day. This concerto was announced as the first American performance. It is a varied and agreeable piece. Although not a tremendous addition to the repertory, it was worthwhile to hear. Pisendel is remembered more for a humiliating trick he played on his arch-rival Veracini than for his music.

* * *

THE G MAJOR Beethoven sonata, Op. 96, is a remarkably complacent work after the storm and stress of the preceding nine. Indeed, musicians whose vision does not penetrate through an outer layer of notes play it as though it were an early Mozart. However Totenberg and Corbett opened it up to their large audience to reveal unsuspected depth and beauty and, particularly, the maturity of the late quartets. The deceptive simplicity of the early arpeggios yields profound meaning when shaped and inflected as they were last night.

The hop, skip and jump of the second subject was not convincingly valid at their accelerated tempo, but that was only one disputable detail. Totenberg extended his tonal range by playing some phrases "white," thus making those on which he applied varying degrees of vibrato all the more vivid and colorful. The entire four movements of the sonata are of a piece, but the surprising dramatic episodes of the finale were played with highly exciting contrasts.

* * *

THE LID of the piano was raised full tilt so that Corbett's most sympathetic playing could not but shade some of the gossamer passages of Debussy's only sonata for this duo, and obscure those in the D Major Prokofieff (Op. 94-bis). In the latter, notably in the last movement, the violin has to climb and descend fragile musical scaffolding to arrive at the peaks and caves to which the virtuoso movement leads.

Both of these sonatas — the French, some quarter-century [illegible] the Russian — are examples of music of the end of an era in which the use of the materials and the instruments and the processes of harmony are about to be abandoned. Last night's artists realized the fastidious grace of Debussy, and showed it plainly against the more gross humor and amplitude of the Prokofieff. It was a [illegible] evening for everyone but for an audience of which a good part was students, it was an extremely profitable one.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 27 1966

Music Review

Chamber Music Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FOURTH concert of the chamber music series at Tanglewood last night was the most carefree program presented on the Theatre stage within memory. There wasn't a problem in the music nor, indeed, in the performances. Playing with superabundant mastery, the Boston Symphony chamber players placed two short contemporary trifles between two of the most firmly established works in the repertory.

"Variations for Four Drums and Viola" of Michael Colgrass was expertly played by Everett Firth and Burton Fine, respectively. They consisted of several short musical episodes in which the young Colgrass, a Berkshire Music Center student in 1954, wrote with special insight into the character of the viola. For the percussion he wrote for an instrument of his own devising. The percussion section looked like a line of four burners on a stove. There were drumtops stretched over a frame without sides or lower heads that could be made to produce various gradients of modest volume, with either felt-padded sticks or nail-flips; they were tuned in a sequence of pitch steps. The several movements were all short and to the point. The rhythms were fascinating in several cases, and the violist played his soliloquies with eloquence.

A Duo for Oboe and Bassoon played by Ralph Gomberg and Sherman Walt, respectively, consisted of three bagatelles by Alexei Haieff, a Russian composer born in the first World War, who came to this country when he was seventeen. These are undeviatingly good fun, witty and full of humor, and written with an ingenuous simplicity. The first could well have been a delightful soft-shoe dance. In the andantino, Haieff uses the bassoon much as Stravinsky writes in the "Sacre." The whole thing would make a perfect vaudeville skit.

* * *

THE MOZART D major flute quartet was played by Joseph Silverstein, violin, violist Fine, Jules Eskin, cello, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute. The performance was utterly fascinating in its refinement and bounce. The Brahms Trio in E Flat for Piano Violin and Horn was distinguished by the verve and abandon with which Claude Frank, piano, violinist Silverstein and James Stagliano, horn, plunged into the rich and fertile writing of a century ago.

The Bostonians solved the matter of balance with satisfaction although string players are apt to underestimate the power of a flute. They show a concern for the wind instrument by playing with a certain daintiness which is not generally warranted. In the Brahms, Frank and Silverstein released their considerable tones to match the glorious tone of the horn. In the adagio mesto, the violin matched the horn tone with admirable sympathy in the second subject, playing with the same sustained monotone line the horn properly uses at that point. If he had tried to match the horn's playing each time the ascending fifth recurred in the first movement without an audible slide, there could have been no quibble.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JUL 21 1966

Guarneri Quartet At Tanglewood

The following paragraph was omitted from the review of the Guarneri String Quartet in Tuesday's Globe:

Schoenberg's Quartet No. 2, an extremely difficult piece also, benefited from the Guarneris' incisive rhythm, clean tone and exact pitch. In the first movement, the most dense and so in a way the hardest, there was some trouble with the group's tendency toward simplistic interpretation (one principal voice at a time, one strongly dominant high point in each phrase, etc.), and the texture was not properly clarified. And some stiffness in tempo transitions suggested that the work was not quite played in. Though the climatic high C did strain her, Helen Boatwright, an impeccable musician with a lovely and clear soprano, was an ideal singer for the piece.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

AUG 2 1966

Tanglewood Recital

LENOX—Soprano Phyllis Curtin, of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will give a recital at Tanglewood Tuesday night at 8:00. Miss Curtin will present a program of Italian, French, German and Portuguese songs. She will be accompanied by Richard Woitach.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766

AUG 2 1966

Miss Curtin Will Sing at Tanglewood

Phyllis Curtin, a member of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty this summer, will sing at 8 tonight in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music program in the Theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Her program tonight will be her only full length recital at Tanglewood. Proceeds of the chamber music series benefit the Berkshire Music Center.

The third Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert will be held Thursday at 8 p.m. in the theater and will consist of a concerto program with members of the Music Center as the soloists.

The final Berkshire presentation of the wek, a Baroque concert under the direction of Igor Kipnis, will be held Sunday at 10 a.m. in the theater.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

AUG 2 1966

Phyllis Curtin in Recital Tonight at Tanglewood

Soprano Phyllis Curtin, a summer resident of the Berkshires and a member of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty, will give a song recital at Tanglewood tonight at 8. This will be the fifth program in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert series. Miss Curtin will present a program of Italian, French, German and Portuguese songs by Rossini, Schubert, Strauss, Berlioz and Sciammarella.

In tonight's recital, she will be accompanied by Richard Woitach.

The complete program includes La Regata Veneziana and Adieux a la vie by Rossini; Six Songs by Schubert; Drei Lieder der Ophelia by Strauss; La Mort d'Ophelie and Zaide by Berlioz, and Cantigas de Amigo by Valdo Sciammarella.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 2 1966

Miss Curtin In Program This Evening

TANGLEWOOD — Soprano Phyllis Curtin, a summer resident of the Berkshires and a member of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty, will give a song recital at Tanglewood this evening at 8. This will be the fifth program in the Berkshire Festival chamber music concert series. Miss Curtin will present a program of Italian, French, German and Portuguese songs by Rossini, Schubert, Straus, Berlioz, and Sciammarella. She will be accompanied by Richard Woitach.

The complete program includes: La Regata Veneziana and Adieux a la vie by Rossini; Six Songs by Schubert; Drei Lieder der Ophelia by Strauss; La Mort d'Ophelie and Zaide by Berlioz; and Cantigas de Amigo by Valdo Sciammarella.

168

PULASKI, VA.
SOUTHWEST TIMES
D. 5,000

JULY 22 1966

String Quartet To Appear At College On August 10

RADFORD -- The Lenox String Quartet, a distinguished young instrumental ensemble composed of former faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center (better known as Tanglewood) in Lenox, Mass., will appear at Radford College Aug. 10.

The group will present the final concert of the college's 1965-66 concert series at 8 p.m. at Preston Hall Auditorium.

During their four seasons residency at Tanglewood, they were on the staff of the composition department and acted in an advisory capacity to student composers as well as performing for the seminar in contemporary music and various composer's forums.

The quartet, consisting of Peter Marsh and Delmar Pettys on the violin; Paul Hersh performing on the viola and Donald McCall playing cello, also has been in residence at Princeton University and performed several concerts there for the school's seminar in advanced musical studies.

Since 1962, the quartet has been in residence at Grinnell College in Iowa. The group which has a reputation as protagonists of modern music has appeared on virtually every major chamber music series in the U. S. including New York's Town Hall, the University of California, San Francisco Museum of Art and the Aspen Music Festival and Music School.

Tickets for Radford College's 1966-67 concert series will be sold Aug. 10 at the Lenox Quartet Concert. All concerts will be at 8 p.m. at Preston Hall Auditorium.

The series includes "The Tempest" by the American Classic Theatre, Sept. 30; the Munich Chamber Orchestra, Nov. 10; the Goldovsky Opera, Feb. 8, 1967 and Jose Molina, "Bailes Espanoles," April 15, 1967. The fifth and final concert of the season will be announced later.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 20 1966

Music Review

BMC Chamber Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THERE HAVE BEEN few instances at Tanglewood in which a soloist has used his violin so much to make music, in distinction from seeking to make an effect with his instrument, as did Roman Totenberg in his recital with pianist Richard Corbett in the theatre last night.

The third concert in the chamber music series consisted of sonatas for "piano and violin," as Beethoven indicated, and examples by Debussy and Prokofieff for "violin and piano." These were preceded by a concerto for violin of Johann Georg Pisendel, with the accompaniment of an ensemble of 20 of the students Totenberg brought with him to the Berkshire Music Center in the first year of the plan whereby part of the music department of Boston University is utilized in conjunction with the Tanglewood school.

Pisendel was one of the leading violinists of Bach's day. This concerto was announced as the first American performance. It is a varied and agreeable piece. Although not a tremendous addition to the repertory, it was worthwhile to hear. Pisendel is remembered more for a humiliating trick he played on his arch-rival Veracini than for his music.

* * *

THE G MAJOR Beethoven sonata, Op. 96, is a remarkably complacent work after the storm and stress of the preceding nine. Indeed, musicians whose vision does not penetrate through an outer layer of notes play it as though it were an early Mozart. However Totenberg and Corbett opened it up to their large audience to reveal unsuspected depth and beauty and, particularly, the maturity of the late quartets. The deceptive simplicity of the early arpeggios yields profound meaning when shaped and inflected as they were last night.

The hop, skip and jump of the second subject was not convincingly valid at their accelerated tempo, but that was only one disputable detail. Totenberg extended his tonal range by playing some phrases "white," thus making those on which he applied varying degrees of vibrato all the more vivid and colorful. The entire four movements of the sonata are of a piece, but the surprising dramatic episodes of the finale were played with highly exciting contrasts.

* * *

THE LID of the piano was raised full tilt so that Corbett's most sympathetic playing could not but shade some of the gossamer passages of Debussy's only sonata for this duo, and obscure those in the D Major Prokofieff (Op. 94-bis). In the latter, notably in the last movement, the violin has to climb and descend fragile musical scaffolding to arrive at the peaks and caves to which the virtuoso movement leads.

Both of these sonatas — the French, some quarter-century preceding the Russian—are examples of music of the end of an era, in which the use of the materials and the instruments and the processes of harmony are about to be abandoned. Last night's artists realized the fastidious grace of Debussy, and showed it plainly against the more gross humor and ambiance of the Prokofieff. It was a gratifying evening for everyone, but for an audience of which a good part was students, it was an extremely profitable one.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 27 1966

Music Review

Chamber Music Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FOURTH concert of the chamber music series at Tanglewood last night was the most carefree program presented on the Theatre stage within memory. There wasn't a problem in the music nor, indeed, in the performances. Playing with superabundant mastery, the Boston Symphony chamber players placed two short contemporary trifles between two of the most firmly established works in the repertory.

"Variations for Four Drums and Viola" of Michael Colgrass was expertly played by Everett Firth and Burton Fine, respectively. They consisted of several short musical episodes in which the young Colgrass, a Berkshire Music Center student in 1954, wrote with special insight into the character of the viola. For the percussion he wrote for an instrument of his own devising. The percussion section looked like a line of four burners on a stove. There were drumtops stretched over a frame without sides or lower heads that could be made to produce various gradients of modest volume, with either felt-padded sticks or nail-flips; they were tuned in a sequence of pitch steps. The several movements were all short and to the point. The rhythms were fascinating in several cases, and the violist played his soliloquies with eloquence.

A Duo for Oboe and Bassoon played by Ralph Gomberg and Sherman Walt, respectively, consisted of three bagatelles by Alexei Haieff, a Russian composer born in the first World War, who came to this country when he was seventeen. These are undeviatingly good fun, witty and full of humor, and written with an ingenuous simplicity. The first could well have been a delightful soft-shoe dance. In the andantino, Haieff uses the bassoon much as Stravinsky writes in the "Sacre." The whole thing would make a perfect vaudeville skit.

* * *

THE MOZART D major flute quartet was played by Joseph Silverstein, violin, violist Fine, Jules Eskin, cello, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute. The performance was utterly fascinating in its refinement and bounce. The Brahms Trio in E Flat for Piano Violin and Horn was distinguished by the verve and abandon with which Claude Frank, piano, violinist Silverstein and James Stagliano, horn, plunged into the rich and fertile writing of a century ago.

The Bostonians solved the matter of balance with satisfaction although string players are apt to underestimate the power of a flute. They show a concern for the wind instrument by playing with a certain daintiness which is not generally warranted. In the Brahms, Frank and Silverstein released their considerable tones to match the glorious tone of the horn. In the adagio mesto, the violin matched the horn tone with admirable sympathy in the second subject, playing with the same sustained monotone line the horn properly uses at that point. If he had tried to match the horn's playing each time the ascending fifth recurred in the first movement without an audible slide, there could have been no quibble.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JUL 21 1966

Guarneri Quartet At Tanglewood

The following paragraph was omitted from the review of the Guarneri String Quartet in Tuesday's Globe:

Schoenberg's Quartet No. 2, an extremely difficult piece also, benefited from the Guarneris' incisive rhythm, clean tone and exact pitch. In the first movement, the most dense and so in a way the hardest, there was some trouble with the group's tendency toward simplistic interpretation (one principal voice at a time, one strongly dominant high point in each phrase, etc.), and the texture was not properly clarified. And some stiffness in tempo transitions suggested that the work was not quite played in. Though the climatic high C did strain her, Helen Boatwright, an impeccable musician with a lovely and clear soprano, was an ideal singer for the piece.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

AUG 2 1966

Tanglewood Recital

LENOX—Soprano Phyllis Curtin, of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will give a recital at Tanglewood Tuesday night at 8:00. Miss Curtin will present a program of Italian, French, German and Portuguese songs. She will be accompanied by Richard Woitach.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766

AUG 2 1966

Miss Curtin Will Sing at Tanglewood

Phyllis Curtin, a member of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty this summer, will sing at 8 tonight in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music program in the Theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Her program tonight will be her only full length recital at Tanglewood. Proceeds of the chamber music series benefit the Berkshire Music Center.

The third Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert will be held Thursday at 8 p.m. in the theater and will consist of a concerto program with members of the Music Center as the soloists.

The final Berkshire presentation of the wek, a Baroque concert under the direction of Igor Kipnis, will be held Sunday at 10 a.m. in the theater.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

AUG 2 1966

Phyllis Curtin in Recital Tonight at Tanglewood

Soprano Phyllis Curtin, a summer resident of the Berkshires and a member of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty, will give a song recital at Tanglewood tonight at 8. This will be the fifth program in the Berkshire Festival Chamber Music concert series. Miss Curtin will present a program of Italian, French, German and Portuguese songs by Rossini, Schubert, Strauss, Berlioz and Sciammarella.

In tonight's recital, she will be accompanied by Richard Woitach.

The complete program includes La Regata Veneziana and Adieux a la vie by Rossini; Six Songs by Schubert; Drei Lieder der Ophelia by Strauss; La Mort d'Ophelie and Zaide by Berlioz, and Cantigas de Amigo by Valdo Sciammarella.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 2 1966

Miss Curtin In Program This Evening

TANGLWOOD — Soprano Phyllis Curtin, a summer resident of the Berkshires and a member of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty, will give a song recital at Tanglewood this evening at 8. This will be the fifth program in the Berkshire Festival chamber music concert series. Miss Curtin will present a program of Italian, French, German and Portuguese songs by Rossini, Schubert, Straus, Berlioz, and Sciammarella. She will be accompanied by Richard Woitach.

The complete program includes: La Regata Veneziana and Adieux a la vie by Rossini; Six Songs by Schubert; Drei Lieder der Ophelia by Strauss; La Mort d'Ophelie and Zaide by Berlioz; and Cantigas de Amigo by Valdo Sciammarella.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 10 1966

Music Review

Lenox Quartet Returns to BMC

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE SIXTH Tuesday evening Chamber Music Concert of the Berkshire Festival was played by the Lenox Quartet last night in the theatre at Tanglewood. The group played one of the "un-celebrated" quartets of Haydn, the G Minor, Opus 20, No. 3, the fifth Bartok and the Beethoven E Minor, Opus 59, No. 2, surely a sampling of the most antipodal types of music.

Their ensemble playing has developed to a point where they did their most conspicuously tight work in the most intricate and involved task they set for themselves: the Bartok. This is the quartet which was commissioned by the foundation established by a Pittsfield lady in the Library of Congress, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. One of the string quartets of the inter-war era which Mrs. Coolidge favored was the Pro Arte, to which Bartok had dedicated his fourth quartet. From this association, Mrs. Coolidge proceeded to commission Bartok; the result was this fifth quartet of the half-dozen he wrote over a stretch of 31 years.

* * *

IT IS USUALLY considered that Bartok in his quartets expresses his most essential thoughts. They are not, however, for "passive listeners." They are concentrated and intense, stark and bold. The members of the quartet, Peter Marsh and Delmar Pettys, violins, Paul Hersh, viola, and Donald McCall, cello, achieved a unanimity of drive and execution which illuminated the uncompromising pages with as much clarity as the maze of fragments permit.

The rhythmic hurdles and traps were overleaped with complete security. Analysis reveals great symmetry in the construction, but as the pages flit by — most often at far beyond safe traffic speeds — the impact is massive, even if not elucidating.

* * *

THE HAYDN is of simple charm and it was played without pretension, although the sonority of the cello at times shaded the quiet themes. In the Beethoven, the Lenoxonians showed progress since the last time they played this same quartet in this area, but they have still a way to go to achieve tonal depth. The initial two chords can be a lifelong study. To play them with sonority but without accent requires great maturity; the intimate calm of the lovely G Major melody in the violin surely can be played with a little latitude, to distinguish it from the opening theme. The balance in the slow movement might have been improved if the first violin staccato figure had allowed the chorale to emerge with less effort. Haydn and even Bartok are easier than the Beethoven quartets from the 59s on.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 3 1966

Music Review

Phyllis Curtin at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

RARELY has a soloist appearing in recital at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood been accorded so enthusiastic and spontaneous a reception as was soprano Phyllis Curtin last night when she sang a program in the Theatre. Assisted superbly by Ryan Edwards, pianist, she sang an unusual and succinctly devised program, one restricted to but a few categories of song, in each of which she is a master.

* * *

MISS CURTIN makes a regal appearance. She has a ready and winning smile and, with all her dignified stage deportment, she has an informal manner, possibly because the very stage on which she sang last night was where she scored some of her early successes as a student.

In those years, the Berkshire Music Center had an opera department and Miss Curtin is one of its most distinguished graduates.

She opened her evening with the three Venetian Regatta songs of Rossini, in which a young woman discloses her three states of mind during a gondola race: anxiety, hope, and relief.

Miss Curtin revealed at once that she proposed to use her lovely voice as an expressive instrument, not just as a showpiece. At the top level of her vocal maturity, she fashions her tone and its texture to convey the story each song contains.

* * *

ONLY IN her subsequent rendition of Schubert was pure tonal beauty itself more apparent than in the graphic opportunities most of the rest of her program afforded. "Three Songs of Ophelia" by Strauss showed greater harmonic independence and boldness than are encountered in the same composer's tone poems, and a Berlioz ballade, "The Death of Ophelia," gave Miss Curtin the chance to continue her pursuit of the same protagonist clothed in other garments.

The Rossini "Farewell to Life," an elegy on one note, was a tour de force as Miss Curtin turned it. Of course, it is a remarkable exhibition of how the composer could alter sense and line without ever departing from the one note; however, the singer gave each phrase such character and meaning that it could be an argument for those who would insist that elements other than melody are more essential.

* * *

A FINAL group of songs by an Argentinian composer, Valdo Sciammarella, based on poems of Francisco Javier, lent themselves admirably to Miss Curtin's manner of expressive treatment. Their demands were not as subtle as were most of the preceding songs of her program, but they were interesting and fitting for an artist of her stature and served to round out a memorable evening of song.

FESTIVAL OF CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN MUSIC

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,771
AUG 11 1966

Contemporary Music Festival At Tanglewood Aug. 14-18

The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood will open on Sunday evening, August 14. The five day "festival within a festival" will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. This summer the Contemporary Festival will take place during the final week of the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival which closes on August 21.

The Fromm Foundation, which this year celebrates its tenth summer of participation in the Berkshire Music Center's activities, makes available a number of fellowships for study at the Berkshire Music Center and assists the Music Center in presenting the Contemporary Festival. Under the leadership of Paul Fromm, the Foundation in 1957 established a program for resident young musicians to perform contemporary music at Tanglewood.

The first program of the Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8:00 p.m. on August 14, and will be a concert of chamber music. Six works including one of the four commissioned pieces will be performed at this concert. The program includes: Harley Gaber's Fantasy; Rhapsody by Michael Colgrass; For Six Instruments in Two Parts by Stefan Wolfe; Earl Kim's Dead Calm; "Cocktail Music by Salvatore Martirano; and Douglas Leedy's Usable Music II in B-flat, commissioned for this festival.

On Monday evening, August 15 there will be a program of choral and vocal chamber music including Martirano's Kyrie; Ave Maria by Kenneth Gaburo, and the 23rd Psalm by Edwin London. Also to be performed at the August 15 concert are Alan Blank's Two Parables by Franz Kafka and Peter Westergaard's Spring and Fall. Roger Reynolds' Blind Men, commissioned b the Music Center for the festival, will receive its first perfromance at this concert. Following the intermission of the August 15 program the concert will continue with Mel Pwoell's String Quartet; Donald Martino's Parisonatina; Landscape by George Burt; Roger Sessions' Turn, O Libertad; Aaron Copland's Lark; and Charles Ives' third setting of Harvest Home Chorale. Mr. Sessions is a member of this summer's Berkshire Music Center composition faculty and Aaron Copland is Chairman of the Faculty, Emeritus.

The concert on Tuesday, August 16 will be the seventh program of the series. Quartests by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg, and Ruth Crawford-Seeger will be performed.

The fourth program will be Wed., Aug. 17. This will also be a concert with the following works: Martino's B,a,b,b,it,t (sic); the premiere of Henry Weinberg's Cantus Comemorabilis, commissioned for this festival; Fantasy for Pianist by Roger Reynolds; Leedy's Quaderno Rossiniano; Morton Feldman's de Kooning: Music for Seven Players by Raoul Pleskow; and Jack Fortner's S pr ING (sic).

The final program will be performed by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under the direction of Gunther Schuller, head of the Music Center's Contemporary Music Activities. This will begin with Charles Ives' Housatonic at Stockbridge from Three Places in New England. As Quiet As by Michael Colgrass will receive its first performance at this concert. The Colgrass piece is the fourth commission made by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Foundation for performance during the five day Tanglewood contemporary music festival. The Music Center Orchestra will also play Georg Rochberg's Black Sounds; Sessions Violin Concerto; and Improvisations for Jazz Soloists and Orchestra by Larry Austin.

All programs withe exception of Tuesday's concert are open to the Firends of the Berkshire Music Center and will be held in the Tanglewood Theatre beginning at 8:00. The closing Boston Symphony Orchestra progams of its 1966 Berkshire Festival will be given in the Music Shed at Tanglewood on August 19, 20, and 21. The closing concert will consist of Verdi's Te Deum and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 11 1966

Tanglewood Again To Host Contemporary Music Fete

LENOX — The 10th annual Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood will open Sunday evening at 8 with a chamber music concert in the Tanglewood Theatre. Sunday's concert will include one of four pieces commissioned for the five-day festival by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

Sponsored By Fromm

The Fromm Foundation, which this year celebrates its 10th summer of participation in the Berkshire Music Center's activities, makes available a number of fellowships for study at BMC and assists in presenting the contemporary festival. Under the leadership of Paul Fromm, the foundation in 1957 established a program for resident young musicians to perform contemporary music at Tanglewood. This program has influenced many universities to establish similar resident ensembles. In some instances, permanent ensembles such as the Lenox Quartet and the Dorian Quintet were formed by Fromm Players. In total, almost 200 young musicians have been Fromm Fellows at BMC, and more than 30 concerts have been presented there.

The program will include Douglas Leedy's Usable Music II in B Flat (the work which was commissioned for this festival); Harley Gaber's "Fantasy"; "Rhapsody by Michael Colgrass; "For Six Instruments in Two Parts" by Stefan Wolfe; Earl Kim's "Dead Calm," and "Cocktail Music" by Salvatore Martirano.

Monday's Program

On Monday, Aug. 15, there will be a program of choral and vocal chamber music including Martirano's "Kyrie"; "Ave Maria" by Kenneth Gaburo; and the 23rd Psalm by Edwin London. Also to be performed are Alan Blank's "Two Parables by Franz Kafka," and Peter Westergaard's "Spring and Fall." Roger Reynolds' "Blind Men," commissioned by the Music Center for the festival, will receive its first performance. The concert will continue with Mel Powell's String Quartet; Donald Martino's "Parisonatina"; "Landscape" by George Burt; Roger Sessions' "Turn, O Libertad"; Aaron Copland's "Lark"; and Charles Ives' third setting of "Harvest Home Chorale." (Sessions is a member of this summer's BMC composition faculty, and Copland is chairman of the faculty, emeritus.)

The concert on Tuesday, Aug. 16, will be the seventh program of the Berkshire Festival's Chamber Music series. Quartets by Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg, and Ruth Crawford-Seeger will be performed.

The fourth program of the Contemporary American Music Festival will be given on Wednesday, Aug. 17. This will also be a concert of chamber music with the following works scheduled for performance: Martino's "B, a, b, b, it, t (sic); the premiere of Henry Weinberg's "Cantus Commemorabilis," commissioned for this festival; "Fantasy for Pianist" by Roger Reynolds; Leedy's "Quaderno Rossiniano"; Morton Feldman's de Kooning: "Music for Seven Players by Raoul Pleskow"; and Jack Fortner's "S pr ING" (sic).

Schuller To Direct

The final program of the contemporary festival will be performed by the Music Center Orchestra under the direction of Gunther Schuller, head of the Music Center's contemporary music activities. This concert will begin with Charles Ives' "Housatonic at Stockbridge" from "Three Places in New England." "As Quiet As" by Michael Colgrass, a fourth commissioned work, will receive its first performance at this concert. The Music Center Orchestra will also play George Rochberg's "Black Sounds"; Sessions' Violin Concerto; and "Improvisations for Jazz Soloists and Orchestra" by Larry Austin.

All programs, with the exception of Tuesday's concert, are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and will be held in the Tanglewood Theatre beginning at 8.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
AUG 11 1966

Festival of American Music Opens Sun. at Tanglewood in 5-Day Program

The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. will open Sunday evening and the five-day event will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

This summer's Contemporary Festival will take place during the final week of the Berkshire Festival, which closes on Aug. 21.

All programs will be held in the Tanglewood Theater beginning at 8 p.m. and all programs except that of Aug. 6, the seventh in the Festival's chamber music series, will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Six chamber works will be given Sunday. Composers include Harley Gaber, Stefan Wolfe, Earl Kim, Salvatore Martirano and Douglas Leedy.

Composers scheduled for the Aug. 15 program are Martirano, Edwin London, Alan Blank, Franz Kafka, Peter Westergaard, Roger Reynolds, Mel Powell, Donald Martino, George Burt, Roger Sessions, Aaron Copland and Charles Ives.

The chamber music series program of Aug. 16 will feature quartets by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg and Ruth Crawford-Seeger.

The Aug. 17 program will feature chamber music by Martino, Henry Weinberg, Roger Reynolds, Leedy, Morton Feldman, Raoul Pleskow and Jack Fortner.

The final program, Aug. 18, will be performed by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra directed by Gunther Schuller. The program will feature works of Charles Ives, Roger Sessions' "Violin Concerto," and "Improvistions for Jazz Soloists and Orchestra" by Larry Austin, George Rochberg's "Black Sounds" and Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As," the fourth commission made by the Berkshire Music Center in co-operation with the Fromm Foundation.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 S'M. 122,607
AUG 9 1966

Tanglewood Opening American Music Fete

The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood opens Sunday evening with one of four compositions commissioned for the five-day festival by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The first concert of the series will be devoted to chamber music. Beginning in the Tanglewood Theater at 8 p.m., it will present six works, including the commissioned "Usable Music II" in B flat by Douglas Leedy.

On Monday evening the program will consist of choral and vocal chamber music, including a second commissioned piece, Roger Reynold's "Blind Men", Aaron Copland's "Lark" and Roger Sessions' "Turn, O Liberated." Copland is chairman of the faculty, emeritus, of the Berkshire Music Center and Sessions is a member of the composition faculty this season.

Tuesday evening's concert will be the seventh performance in the Berkshire Festival's Chamber Music series and the occasion of the performance of four contemporary quarters.

The Festival's fourth program on Wednesday evening will also be a concert of chamber music, including the first performance of Henry Weinberg's Cantus for the concert.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
AUG 11 1966

★ ★ ★

If you're interested in contemporary American composers then you'll be interested in the Festival of Contemporary American Music beginning Sunday at Tanglewood and running through the week. The five-day festival will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center and Fromm Music Foundation of Chicage.

FESTIVAL OF CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN MUSIC

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,771
AUG 11 1966

Contemporary Music Festival At Tanglewood Aug. 14-18

The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood will open on Sunday evening, August 14. The five day "festival within a festival" will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. This summer the Contemporary Festival will take place during the final week of the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival which closes on August 21.

The Fromm Foundation, which this year celebrates its tenth summer of participation in the Berkshire Music Center's activities, makes available a number of fellowships for study at the Berkshire Music Center and assists the Music Center in presenting the Contemporary Festival. Under the leadership of Paul Fromm, the Foundation in 1957 established a program for resident young musicians to perform contemporary music at Tanglewood.

The first program of the Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8:00 p.m. on August 14, and will be a concert of chamber music. Six works including one of the four commissioned pieces will be performed at this concert. The program includes: Harley Gaber's Fantasy; Rhapsody by Michael Colgrass; For Six Instruments in Two Parts by Stefan Wolfe; Earl Kim's Dead Calm; Cocktail Music by Salvatore Martirano; and Douglas Leedy's Usable Music II in B-flat, commissioned for this festival.

On Monday evening, August 15 there will be a program of choral and vocal chamber music including Martirano's Kyrie; Ave Maria by Kenneth Gaburo, and the 23rd Psalm by Edwin London. Also to be performed at the August 15 concert are Alan Blank's Two Parables by Franz Kafka and Peter Westergaard's Spring and Fall. Roger Reynolds' Blind Men, commissioned b the Music Center for the festival, will receive its first perfromance at this concert. Following the intermission of the August 15 program the concert will continue with Mel Pwoell's String Quartet; Donald Martino's Parisonatina; Landscape by George Burt; Roger Sessions' Turn, O Libertad; Aaron Copland's Lark; and Charles Ives' third setting of Harvest Home Chorale. Mr. Sessions is a member of this summer's Berkshire Music Center compostion faculty and Aaron Copland is Chairman of the Faculty, Emeritus.

The concert on Tuesday, August 16 will be the seventh program of the series. Quartests by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg, and Ruth Crawford-Seeger will be performed.

The fourth program will be Wed., Aug. 17. This will also be a concert with the following works: Martino's B,a,b,b,it,t (sic); the premiere of Henry Weinberg's Cantus Comemorabilis, commissioned for this festival; Fantasy for Pianist by Roger Reynolds; Leedy's Quaderno Rossiniano; Morton Feldman's de Kooning: Music for Seven Players by Raoul Pleskow; and Jack Fortner's S pr ING (sic).

The final program will be performed by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under the direction of Gunther Schuller, head of the Music Center's Contemporary Music Activities. This will begin with Charles Ives' Housatonic at Stockbridge from Three Places in New England. As Quiet As by Michael Colgrass will receive its first performance at this concert. The Colgrass piece is the fourth commission made by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Foundation for performance during the five day Tanglewood contemporary music festival. The Music Center Orchestra will also play Georg Rochberg's Black Sounds; Sessions Violin Concerto; and Improvisations for Jazz Soloists and Orchestra by Larry Austin.

All programs withe exception of Tuesday's concert are open to the Firends of the Berkshire Music Center and will be held in the Tanglewood Theatre beginning at 8:00. The closing Boston Symphony Orchestra progams of its 1966 Berkshire Festival will be given in the Music Shed at Tanglewood on August 19, 20, and 21. The closing concert will consist of Verdi's Te Deum and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 11 1966

Tanglewood Again To Host Contemporary Music Fete

LENOX — The 10th annual Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood will open Sunday evening at 8 with a chamber music concert in the Tanglewood Theatre. Sunday's concert will include one of four pieces commissioned for the five-day festival by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

Sponsored By Fromm

The Fromm Foundation, which this year celebrates its 10th summer of participation in the Berkshire Music Center's activities, makes available a number of fellowships for study at BMC and assists in presenting the contemporary festival. Under the leadership of Paul Fromm, the foundation in 1957 established a program for resident young musicians to perform contemporary music at Tanglewood. This program has influenced many universities to establish similar resident ensembles. In some instances, permanent ensembles such as the Lenox Quartet and the Dorian Quintet were formed by Fromm Players. In total, almost 200 young musicians have been Fromm Fellows at BMC, and more than 30 concerts have been presented there.

The program will include Douglas Leedy's Usable Music II in B Flat (the work which was commissioned for this festival); Harley Gaber's "Fantasy"; "Rhapsody by Michael Colgrass; "For Six Instruments in Two Parts" by Stefan Wolfe; Earl Kim's "Dead Calm," and "Cocktail Music" by Salvatore Martirano.

Monday's Program

On Monday, Aug. 15, there will be a program of choral and vocal chamber music including Martirano's "Kyrie"; "Ave Maria" by Kenneth Gaburo; and the 23rd Psalm by Edwin London. Also to be performed are Alan Blank's "Two Parables by Franz Kafka," and Peter Westergaard's "Spring and Fall." Roger Reynolds' "Blind Men," commissioned by the Music Center for the festival, will receive its first performance. The concert will continue with Mel Powell's String Quartet; Donald Martino's "Parisonatina"; "Landscape" by George Burt; Roger Sessions' "Turn, O Libertad"; Aaron Copland's "Lark"; and Charles Ives' third setting of "Harvest Home Chorale." (Sessions is a member of this summer's BMC composition faculty, and Copland is chairman of the faculty, emeritus.)

The concert on Tuesday, Aug. 16, will be the seventh program of the Berkshire Festival's Chamber Music series. Quartets by Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg, and Ruth Crawford-Seeger will be performed.

The fourth program of the Contemporary American Music Festival will be given on Wednesday, Aug. 17. This will also be a concert of chamber music with the following works scheduled for performance; Martino's "B, a, b, b, it, t (sic); the premiere of Henry Weinberg's "Cantus Commemorabilis," commissioned for this festival; "Fantasy for Pianist" by Roger Reynolds; Leedy's "Quaderno Rossiniano"; Morton Feldman's de Kooning: "Music for Seven Players by Raoul Pleskow"; and Jack Fortner's "S pr ING" (sic).

Schuller To Direct

The final program of the contemporary festival will be performed by the Music Center Orchestra under the direction of Gunther Schuller, head of the Music Center's contemporary music activities. This concert will begin with Charles Ives' "Housatonic at Stockbridge" from "Three Places in New England." "As Quiet As" by Michael Colgrass, a fourth commissioned work, will receive its first performance at this concert. The Music Center Orchestra will also play George Rochberg's "Black Sounds"; Sessions' Violin Concerto; and "Improvisations for Jazz Soloists and Orchestra" by Larry Austin.

All programs, with the exception of Tuesday's concert, are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and will be held in the Tanglewood Theatre beginning at 8.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50.766
AUG 11 1966

Festival of American Music Opens Sun. at Tanglewood in 5-Day Program

The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. will open Sunday evening and the five-day event will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

This summer's Contemporary Festival will take place during the final week of the Berkshire Festival, which closes on Aug. 21.

All programs will be held in the Tanglewood Theater beginning at 8 p.m. and all programs except that of Aug. 6, the seventh in the Festival's chamber music series, will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Six chamber works will be given Sunday. Composers include Harley Gaber, Stefan Wolfe, Earl Kim, Salvatore Martirano and Douglas Leedy.

Composers scheduled for the Aug. 15 program are Martirano, Edwin London, Alan Blank, Franz Kafka, Peter Westergaard, Roger Reynolds, Mel Powell, Donald Martino, George Burt, Roger Sessions, Aaron Copland and Charles Ives.

The chamber music series program of Aug. 16 will feature quartets by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg, and Ruth Crawford-Seeger.

The Aug. 17 program will feature chamber music by Martino, Henry Weinberg, Roger Reynolds, Leedy, Morton Feldman, Raoul Pleskow and Jack Fortner.

The final program, Aug. 18, will be performed by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra directed by Gunther Schuller. The program will feature works of Charles Ives, Roger Sessions' "Violin Concerto," and "Improvistions for Jazz Soloists and Orchestra" by Larry Austin, George Rochberg's "Black Sounds" and Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As," the fourth commission made by the Berkshire Music Center in co-operation with the Fromm Foundation.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 S'DN. 122,607
AUG 9 1966

Tanglewood Opening American Music Fete

The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood opens Sunday evening with one of four compositions commissioned for the five-day festival by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.

The first concert of the series will be devoted to chamber music. Beginning in the Tanglewood Theater at 8 p.m., it will present six works, including the commissioned "Usable Music II" in B flat by Douglas Leedy.

On Monday evening the program will consist of choral and vocal chamber music, including a second commissioned piece, Roger Reynold's "Blind Men", Aaron Copland's "Lark" and Roger Sessions' "Turn, O Liberated." Copland is chairman of the faculty, emeritus, of the Berkshire Music Center and Sessions is a member of the composition faculty this season.

Tuesday evening's concert will be the seventh performance in the Berkshire Festival's Chamber Music series and the occasion of the performance of four contemporary quarters.

The Festival's fourth program on Wednesday evening will also be a concert of chamber music, including the first performance of Henry Weinberg's Cantus for the concert.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
AUG 11 1966

★ ★ ★

If you're interested in contemporary American composers then you'll be interested in the Festival of Contemporary American Music beginning Sunday at Tanglewood and running through the week. The five-day festival will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center and Fromm Music Foundation of Chicage.

The Phoenix Gazette
D. 87,288
AUG 1 2 1966

Phoenician Alan Briggs (left) is member of trumpet section in Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, made up of outstanding young musicians from all over the world, playing concert at Tanglewood.

Jane Marsh, winner of recent Tchaikowsky vocal competition in Moscow, goes over score with Eric Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony conductor, before performance of "The Magic Flute" at Tanglewood.

Reviewer Finds 'Musical Utopia' At Tanglewood

By SERGE HUFF
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX, Mass. — Tanglewood, the international magic name in summer concert festivals, has, in its 30 years existence, developed into a musical Utopia.

In one weekend at the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, we have enjoyed performances of:

ELEVEN OUTSTANDING vocalists — among them Phyllis Curtin, Judith Raskin, John Reardon, George Shirley, Ara Berberian (well known to Phoenix audiences) and Jane Marsh, first-place winner in the recent Tchaikowsky vocal competitions in Moscow.

HUFF

Concert pianist Grant Johannesen, who arrived from the Flagstaff festival just in time to begin rehearsals with the Boston ensemble for the same work he played at Flagstaff.

Cellist Leslie Parnas.

Members of the BSO Chamber Players (the clarinetist, remembering how the dry Phoenix air brought calamity to his reeds during the group's recent appearance there, is much happier in this humid climate).

And the interpretations of five conductors.

IN A CONCERT performance of Mozart's "The Magic Flute," Eric Leinsdorf, permanent conductor of the BSO, directed the entire work — soloists, chorus, orchestra, and narrator along with many complicated cuts — from memory.

Conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Stanislaw Skrowaczewski guest-conducted several works without the use of a score. Among them was the rhythmically intricate "Media's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance" by Barber. This comparatively young conductor and composer is fast becoming one of musical world's most popular conductors.

The outdoor concert hall — referred to here as the "music shed" — particularly attracted our interest. The open-sided structure seats more than 6,000 people under its roof, and has a stage canopy which fully projects every decibel of sound out to any number of music lovers seated on the lawns to the sides and rear of the shed.

ALTHOUGH THE MANAGEMENT of the orchestra reminds those who attend the performances at Tanglewood that it is a concert hall, albeit an outdoor one, and requests patrons to come in appropriate concert dress, it was delightful to note the orchestra and many members of the audience were in light summer formal attire, but outside on the lawns enjoying their picnics and favorite beverages were thousands of music lovers in all manner of informal costumes. We also observed numerous Beatle-hair-style boys in fruit boots and stringy haired girls in tight capris, usually associated with a different type of music, but seeming to be thoroughly captivated with the music.

We envision such a facility eventually for the Flagstaff Festival which would contribute greatly to the expansion of that effort into a major musical center. A copy of the stage acoustical enclosure could be put to good use at once in our Coliseum concerts. It is our hope that these things will be realized earlier in the history of the Phoenix orchestra than in that of the Boston. This is the former's 20th season, the latter's 85th.

EVEN THOUGH THE nearest population centers are Boston, 150 miles east, and New York, 160 miles south, the attendance at the various concerts numbers from 5,000 to 14,000.

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,202
AUG 12 1966

New Music At Festival

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX — The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood will open Sunday evening.

It will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. The festival will take place during the final week of the orchestra's Berkshire Festival, which closes Aug. 21.

The Fromm Foundation, in its 10th summer of participation in the center's activities, makes available a number of fellowships for study at the center and assists the center in presenting the contemporary festival. Under the leadership of Paul Fromm, the foundation in 1957 established a program for resident young musicians to perform contemporary music at Tanglewood. This program has influenced many universities to establish similar resident ensembles. In some instances, permanent ensembles such as the Lenox Quartet and the Dorian Quintet were formed by Fromm Players.

In total, almost 200 young musicians have been Fromm Fellows at the center and more than 30 concerts have been presented.

Chamber Music

The first festival program in the Tanglewood Theatre at 8 p.m. Aug. 14, will be a concert of chamber music. Six works, including one of the four commissioned pieces, will be performed. The program includes: Harley Gaber's Fantasy; Rhapsody by Michael Colgrass; For Six Instruments in Two Parts by Stefan Wolfe; Earl Kim's Dead Calm; Cocktail Music by Salvatore Martirano and Douglas Leedy's Usable Music II in B-flat, commissioned for the festival.

On Aug. 15, there will be a program of choral and vocal chamber music including Martirano's Kyrie, Ave Maria by Kenneth Gaburo and the 23rd Psalm by Edwin London; also, Alan Blank's Two Parables by Franz Kafka and Peter Westergaard's Spring and Fall. Roger Reynolds' Blind Men, commissioned by the center, will receive its first performance.

Following the intermission Aug. 15, the concert will continue with Mel Powell's String Quartet; Donald Martino's Parisonatina; Landscape by George Burt; Roger Sessions's Turn, O Libertad; Aaron Copland's Lark; and Charles Ives' third setting of Harvest Home Chorale. Mr. Sessions is a member of this summer's Berkshire Music Center composition faculty and Aaron Copland is Chairman of the Faculty, Emeritus.

Four Quartets

The concert Aug. 16 will be the seventh program of the Berkshire Festival's chamber music series. Quartets by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg and Ruth Crawford-Seeger will be performed.

The fourth festival program will be Aug. 17, a concert of chamber music with the following scheduled: Martino's B,a,b,b,it,t, Henry Weinberg's Cantus Commemorabilis, commissioned; Fantasy for Pianist by Roger Reynolds, Leedy's Quaderno Rossiniano, Morton Feldman's de Kooning, Music for Seven Players by Raoul Pleskow and Jack Fortner's Spring.

The final festival program will be performed by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under direction of Gunther Schuller, head of the center's contemporary music activities. It will begin with Charles Ives' Housatonic at Stockbridge, from Three Places in New England. As Quiet As by Michael Colgrass will receive its first performance. The Colgrass piece is the fourth commission by the center, in cooperation with the Fromm Foundation. The center orchestra will also play George Rochberg's Black Sounds, Sessions' Violin Concerto and Improvisations for Jazz Soloists and Orchestra by Larry Austin.

All programs with the exception of the Aug. 16 concert are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and will be in the Tanglewood Theater at 8 p.m. The closing Boston Symphony Orchestra programs will be in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Aug. 19, 20 and 21. The closing concert will consist of Verdi's Te Deum and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

SUMMER LIFE

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 34,306 SUN. 37,584
AUG 14 1966

Music Festival Set at Tanglewood

The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open tonight. The five-day "festival - within - a festival" will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. This summer the contemporary Festival will take place during the final week of the orchestra's Berkshire Festival which closes next Sunday.

The first program of the festival of Contemporary American Music will be given in the Tanglewood Theater at 8 o'clock tonight and will be a concert of chamber music. Six works, including one of the four commissioned pieces, will be performed at this concert. They are Harley Gaber's Fantasy, Rhapsody by Michael Colgrass, For Six Instruments in Two Parts by Stefan Wolfe, Earl Kim's Dead Calm, Cocktail Music by Salvatore Martirano and Douglas Leedy's Usable Music II in B-flat, commissioned for this festival.

Tomorrow night, there will be a program of choral and vocal chamber music, including Martirano's Kyrie, Ave Maria by Kenneth Gaburo and the 23rd Psalm by Edwin London. Also to be performed are Alan Blank's Two Parables by Franz Kafka and Peter Westergaard's Spring and Fall, Roger Reynolds' Blind Men, commissioned by the music center for the festival, will receive its first performance at this concert. After the intermission, tomorrow's program will continue with Mel Powell's String Quartet, Donald Martino's Parisonatina, Landscape by George Burt, Roger Sessions' Turn, O Libertad, Aaron Copland's Lark and Charles Ives' third setting of Harvest Home Chorale. Mr. Sessions is a member of this summer's Berkshire Music Center composition faculty and Mr. Copland is chairman of the faculty, emeritus.

The concert on Tuesday will be the seventh program of the Berkshire Festival's Chamber Music series. Quartets by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg and Ruth Crawford-Seeger will be performed.

The fourth program of the contemporary American Music Festival will be given on Wednesday night. This also will be a concert of chamber music. Scheduled to be performed are Martino's B,a,b,b,it,t; the premiere of Henry Weinberg's Cantus Commemorabilia, commissioned for this festival; Fantasy for Pianist by Roger Reynolds; Leedy's Quaderno Rossiniano; Morton Feldman's de Kooning; Music for Seven Players by Raoul Pleskow, and Jack Fortner's S pr ING.

The final program of the contemporary festival will be performed by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, under the direction of Gunther Schuller, head of the center's contemporary music activities. This concert will begin with Charles Ives' Housatonic at Stockbridge from Three Places in New England. As Quiet As by Michael Colgrass will receive its first performance at this concert. The music center orchestra also will play George Rochberg's Black Sounds, Sessions, Violin Concerto and Improvisations for Jazz Soloists and Orchestra by Larry Austin.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
AUG 14 1966

Modern American Music at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — The Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood will open tonight.

The five-day "festival within a festival" will feature four works commissioned by the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer academy for the advanced study of music, and the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. This Summer, the Contemporary Festival will take place during the final week of the orchestra's Berkshire Festival which closes on Aug. 21.

The Fromm Foundation, which this year celebrates its 10th Summer of participation in the Berkshire Music Center's activities, makes available a number of fellowships for study at the Berkshire Music Center and assists the Music Center in presenting the Contemporary Festival. Under the leadership of Paul Fromm, the Foundation in 1957 established a program for resident young musicians to perform contemporaary music at Tanglewood. This program has influenced many universities to establish similar resident ensembles. In some instances permanent ensembles such as the Lenox Quartet and the Dorian Quintet were formed by Fromm Players.

In total, almost 200 young musicians have been Fromm Fellows at the Berkshire Music Center and more than 30 concerts have been presented.

The first program of the Festival of Contemporary American Music will be given in the Tanglewood Theatre tonight at 8 and will be a concert of chamber music. Six works including one of the four commissioned pieces will be performed at this concert. The program includes: Harley Gaber's Fantasy; Rhapsody by Michael Colgrass; For Six Instruments in Two Parts by Stefan Wolfe; Earl Kim's Dead Calm; Cocktail Music by Salvatore Martirano; and Douglas Leedy's Uusable Music II in B-flat, commissioned for this festival.

On Monday evening, there will be a program of choral and vocal chamber music including Martirano's Kyrie; Ave Maria by Kenneth Gaburo; the 23rd Psalm by Edwin London; Alan Blank's Two Parables by Franz Kafka; and Peter Westergaard's Spring and Fall.

Roger Reynolds' Blind Men, commissioned by the Music Center for the festival, will receive its first performance at this concert. Following the intermission, the concert will continue with Mel Powell's String Quartet; Donald Martino's Parisonatina; Landscape by George Burt; Roger Sessions' Turn, O Libertad; Aaron Copland's Lark; and Charles Ives' third setting of Harvest Home Chorale. Sessions is a member of this Summer's Berkshire Music Center composition faculty and Copland is chairman of the faculty, emeritus.

The concert on Tuesday, will be the seventh program of the Berkshire Festival's Chamber Music series. Quartets by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, Henry Weinberg, and Ruth Crawford-Seeger will be performed.

The fourth program will be given on Wednesday evening. This will also be a concert of chamber music with the following works scheduled for performance: Martino's B,a,b,b,it,t; the premiere of Henry Weinberg's Cantus Commemorabilis, commissioned for this festival; Fantasy for Pianist by Roger Reynolds; Leedy's Quaderno Rossiniano; Morton Feldman's de Kooning: Music for Seven Players by Raoul Pleskow; and Jack Fortner's S pr ING.

The final program of the contemporary festival will be performed by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under the direction of Gunther Schuller, head of the Music Center's contemporary music activities. This concert will begin with Charles Ives' Housatonic at Stockbridge from Three Places in New England. As Quiet As by Michael Colgrass will receive its first performance at this concert. The Colgrass piece is the fourth commission made by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Foundation for performance during the five-day Tanglewood contemporary music festival. The Music Center Orchestra will also play George Rochberg's Black Sounds; Sessions' Violin Concerto; and Improvisations for Jazz Soloists and Orchestra by Larry Austin.

All programs with the exception of Tuesday's concert are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and will be held in the Tanglewood Theater beginning at 8.

The closing Boston Symphony Orchestra programs of its [illegible] Berkshire Festival will [illegible] in the Music Shed [illegible] wood on Aug. 19, 20, [illegible] the final concert will consist of Verdi's Te Deum and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

AUG 16 1966

Lenox Contemporary Festival Opens Unremarkably

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

LENOX — The third festival of contemporary American music began at Tanglewood on Sunday evening. It is sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center together with the Fromm Music Foundation which has been affiliated with Tanglewood since 1957. The 1966 festival consists of four concerts, and works have been commissioned for it from Michael Colgrass, Douglas Leedy, Roger Reynolds, and Henry Weinberg, each being represented by a second work of his own selection.

★

The opening program began with a Fantasy for Flute by Harley Gaber a 23-year-old former pupil of, among others, Milhaud, Gaburo, Clementi, and Sydeman. This is a piece that has by now been written rather often, with Berio's "Sequenza" being its most famous archetype. The cliches of the new flute writing are coherently assembled but Gaber's fantasy is not in any way an individual or arresting utterance. The performance was by Virginia Leguia.

Michael Colgrass is, at 34, quite an experienced composer who has written a number of engagingly unpretentious, light-weight pieces. His Rhapsody for Violin, Clarinet and Piano, makes an attractive wash of fluid, decorative figurations into something that is rather characterless, though by no means too disagreeable to watch go by. There may be more to the piece than the colorless performance suggested.

★

Stefan Wolpe's "For Six Instruments in Two Parts" is an intense and highly characteristic piece, full of violent gestures that move brief and sharply profiled figures into harmonic and rhythmic contexts whose changes and progressions articulate a concentrated and powerful musical statement. Gunther Schuller conducted an effective performance that was played by Paul Zukofsky, violin, Jerome Patterson, cello, Christopher Wolfe, clarinet, Peter Chapman, trumpet, Suzanne Thomas, harp, and Yuji Takahashi, piano.

Earl Kim is a Schoenberg and Sessions pupil in his early forties. His "Dead Calm" sets a text by Samuel Beckett, the verbal palindromes being matched by musical ones. Kim's is music of delicate facture, laid out in short phrases separated by silences that are themselves expressive and eloquent, and with the effectively reticent text declamation surrounded vertically and horizontally by lines and dabs for violin, cello, piccolo, oboe, clarinet, and percussion, that enchance and illuminate what the voice is doing. "Dead Calm" was well sung by Phyllis Bryn-Julson, a soprano who is attaining impressive skill in the easy handling of tricky pitches and rhythms and whose instrumental timbre seemed very suitable to this music. Pierre Salzman conducted the competent performance.

★

Salvatore Martirano's "Cocktail Music" is a slight and short work for solo piano whose entertaining virtuoso writing was effectively realized by William Bolcom.

And finally, there was Douglas Leedy's "Quaderno Rossiniano." Leedy is 28, serves on the editorial board of the New Berlioz Edition, and rather looks like Berlioz. That he is a composer I am not prepared to say. His Rossinian notebook is made entirely of phrases from Rossini. This, if Leedy's invention is on a level with his taste, could be an advantage. The idea of the "Quaderno" is that tonic-and-dominant oom-pahs and expensive operatic phrases will sound funny in a concert where the ear has been attuned to Wolpe and Martirano, and the more so if they are themselves made dissonant by being jumbled together irrelevantly.

And so indeed it may be for some persons. It wasted the time and talent of eight instrumentalists, some of them strikingly gifted, and it brought the opening Fromm concert to a limp close.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

AUG 19 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277

AUG 15 1966

Music: Sound of the 60's

125 at Tanglewood Attend the Opening of Fromm Foundation Concert Series

Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—Following this afternoon's television extravaganza at the shed of the Berkshire Music Festival, which attracted 8,093, a considerably smaller audience went to the theater-concert hall—about 125. The occasion of the evening concert was the inauguration of the week-long Festival of Contemporary American Music, a Tanglewood fixture for the last few years. This summer also marks the 10th year of the Fromm Music Foundation's affiliation with the Berkshire center. Paul Fromm of Chicago has been the sponsor from the beginning.

The week will have four Festival of American Music concerts. Two will be devoted to chamber music, one primarily to choral and vocal music, and the final one, on Thursday night, to orchestral music. Four composers have received commisisons — Michael Colgrass, Douglas Leedy, Roger Reynolds and Henry Weinberg. In addition, there will be a concert of string quartet music Tuesday night. This concert is the last of this year's seven Tuesday concerts of chamber music at Tanglewood, but the nature of the program, with works by Sessions Babbitt, Weinberg and Ruth Crawford-Seeger, has included it in the modern-music series.

●

Tonight's was a short concert. Six pieces were on the program, but the audience was on its way out by 9:20. Most avant-garde compositions are short (in objective, if not necessarily in subjective time). Sometimes it takes longer to head the composer's analysis in the program than to hear the work.

It is hard to define profile and characteristics in post-Webern serial writing. All of of the music is thoroughly organized, but family relationships are too great, and pieces like the Geber and Colgrass end up featureless. hTe Wolpe was typical—very serious, complicated, disjunct in line, athematic, perhaps a little less dense in texture than some of his other music.

The chronological range of the concert extended from Stefan Wolpe (born in 1902) to Harley Sieber (born in 1943). But all of the music is of this decade—fresh, newly minted, brimming over with the lovely zeitgeist of the nineteen-sixties. The Geber work, "Fantasy," was for solo flute, and Earl Kim's "Dead Calm" and Mr. Leedy's "Quaderno Rossiniano" used eight musicians. There also were Salvatore Martirano's oddly named "Cocktain Music," for solo piano, Mr. Colgrass's Rhapsody for Violin, Clarinet and Piano and the Wolpe "For Six Instruments in Two Parts."

Mr. Martirano's piece was oddly named, for coacktain music it isn't. It is a dead-serious, party-line example of serial writing for the piano, in which such composers as oulez and Stockhausen play a major role. It is also rather a bore. The piece that got the biggest acclaim was Mr. Kim's "Dead Calm," a setting of a text by Samuel Becket, for soprano and seven players. In this work, the composer makes great use of silences and delicate pianissimo effects. A strong Schoenbergian feeling was in evidence, and the writing had mood and style.

●

But one work did indeed have profile. It was the Leedy "Quaderno Rossiniano," which the composer has described as a tribute to Rossini. It consists of juxtapositions of Rossinian fragments in unrelated keys. Some tribute!

One of the real pleasures in concerts like this is listening to the deft way young musicians get around the music. The complications, especially rhythmic ones, are enormous, but they lean back, relaxed-like, and the notes and sequences come out glittering. It is all immensely impressive. And, if perchance the attention wanders, there are the program notes, in which the new musical terminology stands in all its glory — pitch-class content, linear orderings, serialized parameters, steady states, harmonic fields, permutational reorderings, nonpitch dimensions, rhythmic trajectories. Not physics, not higher mathematics. The new music.

HAROLD C. SCHONBERG.

Music Review

Exciting Finish to Contemporary Fete

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FINAL concert of the Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood came to an exciting climax last night when a program of orchestral music was played by the Berkshire Music Center orchestra under the direction of Gunther Schuller. Audiences which kept increasing filled the Theatre last night and heard a variety of compositions, all of great interest but, more important, of cumulatively greater intrinsic importance and of reassuring character.

On the previous evenings, the music in the main had been academic and of doubtful substance. The strange part of it all was that it was all primarily written by men born in the '30s who have had long training and now hold posts of honor and responsibility in our most respected music schools. Yet, paradoxically, there was a tangible quantity of aleatory music performed, music in which the composer forfeits calculation and gives the performer leeway in matters of rhythm, pitch, duration, the amount of energy to be applied and so on.

* * *

THE NET RESULT is that there are great stretches of arid and sterile deserts in this music. Last night, however, there was imagination and vitality rampant the whole evening. Just before the second half of the program, Erich Leinsdorf, the director of the Berkshire Music Center, conferred awards of honor on some of the outstanding students for distinction in composition, in one case to Mario Davidovsky for music composed after his attendance at a BMC term; to Alfred Lehrdal and William Albright for a piece of chamber music composed or finished at the BMC, and to Phyllis Bryn-Julson for superior performance and helpfulness to the Tanglewood composers.

Leinsdorf then introduced the man who is the head of the Fromm Music Foundation, Paul Fromm of Chicago, and whose "extraordinary liberality," as Leinsdorf pointed out, has made these concentrated festivals possible for 10 years.

* * *

SCHULLER BEGAN his program with the third movement of Charles Ives' "New England Symphony," "The Housatonic at Stockbridge." Ives is now posthumously coming into the appreciation and recognition he deserves, as it becomes apparent that what he wrote before World War I was on the same foundations for which the musical world now honors men such as Schoenberg and Stravinsky.

A commission by the Fromm Foundation, "As quiet as," by Michael Colgrass, proved to be the most intensely absorbing work of the evening. The composer explained that his subject and the music was inspired by the answers 4th-grade children gave their teacher when asked to complete the sentence beginning, "Let's be as quiet as . . ." There are seven answers depicted musically; they are vivid and graphic, both explicitly and by allusion. Indeed, "A leaf turning colors" is not unlike Schuller's own musical transference of Klee's "Antique Harmonies," vaporous almost to imperceptibility. "Children sleeping" was charming and at the same time the most directly conveyed with a toy music box sounding by means of clever orchestration. "Time passing" made use of reminiscences of music of days gone by. "A soft rainfall" not only made the drops sound in a pool but almost made the centrifugal circles apparent.

* * *

GEORGE ROCHBERG'S "Black Sounds," for percussion and wind instruments only, was a first performance in orchestral form of an original ballet. It insisted on special tone colors which the orchestration made possible. Roger Sessions' violin concerto, written nearer to Ives' day than to the other music on this program, received a virile performance by the orchestra's concertmaster, Paul Zukofsky. This was the most orthodox music — in form — of the festival, although Sessions writes with complete immersion in the stream of the current musical trend.

Larry Austin's "Improvisations" for jazz soloists and orchestra rose to an orgy of intoxication as alto saxophonist Andrew White, bass Buell Neidlinger and drummer John Bergamo were guided by the light rein of Schuller until he gave them the bit and they went to town.

* * *

THERE WERE several reasons why this program delighted the large audience. The most important was that there was an underlying factor which had not been in evidence in most of the music heard on the preceding programs. There was a desire to express something and an intention to convey it, and that, above all, is the quintessential of music. This kind of effort justifies Fromm's support and brushes away the cobwebs of futility which at times have been observable at this and other expositions of current music production.

174

Sunday Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 1,355,614
AUG 28 1966

Music

New—But What's New About It?

By HAROLD SCHONBERG

ALONG with the final week of the Berkshire Music Festival was the annual Festival of Contemporary American Music, the omega to the alpha of the regular Boston Symphony concerts in the famous shed at Tanglewood. Where the symphony concerts are terribly conservative the aim of the festival of contemporary American music is to present the latest music by young composers.

Gunther Schuller is in charge of the project, and that is at once its strength and its weakness. Schuller, whose appointment as head of the New England Conservatory of Music was recently announced, is himself a respected composer, an admirable conductor of contemporary music, a brilliant all-around musician and a man young enough to meet the young students at the Berkshire Music Center on their own terms. He takes complete charge of the music center and of the five-concert festival of new music, is all over the place at once, and obviously is dedicated to the cause he has espoused. In addition, Schuller is a natural salesman for the new music. He believes in it, volubly talks about it, glows about it and, like a good salesman, makes no wild claims.

The weakness of the set-up—and it is easy to criticize without coming up with a workable alternative—is that the festival is a reflection of Schuller's tastes and his alone. He always has been allied to the avant-garde, and is greatly interested in the post-Webern musical development. That, of course, is inevitable. The post-Webern development has been the biggest international force since the ending of the last war. It was not too long ago that Schuller was in the forefront with his "third-stream" music, the alliance of jazz with serial textures. Nowadays, we do not hear much about third-stream music, though perhaps that is because many young composers now accept it as a matter of course. Jazz techniques of one kind or another are constantly finding their way into the textures of the new music.

Dreary Pieces

But the trouble is that very little of importance has come out of the new school. It is still highly experimental, has made virtually no public impact, and by now is threatening to become extremely inbred. It is a music in which one piece tends to sound much like any other piece. There are exceptions, of course, but during the five-day festival, which ended a week ago Thursday, there was a succession of dreary pieces that sounded much like the succession of dreary pieces contained in the 1965 festival. And, listening to them, one began to wonder if this is the only kind of music being composed these days. Is post-Webern music the only kind worth representing in the Schuller-arranged festivals, or should an effort be made to dig out other kinds of music to give a cross-section of what is going on in the United States?

It is true that this summer's festival did have four or five pieces a little outside of the new orthodoxy. Two large-scale Sessions works were the Stravinsky - sounding Violin Concerto of 1935 and the Bartok - sounding Second String Quartet of 1951. There was some Ives, and there also was the quartet of Ruth Crawford-Seeger, composed in 1931. And in the final concert were two new pieces that did break the mold a bit. "Black Sounds" by George Rochberg, for wind and percussion orchestra, was not a serial work at all. It was not a very good score, being too close to the movie-music kind of stuff one hears as background for the latest sophisticated spy thriller, but at least it tries for a direct emotional feeling, and it actually sounded refreshing against the context of most of the other music in the series.

Also different was "As Quiet As" by Michael Colgrass, which was full of ideas, which did not hesitate to use a vocabulary that went back to Ives and Debussy, which used post-Webern textures in a personal manner, and which might even develop into a repertoire piece. "As Quiet As" is a collection of little tone pictures as cute as all get-out, and probably will be accused of slickness. It received a warm reception, indeed, the warmest of any new piece during the festival—and this from a professional audience closely allied to the new language.

Fusion of Influences

No major musical trends were noticed during the festival. There was, though, a slight indication that the young composers are trying to make some kind of fusion of Cage and Babbitt elements. Milton Babbitt and John Cage have been the two most important influences on avant-garde American music since the war, and they represent entirely different things. Babbitt stands for total control over music elements. His is a kind of music in which every aspect, including rhythms and silences, is subject to serial manipulation. Cage, on the other hand, represents a kind of anarchy and dada. It was he who was largely responsible for the development of the aleatoric idea, in which the performer had complete leeway within a certain established ground plan. A few years ago, any idea of rapprochement between the two schools was unthinkable. Cage and Babbitt, if they did not despise each other's principles, at least had nothing to do with each other. They, and the members of each school, went their separate ways.

But now the younger composers are less fiercely devoted to the kind of partisanship formerly displayed, and it is no longer an either-or proposition. Quite a few thoughtful observers on the grounds during the festival discussing the quality of the music — nobody seemed to think very highly of it—nevertheless expressed hope. The feeling is that party lines are being broken, and that Babbitt is no longer the overpowering influence he used to be—the gray eminence of American music.

Instead, they say, young composers, tiring of what they feel is over-control of musical elements, over-organization and even obfuscation, are beginning to use a much freer approach. They take from Babbitt, they take from Cage, they are no longer hypnotized by either, and they are getting ready to go off on their own. So runs the argument. Nobody is saying that the millenium has arrived. But wait a few years, said one composer-teacher not connected with the Berkshire Music Center, "a crop of kids are coming up that are going to knock your eyes out."

Even some officials of the contemporary American music festival privately admit that the affair is beginning to sound inbred and tired—as tired in its way as the Tanglewood festival programs are sounding. This summer Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony have had as their theme the romantic concerto, and the concertos of Brahms, Liszt and so on have been gravely trotted out for inspection. What has happened to the brave new plans Leinsdorf was talking about when he took over?

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
AUG 20 1966

Music: Young Moderns

Tanglewood Ends Fete of Homegrown Works

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 18—Five consecutive evenings of contemporary American music came to an end Thursday night with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, conducted by Gunther Schuller, giving a program of music by Charles Ives, Michael Colgrass, George Rochberg, Roger Sessions and Larry Austin. As in previous years, the Festival of Contemporary American Music was sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation.

It was a rather routine week, with little that captured the imagination. On the whole, the music showed no great departures, up or down, from that heard in most equivalent events here or elsewhere.

The young composers are still working in an idiom derived from post-Webern serialism. Most of them supply their own kind of built-in academism, and one looks in vain for much personality or even joy in making music. It is all so serious, so inbred, too calculated, so totally lacking in charm.

●

The festival belied its name by not being entirely contemporary. There were two works by Sessions—the violin concerto and the second string quartet, dating from 1935 and 1951, respectively, both dry and academic, the first touched by Stravinsky, the second by Bartók.

There also was Ruth Crawford-Seeger's string quartet, composed in 1931. This is a strange piece that has been adopted by the American avant-garde. Mrs. Crawford-Seeger, an American-trained composer who died in 1953, is not well known, but this quartet is vigorous and even powerful, and it had very little in common with the music composed at that time. Its patterns are close to abstractions, and it is a prophetic statement of what many composers are now doing.

There were a few high spots during the five days. One was Donald Martino's "Parisonatina al Dodecafonia." It is a work for solo cello and is dedicated to Aldo Parisot, who played it on Monday night. Combine "Parisot" and "Sonatina," and you get the title.

●

The music is in serial textures, but the main interest is in the technical nature of the cello writing. Mr. Martino has obviously set out to compose a whizbang virtuoso piece in the modern idiom. Probably as difficult a work as ever has been written for the cello, it throws at the performer everything in the book and a few things that aren't. Mr. Parisot gave an extraordinary performance. No matter how impossible the stretches, no matter what the position, no matter if he was called upon to hit the instrument itself with his hand, no matter what kind of crazy bowing, he accomplished everything with an easy, almost bored expression, as though he was playing the Boccherini Concerto. His tone and intonation never betrayed him, and those at this performance are not going to forget this feat overnight.

Four Fromm commissions received their world premieres. "Blind Men," by Roger Reynolds, is scored for brass and percussion orchestra against chorus. It is one of those sound-for-sound's-sake pieces, mixed up with aleatoric sections, that is standard operating procedure in these circles.

Lew Merrim from Monkmeyer
Gunther Schuller

Henry Weinberg's "Cantus Commemorabilis" for chamber orchestra turned out to be dull, cliché serialism.

More interesting was Douglas Leedy's "Usable Music II in B-flat." The B-flat signature is a sort of joke. Any music more distant from key signatures does not exist. There are other things in the score that are a joke. The musicians talk into their instruments, producing Donald Duck noises. One section has some Ivesian touches. In others the musicians can do what they want. It's all very irreverent and quite funny in spots. One does hope that the humor was intentional. At least the audience laughed.

Last of the Fromm commissions heard Thursday evening was Michael Colgrass's "As Quiet As." Quite different from other works of Colgrass one has encountered, this work is made up of short sections, some of which are out of Debussy and Ives, others out of Webern. It is descriptive music, little tone sketches with titles that have not been encountered since Schumann's "Album for the Young" or "Kinderscenen"—"Children Sleeping;" "Time Passing;" "A Soft Rainfall;" and so on.

●

Through the music is a lively intelligence. Colgrass has got a good deal of individuality into the work, knows how to orchestrate, and has written a piece that is avant-garde without being doctrinaire. It conceivably could have the same kind of success as Schuller's "Klee" pieces. No work during the week was more warmly received, and this in a way was surprising, for it was relatively conservative, and this particular audience consists primarily of professional avant-gardists.

It remains to be said that the performances were, as always, in tip-top shape, that Paul Zukovsky was the brilliant violinist in the Sessions concerto, that Mr. Schuller conducts contemporary music as well as anybody around, that the young musicians of the Berkshire Music Center are as talented as ever, and that this was the first festival on these grounds where the official instrument of the avant-gardists, the vibraphone, was not strongly in evidence. Can it be that the children are no longer playing with toys.

The annual Berkshire Music Center awards were made Thursday night. Mario Davidovsky, the 32-year-old Argentine composer, won the $1,000 Aaron Copland award, Alfred Lehrdahl, 23, of Madison, Wis., and William H. Albright, 21, of West Orange, N. J., won the $200 Koussevitzky Tanglewood composition awards, and Phyllis Bryn-Julson, 21, a soprano from Moorhead, Minn., won the $100 performance award.

PLEASE SEE PAGE 188
FOR MORE REVIEWS

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 28 1966

4 Musicians Awarded Prizes At Berkshire Music Center

847

At this season's final performance of the Berkshire Music Center Fellowship Orchestra during the Festival of Contemporary American Music sponsored by Paul Fromm and the Fromm Music Foundation, prizes were awarded to four outstanding musicians.

Merit in Composition

The first to be awarded was the Aaron Copland Award to Mario Davidovsky, for merit in composition, awarded to a former student of Mr. Copland. This award has been donated by Paul Fromm, Boosey and Hawkes, Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Davidovsky studied composition in Buenos Aires and at Tanglewood in 1963 with Aaron Copland and was a recipient of a Fromm-Tanglewood Commission at the 1965 session of the Berkshire Music Center.

He came to this country in late 1960 as a Guggenheim Fellow to work in the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center.

Chamber Music Award

The Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition awards for a piece of chamber music composed or performed at the Berkshire Music Center, donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation were awarded to Alfred Lerdahl and William Albright. Alfred Lerdahl is from Madison, Wis., is 23 years old and a graduate student in composition at Princeton University where he is working with Milton Babbitt.

He completed his undergraduate study at Lawrence University, where he worked with Professors Ming and Duncan. He was a member of the Music Center in 1963 and at this year's session was the recipient of the Margaret Lee Crofts Fellowship for composers.

William Albright is from West Orange, New Jersey, 21 years of age and has just completed his Bachelor of Music Degree at the University of Michigan where he studied composition with Leslie Bassett and Ross Lee Finney.

Since he was with the Berkshire Music Center in 1964, he has had his works performed in New York City, at the University of Ohio, and the San Francisco Tape Center as well as at the Bennington Composer's Conference. This session he was the recipient of the Margaret Lee Crofts Fellowship for composers.

The Composition Performance Award for superior performance and helpfulness to the composers at Tanglewood, donated by Michael Colgrass was awarded to Miss Phyllis Bryn-Julson.

Miss Bryn-Julson is a 21-year-old soprano from Moorehead, Minnesota who attended Concordia College and is presently studying with Helen Boatwright at Syracuse University.

At this year's session of the Berkshire Music Center, she was the recipient of a Fromm Fellowship and was also awarded the High Fidelity Magazine Prize which is awarded to "a talented member of any department at the Music Center."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 15 1966

Mark M. Horblit Award Presented To Schuller

At ceremonies in Lenox Saturday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the 1966 Mark M. Horblit Award of $1,500 to composer Gunther Schuller.

The award, established in 1947 by Mr. Horblit, is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States, is conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras."

The Horblit Award does not involve competition, but rather is granted on the basis of recognition for works which have been performed by symphony orchestras.

Mr. Schuller is Head of the Contemporary Music Activities at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center.

STANDARD
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 5,400
AUG 5 1966

A certificate of appreciation was presented to New England Life Insurance Co. by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the company's support during the 38th Summer Esplanade Concert season at the Hatch Memorial Shell.

Henry Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, cited the [illegible] firms supporting the summer concert program include John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., and Marsh & McLennan, Inc.

The concerts are sponsored each summer by the trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of founder and conductor Arthur Fiedler.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 14 1966

Gunther Schuller Given Mark M. Horblit Award

LENOX — At recent ceremonies held in Lenox, the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the 1966 Mark M. Horblit Award of $1500 to composer Gunther Schuller.

Meritorious Work

The award, established in 1947 by Mr. Horblit, is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States, is conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras."

The Horblit Award does not involve competition, but rather is granted on the basis of recognition for works which have been performed by symphony orchestras. The Award Committee consists of the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the president of the orchestra's trustees, and the chairman of the department of music of Harvard University.

Seven Studies

Mr. Schuller is head of the Contemporary Music Activities at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center. During the orchestra's 1964-65 season the composer's Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee was performed at several concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, and on tour.

Excerpts of the Seven Studies will be played on today's Tanglewood program. The complete Boston Symphony Orchestra concert will be televised live and in color by the National Broadcasting Company's television network.

RCA Victor's recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has recently been released.

The award is not necessarily presented each year. Past recipients include: Aaron Copland, 1947; Walter Piston, 1948; Leonard Bernstein, 1949; Lukas Foss, 1952; Leo Smit, 1953; Andrew Imbrie, 1954; Ross Lee Finney, 1955; Easley Blackwood, 1958; Alexei Haieff, 1961; Seymour Shifrin, 1963; William Sydeman, 1964.

Makes Statement

Music Director Erich Leinsdorf made the following statement for the presentation:

"When Gunther Schuller announced to me his resignation from his position as First Horn player in the New York (old) Metropolitan Opera Orchestra to devote his time exclusively to creative efforts, I wished him well and prayed for his success.

"Some seven years later I can rejoice in the deserved honors and kudos that are coming his way. Only a year ago did he accept my invitation to become the head of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center; and now we have the wonderful news of his appointment as president of the New England Conservatory.

The Committee of the Horblit Award—consisting of Henry B. Cabot, the president of our trustees; the chairman of the music department of Harvard University, Nino Pirrotta and I decided on Mr. Schuller as recipient of this year's award rather independently of these positions and appointments.

Add Good Wishes

"This way many months ago Mr. Schuller was in Germany at work on his new opera, (which will have its premiere in Hamburg on Oct. 12), and Committee of the Horblit Award decided at that time to wait with the announcement until a suitable moment arrived. This now seems the right time to add, in tangible form, our good wishes.

"The Boston Symphony is proud to have not only performed works by Gunther Schuller but to have recorded his eminently witty and apt suite, Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee.

"We present this award to Mr. Schuller for the great contribution which he has made through his music."

GRANTS AND AWARDS

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 28 1966

4 Musicians Awarded Prizes At Berkshire Music Center

At this season's final performance of the Berkshire Music Center Fellowship Orchestra during the Festival of Contemporary American Music sponsored by Paul Fromm and the Fromm Music Foundation, prizes were awarded to four outstanding musicians.

Merit in Composition

The first to be awarded was the Aaron Copland Award to Mario Davidovsky, for merit in composition, awarded to a former student of Mr. Copland. This award has been donated by Paul Fromm, Boosey and Hawkes, Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, and the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Davidovsky studied composition in Buenos Aires and at Tanglewood in 1958 with Aaron Copland and was a recipient of a Fromm-Tanglewood Commission at the 1964 session of the Berkshire Music Center.

He came to this country in late 1960 as a Guggenheim Fellow to work in the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center.

Chamber Music Award

The Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition awards for a piece of chamber music composed or finished at the Berkshire Music Center, donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation were awarded to Alfred Lerdahl and William Albright. Alfred Lerdahl is from Madison, Wisconsin, 23 years old and a graduate student in composition at Princeton University where he is working with Milton Babbitt.

He completed his undergraduate study at Lawrence University, where he worked with Professors Ming and Duncan. He was a member of the Music Center in 1965 and at this year's session was the recipient of the Margaret Lee Crofts Fellowship for composers.

William Albright is from West Orange, New Jersey, 21 years of age and has just completed his Bachelor of Music Degree at the University of Michigan where he studied composition with Leslie Bassett and Ross Lee Finney.

Since he was with the Berkshire Music Center in 1964, he has had his works performed in New York City, at the University of Ohio, and the San Francisco Tape Center as well as at the Bennington Composer's Conference. This session he was the recipient of the Margaret Lee Crofts Fellowship for composers.

The Composition Performance Award for superior performance and helpfulness to the composers at Tanglewood, donated by Michael Colgrass was awarded to Miss Phyllis Bryn-Julson.

Miss Bryn-Julson is a 21-year-old soprano from Moorehead, Minnesota who attended Concordia College and is presently studying with Helen Boatwright at Syracuse University.

At this year's session of the Berkshire Music Center, she was the recipient of a Fromm Fellowship and was also awarded the High Fidelity Magazine Prize which is awarded to "a talented member of any department at the Music Center."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 15 1966

Mark M. Horblit Award Presented To Schuller

At ceremonies in Lenox Saturday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the 1966 Mark M. Horblit Award of $1,500 to composer Gunther Schuller.

The award, established in 1947 by Mr. Horblit, is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States, is conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras."

The Horblit Award does not involve competition, but rather is granted on the basis of recognition for works which have been performed by symphony orchestras.

Mr. Schuller is Head of the Contemporary Music Activities at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 14 1966

Gunther Schuller Given Mark M. Horblit Award

LENOX — At recent ceremonies held in Lenox, the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the 1966 Mark M. Horblit Award of $1500 to composer Gunther Schuller.

Meritorious Work

The award, established in 1947 by Mr. Horblit, is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States, is conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras."

The Horblit Award does not involve competition, but rather is granted on the basis of recognition for works which have been performed by symphony orchestras. The Award Committee consists of the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the president of the orchestra's trustees, and the chairman of the department of music of Harvard University.

Seven Studies

Mr. Schuller is head of the Contemporary Music Activities at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center. During the orchestra's 1964-65 season the composer's Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee was performed at several concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, and on tour.

Excerpts of the Seven Studies will be played on today's Tanglewood program. The complete Boston Symphony Orchestra concert will be televised live and in color by the National Broadcasting Company's television network.

RCA Victor's recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has recently been released.

The award is not necessarily presented each year. Past recipients include: Aaron Copland, 1947; Walter Piston, 1948; Leonard Bernstein, 1949; Lukas Foss, 1952; Leo Smit, 1953; Andrew Imbrie, 1954; Ross Lee Finney, 1955; Easley Blackwood, 1958; Alexei Haieff, 1961; Seymour Shifrin, 1963; William Sydeman, 1964.

Makes Statement

Music Director Erich Leinsdorf made the following statement for the presentation:

"When Gunther Schuller announced to me his resignation from his position as First Horn player in the New York (old) Metropolitan Opera Orchestra to devote his time exclusively to creative efforts, I wished him well and prayed for his success.

"Some seven years later I can rejoice in the deserved honors and kudos that are coming his way. Only a year ago did he accept my invitation to become the head of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center; and now we have the wonderful news of his appointment as president of the New England Conservatory.

The Committee of the Horblit Award—consisting of Henry B. Cabot, the president of our trustees; the chairman of the music department of Harvard University, Nino Pirrotta and I decided on Mr. Schuller as recipient of this year's award rather independently of these positions and appointments.

Add Good Wishes

"This way many months ago Mr. Schuller was in Germany at work on his new opera, (which will have its premiere in Hamburg on Oct. 12), and Committee of the Horblit Award decided at that time to wait with the announcement until a suitable moment arrived. This now seems the right time to add, in tangible form, our good wishes.

"The Boston Symphony is proud to have not only performed works by Gunther Schuller but to have recorded his eminently witty and apt suite, Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee.

"We present this award to Mr. Schuller for the great contribution which he has made through his music."

FRANKLIN
LAS. E. BECKER, CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER & GEO
SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS • DISTINGUISHED
e world's largest legal reserve stock life insuranc to the underwriting of individual Ordinary I Over $6,000,000,000 of insuran

ople in it

company for "having thus joined the orchestra in the public service it renders to the community." He further commended New England Life's contribution in ". . . helping to preserve one of Boston's chief cultural assets."

Other insurance firms supporting the summer concert program include John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., and Marsh & McLennan, Inc.

The concerts are sponsored each summer by the trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of founder and conductor Arthur Fiedler.

GRANTS AND AWARDS

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 2 8 1966

4 Musicians Awarded Prizes At Berkshire Music Center

At this season's final performance of the Berkshire Music Center Fellowship Orchestra during the Festival of Contemporary American Music sponsored by Paul Fromm and the Fromm Music Foundation, prizes were awarded to four outstanding musicians.

Merit in Composition

The first to be awarded was the Aaron Copland Award to Mario Davidovsky, for merit in composition, awarded to a former student of Mr. Copland. This award has been donated by Paul Fromm, Boosey and Hawkes, Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Davidovsky studied composition in Buenos Aires and at Tanglewood in 1958 with Aaron Copland and was a recipient of a Fromm-Tanglewood Commission at the 1964 session of the Berkshire Music Center.

He came to this country in late 1960 as a Guggenhein Fellow to work in the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center.

Chamber Music Award

The Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition awards for a piece of chamber music composed or finished at the Berkshire Music Center, donated by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation were awarded to Alfred Lerdahl and William Albright. Alfred Lerdahl is from Madison, Wisconsin, 23 years old and a graduate student in composition at Princeton University where he is working with Milton Babbitt.

He completed his undergraduate study at Lawrence University, where he worked with Professors Ming and Duncan. He was a member of the Music Center in 1965 and at this year's session was the recipient of the Margaret Lee Crofts Fellowship, for composers.

William Albright is from West Orange, New Jersey, 21 years of age and has just completed his Bachelor of Music Degree at the University of Michigan where he studied composition with Leslie Bassett and Ross Lee Finney.

Since he was with the Berkshire Music Center in 1964, he has had his works performed in New York City, at the University of Ohio, and the San Francisco Tape Center as well as at the Bennington Composer's Conference. This session he was the recipient of the Margaret Lee Crofts Fellowship for composers.

The Composition Performance Award for superior performance and helpfulness to the composers at Tanglewood, donated by Michael Colgrass was awarded to Miss Phyllis Bryn-Julson.

Miss Bryn-Julson is a 21-year-old soprano from Moorehead, Minnesota who attended Concordia College and is presently studying with Helen Boatwright at Syracuse University.

At this year's session of the Berkshire Music Center, she was the recipient of a Fromm Fellowship and was also awarded the High Fidelity Magazine Prize which is awarded to "a talented member of any department at the Music Center."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc,
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 15 1966

Mark M. Horblit Award Presented To Schuller

At ceremonies in Lenox Saturday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the 1966 Mark M. Horblit Award of $1,500 to composer Gunther Schuller.

The award, established in 1947 by Mr. Horblit, is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States, is conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras."

The Horblit Award does not involve competition, but rather is granted on the basis of recognition for works which have been performed by symphony orchestras.

Mr. Schuller is Head of the Contemporary Music Activities at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center.

PAMWILK
ple in it
Buffalo
IAS. E. BECKER, CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER / DISTINGUISHED SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS / GEN
e world's largest legal reserve stock life insuranc to the underwriting of individual Ordinary
Over $6,000,000,000 of Insuran

company for "having thus joined the orchestra in the public service it renders to the community." He further commended New England Life's contribution in ". . . helping to preserve one of Boston's chief cultural assets."

Other insurance firms supporting the summer concert program include John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., and Marsh & McLennan, Inc.

The concerts are sponsored each summer by the trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of founder and conductor Arthur Fiedler.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
AUG 1 4 1966

Gunther Schuller Given Mark M. Horblit Award

LENOX — At recent ceremonies held in Lenox, the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the 1966 Mark M. Horblit Award of $1500 to composer Gunther Schuller.

Meritorious Work

The award, established in 1947 by Mr. Horblit, is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States, is conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras."

The Horblit Award does not involve competition, but rather is granted on the basis of recognition for works which have been performed by symphony orchestras. The Award Committee consists of the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the president of the orchestra's trustees, and the chairman of the department of music of Harvard University.

Seven Studies

Mr. Schuller is head of the Contemporary Music Activities at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center. During the orchestra's 1964-65 season the composer's Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee was performed at several concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, and on tour.

Excerpts of the Seven Studies will be played on today's Tanglewood program. The complete Boston Symphony Orchestra concert will be televised live and in color by the National Broadcasting Company's television network.

RCA Victor's recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has recently been released.

The award is not necessarily presented each year. Past recipients include: Aaron Copland, 1947; Walter Piston, 1948; Leonard Bernstein, 1949; Lukas Foss, 1952; Leo Smit, 1953; Andrew Imbrie, 1954; Ross Lee Finney, 1955; Easley Blackwood, 1958; Alexei Haieff, 1961; Seymour Shifrin, 1963; William Sydeman, 1964.

Makes Statement

Music Director Erich Leinsdorf made the following statement for the presentation:

"When Gunther Schuller announced to me his resignation from his position as First Horn player in the New York (old) Metropolitan Opera Orchestra to devote his time exclusively to creative efforts, I wished him well and prayed for his success.

"Some seven years later I can rejoice in the deserved honors and kudos that are coming his way. Only a year ago did he accept my invitation to become the head of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center; and now we have the wonderful news of his appointment as president of the New England Conservatory.

The Committee of the Horblit Award—consisting of Henry B. Cabot, the president of our trustees; the chairman of the music department of Harvard University, Nino Pirrotta and I decided on Mr. Schuller as recipient of this year's award rather independently of these positions and appointments.

Add Good Wishes

"This way many months ago Mr. Schuller was in Germany at work on his new opera, (which will have its premiere in Hamburg on Oct. 12), and Committee of the Horblit Award decided at that time to wait with the announcement until a suitable moment arrived. This now seems the right time to add, in tangible form, our good wishes.

"The Boston Symphony is proud to have not only performed works by Gunther Schuller but to have recorded his eminently witty and apt suite, Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee.

"We present this award to Mr. Schuller for the great contribution which he has made through his music."

176

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
SEP 26 1966

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,836
SEP 26 1966

$1.5 Million Gift Revealed At Williams Convocation

WILLIAMSTOWN — An anonymous gift of $1.5 million for special support of the humanities at Williams College was announced Sunday by President John E. Sawyer at the college's annual fall convocation in Chapin Hall.

Three honorary degrees were awarded to men in the fields of music, literature and art: Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Nevill Coghill, Merton professor of English literature at Oxford University, England; and Peter Guille, retired director of the Clark Art Institute, Williamstown.

President Sawyer termed the anonymous endowment as enlightened private recognition of the importance of the humanities "at a time when more money and talent than ever before is flowing into scientific and technical fields."

Summer Grants

It provides for summer grants of $1,000 to junior faculty members in the humanities (generally art, music, drama, literature and the languages) who will devote two months of their vacations to serious professional work in their specialties. Grants of $500 are also available for one month of work.

In addition, the gift establishes a new professorship in the humanities, Sawyer disclosed. It will be known as the Margaret Bundy Scott visiting professorship of literature.

The woman for whom the new professorship is named was not further identified. However, it was learned she has a family connection with the college.

The summer assistance program to junior faculty members has already gone into effect, the president revealed. During the past summer, 15 assistant professors and instructors in the humanities at Williams received grants.

Coghill Speaks

Prof. Coghill, teacher, author and producer of plays in the fields of Chaucer and Shakespeare, received the degree of doctor of letters. He spoke on behalf of all of the honorary degree recipients, discussing "The Explosion in Values."

A fellow and tutor in English literature at Oxford since 1925, he is currently directing the filming in Italy of Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus," in which one of his former students, Richard Burton, has the title role. Burton's wife, Elizabeth Taylor, is playing Helen of Troy. Proceeds of the movie will be used in the building of a new theater at Oxford.

Coghill is remaining at Williams for a week to meet informally with students at meals and in the classroom. He will give one public lecture.

Leinsdorf, conductor and music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1962 and before that conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, Rochester Philharmonic and Metropolitan Opera in New York, received an honorary doctorate of music degree.

Leinsdorf Citation

The citation stated:

"Your leadership of the foremost symphonic orchestras here and abroad has reflected a total respect for the music itself, both classic and modern, that has brought new clarity of texture to one of the world's great orchestras and demonstrated single-minded commitment to the highest traditions of a demanding art."

Guille, who retired this year as director of the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute, Williamstown, received an honorary master of arts degree.

Guille was the institute's first director and supervised construction of the building in the early 1950s. A recognized master silversmith who began his training in the 1920s in Great Britain, he is the only American with a recorded maker's mark in Great Britain. He founded his own company, Peter Guille, Ltd., of New York, in 1936. He is vice president of the Robert Sterling Clark Foundation.

The citation paid tribute to the "devotion and the standards" Guille brought to the Clark Art Institute in its "remarkable physical plant, its operation, its exhibitions, and its policy of limited acquisitions of the highest quality."

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
SEP 26 1966

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
SEP 26 1966

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 3,267
SEP 26 1966

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 19,234
SEP 26 1966

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,202
SEP 26 1966

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 26 1966

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 14,186
SEP 26 1966

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357
SEP 26 1966

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 10,176
SEP 28 1966

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
SEP 26 1966

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
SEP 26 1966

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 9,367
SEP 26 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
SEP 27 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 27 1966

Musical Chairs

Leinsdorf, 2 Others Honored

LEINSDORF
". . . distinguished"

MUNCH
. . . at 75

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

The Boston Symphony's Erich Leinsdorf was given an honorary doctor of music degree Sunday by Williams College at a humanities convocation.

Also honored were Nevill Coghill, Merton professor of English literature at Oxford and director of Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor in "Doctor Faustus," and Peter Guille, retiring director of the Clark Art Institute in Williamstown.

Williams College, which is the northernmost town in Berkshire County, began Leinsdorf's citation with mention of one of the county's most noted artistic ventures, the Berkshire Festival:

"As the Boston Symphony completes its 85th season and the 30th anniversary of its first coming to Tanglewood, we salute the scholarship, the self-discipline, the enormous intellectual capactiy and the profound musical understanding of its music director.

"Educated in Vienna, brilliant assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini, from the age of 22 at the Saltzburg Festival, your years at the Metropolitan Opera in New York brought recognition as one of the most distinguished operatic conductors of our time.

"Your leadership of the foremost symphonic orchestras here and abroad has reflected a total respect for the music itself, both classic and modern, that has brought new clarity of texture to one of the world's great orchestras, and demonstrated single-minded commitment to the highest traditions of a demanding art."

The honorary doctorate for Peter Guille should recall to Boston Symphony players the champagne parties which the Clark Art Institute gave the orchestra during the tenure of Charles Munch. Munch, who once remarked that he was better known in Paris as a collector than as a conductor, was an admirer especially of the Clark's silver and drawings.

Charles Munch had his 75th birthday Monday. Conductor emeritus of the Boston Symphony, he is far from inactive. Concert dates take him around Europe and the Middle East, and he is recording for Epic and London. He returns to Boston at Christmastime for two programs. One will feature a Munch speciality, Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
SEP 26 1966

HONORED at Williams College's annual fall convocation Sunday were Peter Guille, left, retiring director of the Clark Art Institute, Williamstown, who received an honorary master of arts degree, and Erich Leinsdorf, right, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who received an honorary doctor of music degree. They are shown with Prof. Neville Coghill, Merton professor of English literature at Oxford University who received an honorary doctor of letters degree, and Williams President John E. Sawyer. Story on convocation appears on Page 17.

176

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
SEP 26 1966

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,836
SEP 26 1966

$1.5 Million Gift Revealed At Williams Convocation

WILLIAMSTOWN — An anonymous gift of $1.5 million for special support of the humanities at Williams College was announced Sunday by President John E. Sawyer at the college's annual fall convocation in Chapin Hall.

Three honorary degrees were awarded to men in the fields of music, literature and art: Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Nevill Coghill, Merton professor of English literature at Oxford University, England; and Peter Guille, retired director of the Clark Art Institute, Williamstown.

President Sawyer termed the anonymous endowment as enlightened private recognition of the importance of the humanities "at a time when more money and talent than ever before is flowing into scientific and technical fields."

Summer Grants

It provides for summer grants of $1,000 to junior faculty members in the humanities (generally art, music, drama, literature and the languages) who will devote two months of their vacations to serious professional work in their specialties. Grants of $500 are also available for one month of work.

In addition, the gift establishes a new professorship in the humanities, Sawyer disclosed. It will be known as the Margaret Bundy Scott visiting professorship of literature.

The woman for whom the new professorship is named was not further identified. However, it was learned she has a family connection with the college.

The summer assistance program to junior faculty members has already gone into effect, the president revealed. During the past summer, 15 assistant professors and instructors in the humanities at Williams received grants.

Coghill Speaks

Prof. Coghill, teacher, author and producer of plays in the fields of Chaucer and Shakespeare, received the degree of doctor of letters. He spoke on behalf of all of the honorary degree recipients, discussing "The Explosion in Values."

A fellow and tutor in English literature at Oxford since 1925, he is currently directing the filming in Italy of Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus," in which one of his former students, Richard Burton, has the title role. Burton's wife, Elizabeth Taylor, is playing Helen of Troy. Proceeds of the movie will be used in the building of a new theater at Oxford.

Coghill is remaining at Williams for a week to meet informally with students at meals and in the classroom. He will give one public lecture.

Leinsdorf, conductor and music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1962 and before that conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, Rochester Philharmonic and Metropolitan Opera in New York, received an honorary doctorate of music degree.

Leinsdorf Citation

The citation stated:

"Your leadership of the foremost symphonic orchestras here and abroad has reflected a total respect for the music itself, both classic and modern, that has brought new clarity of texture to one of the world's great orchestras and demonstrated single-minded commitment to the highest traditions of a demanding art."

Guille, who retired this year as director of the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute, Williamstown, received an honorary master of arts degree.

Guille was the institute's first director and supervised construction of the building in the early 1950s. A recognized master silversmith who began his training in the 1920s in Great Britain, he is the only American with a recorded maker's mark in Great Britain. He founded his own company, Peter Guille, Ltd., of New York, in 1936. He is vice president of the Robert Sterling Clark Foundation.

The citation paid tribute to the "devotion and the standards" Guille brought to the Clark Art Institute in its "remarkable physical plant, its operation, its exhibitions, and its policy of limited acquisitions of the highest quality."

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
SEP 26 1966

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
SEP 26 1966

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,287
SEP 26 1966

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,934
SEP 26 1966

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,202
SEP 26 1966

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 26 1966

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 14,186
SEP 26 1966

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357
SEP 26 1966

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 10,176
SEP 28 1966

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
SEP 26 1966

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
SEP 26 1966

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 9,367
SEP 26 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
SEP 27 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 27 1966

Musical Chairs

Leinsdorf, 2 Others Honored

LEINSDORF
". . . distinguished"

MUNCH
. . . at 75

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

The Boston Symphony's Erich Leinsdorf was given an honorary doctor of music degree Sunday by Williams College at a humanities convocation.

Also honored were Nevill Coghill, Merton professor of English literature at Oxford and director of Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor in "Doctor Faustus," and Peter Guille, retiring director of the Clark Art Institute in Williamstown.

Williams College, which is the northernmost town in Berkshire County, began Leinsdorf's citation with mention of one of the county's most noted artistic ventures, the Berkshire Festival:

"As the Boston Symphony completes its 85th season and the 30th anniversary of its first coming to Tanglewood, we salute the scholarship, the self-discipline, the enormous intellectual capactiy and the profound musical understanding of its music director.

"Educated in Vienna, brilliant assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini, from the age of 22 at the Saltzburg Festival, your years at the Metropolitan Opera in New York brought recognition as one of the most distinguished operatic conductors of our time.

"Your leadership of the foremost symphonic orchestras here and abroad has reflected a total respect for the music itself, both classic and modern, that has brought new clarity of texture to one of the world's great orchestras, and demonstrated single-minded commitment to the highest traditions of a demanding art."

The honorary doctorate for Peter Guille should recall to Boston Symphony players the champagne parties which the Clark Art Institute gave the orchestra during the tenure of Charles Munch. Munch, who once remarked that he was better known in Paris as a collector than as a conductor, was an admirer especially of the Clark's silver and drawings.

Charles Munch had his 75th birthday Monday. Conductor emeritus of the Boston Symphony, he is far from inactive. Concert dates take him around Europe and the Middle East, and he is recording for Epic and London. He returns to Boston at Christmastime for two programs. One will feature a Munch speciality, Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
SEP 26 1966

HONORED at Williams College's annual fall convocation Sunday were Peter Guille, left, retiring director of the Clark Art Institute, Williamstown, who received an honorary master of arts degree, and Erich Leinsdorf, right, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who received an honorary doctor of music degree. They are shown with Prof. Neville Coghill, Merton professor of English literature at Oxford University who received an honorary doctor of letters degree, and Williams President John E. Sawyer. Story on convocation appears on Page 17.

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY-CIRC.AVAIL.
JUN 8 1966 Buffalo

Inside Stuff—Legit

The annual Whitbread Anglo-American Awards, for outstanding creative contributions of British origin to the Broadway stage, will be presented tonight (Wed.) at the Hotel Piccadilly, N.Y., with producer Hillard Elkins as emcee. The categories and winners are: musical performance, April Olrich in "Wait a Minim"; actress, Sheila Hancock in "Entertaining Mr. Sloane"; actor, Nicol Williamson in "Inadmissible Evidence"; supporting performance, Roland Culver in "Ivanov"; British performer in a Yank production, Rosemary Harris in "Lion in Winter"; director, Peter Brook for "Marat-Sade"; play, Michael Dyne's "Right Honourable Gentleman"; set design, Michael Annals for "Royal Hunt of the Sun." The seven judges considered no British tuner import worthy of a best-musical citation.

The U.S. awards have their edition in London, where the winners, already reported, were Jim Haynes, for his development of the Traverse Theatre, Edinburgh; Arthur Miller, for "Incident at Vichy"; Diana Sands, for "The Owl and the Pussycat"; Barbra Streisand, for "Funny Girl"; and Jule Styne and Bob Merrill for the "Funny Girl" songs.

Boston Univ., in cooperation with the Berkshire Music Center and the Berkshire Theatre Festival, is organizing a playwrights' symposium and seminar for July 5-Aug. 1 at the Windsor Mountain School near Tanglewood, Mass. Aspiring authors will see portions of their works performed by professional actors, then undergo critical appraisals by their peers. Harold Clurman, a director-critic, is artistic director of the event, which is open to "all students of the theatre who have had at least two years of college study, theatrical training or similarly pertinent experience."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
JUN 11 1966

BTF Names Silverman Season Music Director

Whitestone
Stanley Silverman

Stanley Silverman, 27, for four years an instructor at Tanglewood, has been named music director for the Berkshire Teatre Festival.

Mr. Silverman, who currently holds a Guggenheim Fellowship for musical compsition, is musical director at the Vivian Beaumont Theatre at Lincoln Center for the repertory company. He wrote music this year for the company's production, "The Country Wife."

He will write incidental music for "Skin of Our Teeth," the season's first production, and a score for the songs in "The Cretan Woman," by Robinson Jeffers. He will also work on an original score for "The Merchant of Venice." He will direct the music for the season's final play, "The Invigorating Effects of Money and Other Matters," a collation of scenes and songs by Bertoldt Brecht.

Mr. Silverman has been an instructor at the Berkshire Music Festival's department of listening and analysis since 1962. Before then he worked as an administrator at the Center and was a student for two years. He will continue to be a faculty member at Tanglewood.

Married to the former Mary Delson of Lenox, Mr. Silverman recently returned from Paris, where one of his works, "Planh," was performed at the American Festival of Contemporary Music, sponsored by Radiodiffusion Francaise and the U.S. State Department. Gunther Schuller conducted.

In 1964 "Canso," a work commissioned by the Music Festival, was awarded a Fromm Foundation performance grant and played at Tanglewood's Fromm Festival. Mr. Silverman's "Tenso" was performed in 1962 at the White House and at the United Nations.

Mr. Schuller is a graduate of Boston University and Mills College in California, where he earned a master's degree and studied with Darius Milhaud.

Mr. and Mrs. Silverman will live on Laurel Lake in Lenox.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425
JUN 14 1966 Buffalo

★ ★ ★

Michael Colgrass, Roger Reynolds, Douglas Leedy and Henry Weinberg have been commissioned to write works for the Festival of Contemporary American Music to be held Aug. 14-18 at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass.

R.E.K.

GETTYSBURG, PA.
TIMES
D. 9,000
JUN 15 1966 Buffalo

IS GIVEN YALE MUSIC AWARD WITH DEGREE

Harold Oliver, son of Harold S. Oliver and the late Mrs. Oliver, Bendersville, Monday received his master's degree and a cash award at Yale University for writing the "best large composition of the year" in the university's School of Music. The music was composed for orchestra. He also was recognized for a composition for electronic music which was forwarded to Harvard University for performance.

HAROLD OLIVER

A 1960 graduate of Biglerville High School, he has been awarded a three-year fellowship of the National Defense Foundation to study for his Ph.D. at Princeton, N.J., in September, and will work this summer at the Tanglewood, Mass., Music Workshop, directed by Eric Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will study under Milton Babbitt, international authority on 12-tone music, at Princeton.

The local high school musician was awarded a scholarship to Yale at the end of his Junior year at Peabody Conservatory and received his B.A. degree in 1964.

Leonard Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, received an honorary degree at the Yale commencement Monday.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206
JUN 19 1966 Buffalo

Berkshire Center opens

The Berkshire Music Center will open its 26th season next Sunday at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Erich Leinsdorf will speak at ceremonies launching the work by 400 [illegible] musicians. Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin July 2 at the Shed.

SUZANNE THOMAS

—Call-Chronicle Photo by Reckmake

Suzanne Realizes Her Dream To Be an Orchestral Harpist

By DORIS LEETE

To become part of a professional symphony orchestra has been the shining goal of pretty Suzanne Thomas, almost since the time she first learned to pluck ephemeral melodies on the harp strings at the age of ten.

But the harp is not exactly in great demand as far as the orchestras are concerned. The majority require only one fulltime harpist, and the very large orchestras two at most. And so, a musician dedicated to this old and most romantic of instruments may wish in vain to play her lovely glissandos and arpeggios on the symphonic concert stage.

A Dream Come True

Despite such dearth of opportunities, Suzanne has just realized her dream by signing a contract with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra where she will become principal harpist in October.

"I guess it was luck that I happened to be there at the right time," says the poised and talented daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Thomas of Emmaus when mentioning that there hadn't been an opening in the orchestra for five years. Part of it may have been luck, but Suzanne was well prepared to respond when opportunity knocked.

The young musician is a graduate of the Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester and has been working for her master's degree there. While at school she played with the Utica Symphony, the Cornell University Orchestra and the Hamilton Symphony in Hamilton, Ontario, and has also played second harp with the Buffalo Philharmonic.

With Top Conductors

Suzanne has worked with top conductors, her most thrilling experiences being under the batons of Leopold Stokowski and Igor Stravinsky when those famous persons guest conducted the Eastman Philharmonia. Last year she spent nine weeks in Aspen, Colo., playing with the Aspen Festival Orchestra and participating in chamber concerts, operas and orchestra concerts.

She was a gold medal winner in the first Eastern Regional Competition sponsored by the American Harp Society in 1963 and in 1958 at the age of 15 she appeared in the Lyon and Healy recital in Carnegie Hall, New York City.

'Just a Natural'

Teacher Dorothy Knauss says that Suzanne was "just a natural" when she graduated to the harp from the piano which she had learned to play when she was five. She always worked hard and never had to be told to practice, recalls the teacher, openly proud of the accomplishments of her former pupil.

Suzanne will start her professional career with a beautiful new harp. Besides her regular performances she expects to do a young audience series in which she will play with the flute and the violin. As far as she knows, she will be the only fulltime harp artist in the Buffalo area. She hasn't decided about further studies toward her master's degree. It will all depend upon the time available.

More Conservative Tastes

The Buffalo orchestra's director Lukas Foss is partial to avant-garde composers, says Suzanne who admits to more conservative tastes. Bach, Beethoven and Brahms are among her favorites but they have offered little as far as harp scores go, she points out.

At the moment Suzanne, a Parkland High School graduate, is preparing to take off for Tanglewood in the Massachusetts Berkshires. She has a fellowship to spend eight weeks playing with a student orchestra under the direction of Eric Leinsdorf.

Friends will have an opportunity to see and hear Suzanne next April when the Buffalo Philharmonic comes to Bethlehem under the auspices of Community Concerts.

ALLENTOWN, PA.
CALL-CHRONICLE
SUN. 110,500
JUN 19 1966 Buffalo

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

JUN 8 1966

Inside Stuff—Legit

The annual Whitbread Anglo-American Awards, for outstanding creative contributions of British origin to the Broadway stage, will be presented tonight (Wed.) at the Hotel Piccadilly, N.Y., with producer Hillard Elkins as emcee. The categories and winners are: musical performance, April Olrich in "Wait a Minim"; actress, Shelia Hancock in "Entertaining Mr. Sloane"; actor, Nicol Williamson in "Inadmissible Evidence"; supporting performance, Roland Culver in "Ivanov"; British performer in a Yank production, Rosemary Harris in "Lion in Winter"; director, Peter Brook for "Marat-Sade"; play, Michael Dyne's "Right Honourable Gentleman"; set design, Michael Annals for "Royal Hunt of the Sun." The seven judges considered no British tuner import worthy of a best-musical citation.

The U.S. awards have their edition in London, where the winners, already reported, were Jim Haynes, for his development of the Traverse Theatre, Edinburgh; Arthur Miller, for "Incident at Vichy"; Diana Sands, for "The Owl and the Pussycat"; Barbra Streisand, for "Funny Girl"; and Jule Styne and Bob Merrill for the "Funny Girl" songs.

Boston Univ., in cooperation with the Berkshire Music Center and the Berkshire Theatre Festival, is organizing a playwrights' symposium and seminar for July 5-Aug. 1 at the Windsor Mountain School near Tanglewood, Mass. Aspiring authors will see portions of their works performed by professional actors, then undergo critical appraisals by their peers. Harold Clurman, a director-critic, is artistic director of the event, which is open to "all students of the theatre who have had at least two years of college study, theatrical training or similarly pertinent experience."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177

JUN 11 1966

BTF Names Silverman Season Music Director

Stanley Silverman, 27, for four years an instructor at Tanglewood, has been named music director for the Berkshire Teatre Festival.

Mr. Silverman, who currently holds a Guggenheim Fellowship for musical compsition, is musical director at the Vivian Beaumont Theatre at Lincoln Center for the repertory company. He wrote music this year for the company's production, "The Country Wife."

He will write incidental music for "Skin of Our Teeth," the season's first production, and a score for the songs in "The Cretan Woman," by Robinson Jeffers. He will also work on an original score for "The Merchant of Venice." He will direct the music for the season's final play, "The Invigorating Effects of Money and Other Matters," a collation of scenes and songs by Bertoldt Brecht.

Whitestone

Stanley Silverman

Mr. Silverman has been an instructor at the Berkshire Music Festival's department of listening and analysis since 1962. Before then he worked as an administrator at the Center and was a student for two years. He will continue to be a faculty member at Tanglewood.

Married to the former Mary Delson of Lenox, Mr. Silverman recently returned from Paris, where one of his works, "Planh," was performed at the American Festival of Contemporary Music, sponsored by Radiodiffusion Francaise and the U.S. State Department. Gunther Schuller conducted.

In 1964 "Canso," a work commissioned by the Music Festival, was awarded a Fromm Foundation performance grant and played at Tanglewood's Fromm Festival. Mr. Silverman's "Tenso" was performed in 1962 at the White House and at the United Nations.

Mr. Schuller is a graduate of Boston University and Mills College in California, where he earned a master's degree and studied with Darius Milhaud.

Mr. and Mrs. Silverman will live on Laurel Lane in Lenox.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N.Y.
D. 55,105

JUN 14 1966

★ ★ ★

Michael Colgrass, Roger Reynolds, Douglas Leedy and Henry Weinberg have been commissioned to write works for the Festival of Contemporary American Music to be held Aug. 14-18 at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass.

R.E.K.

GETTYSBURG, PA.
TIMES
D. 9,000

JUN 15 1966

IS GIVEN YALE MUSIC AWARD WITH DEGREE

Harold Oliver, son of Harold S. Oliver and the late Mrs. Oliver, Bendersville, Monday received his master's degree and a cash award at Yale University for writing the "best large composition of the year" in the university's School of Music. The music was composed for orchestra. He also was recognized for a composition for electronic music which was forwarded to Harvard University for performance.

HAROLD OLIVER

A 1960 graduate of Biglerville High School, he has been awarded a three-year fellowship of the National Defense Foundation to study for his Ph.D. at Princeton, N.J., in September, and will work this summer at the Tanglewood, Mass., Music Workshop, directed by Eric Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will study under Milton Babbitt, international authority on 12-tone music, at Princeton.

The local high school musician was awarded a scholarship to Yale at the end of his Junior year at Peabody Conservatory and received his B.A. degree in 1964.

Leonard Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, received an honorary degree at the Yale commencement Monday.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206

JUN 19 1966

Berkshire Center opens

The Berkshire Music Center will open its 26th season next Sunday at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Erich Leinsdorf will speak at ceremonies launching the work by 400 young musicians. Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin July 2 at the Shed.

SUZANNE THOMAS

—Call-Chronicle Photo by Rockmak

Suzanne Realizes Her Dream To Be an Orchestral Harpist

By DORIS LEETE

To become part of a professional symphony orchestra has been the shining goal of pretty Suzanne Thomas, almost since the time she first learned to pluck ephemeral melodies on the harp strings at the age of ten.

But the harp is not exactly in great demand as far as the orchestras are concerned. The majority require only one fulltime harpist, and the very large orchestras two at most. And so, a musician dedicated to this old and most romantic of instruments may wish in vain to play her lovely glissandos and arpeggios on the symphonic concert stage.

A Dream Come True

Despite such dearth of opportunities, Suzanne has just realized her dream by signing a contract with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra where she will become principal harpist in October.

"I guess it was luck that I happened to be there at the right time," says the poised and talented daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Thomas of Emmaus when mentioning that there hadn't been an opening in the orchestra for five years. Part of it may have been luck, but Suzanne was well prepared to respond when opportunity knocked.

The young musician is a graduate of the Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester and has been working for her master's degree there. While at school she played with the Utica Symphony, the Cornell University Orchestra and the Hamilton Symphony in Hamilton, Ontario, and has also played second harp with the Buffalo Philharmonic.

With Top Conductors

Suzanne has worked with top conductors, her most thrilling experiences being under the batons of Leopold Stokowski and Igor Stravinsky when those famous persons guest conducted the Eastman Philharmonia. Last year she spent nine weeks in Aspen, Colo., playing with the Aspen Festival Orchestra and participating in chamber concerts, operas and orchestra concerts.

She was a gold medal winner in the first Eastern Regional Competition sponsored by the American Harp Society in 1963 and in 1958 at the age of 15 she appeared in the Lyon and Healy recital in Carnegie Hall, New York City.

'Just a Natural'

Teacher Dorothy Knauss says that Suzanne was "just a natural" when she graduated to the harp from the piano which she had learned to play when she was five. She always worked hard and never had to be told to practice, recalls the teacher, openly proud of the accomplishments of her former pupil.

Suzanne will start her professional career with a beautiful new harp. Besides her regular performances she expects to do a young audience series in which she will play with the flute and the violin. As far as she knows, she will be the only fulltime harp artist in the Buffalo area. She hasn't decided about further studies toward her master's degree. It will all depend upon the time available.

More Conservative Tastes

The Buffalo orchestra's director Lukas Foss is partial to avant-garde composers, says Suzanne who admits to more conservative tastes. Bach, Beethoven and Brahms are among her favorites but they have offered little as far as harp scores go, she points out.

At the moment Suzanne, a Parkland High School graduate, is preparing to take off for Tanglewood in the Massachusetts Berkshires. She has a fellowship to spend eight weeks playing with a student orchestra under the direction of Eric Leinsdorf.

Friends will have an opportunity to see and hear Suzanne next April when the Buffalo Philharmonic comes to Bethlehem under the auspices of Community Concerts.

ALLENTOWN, PA.
CALL-CHRONICLE
SUN. 110,500

JUN 19 1966

178

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUN 24 1966

Tanglewood Opens Sunday

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will begin its 26th session here Sunday afternoon with opening exercises at 3 in the theater.

During the week some 250 musicians will register for the eight-week session held in conjunction with the orchestra's Berkshire Festival.

Two new innovations at the music center this summer will bring the total enrollment to more than 400. Students affiliated with Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will take part in summer programs at Tanglewood.

These programs are music courses for college credit at the Berkshire Music Center and a Boston University theater program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theater Festival.

Leinsdorf To Talk

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at Sunday's exercises, which include the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's Alleluia. This work written especially for the opening of the music center in 1940 and subsequently sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the past two summers.

Also joining in the opening exercises will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager.

Long time faculty members Joseph Silverstein and Gunther Schuller will occupy new positions this summer. Mr. Silverstein is the new chairman of the faculty and Gunther Schuller is the head of contemporary music activities. Louis Speyer continues as assistant director of the music center with Victor Babin returning as chairman of the Tanglewood Institute.

Of the music center's total enrollment, 100 will be members of the fellowship program. Each of the participants in this program receive a fellowship stipend, and the program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers, and composers.

Seven Seminars

The Tanglewood Institute, consisting of seven seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provide a program for the musical laymen, teacher, student, and non-performing musician an environment which may broaden his musical horizons. Throughout the summer the participants in the music center will take part in more than thirty concerts and programs which are open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's activities.

Sunday's exercises are open to the public and tea will be served in the Tanglewood garden immediately following the ceremonies.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUN 24 1966

Theater Seminar to Meet

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the the Berkshire Music Festival and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, recently announced a cooperative project with Boston University whereby the university will offer college credit courses in music this summer at the Berkshire Music Center.

The theater seminar will be open to all students of the theater who have had at least two years of college study. theatrical training or similarly pertinent experience. John Ransford Watts, assistant professor of theater arts, will be director of the seminar.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
N. H. Sunday News
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Circ. 53,038
JUN 26 1966

Dr. Wing Gets Grant To Sing At Tanglewood

NEW LONDON, June 25 – Dr. Henry Wing, Jr., an instructor in the Music Department at Colby Junior College, has been awarded a grant to sing in the Fellowship Program of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., it has been announced by Dr. Everett M. Woodman, president of Colby.

"The Fellowship Program," according to Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, "was initiated in 1965 to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers, and composers, and includes participation in performing groups on a post-graduate level, lectures, and discussions."

"The Fellowship Program is designed to meet the needs of young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers. Dr. Wing is one of 24 singers enrolled in the Program. The singers will perform in a chamber chorus and the festival chorus, and in addition will prepare and perform solo music for performances of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the contemporary music program."

Dr. Wing received the Mus. B. and Mus. M. degrees from Oberlin College. He was awarded the PhD. degree from the Boston University Graduate School at commencement exercises held at Boston University on Sunday, May 29. He is a member of the American Musicological Society and the College Music Society.

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN. 427,240
JUN 26 1966

Berkshire Festival

Cultural Opportunity

"A landscape that combines every variety of beauty—valleys, in the hollow of which lie small lakes, glittering like sapphires; uplands . . . hills . . . woods . . . noble masses of granite rock . . . clear mountain brooks—all this, under a cloud varied sky, such as generally canopies mountain districts, the sunset glories of which are often magnificent."

Such is the manner in which Fanny Kemble, renowed Shakespearean actress of the 19th century, described the Berkshires of western Massachusetts. The same description could apply to the area today for once out of the few small cities and towns of the region one finds the mountain scenery much as it was 100 or more years ago. At that period there resided in the Berkshires a number of 19th century literary giants. Melville, Holmes, and Longfellow were sometime residents of Pittsfield. In fact, Melville wrote his "Moby Dick" at "Arrowhead," still to be seen on Holmes Rd., Pittsfield.

Overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, or more properly, Lake Mahkeenac, was Tanglewood, the mid-19th century gentleman's estate of William Aspinwall Tappan. At the edge of this lovely property was the little red cottage made immortal by its then struggling resident, Nathaniel Hawthorne. Today, Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as it has been for 30 summers following the 1936 gift of the property to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. The red cottage was destroyed by fire in the 1890's but has been rebuilt on the original foundations and now serves as studios for the orchestra's flourishing educational arm, the Berkshire Music Center which last summer celebrated its 25th anniversary.

Two years prior to the gift of Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony a series of summer concerts began in the Berkshires. These were the beginnings of today's Berkshire Festival, the best known and longest of the major music festivals in this country. In the beautiful surroundings of formal gardens, hemlock hedges, avenues of tall pines, and great lawns, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives 24 concerts in the great Music Shed, which possesses such fine natural acoustics that an equal number of patrons can be seated comfortably on the grass and easily hear the music. Many vactioner to this area take advantage of this cultural opportunity.

For this summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has chosen the Romantic concerto as the theme. On each of six weekends with full orchestra two or three concerts will be performed by well-known solists. The festival opens on July 2, the Saturday of the long Fourth of July weekend, and concludes eight weeks later on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 21 with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. Brahms will be the featured composer during the three concerts of the opening weekend with three concerts devoted to Mozart and three to Bach on the succeeding weekends. On Aug. 6 Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct a concert version of Mozart's "The Magic Flute" and for the following weekend (Aug. 13, 14) the winners of this June's Moscow Tchaikovsky Competitions have been invited to be the soloists in several of the Russian composer's works.

Prior to each of the seven Friday evening Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts there will be a weekend prelude in which the soloists and members of the orchestra will perform lesser known works of the weekend's principal composer.

LENOX, MASS.—This is Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as seen from the air. From July 2 through Aug. 21 the orchestra present the famed Berkshire Festival. The 24 concerts are given in the Music Shed, left center. Visitors are invited to picnic and stroll about the grounds. Parking is available.

178

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUN 24 1966

Tanglewood Opens Sunday

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, will begin its 26th session here Sunday afternoon with opening exercises at 3 in the theater.

During the week some 250 musicians will register for the eight-week session held in conjunction with the orchestra's Berkshire Festival.

Two new innovations at the music center this summer will bring the total enrollment to more than 400. Students affiliated with Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the New England Conservatory will take part in summer programs at Tanglewood.

These programs are music courses for college credit at the Berkshire Music Center and a Boston University theater program carried on in association with the Berkshire Theater Festival.

Leinsdorf To Talk

Erich Leinsdorf will deliver the principal address at Sunday's exercises, which include the traditional singing of Randall Thompson's Alleluia. This work written especially for the opening of the music center in 1940 and subsequently sung each year, will be conducted by Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the past two summers.

Also joining in the opening exercises will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager.

Long time faculty members Joseph Silverstein and Gunther Schuller will occupy new positions this summer. Mr. Silverstein is the new chairman of the faculty and Gunther Schuller is the head of contemporary music activities. Louis Speyer continues as assistant director of the music center with Victor Babin returning as chairman of the Tanglewood Institute.

Of the music center's total enrollment, 100 will be members of the fellowship program. Each of the participants in this program receive a fellowship stipend, and the program is designed to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers, and composers.

Seven Seminars

The Tanglewood Institute, consisting of seven seminars, each with an informational focus for its members, provide a program for the musical laymen, teacher, student, and non-performing musician an environment which may broaden his musical horizons. Throughout the summer the participants in the music center will take part in more than thirty concerts and programs which are open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the center's activities.

Sunday's exercises are open to the public and tea will be served in the Tanglewood garden immediately following the ceremonies.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
N. H. Sunday News
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Circ. 53,038
JUN 26 1966

Dr. Wing Gets Grant To Sing At Tanglewood

NEW LONDON, June 25 – Dr. Henry Wing, Jr., an instructor in the Music Department at Colby Junior College, has been awarded a grant to sing in the Fellowship Program of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., it has been announced by Dr. Everett M. Woodman, president of Colby.

"The Fellowship Program," according to Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, "was initiated in 1965 to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers, and composers, and includes participation in performing groups on a post-graduate level, lectures, and discussions."

"The Fellowship Program is designed to meet the needs of young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers. Dr. Wing is one of 24 singers enrolled in the Program. The singers will perform in a chamber chorus and the festival chorus, and in addition will prepare and perform solo music for performances of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the contemporary music program."

Dr. Wing received the Mus. B. and Mus. M. degrees from Oberlin College. He was awarded the PhD. degree from the Boston University Graduate School at commencement exercises held at Boston University on Sunday, May 29. He is a member of the American Musicological Society and the College Music Society.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUN 24 1966

Theater Seminar to Meet

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the the Berkshire Music Festival and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, recently announced a cooperative project with Boston University whereby the university will offer college credit courses in music this summer at the Berkshire Music Center.

The theater seminar will be open to all students of the theater who have had at least two years of college study. theatrical training or similarly pertinent experience. John Ransford Watts, assistant professor of theater arts, will be director of the seminar.

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN. 427,010
JUN 26 1966

Berkshire Festival

Cultural Opportunity

"A landscape that combines every variety of beauty—valleys, in the hollow of which lie small lakes, glittering like sapphires; uplands . . . hills . . . woods . . . noble masses of granite rock . . . clear mountain brooks—all this, under a cloud varied sky, such as generally canopies mountain districts, the sunset glories of which are often magnificent."

Such is the manner in which Fanny Kemble, renowed Shakespearean actress of the 19th century, described the Berkshires of western Massachusetts. The same description could apply to the area today for once out of the few small cities and towns of the region one finds the mountain scenery much as it was 100 or more years ago. At that period there resided in the Berkshires a number of 19th century literary giants. Melville, Holmes, and Longfellow were sometime residents of Pittsfield. In fact, Melville wrote his "Moby Dick" at "Arrowhead," still to be seen on Holmes Rd., Pittsfield.

Overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, or more properly, Lake Mahkeenac, was Tanglewood, the mid-19th century gentleman's estate of William Aspinwall Tappan. At the edge of this lovely property was the little red cottage made immortal by its then struggling resident, Nathaniel Hawthorne. Today, Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as it has been for 30 summers following the 1936 gift of the property to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. The red cottage was destroyed by fire in the 1890's but has been rebuilt on the original foundations and now serves as studios for the orchestra's flourishing educational arm, the Berkshire Music Center which last summer celebrated its 25th anniversary.

Two years prior to the gift of Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony a series of summer concerts began in the Berkshires. These were the beginnings of today's Berkshire Festival, the best known and longest of the major music festivals in this country. In the beautiful surroundings of formal gardens, hemlock hedges, avenues of tall pines, and great lawns, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives 24 concerts in the great Music Shed, which possesses such fine natural acoustics that an equal number of patrons can be seated comfortably on the grass and easily hear the music. Many vactioner to this area take advantage of this cultural opportunity.

LENOX, MASS.—This is Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as seen from the air. From July 2 through Aug. 21 the orchestra present the famed Berkshire Festival. The 24 concerts are given in the Music Shed, left center. Visitors are invited to picnic and stroll about the grounds. Parking is available.

For this summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has chosen the Romantic concerto as the theme. On each of six weekends with full orchestra two or three concerts will be performed by well-known solists. The festival opens on July 2, the Saturday of the long Fourth of July weekend, and concludes eight weeks later on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 21 with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. Brahms will be the featured composer during the three concerts of the opening weekend with three concerts devoted to Mozart and three to Bach on the succeeding weekends. On Aug. 6 Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct a concert version of Mozart's "The Magic Flute" and for the following weekend (Aug. 13, 14) the winners of this June's Moscow Tchaikovsky Competitions have been invited to be the soloists in several of the Russian composer's works.

Prior to each of the seven Friday evening Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts there will be a weekend prelude in which the soloists and members of the orchestra will perform lesser known works of the weekend's principal composer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
JUN 27 1966

Whitestone

JAPAN PHILHARMONIC MEMBERS Konosuke Ono, at left, and Soichi Katsuta chat with BSO music director Erich Leinsdorf at yesterday's ceremonies making the opening of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. Ono and Katsuta will participate in a BSO-Japan Philharmonic membership exchange next season.

Berkshire Music Center Opens for Another Season

LENOX — The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, opened its 1966 session yesterday afternoon with traditional exercises in the Tanglewood theatre.

A greeting to the audience by Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was followed by a musical presentation by Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir, pianists. The principal address of the afternoon was delivered by Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Music Center, who spoke on the cultural explosion.

Traditional Song

Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the music center's faculty, conducted the singing of the "Alleluia" by Randall Thompson, who composed the work for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940.

Following the program in the theatre, tea was served in the formal gardens.

With the opening of the Center's new session Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, begins his first summer as chairman of the music center's faculty. Louis Speyer is assistant director. Gunther Schuller will be head of contemporary music activities and Victor Babin will be chairman of the Tanglewood Institute. The faculty includes the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and many eminent musicians.

Distinguished Guest

Attending yesterday's exercises was Sir Adrian Boult, distinguished British conductor, who will work with the Berkshire Music Center orchestra during the first two weeks. Sir Adrian will also conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert on July 10. Just arrived from Japan were Konosuke Ono, violist, and Soichi Katsuta, cellist, who will be members of the music center orchestra this summer and then join the Boston Symphony Orchestra for next season on a one-year exchange with the Japan Philharmonic.

The first performance by the members of the Center will be a concert by the Center orchestra conducted by Sir Adrian on July 7. The opening concert of the 1966 Berkshire Festival will take place on Saturday evening, July 2, in the Tanglewood Music Shed. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist.

Symposium Begins

Tonight the first session of the three-day notation symposium will be held in the chamber music hall. Mr. Leinsdorf will speak on "Reading and Musicianship" and Mr. Babin will be chairman of the session. The symposium will continue through Wednesday evening with Mr. Babin speaking Tuesday on "Notation as an Evolving Phenomenon" and Paul Zukofsky lecturing on "Contemporary Notation" Wednesday. Panelists will include members of the Center's faculty.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Argus-Champion
NEWPORT, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 3,560
JUN 30 1966

From Colby

Dr. Wing Gets Grant To Sing at Tanglewood

HENRY WING

NEW LONDON — Dr. Henry Wing Jr., an instructor in the music department, Colby Junior College, has been awarded a grant to sing in the Fellowship Program of Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

"The Fellowship Program," according to Erich Leinsdroff, director of the Berkshire Music Center, "was initiated in 1965 to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers, and composers, and includes participation in performing groups on a post-graduate level, lectures, and discussions."

"The Fellowship Program is designed to meet the needs of young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers. Dr. Wing is one of 24 singers enrolled in the program.

The singers will perform in a chamber chorus and the Festival chorus, and in addition will prepare and perform solo music for performances of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the contemporary music program."

Dr. Wing received the Mus. B. and Mus. M. degrees from Oberlin College. He was awarded the Ph. D. degree from the Boston University Graduate School at commencement exercises held at Boston University on May 29. He is a member of the American Musicologist Society and the College Music Society.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
JUN 28 1966

Tanglewood Grants Still Available To Local Musicians

Tuition scholarships for the seminars of the Tanglewood Institute are still available. Eligible to apply for the grants are musicians, music teachers and students from Berkshire County.

Openings are available in the seminars in listening and analysis, music teaching, and choral conducting and repertoire. Registration must be for eight weeks or any two-week section thereof. Participation in the seminars includes the opportunity to attend rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and other festival performances as a member of the Tanglewood Chorus.

Those desiring further information should contact Daniel Gustin at the Tanglewood box office.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
JUN 27 1966

Symposium This Week at Tanglewood

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., is sponsoring a three-day symposium on musical notation this week, the first week of its new season, which opened yesterday.

* * *

The general problems of notation will be explored in the areas of creating new editions of music and in conveying the wishes of the contemporary composer to the performer. No solutions will be sought in the evening meetings tonight, tomorrow and Wednesday at 8 o'clock.

* * *

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, will present a paper on "Reading and Musicianship" tonight. The panel will have Victor Babin as chairman with members including Joseph Silverstein, William Moyer, Gunther Schuller and Claude Frank.

Babin, director of the Cleveland Institute of Music, will read a paper tomorrow night on "Notation as an Evolving Phenomenon."

Young American violinist Paul Zukofsky will talk on "Contemporary Notation" at Wednesday night's panel session.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
JUN 27 1966

Whitestone

JAPAN PHILHARMONIC MEMBERS Konosuke Ono, at left, and Soichi Katsuta chat with BSO music director Erich Leinsdorf at yesterday's ceremonies making the opening of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. Ono and Katsuta will participate in a BSO-Japan Philharmonic membership exchange next season.

Berkshire Music Center Opens for Another Season

LENOX — The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music, opened its 1966 session yesterday afternoon with traditional exercises in the Tanglewood theatre.

A greeting to the audience by Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was followed by a musical presentation by Claude Frank and Lilian Kallir, pianists. The principal address of the afternoon was delivered by Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Music Center, who spoke on the cultural explosion.

Traditional Song

Paul Calloway, organist and choirmaster of the Washington Cathedral and a member of the music center's faculty, conducted the singing of the "Alleluia" by Randall Thompson, who composed the work for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940.

Following the program in the theatre, tea was served in the formal gardens.

With the opening of the Center's new session Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, begins his first summer as chairman of the music center's faculty. Louis Speyer is assistant director. Gunther Schuller will be head of contemporary music activities and Victor Babin will be chairman of the Tanglewood Institute. The faculty includes the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and many eminent musicians.

Distinguished Guest

Attending yesterday's exercises was Sir Adrian Boult, distinguished British conductor, who will work with the Berkshire Music Center orchestra during the first two weeks. Sir Adrian will also conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert on July 10. Just arrived from Japan were Konosuke Ono, violist, and Soichi Katsuta, cellist, who will be members of the music center orchestra this summer and then join the Boston Symphony Orchestra for next season on a one-year exchange with the Japan Philharmonic.

The first performance by the members of the Center will be a concert by the Center orchestra conducted by Sir Adrian on July 7. The opening concert of the 1966 Berkshire Festival will take place on Saturday evening, July 2, in the Tanglewood Music Shed. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist.

Symposium Begins

Tonight the first session of the three-day notation symposium will be held in the chamber music hall. Mr. Leinsdorf will speak on "Reading and Musicianship" and Mr. Babin will be chairman of the session. The symposium will continue through Wednesday evening with Mr. Babin speaking Tuesday on "Notation as an Evolving Phenomenon" and Paul Zukofsky lecturing on "Contemporary Notation" Wednesday. Panelists will include members of the Center's faculty.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Argus-Champion
NEWPORT, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 3,560
JUN 30 1966

From Colby

Dr. Wing Gets Grant To Sing at Tanglewood

HENRY WING

NEW LONDON — Dr. Henry Wing Jr., an instructor in the music department, Colby Junior College, has been awarded a grant to sing in the Fellowship Program of Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

"The Fellowship Program," according to Erich Leinsdroff, director of the Berkshire Music Center, "was initiated in 1965 to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers, and composers, and includes participation in performing groups on a post-graduate level, lectures, and discussions."

"The Fellowship Program is designed to meet the needs of young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers. Dr. Wing is one of 24 singers enrolled in the program.

The singers will perform in a chamber chorus and the Festival chorus, and in addition will prepare and perform solo music for performances of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the contemporary music program."

Dr. Wing received the Mus. B. and Mus. M. degrees from Oberlin College. He was awarded the Ph. D. degree from the Boston University Graduate School at commencement exercises held at Boston University on May 29. He is a member of the American Musicologist Society and the College Music Society.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
JUN 28 1966

Tanglewood Grants Still Available To Local Musicians

Tuition scholarships for the seminars of the Tanglewood Institute are still available. Eligible to apply for the grants are musicians, music teachers and students from Berkshire County.

Openings are available in the seminars in listening and analysis, music teaching, and choral conducting and repertoire. Registration must be for eight weeks or any two-week section thereof. Participation in the seminars includes the opportunity to attend rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and other festival performances as a member of the Tanglewood Chorus.

Those desiring further information should contact Daniel Gustin at the Tanglewood box office.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
JUN 27 1966

Symposium This Week at Tanglewood

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., is sponsoring a three-day symposium on musical notation this week, the first week of its new season, which opened yesterday.

* * *

The general problems of notation will be explored in the areas of creating new editions of music and in conveying the wishes of the contemporary composer to the performer. No solutions will be sought in the evening meetings tonight, tomorrow and Wednesday at 8 o'clock.

* * *

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, will present a paper on "Reading and Musicianship" tonight. The panel will have Victor Babin as chairman with members including Joseph Silverstein, William Moyer, Gunther Schuller and Claude Frank.

Babin, director of the Cleveland Institute of Music, will read a paper tomorrow night on "Notation as an Evolving Phenomenon."

Young American violinist Paul Zukofsky will talk on "Contemporary Notation" at Wednesday night's panel session.

Circ. 61,129
JUN 27 1966

Worcester Daily Telegram Mon., June 27, 1966

At Berkshire Opening

The Cultural Explosion's Hopes and Hazards Cited

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Hopes and hazards of the cultural explosion were the main theme of Erich Leinsdorf's address yesterday at Tanglewood for the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center's 26th season.

Leinsdorf is conductor of the Boston Symphony and director of the Center, summer educational department of the orchestra for the advanced study of music.

Some 20 countries were represented among the 362 students who enrolled yesterday. The Center will operate concurrently with the Berkshire Music Festival. The Boston Symphony will perform 24 concerts beginning Saturday evening, July 2, and ending Sunday afternoon, Aug. 21.

The Center's sessions have two major divisions - Fellowship Program and Tanglewood Institute.

Approximately 100 young musicians have been awarded fellowships of $450 each, with supplemental allowances for dependents and travel.

Among these is Gary S. Parks, 64 Florence St., Worcester, an oboeist.

Tanglewood Institute comprises seminars for the musical layman, teacher, and performer, providing an environment in which he may broaden his musical horizons.

Among those from this area enrolled in the Institute are Muriel A. Watt, 62 Moore Ave., Worcester; Marlene Dacri, 42 Henry St., West Boylston; Steven E. Barta, 28 Harrigan Ave., Athol; and Asako Nomaguchi of Tokyo, Japan, who is sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Farber, 11 Moreland St., Worcester.

Leinsdorf's talk was realistic and, obviously earmarked for the majority of students who are or will be job-seekers after their summer study at the Center.

He related the phenomenal "Cultual explosion" of the past decade not only to music, but included literature, visual arts, movies, and the theater.

"First, I would like to remind you," he said, "that it is not confined to the United States. It exists in every country where machines have taken over the jobs of man. However, I think it can be safely said that in no country in the world has this 'explosion' been so dramatic and far-reaching as in the United States."

Among the "fringe benefits" of this musical upsweep, Leinsdorf listed FM "good listening" stations, educational networks, sales of phonograph records, pianos - even harpsichords.

Leinsdorf attributes this increase in cultural activities to "really interested and excited audiences," although some attend for social reasons.

ERICH LEINSDORF
Boston Conductor

He also credited the "affluent society - one in which people have more money, leisure time, and where to some extent, education has gone hand in hand with increased prosperity."

However, Leinsdorf warned that "music is in danger of becoming a spectator sport."

He associated this with the pitfalls of quantity and quality.

"There is a much greater demand for concerts than ever before," he said. "But let me remind you that in the entire United States, there are perhaps seven or eight really first class symphony orchestras. The others, many of them of laudable standard, have not yet reached the peak to which we would all ideally strive."

"This means," he added, 'that except in a few of our greater cities, the butter is spread too thin."

Speaking of musical quality, Leinsdorf opined that "as we tax our existing really good players more and more, they have to give their energies to an increasing number of activities, with the result that they cannot always bring to each of them the highest degree of concentration, ebullience and freshness that is necessary."

Tribute Paid

Leinsdorf was introduced by Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony.

Perry paid tribute to the late Serge Koussevitzky, who founded the Berkshire Music Center, his widow, Natalie Koussevitzky, for her continuing assistance to the project, and Gertrude Robinson Smith, founder of the Berkshire symphonic Festival in 1934.

Duo-pianists Claude Frank and Lillian Kallir (faculty members of the Center; played the slow movement from Bach's Concerto in C minor.

The traditional singing of Randall Thompson's Alleluia (written for the Center 26 years ago) was directed by Paul Callaway, also a faculty member, and organist of Washington (D.C.) Cathedral.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 6 1966

At Tanglewood

Music Center Orchestra Ist Concert Planned

047

Sir Adrian Boult will make his first conducting appearance at Tanglewood tomorrow evening when he conducts the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in its initial concert of the summer.

The distinguished British conductor has been rehearsing with the Music Center Orchestra since it assembled at Tanglewood last week for the opening of the 1966 session. The personnel of the Music Center Orchestra consists of more than seventy players who are all members of the Berkshire Music Center's Fellowship Program.

Tomorrow's concert will begin with the Portsmouth Point Overture by William Walton and continue with Richard Strauss' Horn Concerto No. 2. William Lane will be the soloist in the concert. Sir Adrian will close the program with Ralph Vaughan Williams' London Symphony. The conductor revealed that one of the important factors in his decision to come to Tanglewood was to be able to conduct a student orchestra in a Vaughan Williams symphony.

This concert is the first of approximately 30 programs open this summer to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The support given to the Music Center by the voluntary contributions of the Friends is vital to the continuance of the activities carried on by the Boston Symphony Orchestra's educational arm. On Sunday there will be another Friends program in the Theater. This will be an all Vivaldi concert by members of the Fellowship program and under the direction of Igor Kipnis.

Sir Adrian Boult will be guest conductor at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert on Sunday afternoon. The next program by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will take place on July 21 with Erich Leinsdorf and Charles Wilson, new assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sharing the conducting.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
JUL 8 1966

ABC Fellowships Awarded to BSO

The American Broadcasting Co. has announced the award of $1,000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the establishment of fellowships to enable two talented young musicians to study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

On Thursday, Mr. Robert R. Pauley, president of the ABC radio network, presented the check to Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and to Erich Leinsdorf, its musical director.

The awards are part of the network's over-all program to encourage young talent in writing, performing, journalism, and administration in the arts and humanities.

Stereo Broadcasts

Additional announcement was made by John A. Thayer, national programing director for ABC, that network broadcasts will be made "live" from Tanglewood of the concerts given Saturday afternoons by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. In addition, the concerts will be recorded in stereo, for airing in New York City by WABC-FM. The initial concert to be aired over the network will be the July 16 performance, with Sir Adrian Boult as guest conductor.

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836
JUL 8 1966

* * *

Mayor Lindsay chats with Merv Griffin Friday night on his Ch. 5 show. . . . ABC-Radio announced yesterday that it is granting two summer fellowships for the development of promising musicians. The $1,000 fellowships will enable two musicians to study at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass. The network also said it plans to broadcast a series of 54-minute Saturday afternoon Berkshire Music Center concerts from July 16 to Sept. 17 (2-2:54 P.M.). The concerts will be heard locally over WABC-FM.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements
JUL 6 1966

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

WCAU Radio, Philly's CBS o&o, like Straus Broadcasting's N.Y. rocker WMCA, has conducted vigorous editorial campaigns which resulted in remedial legislation. A case in point was the signing into law last February of a bill to limit the amount of wood alcohol used in the manufacture of canned heat. On that occasion, Pa. Gov. William Scranton said WCAU general manager Jack Downey "deserves a great deal of credit for this bill. This is a wonderful event for the state of Pennsylvania and a clear indication of what a splendid editorial policy can do."

Sticking by its guns, the FCC last week denied requests for reconsideration of its earlier order that American Telephone & Telegraph and General Telephone & Electric Service Corp., file with the Commission the tariffs they charge community antenna tv systems.

Telephone companies usually lease pole space to CATV systems for stringing their lines and file with the individual states exactly how much they charge. AT&T and GT&E appealed the earlier FCC deceision on the ground that the CATV tariffs were local matters, but the Commission decided that CATVs are in interstate commerce and therefore so is direct service to them, and should be filed with the federal government. Commissioner Robert T. Bartley dissented.

ABC, which has been underwriting a number of fellowships (news, drama writing, acting), has expanded the program to include two summer fellowships for promising musicians. This one, actually, is auspiced by ABC's radio web under prexy Bob Pauley.

Fellowships will enable two recipients to further studies at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symph. Cash value of the fellowships is $1,000.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
JUL 5 1966

Wheatl

Guests at Sunday's re
Berkshire Theatre pro
r.) Mrs. Mary Ann Ni tor of the BU Berkshir in the symposium for

Erich Leinsdorf, left, c
Orchestra, and guest leading representation
Wheatleigh reception
100 leading figures

FAR ROCKAWAY, N. Y.
WAVE
W 3,500
JUL 14 1966

Musician Le

Bruce Levine, son of M
Mrs. Philip Levine of 8100
Front Parkway, Roc
Beach, and a student
Rockaway High School, h accepted and awarded a scholarship to the Be Music Festival at Tang Mass. (This music festival der the auspices of the Symphony Orchestra).

Now, until August 21, s in the Seminar for O
nd Chamber Music
nd English Horn.

This coming school yea will be Student Music at Far Rockaway High and assistant conduc

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
JUL 5 1966

Wheatleigh Arts Summit Meeting

Mitchell

Guests at Sunday's reception at Wheatleigh for members of the Boston University Berkshire Theatre program and the Berkshire Music Center program included (l. to r.) Mrs. Mary Ann Nicholson; hostess, Stephanie Barber; John R. Watts, coordinator of the BU Berkshire programs; Mrs. Watts; playwright William Gibson, teaching in the symposium for playwrights; and Harold Clurman, director of the symposium.

Mitchell

Erich Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and guest conductor Sir Adrian Boult, were leading representatives of the music contingent at the Wheatleigh reception, which brought together some 100 leading figures in the arts from the Berkshires.

FAR ROCKAWAY, N. Y.
WAVE
W. 3,500
JUL 14 1966

Musician Levine Is At Tanglewood

Bruce Levine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Levine of 8100 Shore Front Parkway, Rockaway Beach, and a student of Far Rockaway High School, has been accepted and awarded a tuition scholarship to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. (This music festival is under the auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra).

Now, until August 21, Bruce is in the Seminar for Orchestra and Chamber Music for Oboe and English Horn.

This coming school year, Bruce will be Student Music Director at Far Rockaway High School and assistant conductor, first oboe, with double on English horn, in the Long Island Youth Orchestra.

As a start toward his aspirations, he has had corrective criticism of some of his original compositions by Leonard Bernstein, has played for the past two seasons with the Long Island Youth Orchestra, has had a season with the Hofstra University Orchestra, has had guest appearances with Huntington Philharmonic, Hicksville Symphony Orchestra, and Copague Symphony Orchestra and had an original [illegible] for chorus performed at [illegible] Festival at Far Rockaway High School.

CHATHAM COURIER
Thursday, July 14, 1966

Seek Pupils For Summer Music Program

The Chatham summer vocal music program, being conducted by J. Lyman Congdon can accommodate several more students in the several courses being offered. There are opportunities, in different areas, for students wishing to participate.

Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 8:30 a.m. a course in singing theory and sight reading for students in next year's seventh and eighth grades.

Tuesday and Thursday at 8:30 a.m. High School students can take a course in music appreciation. Tuesday night at 7 p.m. high school students can attend a choir session, in the music room at the school. This group will appear in concert on August 19. Friday at 11:30 a.m. a course in theory and conducting is being offered. Voice lessons are also offered.

Students in the program are eligible to attend a concert on August 3 featuring the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra at Saratoga Springs Center for the Performing Arts. A trip to a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony is being planned.

Tickets for the Friends Concerts at the Berkshire are also available by contacting Mr. Congdon at 2-1323.

This fine program of cultural privileges is free to students of Chatham Central School. Parents are urged to have their children take advantage of these opportunities.

THE CANTON REPOSITORY
CANTON, OHIO
D. 71,964 SUN. 82,710
JULY 12 1966

181

Television and Radio

By JOHN HORN

The Comedy-Writing Camera

(Richard K. Doan Is on Vacation)

CBS executives think they have in "Run, Buddy, Run," the new spoof of chase shows ("Run for Your Life," "The Fugitive," (et al), a possible setter of a new comedy trend.

The show, which debuts in the fall, stars Jack Sheldon, the trumpeter who turned comic and the hit of the Cara Williams show of two seasons ago.

-:-

PRODUCER Leonard Stern has gone over the comedy chases of silent films and has come to the conclusion that television funny shows heretofore have been primarily drawing-room conversation and jokes, and that TV comedy has been studio-bound by almost stationary indoor cameras.

He proposes to break out of what he considers a straitjacket by using motion picture cameras in the free wheeling tradition of the early Chaplin, Hal Roach and the Keystone Kops.

The series will rely on visual comedy far more than jokes and each episode will have one major sight gag.

The influence on other comedy shows, enthusiastic CBS officials believe, will be twofold. The TV camera, changing from comparative static to dynamic tool, will write more of the story, it's expected, than the vocal soundtrack, which they claim has been doing most of the comedy work.

-:-

THIS EMPHASIS on the visual has already paid off in an unexpected way.

CBS Films, which syndicates CBS-produced programs around the world, reports that "Run, Buddy, Run," has already done what no other show has done.

It has convinced overseas markets — in Holland, England, Japan, Canada, Venezuela, and Argentina — to buy sheerly on the basis of the pilot. Normally, buyers on the international scene make up their minds only after they have seen several produced shows and weighed United States critical and audience reaction.

-:-

CBS NEWS is taking advantage of the Governors Conference in Los Angeles to interview three state executives on the white Southern view of civil rights.

Primarily because of their civil rights stand, they are the best known governors below the Mason-Dixon line: Paul Johnson of Mississippi, George Wallace of Alabama and Orval Faubus of Arkansas.

The half-hour Mike Wallace interview of the three will be telecast tonight.

Frank McGee has been named the reporter for NBC-TV's 3½-hour "American White Paper: Organized Crime in the United States," to be colorcast Aug. 25

Reports of the $40 billion-a-year industry in crime will originate in New York City, Los Angeles, Detroit, Chicago, Gary, Ind., Newport, Ky., Youngstown, Ohio, Reading, Pa., Miami, and New Orleans.

-:-

ABC, which has bestowed fellowship grants on writers (at Yale and the University of Pennsylvania), has turned to musicians.

It gave $1,000 to Thomas D. Perry Jr. and Erich Leinsdorf, manager and musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for their work at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

From July 16 through Sept. 17, the ABC Radio network will carry a 54-minute Saturday afternoon broadcast of Boston Symphony concerts at the music center.

BROADCASTING
WASHINGTON, D. C.
W. 24,500
JUL 11 1966

Drumbeats . . .

Agency switches ▪ WABC-TV New York has named Degarmo Agency there to handle its account, moved from Doyle Dane Bernbach. ABC Films, also New York, has appointed the Lambert Agency in that city to handle its advertising and sales promotion. Former agency was Arthur, Roberts and Hill, New York.

Caddy contest ▪ WMAQ Chicago is giving away two Cadillacs in audience promotion based on "tell a friend" about the station's new adult music format. Listeners write the station giving their names plus those of three friends whom they have told about WMAQ.

Canada records history ▪ CKPM Ottawa has published its annual one-hour LP Canadian History Makers Album featuring actual voices and events of the previous year. In 1964 CKPM received the Beaver Award from the Canadian Broadcaster, a radio-TV trade publication. Approximately 5,000 albums are distributed each year to government, civic leaders and libraries.

New grant ▪ ABC Radio has presented $1,000 to the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., to establish two summer fellowships for development of promising musicians. This move broadens ABC's previous efforts to develop talent in arts and communications through grants in writing, performing, journalistic and talent areas.

181

Natalie Koussevi
continuing assist-project, and Gern Smith, founder shire symphonic
4.

Claude Frank Kallir (faculty
the Center; played ement from Bach's
C minor.

tional singing of hompson's Alleluia
the Center 26 years
rected by Paul Cal-faculty member of Washington
oral.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
JUL 5 1966

Wheatleigh Arts Summit Meeting

Mitchell

Guests at Sunday's reception at Wheatleigh for members of the Boston University Berkshire Theatre program and the Berkshire Music Center program included (l. to r.) Mrs. Mary Ann Nicholson; hostess, Stephanie Barber; John R. Watts, coordinator of the BU Berkshire programs; Mrs. Watts; playwright William Gibson, teaching in the symposium for playwrights; and Harold Clurman, director of the symposium.

Mitchell

Erich Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and guest conductor Sir Adrian Boult, were leading representatives of the music contingent at the Wheatleigh reception, which brought together some 100 leading figures in the arts from the Berkshires.

THE CANTON REPOSITORY
CANTON, OHIO
D. 71,964 SUN. 82,710
JULY 1 2 1966

Television and Radio

By JOHN HORN

The Comedy-Writing Camera

(Richard K. Doan Is on Vacation)

CBS executives think they have in "Run, Buddy, Run," the new spoof of chase shows ("Run for Your Life," "The Fugitive," (et al), a possible setter of a new comedy trend.

The show, which debuts in the fall, stars Jack Sheldon, the trumpeter who turned comic and the hit of the Cara Williams show of two seasons ago.

-:-

PRODUCER Leonard Stern has gone over the comedy chases of silent films and has come to the conclusion that television funny shows heretofore have been primarily drawing-room conversation and jokes, and that TV comedy has been studio-bound by almost stationary indoor cameras.

He proposes to break out of what he considers a straitjacket by using motion picture cameras in the free wheeling tradition of the early Chaplin, Hal Roach and the Keystone Kops.

The series will rely on visual comedy far more than jokes and each episode will have one major sight gag.

The influence on other comedy shows, enthusiastic CBS officials believe, will be twofold. The TV camera, changing from comparative static to dynamic tool, will write more of the story, it's expected, than the vocal soundtrack, which they claim has been doing most of the comedy work.

-:-

THIS EMPHASIS on the visual has already paid off in an unexpected way.

CBS Films, which syndicates CBS-produced programs around the world, reports that "Run, Buddy, Run," has already done what no other show has done.

It has convinced overseas markets — in Holland, England, Japan, Canada, Venezuela, and Argentina — to buy sheerly on the basis of the pilot. Normally, buyers on the international scene make up their minds only after they have seen several produced shows and weighed United States critical and audience reaction.

-:-

CBS NEWS is taking advantage of the Governors Conference in Los Angeles to interview three state executives on the white Southern view of civil rights.

Primarily because of their civil rights stand, they are the best known governors below the Mason-Dixon line: Paul Johnson of Mississippi, George Wallace of Alabama and Orval Faubus of Arkansas.

The half-hour Mike Wallace interview of the three will be telecast tonight.

Frank McGee has been named the reporter for NBC-TV's 3½-hour "American White Paper: Organized Crime in the United States," to be colorcast Aug. 25

Reports of the $40 billion-a-year industry in crime will originate in New York City, Los Angeles, Detroit, Chicago, Gary, Ind., Newport, Ky., Youngstown, Ohio, Reading, Pa., Miami, and New Orleans.

-:-

ABC, which has bestowed fellowship grants on writers (at Yale and the University of Pennsylvania), has turned to musicians.

It gave $1,000 to Thomas D. Perry Jr. and Erich Leinsdorf, manager and musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for their work at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

From July 16 through Sept. 17, the ABC Radio network will carry a 54-minute Saturday afternoon broadcast of Boston Symphony concerts at the music center.

CHATHAM COURIER
Thursday, July 14, 1966

Seek Pupils For Summer Music Program

The Chatham summer vocal music program, being conducted by J. Lyman Congdon can accommodate several more students in the several courses being offered. There are opportunities in different areas, for students wishing to participate.

Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 8:30 a.m. a course in singing theory and sight reading for students in next year's seventh and eighth grades.

Tuesday and Thursday at 8:30 a.m. High School students can take a course in music appreciation. Tuesday night at 7 p.m. high school students can attend a choir session, in the music room at the school. This group will appear in concert on August 19. Friday at 11:30 a.m. a course in theory and conducting is being offered. Voice lessons are also offered.

Students in the program are eligible to attend a concert on August 3 featuring the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra at Saratoga Springs Center for the Performing Arts. A trip to a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony is being planned.

Tickets for the Friends Concerts at the Berkshire are also available by contacting Mr. Congdon at 2-7323.

This fine program of cultural privileges is free to students of Chatham Central School. Parents are urged to have their children take advantage of these opportunities.

FAR ROCKAWAY, N. Y.
WAVE
W 3,500
JUL 1 4 1966

Musician Levine Is At Tanglewood

Bruce Levine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Levine of 8100 Shore Front Parkway, Rockaway Beach, and a student of Far Rockaway High School, has been accepted and awarded a tuition scholarship to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. (This music festival is under the auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra).

Now, until August 21, Bruce is in the Seminar for Orchestra and Chamber Music for Oboe and English Horn.

This coming school year, Bruce will be Student Music Director at Far Rockaway High School and assistant conductor, first oboe, with double on English horn, in the Long Island Youth Orchestra.

As a start toward his apirations, he has had corrective criticism of some of his original compositions by Leonard Bernstein, has played for the past two seasons with the Long Island Youth Orchestra, has had a season with the Hofstra University Orchestra, has had guest appearances with Huntington Philharmonia, Hicksville Symphony Orchestra, and Copague Symphony Orchestra and had an original piece for chorus performed at the last Spring Festival at Far Rockaway High School.

BROADCASTING
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. 24,500
JUL 1 1 1966

Drumbeats . . .

Agency switches ▪ WABC-TV New York, has named Degarmo Agency there to handle its account, moved from Doyle Dane Bernbach. ABC Films, also New York, has appointed the Lambert Agency in that city to handle its advertising and sales promotion. Former agency was Arthur, Roberts and Hill, New York.

Caddy contest ▪ WMAQ Chicago is giving away two Cadillacs in audience promotion based on "tell a friend" about the station's new adult music format. Listeners write the station giving their names plus those of three friends whom they have told about WMAQ.

Canada records history ▪ CKPM Ottawa has published its annual one-hour LP Canadian History Makers Album featuring actual voices and events of the previous year. In 1964, CKPM received the Beaver Award from the Canadian Broadcaster, a radio-TV trade publication. Approximately 5,000 albums are distributed each year to government, civic leaders and libraries.

New grant ▪ ABC Radio has presented $1,000 to the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., to establish two summer fellowships for development of promising musicians. This move broadens ABC's previous efforts to develop talent in arts and communications through grants in writing, performing, journalistic and talent areas.

182

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 284,733
JUL 18 1966

At Lenox

Contemporary Music By Center Students

BY GEORGE GELLES
Globe Critic

LENOX—If the first concert of contemporary music given Thursday night by students of the Berkshire Music Center cannot be judged a complete success, it is because the program pitted some extraordinarily good pieces by older composers against much less good pieces by younger contemporaries.

But the best piece, and the one which was given the most exquisite performance, was by a composer of neither younger nor older generations, but somewhere comfortably in the middle, Mel Powell, the piece, his "Filigree Setting for String Quartet."

The work starts at a whisper, and though is uses such noise-making devices as rhythmic tapping against the body of the instruments, the texture is always geared and proportioned to the softest extreme. In its intense intimacy, the work can be most arresting, but Thursday night's setting, Tanglewood's theatre concert hall, was not ideal, in spite of the excellent performance by Paul Zukofsky, Barbara Poularikas, Don Ehrlich and Jerome Patterson.

Olivier Messiaen was represented by his Oiseaux Exotiques, which is successful if for no other reason than that this purported description of some 40 birds is sufficiently flashy and diverse in texture to keep us absorbed, at least most of the time. But unless it's game of Messiaen to dish up this feast, the result with a less than flawless reading is likely to be boring. In the performance given by the BMC players, the structure of the worked sagged a bit at the Piano interludes because of the somewhat flat playing of Nina Deutsch, though Pierre Salzmann did a brilliant job of conducting.

The other work by an established modern was Varèse's "Integrales," which, certainly does pretty [illegible] "Oiseaux Exotiques" [illegible] much more powerful. Varèse, too, seems to be dealing with living forms, yet his world is much closer to the primeval state of "The Rite of Spring" than to the Salon-tamed "Oiseaux." The performance was disappointing, chiefly because of the conducting of Lawrence Foster, who neither called for sufficient dynamic contrast nor commanded passably good intonation.

Foster also conducted "Loyang," by Isang Yun, who is in residence here this Summer. In the outer two of "Loyang's" three movements, Yun deals with problems of density, both of texture in general and of thickening through increasingly smaller intervals.

The middle section, more rhapsodic, is akin to its neighbors in moving through harmonic changes at about the same rate of speed as they do. This monotony weakens the entire cycle, as does the undistinctive use of instruments — two strings, four woodwinds, two percussion.

Niccolo Castiglioni's "Consonante," which was well-conducted by Alois Springer, is more attractive in sound and will probably wear better than the composer's "Tropi." The title has to with pitches overlapping among the nine players. These notes, most always sustained, get an underpinning of frantic runs, reminiscent of the goings on in "Tropi," though the whole piece is more controlled, and, happily, at least seems shorter.

The only other work heard was by Yannis Xenakis, a piano piece called "Herma," which soloist Yuji Takahashi won ample applause for seeing to its end. Xenakis after establishing registral extremes goes about filling in the large remaining interval with a spray of sound. The piano splashes are not color, because they are too unruly and uncontrolled, but a sort of wash that flows over the entire work and makes it equally uninteresting. The younger generation deserves better representation.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 115,186
JUL 10 1966

Dr. Wing Recipient Of Grant

Dr. Henry Wing Jr., an instructor in the music department at Colby Junior College, New London, N.H., has been awarded a grant to sing in the Fellowship Program of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The son of Dr. and Mrs. Henry Wing of 12 Pratt Road, Clinton, he is married to the former Barbara Hammann, They have two sons.

Dr. Wing

The Fellowship Program, according to Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, was initiated in 1965 to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers, and composers, and includes participation in performing groups on a post-graduate level, lectures and discussions. It is designed to meet the needs of young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers.

Dr. Wing is one of 24 singers enrolled in the program. The singers will perform in a chamber chorus and the Festival chorus, and in addition will prepare and perform solo music for performances of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the comtemporary music program.

Dr. Wing received the Mus.B. and Mus.M. degrees from Oberlin College. He was awarded the Ph.D. Degree from the Boston University Graduate School in May. He is a member of the American Musicological Society and the College Music Society.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 18 1966

Whitestone

FELLOWSHIP WINNERS for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center are Thomas Jones, left, and Priscilla Hodges, shown here on Tanglewood lawn with BSO director Erich Leinsdorf, center, and John A. Thayer, vice president and national director of programming of the ABC radio network, sponsor of fellowships.

ABC Grants Fellowships For Study at Tanglewood

Recipients of fellowship grants for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center — part of the American Broadcasting Company's over-all program of encouraging and developing young talent in the arts and communications — were announced today by Robert R. Pauley, president of the ABC radio network.

The grants, which were established last week, have been awarded to Priscilla Louise Hodges, 19, of Weymouth and Thomas Evan Bruere Jones, 19, of Portland, Ore. Each will receive a $500 fellowship for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Miss Hodges studied violin for 10 years in Boston with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and is presently studying violin at Indiana University.

Soloed with BSO

She has performed with and been soloist with several orchestras in the Boston area, including the Boston Symphony, and is a member of the Indiana University Philharmonic Orchestra. This summer she will perform with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and chamber ensembles.

Mr. Jones, a music major at Amherst College, will be entering his junior year this fall. A tenor soloist there, he has studied voice for the past five years. At Amherst he has studied both voice and choral conducting.

This summer Mr. Jones will sing in the Tanglewood choir, which will be performing Bach's "Magnificat" and "St. John Passion," and Mozart's "Magic Flute" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 22 1966

New BSO Assistant Conductor Makes Debut at Tanglewood

By GEORGE GELLES
Globe Critic

LENOX— Charles Wilson, the new assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, made his debut in the local establishment's service Thursday night at the concert given by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. Wilson led Berlioz's "Corsair" overture and the Beethoven Fourth Symphony, on the first half of the program; Erich Leinsdorf, the Stravinsky "Symphony No. 3 Movements" and Hindemith's "Syophonic Metamorphosis" on the second half.

Wilson comes to the Symphony after years of service with the New York City Opera, and his conducting there has no doubt charpened his ear so that in purely orchestral work he can get a near ideal balance among the orchestra's different sections. Most noticeably he brings winds into play much more often than is customary, with a stunning homogeneous surface the result.

The interpretation was less convincing. Though he certainly whipped up an impressive frenzy in the Berlioz, the lyrical section at the beginning was much too casual, too far removed from the longing of Berlioz's "Roméo et Juliette". The Beethoven too lacked an individual stamp, tempi were bright and balances fine, but the whole thing sounded as if it might have been slapped together in a couple of rehearsals. And not just because of the sloppy coordination in the last movement, but because of the anonymous quality of the ideas, never reaching beyond the level of the rehearsal conductor.

Leinsdorf and this year's superb student orchestra excelled in the Hindemith "Metamorphosis." The work itself shows its age terribly, but the conducting nudged and coaxed it in the right direction and the results were fine. The Stravinsky is another story. The 1945 "symphony" in particular doesn't admit of a romantic treatment. More suited to the earlier ballets in its approximation to classical proportions, it needs this "classic" clarity, and in the second movement, the driest humor. Thursday's reading was a good deal less tense than the composer's own, and certainly more humorless.

But most disturbing were sections in the outer movements. There was much very beautiful playing, but little idea of the direction in which it was going, a fault not the orchestras.

J. Okfar

★

The review of the week-end Bach concerts at Tanglewood in Wednesday's Globe should have been properly completed as follows:

Szymon Goldberg's conducting is in welcome contrast to that of Erich Leinsdorf who opened Sunday's concert with the First Brandenburg. Not of great musicality, though with wonderfully light and agile horn playing by James Staglano, the performance was graced, if that is the word, by a set of attention-getting gestures that were completely absent at the Open Rehearsal Saturday morning when musically things were identical.

A sensible solution is playing the Brandenburgs with no conductor, and this is what was done at the Week-end Prelude heard Friday at 7 p.m. The Third Brandenburg, played by 11 BSO men, for all the roughness of the reading, had a vitality and rhythmic life otherwise hard to find over the week-end.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Advertiser
NEW CANAAN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 4,320
JUL 21 1966

Executives Present Music Study Grants

The ABC Radio Network has announced the presentation of two fellowship grants for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass.

The network's check for $1,000 to cover the grants was presented to Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by John A. Thayer of Thayer Drive, vice president and national director of programming.

Robert R. Pauley of North Wilton Road, president of the network, has announced that the recipients of the grants are Priscilla Louise Hoges of Weymouth, Mass., and Thomas E. B. Jones of Portland, Ore., both 19. She is a violinist and he is a tenor soloist.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 29 1966

BMC Choir To Sing At Church

Tanglewood Group To Honor the Late Serge Koussevitsky

LENOX — The Tanglewood choir will honor the memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky by singing at the 11 a.m. service at the Church-on-the-Hill Sunday.

The service will mark the 14th year the choir has sung at the church in memory of the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center. The choir will also sing at Dr. Koussevitsky's grave immediately after the service.

As part of the service, the choir will sing three selections from Bach's "St. John's Passion," and an anthem of thanksgiving and will offer Mendelssohn's "Morning Prayer" as one of the choral responses. Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will be sung at the grave.

Organist Donald Teeters will present two works by Brahms as the prelude and Bach's "Prelude in B Minor" as the organ postlude.

The church's early service of worship at 9:15 will be held as usual.

Pittsburgh Paint. Wholesale and Retail. William G. Casey. 637-0167. —Adv. —30

Pizza tonight at Joe's Grill. —Adv. —30

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 18 1966

At Lenox

Contemporary Music By Center Students

BY GEORGE GELLES
Globe Critic

LENOX—If the first concert of contemporary music given Thursday night by students of the Berkshire Music Center cannot be judged a complete success, it is because the program pitted some extraordinarily good pieces by older composers against much less good pieces by younger contemporaries.

But the best piece, and the one which was given the most exquisite performance, was by a composer of neither younger nor older generations, but somewhere comfortably in the middle, Mel Powell, the piece, his "Filigree Setting for String Quartet."

The work starts at a whisper, and though is uses such noise-making devices as rhythmic tapping against the body of the instruments, the texture is always geared and proportioned to the softest extreme. In its intense intimacy, the work can be most arresting, but Thursday night's setting, Tanglewood's theatre concert hall, was not ideal, in spite of the excellent performance by Paul Zukofsky, Barbara Poularikas, Don Ehrlich and Jerome Patterson.

Olivier Messiaen was represented by his Oiseaux Exotiques, which is successful if for no other reason than that this purported description of some 40 birds is sufficiently flashy and diverse in surface to keep us absorbed, at least most of the time. But while it's game of Messiaen to dish up this feast, the result with a less than flawless reading is likely to be boring. In the performance given by the BMC players, the structure of the worked sagged a bit at the Piano interludes because of the somewhat flat playing of Nina Deutsch, though, Pierre Salzmann did a brilliant job of conducting.

The other work by an established modern was Varese's "Integrales" which, while certainly less pretty than the "Oiseaux Exotiques" is much more powerful. Varese, too, seems to be dealing with living forms, yet his world is much closer to the primeval state of "The Rite of Spring" than to the Salon-tamed "Oiseaux." The performance was disappointing, chiefly because of the conducting of Lawrence Foster, who neither called for sufficient dynamic contrast nor commanded passably good intonation.

Foster also conducted "Loyang," by Isang Yun, who is in residence here this Summer. In the outer two of "Loyang's" three movements, Yun deals with problems of density, both of texture in general and of thickening through increasingly smaller intervals.

The middle section, more rhapsodic, is akin to its neighbors in moving through harmonic changes at about the same rate of speed as they do. This monotony weakens the entire cycle, as does the undistinctive use of instruments — two strings, four woodwinds, two percussion.

Niccolo Castiglioni's "Consonante," which was well-conducted by Alois Springer, is more attractive in sound and will probably wear better than the composer's "Tropi." The title has to with pitches overlapping among the nine players. These notes, most always sustained, get an underpinning of frantic runs, reminiscent of the goings on in "Tropi," though the whole piece is more controlled, and, happily, at least seems shorter.

The only other work heard was by Yannis Xenakis, a piano piece called "Herma," which soloist Yuji Takahashi won ample applause for seeing to its end. Xenakis after establishing registral extremes goes about filling in the large remaining interval with a spray of sound. The piano splashes are not color, because they are too unruly, and uncontrolled, but a sort of wash that flows over the entire work and makes it equally uninteresting. The younger generation deserves better representation.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 115,186
JUL 10 1966

Dr. Wing Recipient Of Grant

Dr. Henry Wing Jr., an instructor in the music department at Colby Junior College, New London, N.H., has been awarded a grant to sing in the Fellowship Program of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The son of Dr. and Mrs. Henry Wing of 12 Pratt Road, Clinton, he is married to the former Barbara Hammann, They have two sons.

Dr. Wing

The Fellowship Program, according to Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Music Center, was initiated in 1965 to emphasize chamber music for advanced instrumentalists, singers, and composers, and includes participation in performing groups on a post-graduate level, lectures and discussions. It is designed to meet the needs of young musicians who have completed their training and are active performers.

Dr. Wing is one of 24 singers enrolled in the program. The singers will perform in a chamber chorus and the Festival chorus, and in addition will prepare and perform solo music for performances of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and the comtemporary music program.

Dr. Wing received the Mus.B. and Mus.M. degrees from Oberlin College. He was awarded the Ph.D. Degree from the Boston University Graduate School in May. He is a member of the American Musicological Society and the College Music Society.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 18 1966

Whitestone

FELLOWSHIP WINNERS for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center are Thomas Jones, left, and Priscilla Hodges, shown here on Tanglewood lawn with BSO director Erich Leinsdorf, center, and John A. Thayer, vice president and national director of programming of the ABC radio network, sponsor of fellowships.

ABC Grants Fellowships For Study at Tanglewood

Recipients of fellowship grants for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center — part of the American Broadcasting Company's over-all program of encouraging and developing young talent in the arts and communications — were announced today by Robert R. Pauley, president of the ABC radio network.

The grants, which were established last week, have been awarded to Priscilla Louise Hodges, 19, of Weymouth and Thomas Evan Bruere Jones, 19, of Portland, Ore. Each will receive a $500 fellowship for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Miss Hodges studied violin for 10 years in Boston with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and is presently studying violin at Indiana University.

Soloed with BSO

She has performed with and been soloist with several orchestras in the Boston area, including the Boston Symphony, and is a member of the Indiana University Philharmonic Orchestra. This summer she will perform with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and chamber ensembles.

Mr. Jones, a music major at Amherst College, will be entering his junior year this fall. A tenor soloist there, he has studied voice for the past five years. At Amherst he has studied both voice and choral conducting.

This summer Mr. Jones will sing in the Tanglewood choir, which will be performing Bach's "Magnificat" and "St. John Passion," and Mozart's "Magic Flute" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 22 1966

New BSO Assistant Conductor Makes Debut at Tanglewood

By GEORGE GELLES
Globe Critic

LENOX— Charles Wilson, the new assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, made his debut in the local establishment's service Thursday night at the concert given by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. Wilson led Berlioz's "Corsair" overture and the Beethoven Fourth Symphony, on the first half of the program; Erich Leinsdorf, the Stravinsky "Symphony No. 3 Movements" and Hindemith's "Syophonic Metamorphosis" on the second half.

Wilson comes to the Symphony after years of service with the New York City Opera, and his conducting there has no doubt charpened his ear so that in purely orchestral work he can get a near ideal balance among the orchestra's different sections. Most noticeably he brings winds into play much more often than is customary, with a stunning homogeneous surface the result.

Interpretation was less convincing. Though he certainly whipped up an impressive frenzy in the Berlioz, the lyrical section at the beginning was much too casual, too far removed from the longing of Berlioz's "Romeo et Juliette". The Beehoven, too, lacked an individual stamp. Tempi were bright and balances fine, but the whole thing sounded as if it might have been slapped together in a couple of rehearsals. And not just because of the sloppy coordination in the last movement, but because of the anonymous quality of the ideas, never reaching beyond the level of the rehearsal conductor.

Leinsdorf and this year's superb student orchestra excelled in the Hindemith "Metamorphosis." The work itself shows its age terribly, but the conducting nudged and coaxed it in the right direction and the results were fine. The Stravinsky is another story. The 1945 "symphony" in particular doesn't admit of a romantic treatment. More suited to the earlier ballets in its approximation to classical proportions, it needs this "classic" clarity, and in the second movement, the driest humor. Thursday's reading was a good deal less tense than the composer's own, and certainly more humorless.

But most disturbing were sections in the outer movements. There was much very beautiful playing, but little idea of the direction in which it was going, a fault not the orchestras.

J- Okfar

★

The review of the week-end Bach concerts at Tanglewood in Wednesday's Globe should have been properly completed as follows:

Szymon Goldberg's conducting is in welcome contrast to that of Erich Leinsdorf who opened Sunday's concert with the First Brandenburg. Not of great musicality, though with wonderfully light and agile horn playing by James Staglano, the performance was graced, if that is the word, by a set of attention-getting gestures that were completely absent at the Open Rehearsal Saturday morning when musically things were identical.

A sensible solution is playing the Brandenburgs with no conductor, and this is what was done at the Week-end Prelude heard Friday at 7 p.m. The Third Brandenburg, played by 11 BSO men, for all the roughness of the reading, had a vitality and rhythmic life otherwise hard to find over the week-end.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Advertiser
NEW CANAAN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 4,320
JUL 21 1966

Executives Present Music Study Grants

The ABC Radio Network has announced the presentation of two fellowship grants for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass.

The network's check for $1,000 to cover the grants was presented to Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by John A. Thayer of Thayer Drive, vice president and national director of programming.

Robert R. Pauley of North Wilton Road, president of the network, has announced that the recipients of the grants are Priscilla Louise Hoges of Weymouth, Mass., and Thomas E. B. Jones of Portland, Ore., both 19. She is a violinist and he is a tenor soloist.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 29 1966

BMC Choir To Sing At Church

Tanglewood Group To Honor the Late Serge Koussevitsky

LENOX — The Tanglewood choir will honor the memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky by singing at the 11 a.m. service at the Church-on-the-Hill Sunday.

The service will mark the 14th year the choir has sung at the church in memory of the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center. The choir will also sing at Dr. Koussevitsky's grave immediately after the service.

As part of the service, the choir will sing three selections from Bach's "St. John's Passion," and an anthem of thanksgiving and will offer Mendelssohn's "Morning Prayer" as one of the choral responses. Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will be sung at the grave.

Organist Donald Teeters will present two works by Brahms as the prelude and Bach's "Prelude in B Minor" as the organ postlude.

The church's early service of worship at 9:15 will be held as usual.

Pittsburgh Paint. Wholesale and Retail. William G. Casey. 637-0167. —Adv. —30

Pizza tonight at Joe's Grill. —Adv. —30

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 20 1966

2nd Berkshire Music Concert Tomorrow

The second concert of the summer by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will be given in the Tanglewood Theater tomorrow evening at 8.

Erich Leinsdorf and Charles Wilson, newly appointed Assistant Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct this program which is open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mr. Wilson will conduct the first half of the concert, and his portion of the program includes Berlioz' Corsair Overture and the Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis and the Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky.

The eighty members of the Music Center Orchestra are taking part in the Center's Fellowship program this summer at Tanglewood. In addition to their performances with the Orchestra these young instrumentalists also perform in chamber music and Baroque programs. Many of them will take part in the Festival of Contemporary American Music during the final week of the Tanglewood season.

Tonight there will be a program of chamber music in the Tanglewood Theater. On the program will be Mozart's Quintet for Piano and Winds, Pentacle and Epitaph by David Borden, and Three Dialectic Songs by Selig with Simon Estes, as soloist. After intermission will be Beethoven's Quartet in C minor, Op. 131. This concert is also open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Center's summer activities.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
JUL 21 1966

Second Concert By Music Center Orchestra Today

LENOX — The second concert of the summer by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will be given in the Tanglewood Theater tonight at 8.

Erich Leinsdorf and Charles Wilson, newly appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the program, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Wilson will conduct the first half of the concert, and his portion of the program includes Berlioz' Corsair Overture and the Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven. Leinsdorf will conduct Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis and the Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 279,780 SAT. 292,741
JULY 27 1966

Art Council Lists 1967 Projects

¶ A Buffalo Philharmonic tour of Western New York campuses next spring, presenting modern works with the composers on hand, is among 16 major projects to be sponsored by the State Council on the Arts in the 1966-67 season.

The Buffalo orchestra, Conductor Lukas Foss and Associate Conductor Richard Dufallo will offer the contemporary works in Cornell University, Houghton College and the State University Colleges at Geneseo and Brockport.

Established American composers, to be selected, will appear on all campuses, in various workshops and seminars, and probably as guest conductors, in some instances.

Other Plans Listed

Other large projects announced by the council:

¶ State University College at Potsdam, support for its summer workshops at Star Lake Music Camp.

¶ Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, grants for four young opera singers in residence, to assist in presenting programs of operatic content.

¶ Ithaca Festival, partial support for a consultant to help develop and manage the festival's operation for three months.

¶ Eastman School of Music, Rochester, funds to aid a study of the famed Suzuki Method of teaching violin to very young students in public schools.

¶ Saratoga Performing Arts Center, assistance in presenting low-price admissions to matinee concerts for students and teachers.

Plan Six Scholarships

¶ Hunter College development of a modern dance series; Lake George Festival, apprentice program for young singers and technicians; Paper Bag Players and Theater in the Street support for performances in depressed areas of New York City.

¶ Adelphi University, aid for a summer dance workshop; Council for the Arts in Westchester, services of a development consultant; National Dance Teachers Guild, grant to study writing on the dance.

¶ Municipal Concerts Inc., support for a 24-concert series for senior citizens of New York, in several centers.

¶ Joffrey Ballet, grant to help recreate the ballet "Green Table."

In addition, six scholarships will be assisted by the council, to send talented young performers to string seminars in the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass.

3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
22 1966

WGBH-FM Replies

Mr. Richard M. Fletcher, in a letter published by The Globe, July 16, added his voice to those who have complained about the demise of serious music programming on local commercial FM stations. He also suggested that Boston's educational FM station was of limited use to music listeners since, as he put it, "WGBH-FM broadcasts only a few hours of music during the day."

It is true, of course, that WGBH-FM devotes a good part of its schedule to news, literary, informational, and cultural programs, but still its extensive music offerings should not be minimized. Thursday's broadcasts (July 21) for example, begin at 8 a.m. with four hours of recorded music chosen from the significant works of all periods — on the new "Morning Pro Musica." Then the feature heard each week-day at noon, "Concert Stage," presents classical works until 1 p.m. "Collector's Corner," at 2 p.m., brings to the air important music recordings of the past that are now unavailable to the average collector. The daily program of "Music for Small Ensemble" appears at 4:30. In the evening at 8, WGBH-FM broadcasts "live" a Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert conducted by Erich Leinsdorf — one of 55 concerts scheduled for broadcast from this Summer's season at Tanglewood. At 10 p.m. Ruth Cumerson continues her series of performances of rarely heard "Early Romantic Music." Finally, at 11:30 p.m. late evening listeners can hear "Music for String Orchestra."

Altogether, not "only a few," but ten hours of music are presented on this typical day over WGBH-FM — with much of it being taken from concert performances that would otherwise be unobtainable for the FM music listener.

MICHAEL S. RICE
WGBH Radio Manager
Boston

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
JULY 29 1966

Norman Carol to Debut As Concertmaster at Spa

Norman Carol, who is succeeding Anshel Brusilow as concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, will appear in his new position for the first time in the opening concert at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center next Thursday.

* * *

Carol comes to the Philadelphia Orchestra from the Minneapolis Symphony, where he has served in the same capacity for six years, also serving at the same time as professor of music at the University of Minnesota.

Brusilow had resigned from the Philadelphia Symphony to become conductor of the newly-organized Philadelphia Chamber Symphony.

Carol is bringing to the Philadelphia orchestra one of the most prized violins in existence, a Guarnerius (del Gesu) dating from 1743, which for many years belonged to the late concert artist Albert Spalding. The instrument was acquired by Carol this past February.

NORMAN CAROL
With Philadelphia Orchestra

* * *

Born in Philadelphia, he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Max N. Carol, and a graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music, where he was a pupil of Efrem Zimbalist. During this period he served for two summers as concertmaster of the Tanglewood Festival (student) Orchestra and, at the age of 18 was invited by the late Serge Koussevitsky to join the first violin section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. During his three years in Boston, Carol appeared frequently as a recitalist and in April, 1949, at the age of 20 made his New York debut at Town Hall. A few months later he went on tour, appearing in recital and as soloist with a group of major American orchestras.

* * *

Carol served in the armed forces between 1951 and 1953, assigned to special service. While still a soldier he also appeared with the San Francisco Symphony to critical acclaim. Following his discharge from service Carol resumed his concert career and in March, 1954, made his debut with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, performing the Mendelssohn "Concerto in E minor." He returned to play the Lalo "Symphonie Espagnole" at subscription centers in February, 1957.

PALATINE, ILL.
ENTERPRISE
W. 4,630
JULY 28 1966

Program at Ravinia Next Week Is One of Contrasts

A week of contrasts in musical entertainment is scheduled for the Ravinia Festival's sixth week July 31 through Aug. 6.

In his Ravinia debut, the American conductor, Thomas Schippers, will conduct the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in a pair of concerts Aug. 4 and 6.

The internationally-acclaimed young conductor is musical director of the famous Festival of Two Worlds at Spoleto, Italy. He commutes regularly between the Metropolitan Opera in New York and La Scala in Milan and has conducted the world's leading symphony orchestras from San Francisco to Kiev.

SCHIPPERS' soloist at the Aug. 4 night concert will be the young Israeli violinist, Itzhak Perlman, who will play Tchaikovsky's "Concerto for Violin, D. major, Opus 35. Soloist Aug. 6 will be the young mezzo soprano, Shirley Verrett, who will sing arias from operas of Rossini, Purcell and Verdi. Miss Verrett will make her debut at La Scala next December as the star of a new production of "Carmen."

Ravinia's musical director, Seiji Ozawa, will open Ravinia's sixth week with a Sunday afternoon "Four O'Clocks" concert at which pianist Yuji Takahashi will be the featured soloist. Orchestra soloists will be Milton Preves and Donald Peck.

The young Japanese pianist has participated in the Berlin, Athens, and English Bach Festivals and the Domain Musicals. He is a Leonard Bernstein Fellow at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer. He will play Yannis Xenakis' "Eonta" at Ravinia.

The Oregonian
PORTLAND, OREGON
D. 240,562 SUN. 384,694
JUL 24 1966

Winner

THOMAS E. B. JONES, senior studying at Amherst College, was one of two fellowship grants given by the Radio Network for a summer study at Berkshire Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 20 1966

2nd Berkshire Music Concert Tomorrow

The second concert of the summer by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will be given in the Tanglewood Theater tomorrow evening at 8.

Erich Leinsdorf and Charles Wilson, newly appointed Assistant Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct this program which is open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mr. Wilson will conduct the first half of the concert, and his portion of the program includes Berlioz' Corsair Overture and the Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis and the Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky.

The eighty members of the Music Center Orchestra are taking part in the Center's Fellowship program this summer at Tanglewood. In addition to their performances with the Orchestra these young instrumentalists also perform in chamber music and Baroque programs. Many of them will take part in the Festival of Contemporary American Music during the final week of the Tanglewood season.

Tonight there will be a program of chamber music in the Tanglewood Theater. On the program will be Mozart's Quintet for Piano and Winds, Pentacle and Epitaph by David Borden, and Three Dialectic Songs by Selig with Simon Estes, as soloist. After intermission will be Beethoven's Quartet in C minor, Op. 131. This concert is also open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions for the support of the Center's summer activities.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
JUL 21 1966

Second Concert By Music Center Orchestra Today

LENOX — The second concert of the summer by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will be given in the Tanglewood Theater tonight at 8.

Erich Leinsdorf and Charles Wilson, newly appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the program, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Wilson will conduct the first half of the concert, and his portion of the program includes Berlioz' Corsair Overture and the Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven. Leinsdorf will conduct Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis and the Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 279,780 SAT. 292,741
JULY 27 1966

Art Council Lists 1967 Projects

A Buffalo Philharmonic tour of Western New York campuses next spring, presenting modern works with the composers on hand, is among 16 major projects to be sponsored by the State Council on the Arts in the 1966-67 season.

The Buffalo orchestra, Conductor Lukas Foss and Associate Conductor Richard Dufallo will offer the contemporary works in Cornell University, Houghton College and the State University Colleges at Geneseo and Brockport.

Established American composers, to be selected, will appear on all campuses, in various workshops and seminars, and probably as guest conductors, in some instances.

Other Plans Listed

Other large projects announced by the council:

¶ State University College at Potsdam, support for its summer workshops at Star Lake Music Camp.

¶ Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, grants for four young opera singers in residence, to assist in presenting programs of operatic content.

¶ Ithaca Festival, partial support for a consultant to help develop and manage the festival's operation for three months.

¶ Eastman School of Music, Rochester, funds to aid a study of the famed Suzuki Method of teaching violin to very young students in public schools.

¶ Saratoga Performing Arts Center, assistance in presenting low-price admissions to matinee concerts for students and teachers.

Plan Six Scholarships

¶ Hunter College development of a modern dance series; Lake George Festival, apprentice program for young singers and technicians; Paper Bag Players and Theater in the Street support for performances in depressed areas of New York City.

¶ Adelphi University, aid for a summer dance workshop; Council for the Arts in Westchester, services of a development consultant; National Dance Teachers Guild, grant to study writing on the dance.

¶ Municipal Concerts Inc., support for a 24-concert series for senior citizens of New York, in several centers.

¶ Joffrey Ballet, grant to help recreate the ballet "Green Table."

In addition, six scholarships will be assisted by the council, to send talented young performers to string seminars in the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass.

3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 22 1966

WGBH-FM Replies

Mr. Richard M. Fletcher, in a letter published by The Globe, July 16, added his voice to those who have complained about the demise of serious music programming on local commercial FM stations. He also suggested that Boston's educational FM station was of limited use to music listeners since, as he put it, "WGBH-FM broadcasts only a few hours of music during the day."

It is true, of course, that WGBH-FM devotes a good part of its schedule to news, literary, informational, and cultural programs, but still its extensive music offerings should not be minimized. Thursday's broadcasts (July 21) for example, begin at 8 a.m. with four hours of recorded music chosen from the significant works of all periods — on the new "Morning Pro Musica." Then the feature heard each week-day at noon, "Concert Stage," presents classical works until 1 p.m. "Collector's Corner," at 2 p.m., brings to the air important music recordings of the past that are now unavailable to the average collector. The daily program of "Music for Small Ensemble" appears at 4:30. In the evening at 8, WGBH-FM broadcasts "live" a Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert conducted by Erich Leinsdorf — one of 55 concerts scheduled for broadcast from this Summer's season at Tanglewood. At 10 p.m. Ruth Culbertson continues her series of performances of rarely heard "Early Romantic Music." Finally, at 11:30 p.m. late evening listeners can hear "Music for String Orchestra."

Altogether, not "only a few," but ten hours of music are presented on this typical day over WGBH-FM — with much of it being taken from concert performances that would otherwise be unobtainable for the FM music listener.

MICHAEL S. RICE
WGBH Radio Manager
Boston

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
JULY 29 1966

Norman Carol to Debut As Concertmaster at Spa

Norman Carol, who is succeeding Anshel Brusilow as concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, will appear in his new position for the first time in the opening concert at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center next Thursday.

* * *

Carol comes to the Philadelphia Orchestra from the Minneapolis Symphony, where he has served in the same capacity for six years, also serving at the same time as professor of music at the University of Minnesota.

Brusilow had resigned from the Philadelphia Symphony to become conductor of the newly-organized Philadelphia Chamber Symphony.

Carol is bringing to the Philadelphia orchestra one of the most prized violins in existence, a Guarnerius (del Gesu) dating from 1743, which for many years belonged to the late concert artist Albert Spalding. The instrument was acquired by Carol this past February.

NORMAN CAROL
With Philadelphia Orchestra

* * *

Born in Philadelphia, he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Max N. Carol, and a graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music, where he was a pupil of Efrem Zimbalist. During this period he served for two summers as concertmaster of the Tanglewood Festival (student) Orchestra and, at the age of 18 was invited by the late Serge Koussevitsky to join the first violin section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. During his three years in Boston, Carol appeared frequently as a recitalist and in April, 1949, at the age of 20 made his New York debut at Town Hall. A few months later he went on tour, appearing in recital and as soloist with a group of major American orchestras.

* * *

Carol served in the armed forces between 1951 and 1953, assigned to special service. While still a soldier he also appeared with the San Francisco Symphony to critical acclaim. Following his discharge from service Carol resumed his concert career and in March, 1954, made his debut with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, performing the Mendelssohn "Concerto in E minor." He returned to play the Lalo "Symphonie Espagnole" at subscription centers in February, 1957.

PALATINE, ILL.
ENTERPRISE
W. 4,630
JULY 28 1966

Program at Ravinia Next Week Is One of Contrasts

A week of contrasts in musical entertainment is scheduled for the Ravinia Festival's sixth week July 31 through Aug. 6.

In his Ravinia debut, the American conductor, Thomas Schippers, will conduct the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in a pair of concerts Aug. 4 and 6.

The internationally-acclaimed young conductor is musical director of the famous Festival of Two Worlds at Spoleto, Italy. He commutes regularly between the Metropolitan Opera in New York and La Scala in Milan and has conducted the world's leading symphony orchestras from San Francisco to Kiev.

SCHIPPERS' soloist at the Aug. 4 night concert will be the young Israeli violinist, Itzhak Perlman, who will play Tchaikovsky's "Concerto for Violin, D. major, Opus 35. Soloist Aug. 6 will be the young mezzo soprano, Shirley Verrett, who will sing arias from operas of Rossini, Purcell and Verdi. Miss Verrett will make her debut at La Scala next December as the star of a new production of "Carmen."

Ravinia's musical director, Seiji Ozawa, will open Ravinia's sixth week with a Sunday afternoon "Four O'Clocks" concert at which pianist Yuji Takahashi will be the featured soloist. Orchestra soloists will be Milton Preves and Donald Peck.

The young Japanese pianist has participated in the Berlin, Athens, and English Bach Festivals and the Domain Musicals. He is a Leonard Bernstein Fellow at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer. He will play Yannis Xenakis' "Eonta" at Ravinia.

The Oregonian
PORTLAND, OREGON
D. 240,562 SUN. 384,604
JUL 24 1966

Winner

THOMAS E. B. JONES, tenor studying at Amherst College, won one of two fellowship grants given by ABC Radio Network for summer study at Berkshire Music Center.

The Seattle Daily Times
D. 230,487 SUN. 277,090

JULY 24 1966

MRS. WILLIAM H. GARDINER

Great-Grandmother Going To Famous Music School

By SALLY GENE MAHONEY

It all began with a Smith College girl, just after the turn of the century. And with the college Mandolin Club.

Now, some 60 years later, Mrs. William H. Gardiner is going back to Massachusetts [illegible] been accepted at Tanglewood, one of the most famous music centers in the world for mostly YOUNG musicians.

THE WHITE-HAIRED, ten[illegible] great-grandmother is ready to go—along with her viola, white concert dress, music stand, blankets and luggage, and a handful of brochures and instructions about dormitory living and tending to business.

She'll participate in a two-week seminar in orchestral playing and chamber music, beginning August 8, but will be there a week earlier so that she can visit Quebec on the way east.

That Mandolin Club was very important 60 years ago at Smith, and Edith Gardiner, then Edith McElroy, wanted to join. She had to learn to play first, so she took up the mandola (it bears the same relation to the mandolin as a viola does to a violin).

And then 30 years passed. She was married, had three children (a son and two daughters), moved thither and yon about the United States and Canada, settling in the Northwest in 1920, while her late husband was an engineer for Diablo Dam and, in 1941, was widowed.

Over the years, she didn't pay much attention to her mandola—"I'm probably the best mandola player west of the Mississippi," she says, "because I'm probably the only one who can play it"—but a "Night in Italy" program at the Women's University Club, requiring strolling musicians, renewed her interest in playing.

SO, WHEN she was past the age of 50, she took up the violin. She studied for five years, then, in 1947, switched to the viola.

Her skill with the viola won her the bid to Tanglewood.

For a number of years, she has played with the Seattle Community Symphony, and she also plays with the Thursday Music and Drama Club quartet, the Senior Citizens' Ensemble and the Seattle Senior Musicians' Orchestra.

Mrs. Gardiner won't be all alone at Tanglewood — her niece and two grand-nieces will be there, too.

Dr. Alice Proctor of Dedham, Mass., will be in piano classes and Dr. Proctor's 24-year-old twin daughters, Carol and Lucille, will be participating. Carol is a cellist, one of three women with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which operates Tanglewood. Lucille is an artist.

AFTER THE seminar, Mrs. Gardiner is going to do some traveling — which should not surprise her friends. She's already been to Europe, Greek Islands, the Orient, Kashmir, South America and around the Pacific, including Alaska.

This time, she'll confine her wandering to New York and New England, with a special visit to Bunker Hill, where a direct ancestor fought. Dr. Proctor will accompany her, too, on a visit to Smith College, from which she was graduated in 1907.

Mrs. Gardiner expects that this trip will do her for a while — and you can be sure of one thing, Tanglewood people: She isn't one to fiddle around.

UTICA OBSERVER DISPATCH
Thursday, July 21, 1966

Lane-Crouch Vows Recited In Ceremony at Boston

MRS. WILLIAM E. LANE
... Mary M. Crouch

Miss Mary M. Crouch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Crouch, 37 College St., Clinton, became the bride of William E. Lane, son of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Lane, Winter Park, Fla., at 2 on June 10 in King's Chapel, Boston, Mass. The Rev. Virgil E. Murdock officiated.

Mrs. Martin Hanley, Bomoseen, Vt., attended her sister as matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Carol Proctor, Miss Christine West and Miss Martha DeYoung, all of Boston.

William Stein was best man for Mr. Lane. Ushering were Martin Hanley, Bomoseen, the bride's brother-in-law; David Olmstead and Robert Hansen.

A reception was held in the Somerset Hotel, Boston. The couple will make their home in Lenox, Mass., for the summer, where they will study at the Tanglewood Music Center. In the fall they will begin graduate work at New England Conservatory, Boston.

The new Mrs. Lane was graduated from the conservatory. Her husband attended the University of Kansas and the conservatory.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

JUL 30 1966

ERICH LEINSDORF, second from left, accepts a $1,000 check from John A. Thayer, vice-president and national director of programming for the ABC Radio Network, for two grants for study at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood. Taking part in the ceremonies are the recipients of the $500 grants, violinist Priscilla-Louise Hodges and tenor Thomas E. B. Jones.

Indiana University Fulbright [illegible] She will perform with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and chamber ensembles here. Jones, a music major at Amherst College, will appear with the Tanglewood Choir in performances of Bach's "Magnificat" and "St. John Passion" and Mozart's "Magic Flute" with the Boston Symphony.

SMITHTOWN, N. Y.
MESSENGER
W. 5,000

AUG 4 1966

+ + +

Patricia Guthrie of Smithtown, has begun study at the Berkshire Music Center in the Vocal Performing Department. She is a Vocal Fellow at the BMC, and sings in the Tanglewood Choir and the Festival Chorus with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
SUN
D. 25,000 S. 24,000

AUG 4 1966

Music Study in Massachusetts

Paul Fried of Las Vegas is studying at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass.

Fried is playing flute in the student orchestra under a fellowship grant from the Fromm Music Foundation. The Berkshire Music Center was established at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES-HERALD
D. 32,000 S. 65,500

JULY 29 1966

Fellowship Grants Are Announced

Recipients of fellowship grants for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center—part of the American Broadcasting Companies, Inc.'s overall program of encouraging and developing young talent in the arts and communications—were announced today by Robert R. Pauley, president of the ABC Radio Network.

The grants, which were established last week, have been awarded to Priscilla Louise Hodges, 19, of Weymouth, Mass., and Thomas Evan Bruce Jones, 19, of Portland, Ore. Each received a $500 fellowship for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center (Tanglewood, Mass.). None of the local entrants won finals prizes.

The Seattle Daily Times
D. 230,487 SUN. 277,090

JULY 2 4 1966

MRS. WILLIAM H. GARDINER

Great-Grandmother Going To Famous Music School

By SALLY GENE MAHONEY

It all began with a Smith College girl, just after the turn of the century. And with the college Mandolin Club.

Now, some 60 years later, Mrs. William H. Gardiner is going back to Massachusetts —she's been accepted at Tanglewood, one of the most famous music centers in the world for mostly YOUNG musicians.

THE WHITE-HAIRED, ten-times great-grandmother is ready to go—along with her viola, white concert dress, music stand, blankets and luggage, and a handful of brochures and instructions about dormitory living and tending to business.

She'll participate in a two-week seminar in orchestral playing and chamber music, beginning August 8, but will leave here a week earlier so that she can visit Quebec on the way east.

That Mandolin Club was very important 60 years ago at Smith, and Edith Gardiner, then Edith McElroy, wanted to join. She had to learn to play first, so she took up the mandola (it bears the same relation to the mandolin as a viola does to a violin).

And then 30 years passed. She was married, had three children (a son and two daughters), moved thither and yon about the United States and Canada, settling in the Northwest in 1929, while her late husband was an engineer for Diablo Dam and, in 1941, was widowed.

Over the years, she didn't pay much attention to her mandola—"I'm probably the best mandola player west of the Mississippi," she says, "because I'm probably the only one who can play it"—but a "Night in Italy" program at the Women's University Club, requiring strolling musicians, renewed her interest in playing.

SO, WHEN she was past the age of 50, she took up the violin. She studied for five years, then, in 1947, switched to the viola.

Her skill with the viola won her the bid to Tanglewood.

For a number of years, she has played with the Seattle Community Symphony, and she also plays with the Thursday Music and Drama Club quartet, the Senior Citizens' Ensemble and the Seattle Senior Musicians' Orchestra.

Mrs. Gardiner won't be all alone at Tanglewood — her niece and two grand-nieces will be there, too.

Dr. Alice Proctor of Dedham, Mass., will be in piano classes and Dr. Proctor's 24-year-old twin daughters, Carol and Lucille, will be participating. Carol is a cellist, one of three women with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which operates Tanglewood. Lucille is an artist.

AFTER THE seminar, Mrs. Gardiner is going to do some traveling — which should not surprise her friends. She's already been to Europe, Greek Islands, the Orient, Kashmir, South America and around the Pacific, including Alaska.

This time, she'll confine her wandering to New York and New England, with a special visit to Bunker Hill, where a direct ancestor fought. Dr. Proctor will accompany her, too, on a visit to Smith College, from which she was graduated in 1907.

Mrs. Gardiner expects that this trip will do her for a while — and you can be sure of one thing, Tanglewood people: She isn't one to fiddle around.

UTICA OBSERVER DISPATCH
Thursday, July 21, 1966

Lane-Crouch Vows Recited In Ceremony at Boston

MRS. WILLIAM E. LANE
. . . Mary M. Crouch

Miss Mary M. Crouch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Crouch, 37 College St., Clinton, became the bride of William E. Lane, son of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Lane, Winter Park, Fla., at 2 on June 10 in King's Chapel, Boston, Mass. The Rev. Virgil E. Murdock officiated.

Mrs. Martin Hanley, Bomoseen, Vt., attended her sister as matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Carol Proctor, Miss Christine West and Miss Martha DeYoung, all of Boston.

William Stein was best man for Mr. Lane. Ushering were Martin Hanley, Bomoseen, the bride's brother-in-law; David Ohanian and Robert Hansen.

A reception was held in the Somersett Hotel, Boston. The couple will make their home in Lenox, Mass., for the summer, where they will study at the Tanglewood Music Center. In the fall they will begin graduate work at New England Conservatory, Boston.

The new Mrs. Lane was graduated from the conservatory. Her husband attended the University of Kansas and the conservatory.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

JUL 3 0 1966

ERICH LEINSDORF, second from left, accepts a $1,000 check from John A. Thayer, vice-president and national director of programming for the ABC Radio Network, for two grants for study at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood. Taking part in the ceremonies are the recipients of the $500 grants, violinist Priscilla Louise Hodges and tenor Thomas E. B. Jones.

Indiana University Philharmonic. She will perform with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and chamber ensembles here.

Jones, a music major at Amherst College, will appear with the Tanglewood Choir in performances of Bach's "Magnificat" and "St. John Passion," and Mozart's "Magic Flute" with the Boston Symphony.

SMITHTOWN, N. Y.
MESSENGER
W. 5,000

AUG 4 1966

+ + +

Patricia Guthrie of Smithtown, has begun study at the Berkshire Music Center in the Vocal Performing Department. She is a Vocal Fellow at the BMC, and sings in the Tanglewood Choir and the Festival Chorus with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
SUN
D. 25,000 S. 24,000

AUG 4 1966

Music Study in Massachusetts

Paul Fried of Las Vegas is studying at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass.

Fried is playing flute in the student orchestra under a fellowship grant from the Fromm Music Foundation. The Berkshire Music Center was established at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES-HERALD
D. 38,000 S. 65,500

JULY 2 9 1966

Fellowship Grants Are Announced

Recipients of fellowship grants for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center—part of the American Broadcasting Companies, Inc.'s overall program of encouraging and developing young talent in the arts and communications— were announced today by Robert R. Pauley, president of the ABC Radio Network.

The grants, which were established last week, have been awarded to Priscilla Louise Hodges, 19, of Weymouth, Mass., and Thomas Evan Bruce Jones, 19, of Portland, Ore. Each received a $500 fellowship for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center (Tanglewood, Mass.). None of the local entrants won finals prizes.

The Seattle Daily Times
D. 230,487 SUN. 277,090

JULY 2 4 1966

MRS. WILLIAM H. GARDINER

Great-Grandmother Going To Famous Music School

By SALLY GENE MAHONEY

It all began with a Smith College girl, just after the turn of the century. And with the college Mandolin Club.

Now, some 60 years later, Mrs. William H. Gardiner is going back to Massachusetts—she's been accepted at Tanglewood, one of the most famous music centers in the world for mostly YOUNG musicians.

THE WHITE-HAIRED, ten-times great-grandmother is ready to go—along with her viola, white concert dress, music stand, blankets and luggage, and a handful of brochures and instructions about dormitory living and tending to business.

She'll participate in a two-week seminar in orchestral playing and chamber music, beginning August 8, but will leave here a week earlier so that she can visit Quebec on the way east.

That Mandolin Club was very important 60 years ago at Smith, and Edith Gardiner, then Edith McElroy, wanted to join. She had to learn to play first, so she took up the mandola (it bears the same relation to the mandolin as a viola does to a violin).

And then 30 years passed. She was married, had three children (a son and two daughters), moved thither and yon about the United States and Canada, settling in the Northwest in 1929, while her late husband was an engineer for Diablo Dam and, in 1941, was widowed.

Over the years, she didn't pay much attention to her mandola—"I'm probably the best mandola player west of the Mississippi," she says, "because I'm probably the only one who can play it"—but a "Night in Italy" program at the Women's University Club, strolling musicia[illegible] her interest in pl[illegible]

SO, WHEN sh[illegible] age of 50, she [illegible] violin. She st[illegible] years, then, in[illegible] to the viola.

Her skill [illegible] won her th[illegible] wood.

For a r[illegible] she has pla[illegible] Seattle Community [illegible] phony, and she also plays with the Thursday Music and Drama Club quartet, the Senior Citizens' Ensemble and the Seattle Senior Musicians' Orchestra.

Mrs. Gardiner won't be all alone at Tanglewood — her niece and two grand-nieces will be there, too.

Dr. Alice Proctor of Dedham, Mass., will be in piano classes and Dr. Proctor's 24-year-old twin daughters, Carol and Lucille, will be participating. Carol is a cellist, one of three women with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which operates Tanglewood. Lucille is an artist.

AFTER THE seminar, Mrs. Gardiner is going to do some traveling — which should not surprise her friends. She's already been to Europe, Greek Islands, the Orient, Kashmir, South America and around the Pacific, including Alaska.

This time, she'll confine her wandering to New York and New England, with a special visit to Bunker Hill, where a direct ancestor fought. Dr. Proctor will accompany her, too, on a visit to Smith College, from which she was graduated in 1907.

Mrs. Gardiner expects that this trip will do her for a while — and you can be sure of one thing, Tanglewood people: She isn't one to fiddle around.

UTICA OBSERVER DISPATCH
Thursday, July 21, 1966

Lane-Crouch Vows Recited In Ceremony at Boston

[illegible]AM E. LANE

Miss Mary M. Crouch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Crouch, 37 College St., Clinton, became the bride of William E. Lane, son of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Lane, Winter Park, Fla., at 2 on June 10 in King's Chapel, Boston, Mass. The Rev. Virgil E. Murdock officiated.

Mrs. Martin Hanley, Bomoseen, Vt., attended her sister as matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Carol Proctor, Miss Christine West and Miss Martha DeYoung, all of Boston.

William Stein was best man for Mr. Lane. Ushering were Martin Hanley, Bomoseen, the bride's brother-in-law; David Ohanian and Robert Hansen.

A reception was held in the Somersett Hotel, Boston. The couple will make their home in Lenox, Mass., for the summer, where th[illegible] will study at the Tanglewo[illegible] Center. In the fall they will begin graduate [illegible] at New England Conserva[illegible]y, Boston.

The new Mrs. Lane was grad[illegible]uated from the conservatory. Her husband attended the University of Kansas and the conservatory.

Billboard
SURVEY for Week Ending 56

CLASSICAL LP's

This Week	Last Week	Title, Artist, Label & No.	Weeks on Chart
22	24	BEETHOVEN: CONCERTO NO. 5 ("EMPEROR") G. Gould/Arner. Symph. Orch. (Stokowski), Col. ML 6288 (M); MS 6888 (S)	8
23	22	RITUAL FIRE DANCE Phila. Orch. (Ormandy), Col. ML 6223 (M); MS 6823 (S)	5
24	20	SOUVENIR OF A GOLDEN ERA (2-12" LP) Horne, Lon. A 4263 (M); OSA 1263 (S)	10
25	26	BRITTEN CURLEW RIVER Pears, Shirley-Quirk, Lon. A 4156 (M); OSA 1156 (S)	5
26	27	SCHUBERT: THE TROUT AND OTHER SONGS Fischer-Dieskau, Moore Angel 36341 (M); S 36341 (S)	3
27	25	MOZART: SYMPHONIES NOS. 28 & 33 [illegible]	3

[illegible]ellowship [illegible]ants Named

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — Violinist Priscilla Louise Hodges, 19, of Weymouth, Mass., and tenor Thomas E. B. Jones, 19, of Portland, Ore., have received $500 grants from the American Broadcasting Company for study here this summer. Robert R. Pauley, president of the ABC Radio Network, announced the fellowship grants as part of ABC's overall program of encouraging and developing young talent in the arts and communications.

Miss Hodges, who is studying violin at Indiana University, has performed with the Boston Symphony and is a member of the Indiana University Philharmonic. She will perform with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and chamber ensembles here.

Jones, a music major at Amherst College, will appear with the Tanglewood Choir in performances of Bach's "Magnificat" and "St. John Passion," and Mozart's "Magic Flute" with the Boston Symphony.

SMITHTOWN, N. Y.
MESSENGER
W. 5,000

AUG 4 1966

+ + +

Patricia Guthrie of Smithtown, has begun study at the Berkshire Music Center in the Vocal Performing Department. She is a Vocal Fellow at the BMC, and sings in the Tanglewood Choir and the Festival Chorus with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
SUN
D. 25,000 S. 24,000

AUG 4 1966

Music Study in Massachusetts

Paul Fried of Las Vegas is studying at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass.

Fried is playing flute in the student orchestra under a fellowship grant from the Fromm Music Foundation. The Berkshire Music Center was established at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES-HERALD
D. 38,000 S. 65,500

JULY 2 9 1966

Fellowship Grants Are Announced

Recipients of fellowship grants for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center—part of the American Broadcasting Companies, Inc.'s overall program of encouraging and developing young talent in the arts and communications— were announced today by Robert R. Pauley, president of the ABC Radio Network.

The grants, which were established last week, have been awarded to Priscilla Louise Hodges, 19, of Weymouth, Mass., and Thomas Evan Bruce Jones, 19, of Portland, Ore. Each received a $500 fellowship for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center (Tanglewood, Mass.). None of the local entrants won finals prizes.

185

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
D. 104,500 S. 139,000

JULY 31 1966

Entertainment Plus

Area Musicians Furthering Careers

By SUMNER RAND
Sentinel Staff

The mails bring word of three young Central Floridian musicians who are taking significant steps in developing their talents

Bill Lane

and furthering their careers.

Bill Lane, son of Rollins College Dean of Admissions Spencer Lane and Mrs. Lane of Winter Park, was soloist in the first concert of the season by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., where he is studying for the third summer.

MICHAEL Steinberg, critic for one of the Boston papers, in describing the performance of the Richard Strauss "Horn Concerto No. 9" said: "Lane is a superbly gifted young player . . . he managed a murderous test for a treacherous instrument impressively. He plays beautifully in tune and in rhythm, phrases musically, commands a fine legato and has an especially lovely tone in quiet high register passages." The student orchestra was conducted by Sir Adrian Boult.

LARRY BRADFORD
. . . With Johanos

Lane, who also performs with the Boston Symphony itself on occasion, attends the Boston Conservatory of Music in the winter.

David Glass, son of Mr. and Mrs. Odell Glass, 3807 Chelsae, is one of 33 specially chosen participants in the Interlochen Honors Musicianship Project at the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich.

PIANIST Glass, who will be remembered as the youngster who sang the title role in the Florida Symphony Associate Board's presentation of the Menotti opera, "Amahl and the Night Visitors," back in December, 1962, is learning during a 40-week period of study to play all the instruments in an orchestra, theory and composition, conducting, departmental and library organization.

The project is being carried on as an experiment in musical education under a $221,000 grant from the department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Their role in the project will conclude with demonstrations and performances at the International Society for Music Education conference being hosted by Interlochen Aug. 18-26.

A THIRD local musician, Larry Bradford, son of Mrs. Eleanor E. Bradford, 3421 Chelsea Ave., and a violinist, is one of approximately 100 top young string instrumentalists attending an eight-week Congress of Strings at Michigan State University, East Lansing, under the direction of Donald Johanos, conductor of the Dallas Symphony (which performed in Orlando last season).

The session, designed to develop first-rate string players for American and Canadian orchestras, is sponsored by MSU and the American Federation of Musicians. The students study under a faculty of eight first-chair musicians and will perform in four public concerts under prominent symphony conductors.

Bradford is a 1965 Winter Park High School graduate and now attends the University of Miami.

DOWN at the Asolo Theater Festival in Sarasota this afternoon there's a double treet—a lecture at 2 on "Playwriting in Italy" by the Italian playwright and critic, Mario Fratti, and a recital at 3 by the Greek mezzo-soprano Eelena Nikoliad, both free. The Festival's evening performance is the double bill of "Oedipus Rex" and "The Bald Soprano."

Annie Russell Theater Director Bob Juergens has ompleted the lineup of shows for the Rollins Players' 1966-67 season, In addition to the already announced musical, "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying,"

Robert Juergens

Arthur Miller

Anouilh's "Waltz of the Toreadors," Arthur Miller's "After the Fall" and Gibson's "The Miracle Worker" will be done in the ART, and Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya" and the British import, "Oh, What A Lovely War!" in the Fred Stone.

It's interesting to note that Rollins is doing the controversial Miller play, the one supposedly depicting his relations with Marilyn Monroe, since both the Orange Blossom Playhouse and the Orlando Little Theater were eyeing it hungrily!

Speaking of the Playhouse, its production of "The Caine Mutiny Court Martial" will continue this week, Thursday through Saturday nights if you're looking for some local "live" entertainment.

DAVID GLASS AT MUSIC CAMP
. . . Is learning to play orchestral instruments

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 133,303

AUG 2 1966

Miller enrolled at music center

Syracuse University voice instructor Donald Miller is studying at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., under a fellowship grant of the Fromm Music Foundation. Miller is singing bass in the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus and is also doing solo work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838

AUG 2 1966

WCRB Awards 2 Scholarships At Tanglewood

TWo scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center have been given by radio station WCRB through funds of the station, its listeners and the New England High-Fidelity Audio Show. Recipients are William Lane, French horn player, and Mrs. Zaida Booth George, a violinist.

WilliamLane is from Winter Park, Fa. and has studied at the University of Kansas for two and one-half years followed by a tour in the Far East and Australia as horn soloist with the University of Kansas Brass Ensemble. He is presently studing at the New England Conservatory of Music with James Stagliano, first horn player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Lane has studied at the Berkshire Music Center for the past two years and has appeared as soloist both Strauss Horn Concertos.

Mrs. George, from Briarcliff, N.Y., completed her undergraduate study at Syracuse University and is presently there studying for her master's degree in the violin. She has also studied in Italy with Gioacchino Maglioni. She has played with the Syracuse Symphony and is in the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 3 1966

Betty Barbour To Help Give Lesson At Tanglewood

Miss Betty Barbour, 15-year-old violin student of Jan Stocklinski at the Pittsfield Community Music School, has been chosen to participate in a demonstration-lesson this afternoon by Joseph Silverstein to string teachers enrolled at the Tanglewood Institute of the Berkshire Music Center.

Miss Barbour, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul K. Barbour of 1 Richard Drive, has been studying with Mr. Stocklinski for three years. At the Music School's special scholarship auditions in May, she was awarded a Mrs. W. Murray Crane scholarship for half tuition for the 1966-67 school year.

SPARTANBURG, S. C.
HERALD
D. 36,000

AUG 3 1966

Becky Hucks In Studies At Berkshire

Becky Hucks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hucks Jr. of 470 Hampton Drive, is studying at the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass., as a fellowship student and member of the center's student orchestra quartet.

Miss Hucks will end her study Aug. 21. She is attending Boston University where she is finishing her work toward a master's degree after completing studies at Converse College.

A violinist, Becky is studying in the instrumental performing department at Berkshire.

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,882

JUL 23 1966

Berkshire Memorial At Seranak

LENOX — The project of constructing a studio for composers as a memorial to the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, has been sponsored jointly by the National Federation of Music Clubs and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The new composers' studio is to provide a creative musician with peaceful and natural surroundings. This will serve as a quiet contrast to the busy life of Tanglewood. Mrs. Koussevitzky said that she did not consider her late husband's estate, Seranak, a private residence, but rather a welcome retreat, the beauty and peacefulness of which will offer greater time to absorb and fulfill the creativeness of composing in an atmosphere free from distraction. The composers will have an opportunity to work closely with the Berkshire Music Center and its students as the studio is just a few minutes from Tanglewood.

A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be represented at the dedication of the studio today. Aaron Copland will deliver the dedication on behalf of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation There will be close co-ordination between the Berkshire Music Center and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the selection of the composers who will be fortunate enough to be in residence at the studio. It is expected that the studio will be available for six months of the year.

Paul Fromm, head of the Fromm Music Foundation and dedicated leader for the furtherance of contemporary music wrote, "I could not think of a more appropriate memorial to Serge Koussevitzky."

Thornton Wilder wrote to Mrs. Koussevitzky, "Your insight is all too justified. Composers — in this era of omnipresent radio and television — must have a haven from sound. (Our masters were of much sterner stuff. Mozart's lodings were often over cafes, where dancing and singing were usually going on.)"

Argus-Champion
NEWPORT, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 3,560

AUG 4 1966

Dr. Wing Studies At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass.—Dr. Henry Wing, New London, N.H., has begun study at the vocal performing department of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood.

He is a vocal fellow singing in the Tanglewood Choir and the Festival Chorus with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Music Center was established at Tanglewood in 1940 to provide a center where young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their artistic experience under the guidance of eminent musicians and teachers. While it is in session, the Festival will present 24 concerts. As a member of the Music Center, Dr. Wing will be able to observe the preparation of a repertoire larger than that of most symphony orchestras during a full season of concerts.

185

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
D. 101,500 S. 139,000

JULY 31 1966

Entertainment Plus

Area Musicians Furthering Careers

By SUMNER RAND
Sentinel Staff

The mails bring word of three young Central Floridian musicians who are taking significant steps in developing their talents and furthering their careers.

Bill Lane

Bill Lane, son of Rollins College Dean of Admissions Spencer Lane and Mrs. Lane of Winter Park, was soloist in the first concert of the season by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., where he is studying for the third summer.

MICHAEL Steinberg, critic for one of the Boston papers, in describing the performance of the Richard Strauss "Horn Concerto No. 9" said: "Lane is a superbly gifted young player . . . he managed a murderous test for a treacherous instrument impressively. He plays beautifully in tune and in rhythm, phrases musically, commands a fine legato and has an especially lovely tone in quiet high register passages." The student orchestra was conducted by Sir Adrian Boult.

LARRY BRADFORD
. . . With Johanos

Lane, who also performs with the Boston Symphony itself on occasion, attends the Boston Conservatory of Music in the winter.

David Glass, son of Mr. and Mrs. Odell Glass, 3807 Chelsae, is one of 33 specially chosen participants in the Interlochen Honors Musicianship Project at the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich.

PIANIST Glass, who will be remembered as the youngster who sang the title role in the Florida Symphony Associate Board's presentation of the Menotti opera, "Amahl and the Night Visitors," back in December, 1962, is learning during a 40-week period of study to play all the instruments in an orchestra, theory and composition, conducting, departmental and library organization.

The project is being carried on as an experiment in musical education under a $221,000 grant from the department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Their role in the project will conclude with demonstrations and performances at the International Society for Music Education conference being hosted by Interlochen Aug. 18-26.

A THIRD local musician, Larry Bradford, son of Mrs. Eleanor E. Bradford, 3421 Chelsea Ave., and a violinist, is one of approximately 100 top young string instrumentalists attending an eight-week Congress of Strings at Michigan State University, East Lansing, under the direction of Donald Johanos, conductor of the Dallas Symphony (which performed in Orlando last season).

The session, designed to develop first-rate string players for American and Canadian orchestras, is sponsored by MSU and the American Federation of Musicians. The students study under a faculty of eight first-chair musicians and will perform in four public concerts under prominent symphony conductors.

Bradford is a 1965 Winter Park High School graduate and now attends the University of Miami.

DOWN at the Asolo Theater Festival in Sarasota this afternoon there's a double treet—a lecture at 2 on "Playwriting in Italy" by the Italian playwright and critic, Mario Fratti, and a recital at 3 by the Greek mezzo-soprano Eelena Nikoliad, both free. The Festival's evening performance is the double bill of "Oedipus Rex" and "The Bald Soprano."

Annie Russell Theater Director Bob Juergens has ompleted the lineup of shows for the Rollins Players' 1966-67 season, In addition to the already announced musical, "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying,"

Robert Juergens

Arthur Miller

Anouilh's "Waltz of the Toreadors," Arthur Miller's "After the Fall" and Gibson's "The Miracle Worker" will be done in the ART, and Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya" and the British import, "Oh, What A Lovely War!" in the Fred Stone..

It's interesting to note that Rollins is doing the controversial Miller play, the one supposedly depicting his relations with Marilyn Monroe, since both the Orange Blossom Playhouse and the Orlando Little Theater were eyeing it hungrily!

Speaking of the Playhouse, its production of "The Caine Mutiny Court Martial" will continue this week, Thursday through Saturday nights if you're looking for some local "live" entertainment.

DAVID GLASS AT MUSIC CAMP
. . . Is learning to play orchestral instruments

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 133,303

AUG 2 1966

Miller enrolled at music center

Syracuse University voice instructor Donald Miller is studying at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., under a fellowship grant of the Fromm Music Foundation. Miller is singing bass in the Tanglewood Choir and Festival Chorus and is also doing solo work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838

AUG 2 1966

WCRB Awards 2 Scholarships At Tanglewood

TWo scholarships at the Berkshire Music Center have been given by radio station WCRB through funds of the station, its listeners and the New England High-Fidelity Audio Show. Recipients are William Lane, French horn player, and Mrs. Zaida Booth George, a violinist.

WilliamLane is from Winter Park, Fa. and has studied at the University of Kansas for two and one-half years followed by a tour in the Far East and Australia as horn soloist with the University of Kansas Brass Ensemble. He is presently studing at the New England Conservatory of Music with James Stagliano, first horn player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Lane has studied at the Berkshire Music Center for the past two years and has appeared as soloist both Strauss Horn Concertos.

Mrs. George, from Briarcliff, N.Y., completed her undergraduate study at Syracuse University and is presently there studying for her master's degree in the violin. She has also studied in Italy with Gioacchino Maglioni. She has played with the Syracuse Symphony and is in the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 3 1966

Betty Barbour To Help Give Lesson At Tanglewood

Miss Betty Barbour, 15-year-old violin student of Jan Stocklinski at the Pittsfield Community Music School, has been chosen to participate in a demonstration-lesson this afternoon by Joseph Silverstein to string teachers enrolled at the Tanglewood Institute of the Berkshire Music Center.

Miss Barbour, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul K. Barbour of 1 Richard Drive, has been studying with Mr. Stocklinski for three years. At the Music School's special scholarship auditions in May, she was awarded a Mrs. W. Murray Crane scholarship for half tuition for the 1966-67 school year.

SPARTANBURG, S. C.
HERALD
D. 36,000

AUG 3 1966

Becky Hucks In Studies At Berkshire

Becky Hucks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hucks Jr. of 470 Hampton Drive, is studying at the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass., as a fellowship student and member of the center's student orchestra quartet.

Miss Hucks will end her study Aug. 21. She is attending Boston University where she is finishing her work toward a master's degree after completing studies at Converse College.

A violinist, Becky is studying in the instrumental performing department at Berkshire.

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,882

JUL 23 1966

Berkshire Memorial At Seranak

LENOX — The project of constructing a studio for composers as a memorial to the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, has been sponsored jointly by the National Federation of Music Clubs and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The new composers' studio is to provide a creative musician with peaceful and natural surroundings. This will serve as a quiet contrast to the busy life of Tanglewood. Mrs. Koussevitzky said that she did not consider her late husband's estate, Seranak, a private residence, but rather a welcome retreat, the beauty and peacefulness of which will offer greater time to absorb and fulfill the creativeness of composing in an atmosphere free from distraction. The composers will have an opportunity to work closely with the Berkshire Music Center and its students as the studio is just a few minutes from Tanglewood.

A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be represented at the dedication of the studio today. Aaron Copland will deliver the dedication on behalf of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation There will be close co-ordination between the Berkshire Music Center and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the selection of the composers who will be fortunate enough to be in residence at the studio. It is expected that the studio will be available for six months of the year.

Paul Fromm, head of the Fromm Music Foundation and dedicated leader for the furtherance of contemporary music wrote, "I could not think of a more appropriate memorial to Serge Koussevitzky."

Thornton Wilder wrote to Mrs. Koussevitzky, "Your insight is all too justified. Composers — in this era of omnipresent radio and television — must have a haven from sound. (Our masters were of much sterner stuff. Mozart's lodings were often over cafes, where dancing and singing were usually going on.)"

Argus-Champion
NEWPORT, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 3,560

AUG 4 1966

Dr. Wing Studies At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass.—Dr. Henry Wing, New London, N.H., has begun study at the vocal performing department of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood.

He is a vocal fellow singing in the Tanglewood Choir and the Festival Chorus with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Music Center was established at Tanglewood in 1940 to provide a center where young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their artistic experience under the guidance of eminent musicians and teachers. While it is in session, the Festival will present 24 concerts. As a member of the Music Center, Dr. Wing will be able to observe the preparation of a repertoire larger than that of most symphony orchestras during a full season of concerts.

186

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
AUG 15 1966

Two Leading U.S. Composers Given New Academic Positions

Schuller to Be President of Conservatory in Boston — Princeton Elevates Babbitt

Gunther Schuller and Milton Babbitt, two leading composers who have written extensively about music, have received new appointments.

Mr. Schuller, an associate professor of music at Yale University, will become president of the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. He will assume his duties at the start of the 1967-68 academic year and succeed Chester W. Williams, who resigned his administrative post to devote full time to teaching at the conservatory.

Mr. Babbitt has been named William Shubael Conant Professor of Music at Princeton University, succeeding Roger Sessions, who retired last year.

Mr. Schuller will be the ninth president in the 100-year history of the conservatory. He was born in New York in 1925, the son of a violinist with the New York Philharmonic. At the age of 12 he joined the St. Thomas Choir School, where he learned to play the French horn among other instruments.

He studied at the Manhattan School of Music and, in 1943, at the age of 17, became first-horn player of the Cincinnati Symphony. At 19 he joined the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, where he remained for 15 years.

Recipient of Awards

A self-taught composer, Mr. Schuller left the Met orchestra to devote himself to creative work. In 1960 he received awards from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and Brandeis University.

In 1962 to 1964, he held a Guggenheim Fellowship and visited Yugoslavia, Poland and West Germany under State Department auspices. His score for the Polish film, "Yesterday in Fact," won the Darius Milhaud Award for the best film score of 1964. His opera, "The Visitation," will be given its premiere by the Hamburg Opera on Oct. 12.

This summer, Mr. Schuller became head of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., and on Saturday, received the 1966 Mark M. Horbit Award of $1,500 from the center. The award is given "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States."

Mr. Schuller has also been here and in Euroe as a conductor, and heads the "Twentieth Century Innovations" series at Carnegie Recital Hall.

He has been active in the "third stream" movement, which tries to bring jazz and contemporary music together. His nonjazz works are serially oriented, and he has been closely associated with Mr. Babbitt, who is also a serial, or 12-tone, composer.

Mr. Schuller is married to the former Marjorie Black of Fargo, N. D., and has two sons. Mr. Babbitt was born in Philadelphia in 1916, and spent most of his early years in Jackson, Miss. He became interested in both mathematics and music at an early age, and at the Universities of North Carolina and Pennsylvania, and finally at Princeton University, he divided his time between the two.

He was a pioneer among composers in the use of the 12-tone system, and his major theoretical contribution was the concept of total serialization, in which serialization was applied to nonpitch elements such as rhythm, register, dynamics and timbre.

Mr. Babbitt is also a leading electronic-music composer and is one of the directors of the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center. In 1964, his "Philomel," commissioned by the Ford Foundation for the soprano Bethany Beardslee and electronic sounds, won a New York Music Critics Circle citation.

Mr. Babbitt has been teaching at Princeton since 1948. He is married to the former Sylvia Miller and has one daughter. He lives in Manhattan.

Milton Babbitt

Gunther Schuller

GLENS FALLS TIMES
Thursday, August 4, 1966

European College Students To Spend Weekend in City While on Tour of Northeast

Five students from three European countries will spend this weekend in Glens Falls as part of their summer tour of the northeastern part of the United States, in conjunction with the Student Travel Plan sponsored by the United States National Student Association.

Arriving Friday via bus will be two students from Britain, two from France and one from West Germany. All will be guests at private homes in the city and will have an opportunity to observe family life as well as cultural highlights of the area.

The Student Travel Plan is a summer program open to European university students between the ages of 17 and 28. The Northeastern itinerary, which includes a stop at Glens Falls, is designed to allow the students to visit cultural centers, stressing the creative arts, and to observe broader aspects of American society.

The students, who arrived in the United States July 25, have enjoyed sightseeing and witnessed political organization in New York City, visited the Yale University campus in New Haven, Conn., and visited Boston and Tanglewood Music Center in Lenox, Mass. The group will leave Sunday for sightseeing at Niagara Falls, a visit to the Chautauqua Institute of Music and a tour of industrial Pittsburgh and a peek at federal government in Washington, D.C., before returning to New York City for their departure, Aug. 18.

No specific itinerary was planned for the students while staying in Glens Falls, but to date they have been invited to be guests of the Lake George Opera Festival performance Friday of "The Barber of Seville," and have also been invited to tour the Hyde Art Collection on Sunday.

Students making the trip include Miss Karin Renate Lischner, 28, of Germany, who will stay with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Ferrill, 44 Sheridan St.; Miss Saskia Hallam, 20, Great Britain, who will stay with Mr. and Mrs. Alton Bartholomew, 287 Ridge St.; Miss Catherine Caubet, 22, of France, who will stay with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Luot, 48 William St.; Jean Francois Caubet, 18, of France, who will reside with Dr. and Mrs. Robert Fleiman, Gurney Lane; and Miss Joanna Hodgkin, 17, of Great Britain, who will stay with Dr. and Mrs. John B. DeLong, 3 Lawton Ave.

Mrs. DeLong is acting as hostess for the visiting students and will handle hospitality arrangements. Initial arrangement for the local visit were made by Harold M. Long, a teacher at Glens Falls High School.

ONEIDA, N. Y.
DISPATCH
D. 8,500
AUG 7 1966

Attends Tanglewood

TALENTED TRIO -- Talented high school musicians participated in a special music program this summer offered for the first time by Boston University in cooperation with the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Western Massachusetts. Courses were taught by Boston University faculty members, including Dr. Artin Arslanian (in photo); and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Studying with Dr. Arslanian near the Music Shed are Jean Harris of Scarsdale, and Richard Decker of Oneida.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737
AUG 14 1966

BARBARA POULARIKAS of Kingston is studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass., in the instrumental performing department. She has received a Fromm Fellowship to play in the violin section of the Berkshire Music Center Student Orchestra.

SMITHTOWN MESSENGER
Thursday, August 4, 1966

Patricia Gulbic of Smithtown, has begun study at the Berkshire Music Center in the Vocal Performing Department. She is a Vocal Fellow at the BMC, and sings in the Tanglewood Choir and the Festival Chorus with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 13 1966

STUDIES AT BERKSHIRE

Lewis Spratlan, Jr., of this city has begun study at the Berkshire Music Center in the choral conducting department under a fellowship grant from the Gertrude Robinson Smith Scholarship.

BLOOMINGTON, IND.
HERALD-TELEPHONE
D. 16,500
AUG 4 1966

Sophomore Gets Fellowship

Priscilla Hodges, sophomore in the Indiana University School of Music, has received a $500 fellowship grant from the American Broadcasting Company for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Two grants were provided by ABC as part of its over-all program of encouraging and developing young talents in the arts and communication. The other recipient is Thomas Jones, a music major at Amherst College.

Miss Hodges is from East Weymouth, Mass., and studied violin for 10 years in Boston with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before coming to Indiana University last fall.

She has been soloist with several orchestras in the Boston area, including the Boston Symphony, and is a member of the I.U. Philharmonic Orchestra. This summer she will perform with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and chamber ensembles.

Citizen
GLASTONBURY, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,522
AUG 18 1966

Wins Scholarship To Tanglewood

Gary Shulze, a student at Glastonbury High School, is among a limited number of young musicians selected to participate in a special music program conducted at the Berkshire Music Center by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in cooperation with Boston University. The program, which began on June 26 and extends to August 21, provides advanced training in applied music, music theory, and ensemble playing.

Gary has been active in the music programs of Glastonbury schools, playing trumpet in dance band and trumpet and tuba (or sousaphone) in band. He has also served as piano accompanist for instrumental soloists. For the past two years he has held first-chair position in the All-Connecticut orchestra.

Last summer Gary was tubaist with the Summer Youth Orchestra, a symphony orchestra made up of young musicians from United States and Canada, which played twenty three concerts in cities in eastern United States.

Gary is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shulze of 152 Olde Stage Road.

The Indianapolis Star
D. 223,408 SUN. 352,391
AUG 5 1966

I.U. Student Gets Summer Music Grant

STAR STATE REPORT

Bloomington, Ind.

PRISCILLA HODGES, sophomore in the Indiana University School of music, has received a $500 fellowship grant from the American Broadcasting Company for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Two grants were provided by ABC as part of its over-all program of encouraging and developing young talents in the arts and communication. The other recipient is Thomas Jones, a music major at Amherst College.

Miss Hodges is from East Weymouth, Mass., and studied violin for 10 years in Boston with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before coming to Indiana University last fall.

She has been soloist with several orchestras in the Boston area, including the Boston Symphony, and is a member of the I.U. Philharmonic Orchestra. This summer she will perform with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and chamber ensembles.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
AUG 15 1966

Two Leading U.S. Composers Given New Academic Positions

Schuller to Be President of Conservatory in Boston — Princeton Elevates Babbitt

Gunther Schuller and Milton Babbitt, two leading composers who have written extensively about music, have received new appointments.

Mr. Schuller, an associate professor of music at Yale University, will become president of the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. He will assume his duties at the start of the 1967-68 academic year and succeed Chester W. Williams, who resigned his administrative post to devote full time to teaching at the conservatory.

Mr. Babbitt has been named William Shubael Conant Professor of Music at Princeton University, succeeding Roger Sessions, who retired last year.

Mr. Schuller will be the ninth president in the 100-year history of the conservatory. He was born in New York in 1925, the son of a violinist with the New York Philharmonic. At the age of 12 he joined the St. Thomas Choir School, where he learned to play the French horn among other instruments.

He studied at the Manhattan School of Music and, in 1943, at the age of 17, became first-horn player of the Cincinnati Symphony. At 19 he joined the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, where he remained for 15 years.

Recipient of Awards

A self-taught composer, Mr. Schuller left the Met orchestra to devote himself to creative work. In 1960 he received awards from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and Brandeis University.

In 1962 to 1964, he held a Guggenheim Fellowship and visited Yugoslavia, Poland and West Germany under State Department auspices. His score for the Polish film, "Yesterday in Fact," won the Darius Milhaud Award for the best film score of 1964. His opera, "The Visitation," will be given its premiere by the Hamburg Opera on Oct. 12.

This summer, Mr. Schuller became head of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., and on Saturday, received the 1966 Mark M. Horblit Award of $1,500 from the center. The award is given "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States."

Mr. Schuller has also been here and in Euroe as a conductor, and heads the "Twentieth Century Innovations" series at Carnegie Recital Hall.

He has been active in the "third stream" movement, which tries to bring jazz and contemporary music together. His nonjazz works are serially oriented, and he has been closely associated with Mr. Babbitt, who is also a serial, or 12-tone, composer.

Mr. Schuller is married to the former Marjorie Black of Fargo, N. D., and has two sons.

Mr. Babbitt was born in Philadelphia in 1916, and spent most of his early years in Jackson, Miss. He became interested in both mathematics and music at an early age, and at the Universities of North Carolina and Pennsylvania, and finally at New York University, he divided his time between the two subjects.

He was a pioneer among composers in the use of the 12-tone system, and his major theoretical contribution was the concept of total serialization, in which serialization was applied to nonpitch elements such as rhythm, register, dynamics and timbre.

Mr. Babbitt is also a leading electronic-music composer and is one of the directors of the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center. In 1964, his "Philomel," commissioned by the Ford Foundation for the soprano Bethany Beardslee and electronic sounds, won a New York Music Critics Circle citation.

Mr. Babbitt has been teaching at Princeton since 1948. He is married to the former Sylvia Miller and has one daughter. He lives in Manhattan.

Milton Babbitt

Gunther Schuller

GLENS FALLS TIMES
Thursday, August 4, 1966

European College Students To Spend Weekend in City While on Tour of Northeast

Five students from three European countries will spend this weekend in Glens Falls as part of their summer tour of the northeastern part of the United States, in conjunction with the Student Travel Plan sponsored by the United States National Student Association.

Arriving Friday via bus will be two students from Britain, two from France and one from West Germany. All will be guests at private homes in the city and will have an opportunity to observe family life as well as cultural highlights of the area.

The Student Travel Plan is a summer program open to European university students between the ages of 17 and 28. The Northeastern itinerary, which includes a stop at Glens Falls, is designed to allow the students to visit cultural centers, stressing the creative arts, and to observe broader aspects of American society.

The students, who arrived in the United States July 25, have enjoyed sightseeing and witnessed political organization in New York City, visited the Yale University campus in New Haven, Conn., and visited Boston and Tanglewood Music Center in Lenox, Mass. The group will leave Sunday for sightseeing at Niagara Falls, a visit to the Chautauqua Institute of Music and Art, a tour of industrial Pittsburgh and a peek at federal government in Washington, D.C. before returning to New York City for their departure, Aug. 18.

No specific itinerary was planned for the students while staying in Glens Falls, but to date they have been invited to be guests of the Lake George Opera Festival performance Friday of "The Barber of Seville," and have also been invited to tour the Hyde Art Collection on Sunday.

Students making the trip include Miss Karin Renate Lischner, 28, of Germany, who will stay with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Ferrill, 44 Sheridan St.; Miss Saskia Hallam, 20, Great Britain, who will stay with Mr. and Mrs. Alton Bartholomew, 287 Ridge St.; Miss Catherine Caubet, 22, of France, who will stay with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ruot, 48 William St.; Jean Francois Caubet, 18, of France, who will reside with Dr. and Mrs. Robert Fishman, Gurney Lane; and Miss Joanna Hodgkin, 17, of Great Britain, who will stay with Dr. and Mrs. John B. DeLong, 3 Lawton Ave.

Mrs. DeLong is acting as hostess for the visiting students and will handle hospitality arrangements. Initial arrangement for the local visit were made by Harold M. Long, a teacher at Glens Falls High School.

ONEIDA, N. Y.
DISPATCH
D. 8,500
AUG 7 1966

Attends Tanglewood

TALENTED TRIO -- Talented high school musicians participated in a special music program this summer offered for the first time by Boston University in cooperation with the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Western Massachusetts. Courses were taught by Boston University faculty members, including Dr. Artin Arslanian (in photo); and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Studying with Dr. Arslanian near the Music Shed are Joan Harris of Scarsdale, and Richard Decker of Oneida.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737
AUG 14 1966

BARBARA POULARIKAS of Kingston is studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass., in the instrumental performing department. She has received a Fromm Fellowship to play in the violin section of the Berkshire Music Center Student Orchestra.

SMITHTOWN MESSENGER
Thursday, August 4, 1966

Patricia Guthrie of Smithtown, has begun study at the Berkshire Music Center in the Vocal Performing Department. She is a Vocal Fellow at the BMC, and sings in the Tanglewood Choir and the Festival Chorus with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 13 1966

STUDIES AT BERKSHIRE

Lewis Spratlan, Jr., of this city has begun study at the Berkshire Music Center in the choral conducting department under a fellowship grant from the Gertrude Robinson Smith Scholarship.

BLOOMINGTON, IND.
HERALD-TELEPHONE
D. 16,500
AUG 4 1966

Sophomore Gets Fellowship

Priscilla Hodges, sophomore in the Indiana University School of Music, has received a $500 fellowship grant from the American Broadcasting Company for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Two grants were provided by ABC as part of its over-all program of encouraging and developing young talents in the arts and communication. The other recipient is Thomas Jones, a music major at Amherst College.

Miss Hodges is from East Weymouth, Mass., and studied violin for 10 years in Boston with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before coming to Indiana University last fall.

She has been soloist with several orchestras in the Boston area, including the Boston Symphony, and is a member of the I.U. Philharmonic Orchestra. This summer she will perform with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and chamber ensembles.

Citizen
GLASTONBURY, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,522
AUG 18 1966

Wins Scholarship To Tanglewood

Gary Shulze, a student at Glastonbury High School, is among a limited number of young musicians selected to participate in a special music program conducted at the Berkshire Music Center by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in cooperation with Boston University. The program, which began on June 26 and extends to August 21, provides advanced training in applied music, music theory, and ensemble playing.

Gary has been active in the music programs of Glastonbury schools, playing trumpet in dance band and trumpet and tuba (or sousaphone) in band. He has also served as piano accompanist for instrumental soloists. For the past two years he has held first-chair position in the All-Connecticut orchestra.

Last summer Gary was tubaist with the Summer Youth Orchestra, a symphony orchestra made up of young musicians from United States and Canada, which played twenty three concerts in cities in eastern United States.

Gary is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shulze of 152 Olde Stage Road.

The Indianapolis Star
D. 223,408 SUN. 352,391
AUG 5 1966

I.U. Student Gets Summer Music Grant

STAR STATE REPORT

Bloomington, Ind.

PRISCILLA HODGES, sophomore in the Indiana University School of music, has received a $500 fellowship grant from the American Broadcasting Company for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Two grants were provided by ABC as part of its over-all program of encouraging and developing young talents in the arts and communication. The other recipient is Thomas Jones, a music major at Amherst College.

Miss Hodges is from East Weymouth, Mass., and studied violin for 10 years in Boston with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before coming to Indiana University last fall.

She has been soloist with several orchestras in the Boston area, including the Boston Symphony, and is a member of the I.U. Philharmonic Orchestra. This summer she will perform with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and chamber ensembles.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

AUG 15 1966

To Boston, 'Which I Love'

Gunther Schuller, Conductor, Chosen Conservatory Head

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Gunther Schuller, American composer, conductor, horn virtuoso, author, and lecturer, will be the new president of the New England Conservatory of Music, effective in the fall of 1967. Pres. Chester W. Williams has resigned in order to be able to return to teaching full time.

In announcing Schuller's appointment, Sherwin C. Badger, chairman of the Conservatory's board of trustees, said, "The New England Conservatory is honored that a man of Mr. Schuller's virtuosity has accepted the leadership of our institution. We feel confident that his remarkable versatility will lead the conservatory to even greater contributions to the music world."

At the same time it was announced that Schuller had received the 1966 Mark M. Horbilt award of $1500. The award committee consists of the music director and the president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the chairman of the Harvard Music department. The award itself is "to foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States, is conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and is to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras."

Gunther Schuller was born in New York City in 1925, the son of a violinist in the New York Philharmonic. An associate professor of music at Yale. He is also head of contemporary music activities and chairman of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

He is now completing an opera entitled "The Visitation," commissioned by the Hamburg (Germany) State Opera and due for world premiere there on Oct. 12. He has received commissions from the New York Philharmonic, the Ford Foundation, and the New York City Ballet, among others. In 1964 he won the Darius Milhaud Award for the score for the Polish film, "Yesterday in Fact."

As a conductor, Schuller organized the "Twentieth Century Innovations" series in New York, and he has filled guest engagements with orchestras including the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, the Chicago Symphony, the Cleveland, the BBC Symphony, the Philharmonia (London), the Berlin Free Radio Symphony, and the French Radio Symphony. He will lead the Boston Symphony in Boston for the first time in November in a program to include the first performance there of Charles Ive's Symphony No. 4.

Schuller's career as a French horn player began when he became principal horn of the Cincinnati symphony at age 17. Two years later he joined the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, where, for nine of the 15 years he was tnere, he was solist. In 1962 the Oxford University Press published his book on horn technique, and he is working on a study of jazz for the same publisher. He has written numerous articles, many on jazz, and it was he who coined the term "Third Stream" for music that brings together contemporary "classical" trends with avant-garde jazz.

"PERFORMING MUSICIANS"

In a recent conservation, Gunther Schuller discussed some of his ideas about conservatories. "I want to make the New England Conservatory a real, old-fashioned conservatory," he said. "A Conservatory is designed to fill very special needs, primarily those of the performing musician, and everything should be designed so that it can fulfill that function well."

Schuller believes that in many Conservatories there has been undue emphasis on non-musical, academic subjects, mainly because of pressures from the accrediting organizations that determine what degrees school can give. "I don't mean that I'm against musicians being educated people, but in many schools the non-musical demands have made it impossible for the students to put in all the necessary practice."

"Many of the professional musicians I've known," Schuller continued, "have been people with rich minds, and they've often acquired that education on their own. There are also, though, people who are very gifted performers, but who haven't the intellectual capacity to do much academic work." Because of such things, among others, Schuller believes it would be good to establish a more flexible system that would suit the course of study to the abilities and limitations of the individual student.

"MORE PERSONAL"

"I should also like to see a more personal note get into conservatory teaching again, something like a master-apprentice feeling. That exists now between a student and his particular instrumental teacher, but it would be good to have that extended."

The musical education itself must be made richer, Schuller feels, and analysis and musicology must do their share toward broadening the students' musical experience. "When I prepare a piece for performance here at Tanglewood," Schuller said, "I don't let anyone play a note without his knowing why he's playing it, and I want that to become part of the thinking of every performing musician."

That, for Schuller, is not merely a musical policy, but one with important human implications as well. Instrumentalists and especially orchestral players, Schuller pointed out, notoriously become bored and cynical; and the reason is that while they may play their instruments marvelously they do not know why they are playing or really what.

"Instrumental mastery will not be neglected, but the student must never forget that the music is the reason he is playing the instrument. We have to stave off as long as possible the moment in a player's life when he gets cynical and bored. In fact, it doesn't ever have to come. I know players who could never reach that stage. For that matter, I was a professional horn player in orchestras for nearly 20 years, and I know that at the end there wasn't even the slightest loss of freshness. But it takes a tremendous richness of musical reserve."

CATHOLIC TASTES

Though himself considered a fairly advanced composer, Schuller's musical tastes are catholic and he has given assurance that he has "no intention of turning the Conservatory into a hotbed of avant-gardism." He considers that his own contemporary orientation combined with long experience as a performer of traditional repertory put him in an advantageous position to foste both sorts of activity and to help the old and the new to nourish and to shed light upon each other.

Schuller has no intention to give up composing and conducting, and part of his value, indeed, to the Conservatory resides in these skills and in the prestige they have brought him and which will henceforth be extended to the institution. It will, however, be necessary to cut down these activities. This Schuller faces with no regrets. "I am wholly committed to the New England Conservatory," he says, "intellectually, professionally, and in every other way. I am tremendously excited about the possibilities in heading such a school, and I am also thrilled to be moving to Boston, which I love, and which offers wonderful chances for a really rich musical and cultural life."

The ARTS

GUNTHER SCHULLER
. . . new president

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 81,654

AUG 18 1966

EASTON CELLIST WINS PIATIGORSKY AWARD

EASTON—Jerome Patterson of Sport Hill road was awarded the Piatigorsky prize for cellists by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, at a recent ceremony in Tanglewood, Mass.

A former students of Aldo Parisot at Yale, Mr. Patterson was on a fellowship from the Boston Symphony orchestra to spend his summer at Tanglewood. He was first cellist with the Berkshire Music Center orchestra, the New Haven Symphony and the New Haven Chamber orchestra. He has been a member of the Puerto Rico Casals Festival orchestra, the Pittsburgh Symphony orchestra, and several Chamber music groups.

He will join the Baltimore Symphony orchestra for the 1966-67 season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 15 1966

Gunther Schuller To Head New England Conservatory

Gunther Schuller, who since 1963, has been chairman of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, has accepted the position of president of the New England Conservatory of Music, according to Sherwin C. Badger, chairman of the conservatory's board of trustees.

Schuller, who will become the ninth president in the 100-year history of the conservatory, will assume his duties at the beginning of the 1967-68 academic year. He will succeed Chester W. Williams, who has resigned his administrative responsibilities.

Versatile Musician

Born in New York City in 1925, the son of a violinist with the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, Schuller has established himself as a composer, conductor, performer, and writer. He is currently associate professor of music at Yale University.

As a composer, Schuller has been working under the commission of the Hamburg (Germany) State Opera on a jazz-oriented opera entitled, "The Visitation," which is scheduled for world premiere in Hamburg, Oct. 12, 1966. His most recent compositions besides the opera are "Gala Music," commissioned by and written for the 75th anniversary of the Chicago Symphony, and "Sacred Cantata," commissioned by and written for the American Guild of Organists.

Guest Conductor

As a conductor, Schuller organized a series of concerts in New York City's Carnegie Hall entitled "Twentieth Centruy Innovations." In recent years he has been guest conductor with symphony orchestras both in this country and abroad.

A distinguished French horn player, Schuller at the age of 17 became the first horn player of the Cincinnati Symphony. At 19, he joined the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, where he remained for 15 years, nine of them playing solo horn.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
AUG 16 1966

Music Review

Contemporary Fete Continues

By LAWRENCE RAAB

THE SECOND in the series of five concerts in the Festival of Contemporary Music at Tanglewood proved to be immensely successful, and well appreciated by the large audience present. Devoted primarily to choral and vocal music, the concert opened with three short pieces beautifully performed by the Tanglewood Choir under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt. Particularly striking was Salvatore Martirano's brooding "Kyrie," extracted from his "Mass A Cappella."

Donald Martino's complicated "Parisonatina Al'Dodecafonia" for solo cello was given a brilliant performance by Aldo Parisot, for whom it was conceived. This piece, as well as Mel Powell's "Filigree Setting for String Quartet," demanded not only that the musicians handle the strings of their instruments with terrific speed and dexterity, but also that they drum on various parts of them as well. This technique, especially in the Martino composition, often produced a strange, caressing quality, as if voices were being drawn up from within the wood of the instruments to offset and play against the strings.

* * *

BUT IT WAS Roger Reynolds' long piece, "Blind Men," commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation, that was the outstanding event of the evening. Performed for the first time, it is scored for three trumpets, three trombones, tuba, percussion, piano, and voices. "Blind Men" is organized around masses of sound contrasted with well-timed periods of silence and softer moments of dialogue, often between piano and percussion.

The handling of the text, which is drawn roughly from Melville, also sustains the "massing" effects. And though individual voices (as moans or sighs) often stand out from the group, the text is arranged to make phonetic rather than literary sense, giving the piece an odd, almost other-worldy quality. In part the text reads: "Multitudes of blind men/Flies on the eyes at noon . . ./Too much light/and no defense against it." The dark, groping, somewhat frightening quality these lines bear is projected in purely musical terms throughout the composition. Against a dense texture of "mad" voices and the wailings of trumpets and trombones, all the range of the percussion instruments clang and shiver in absolute sense, and the piano (used as the immensely versatile percussion piece it can be) has its innards pulled, plucked, and twisted toward a great range of surprising and sometimes startling effects.

* * *

NOT ENOUGH praise can be granted the handling of the voices in Alan Blank's "Two Parables by Franz Kafka," Peter Westergaard's "Spring and Fall: To a Young Child," and the beautiful "hymns" by Sessions, Copland, and Ives which concluded the program.

Edgar Varese, a precursor of much of "modern" music, once said, "There is no such thing as an artist in the avant-garde . . . The artist is always part of his time, because he is engaged in creating this time. It is the audience which lags behind, forming a derriere-garde." If today's audiences cannot entirely comprehend or enjoy such music as was heard last evening, they must certainly appreciate the tremendous strength and vitality this music holds. Yesterday's brilliant and beautiful concert may have brought us a few steps closer to the real music of our times.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 15 1966

Music Review

Contemporary Concert at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FESTIVAL OF Contemporary American Music sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation last night gave the first of the five consecutive programs planned for this week in the Theatre at Tanglewood.

The Fromm Foundation has given American composers opportunities to get their work performed at Tanglewood now for ten years. The implementation of its purposes has changed in some degree over the years but mainly to extend the compass and scope of the foundation to include representation of the works of the most recent two generations.

* * *

LAST NIGHT, the program ranged from works for solo flute and solo piano to ensembles, from trios to octettes. Several of the compositions conformed to a pattern much in evidence at previous Fromm festivals which are fragmentary and loosely joined, at least on superficial hearing. A "Fantasy" for flute by Harley Gaber required a fair share of flutter tongue playing but Virginia Leguia displayed a broad spectrum of the instrument's possibilities in tone and expression.

"Cocktail Music" by Salvatore Martirano was played by William Bolcom. It was a cross between contrasting dialogue a la "Goldenburg and Schwuhle" and of "Bird as Prophet." Stefan Wolpe was represented by a work for six instruments in two parts which was conducted by Gunther Schuller. Earl Kim had his "Dead Calm" conducted by Pierre Salzmann. This paints a mood unmistakably stated by its title. This was the only music of the evening which required a voice and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson sang with remarkably true pitch, not a small accomplishment, considering the nature of the writing. The conductor expended considerably more effort to indicate a tap of the drum than the drummer exerted to execute it.

* * *

A QUESTIONABLE point in a trio "Rhapsody" by Michael Colgrass was his choice of instruments. The florid passages for piano and clarinet far outweighed and overshadowed the assignments for the violin. The "Quaderno Bossiniano" of Douglas Leedy was pure intentional hokum and good fun. He gives eight instruments — strings, piano and wind — four little sketches which have the humor of Charles Ives, involved labyrinths through which lovely little snatches of Rossini emerge in demure naivete.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
AUG 17 1966

Music Review

Music for the 'In' Crowd

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FINAL program in the seven-week Tuesday evening chamber music series at Tanglewood was used last night as the [illegible] concert in the five-event Festival of Contemporary American Music being sponsored [illegible] by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation.

The composers quartet consisting of Matthew Raimondi and Anahid Ajemian, violins; Bernard Zaslav, viola and Seymour Barab, cello, did an heroic job in mastering four formidable works, two of which, the framing ones, were of a sort of linear construction, the two inner ones were written in short, crisp motives and fragmentary idioms.

* * *

ROGER SESSIONS, who has retired from a long and venerable tenure in the director's chair of the Princeton music department, was represented by his second string quartet, a work written some 15 years ago. Following it came the second quartet of the man who is to follow him in his post at Princeton, Milton Babbitt. His quartet dates from four years later, but is far different and removed from the nature of that of his predecessor. After intermission came Henry Weinberg's second quartet (1964). The program ended with Ruth Crawford-Seeger's (1931) quartet.

It was a program for initiated listeners and not for "horse-and-buggy" ears. Miss Crawford, a third of a century ago, was obviously thinking in the vocabulary which is practically the musical Esperanto of this moment, but there is a much more ready communication in what she has to say than is generally apparent in today's [illegible] system. There was wit and fantasy in the four movements of her quartet. The others are undoubtedly mathematically valid and demonstrably coherent.

SESSION'S quartet starts with a fugue allotted to the viola in a wisely-placed, sonorous register which develops transparently. There are five movements played without pause and there is a wide palette within its 25-minute duration.

Babbitt is the acknowledged authority among contemporary 12-tone writers. Weinberg, his former pupil, writes in much the same manner—clear and abrupt statements, extreme contrasts. Babbitt [illegible] dialogues throughout his [illegible], giving two protagonists at a time opportunities to chatter, argue while their colleagues sit quiet but interested. [illegible] metrical structure seems [illegible] as important a factor [illegible] musical content. It would seem, however, that eventually a notation system must be devised [illegible] possibly a staff with at least six lines, on which each note would be an integer and there would be no lowered or raised half-steps.

* * *

A FAVORABLY prejudiced audience accorded the performers and the three male composers vigorous appreciation. (Miss Crawford, born in 1901, lived to be 52). While there are many points of similarity in the two styles of music heard last night, there still must be a vast expanse of unexplored or surveyed territory where the materials are sufficiently ductile to allow and invite broad development.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
AUG 18 1966

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
AUG 19 1966

American Virtuosity at Its Best

Quartet Shines at Lenox Finale

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

LENOX — With Tuesday's concert by the Composers Quartet, the Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood attained true distinction.

Technically this concert was not part of the festival, but the final event of the Tuesday chamber series here is always designed to fit into the festival's general scheme.

The Composers Quartet (Matthew Raimondi, Anahid Ajemian, Bernard Zaslav, Seymour Barab) played the String Quartets No. 2 by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, and Henry Weinberg, and the only quartet (alas) by Ruth Crawford Seeger.

America has produced a few international virtuosi in a class with any. Our most special, and perhaps unique, contribution in the performance world has, however, been the training of players, many of them young and many of them specialized in contemporary music, whose virtuosic resourcefulness goes far beyond what is generally understood by virtuosity, and who are to an extraordinary degree possessed of musical intelligence and dedication.

This is a characteristically American phenomenon and the Fromm program at Tanglewood during the last decade has been very much responsible for bringing it about. The four players of the Composers Quartet are not Tanglewood-Fromm products, but they stunningly represent the new American virtuosity and intelligence.

The Sessions Second Quartet is a large and serious work. It seems to be directly descended from Beethoven's Opus 131, and that relationship and the rhetorical stance the work assumes make me a little uncomfortable. Yet the performance by the Composers Quartet for the first time let me hear the piece in all its compositional richness and variety. It was superbly paced and articulated and the complex textures were wonderfully clarified to make it altogether one of the greatest string quartet performances in my experience.

Babbitt's Quartet No. 2 is all ginger and bite, with an excitingly tight relation of sonority and structure. Moreover, its sensuous appeal is a delight all on its own. Babbitt's ear for sonority is a fine one, and such a performance of so elegantly imagined a piece of writing made one regret what sometimes seems like his flight into electronic sounds, for all that one understands the necessity for the flight because there are not enough performers like the Composers Quartet.

The performance was remarkable as a whole, and nowhere more so in detail than in the octave passages near the end in which the octave doublings blossomed as tone colors in a way unprecedented in my experience of listening to string quartets.

For most persons, the quartet by Ruth Crawford Seeger came as a special revelation. Ruth Crawford was born in 1901 and died in 1953. She studied with and married Charles Seeger (and became the mother of Pete), a musicologist and a remarkable musician who was the first to teach the new music in this country more than 50 years ago.

When Mrs. Seeger wrote her quartet in 1931, neo-classicism and Nadia Boulanger staccatos dominated the thinking of American composers—the Open-Plains-of-Kansas school had not really materialized yet. Her quartet was part of the expressionist world, whose manifestations in America we are only beginning to get an inkling of.

That Mrs. Seeger was doing something that in taste and technique was ahead of its time by a quarter century is remarkable, but the more important thing about her quartet is what an assured work it is and how individual and original regardless of its date and place of composition.

Each of its ideas is of striking and arresting character and their development is a natural extension of their nature. Not least, Mrs. Seeger was a punctual composer with a most precise sense of when a development or series of events has run its course. Her quartet is a remarkable and beautiful creation, one that should become a part of standard repertory. It, too, was superbly played.

Henry Weinberg is a sensitive and serious musician and he writes the most complicated music I know. The dialectic of his Quartet No. 2, written from 1960 to 1964, rests on intricacies and subtleties, especially rhythmic, that I am not yet equipped to hear. I look forward to being able eventually to understand this music and to write about it, at present I cannot. I can, however, report the composer's own estimate of the performance as "wonderful."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
AUG 16 1966

Music Review

Contemporary Fete Continues

By LAWRENCE RAAB

THE SECOND in the series of five concerts in the Festival of Contemporary Music at Tanglewood proved to be immensely successful, and well appreciated by the large audience present. Devoted primarily to choral and vocal music, the concert opened with three short pieces beautifully performed by the Tanglewood Choir under the direction of Iva Dee Hiatt. Particularly striking was Salvatore Martirano's brooding "Kyrie," extracted from his "Mass A Cappella."

Donald Martino's complicated "Parisonatina Al'Dodecaitonia" for solo cello was given a brilliant performance by Aldo Parisot, for whom it was conceived. This piece, as well as Mel Powell's "Filigree Setting for String Quartet," demanded not only that the musicians handle the strings of their instruments with terrific speed and dexterity, but also that they drum on various parts of them as well. This technique, especially in the Martino composition, often produced a strange, caressing quality, as if voices were being drawn up from within the wood of the instruments to offset and play against the strings.

* * *

BUT IT WAS Roger Reynolds' long piece, "Blind Men," commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation, that was the outstanding event of the evening. Performed for the first time, it is scored for three trumpets, three trombones, tuba, percussion, piano, and voices. "Blind Men" is organized around masses of sound contrasted with well-timed periods of silence and softer moments of dialogue, often between piano and percussion.

The handling of the text, which is drawn roughly from Melville, also sustains the "massing" effects. And though individual voices (as moans or sighs) often stand out from the group, the text is arranged to make phonetic rather than literary sense, giving the piece an odd, almost other-worldy quality. In part the text reads: "Multitudes of blind men/Flies on the eyes at noon . . ./Too much light/and no defense against it." The dark, groping, somewhat frightening quality these lines bear is projected in purely musical terms throughout the composition. Against a dense texture of "mad" voices and the wailings of trumpets and trombones, all the range of the percussion instruments clang and shiver in absolute sense, and the piano (used as the immensely versatile percussion piece it can be) has its innards pulled, plucked, and twisted toward a great range of surprising and sometimes startling effects.

* * *

NOT ENOUGH praise can be granted the handling of the voices in Alan Blank's "Two Parables by Franz Kafka," Peter Westergaard's "Spring and Fall: To a Young Child," and the beautiful "hymns" by Sessions, Copland, and Ives which concluded the program.

Edgar Varese, a precursor of much of "modern" music, once said, "There is no such thing as an artist in the avant-garde . . . The artist is always part of his time, because he is engaged in creating this time. It is the audience which lags behind, forming a derriere-garde." If today's audiences cannot entirely comprehend or enjoy such music as was heard last evening, they must certainly appreciate the tremendous strength and vitality this music holds. Yesterday's brilliant and beautiful concert may have brought us a few steps closer to the real music of our times.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 15 1966

Music Review

Contemporary Concert at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FESTIVAL OF Contemporary American Music sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation last night gave the first of the five consecutive programs planned for this week in the Theatre at Tanglewood.

The Fromm Foundation has given American composers opportunities to get their work performed at Tanglewood now for ten years. The implementation of its purposes has changed in some degree over the years but mainly to extend the compass and scope of the foundation to include representation of the works of the most recent two generations.

* * *

LAST NIGHT, the program ranged from works for solo flute and solo piano to ensembles, from trios to octettes. Several of the compositions conformed to a pattern much in evidence at previous Fromm festivals which are fragmentary and loosely joined, at least on superficial hearing. A "Fantasy" for flute by Harley Gaber required a fair share of flutter tongue playing but Virginia Leguia displayed a broad spectrum of the instrument's possibilities in tone and expression.

"Cocktail Music" by Salvatore Martirano was played by William Bolcom. It was a cross between contrasting dialogue a la "Goldenburg and Schwuhle" and of "Bird as Prophet." Stefan Wolpe was represented by a work for six instruments in two parts which was conducted by Gunther Schuller. Earl Kim had his "Dead Calm" conducted by Pierre Salzmann. This paints a mood unmistakably stated by its title. This was the only music of the evening which required a voice and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson sang with remarkably true pitch, not a small accomplishment, considering the nature of the writing. The conductor expended considerably more effort to indicate a tap of the drum than the drummer exerted to execute it.

* * *

A QUESTIONABLE point in a trio "Rhapsody" by Michael Colgrass was his choice of instruments. The florid passages for piano and clarinet far outweighed and overshadowed the assignments for the violin. The "Quaderno Rossiniano" of Douglas Leedy was pure intentional hokum and good fun. He gives eight instruments strings, piano and wind — four little sketches which have the humor of Charles Ives, involved labyrinths through which lovely little snatches of Rossini emerge in demure naivete.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
AUG 17 1966

Music Review

Music for the 'In' Crowd

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FINAL program in the seven-week Tuesday evening chamber music series at Tanglewood was used last night as the pivot concert in the five-event Festival of Contemporary American Music being sponsored here by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation.

The composers quartet consisting of Matthew Raimondi and Anahid Apemian, violins; Bernard Zaslaw, viola and Seymour Barab, cello, did an heroic job in masticating four formidable works, two of which, the framing ones, were of a sort of linear construction; the two inner ones were written in short, crisp motives and fragmentary idioms.

* * *

ROGER SESSIONS, who has retired from a long and venerable tenure in the director's chair of the Princeton music department, was represented by his second string quartet, a work written some 15 years ago. Following it came the second quartet of the man who is to follow him in his post at Princeton, Milton Babbitt. His quartet dates from four years later, but is far different and removed from the nature of that of his predecessor. After intermission came Henry Weinberg's second quartet (1964). The program ended with Ruth Crawford-Seeger's (1931) quartet.

It was a program for initiated listeners and not for "horse-and-buggy" ears. Miss Crawford, a third of a century ago, was obviously thinking in the vocabulary which is practically the musical Esperanto of this moment, but there is a much more ready communication in what she has to say than is generally apparent in today's 12-tone system. There was wit and fantasy in the four movements of her quartet. The others are undoubtedly mathematically valid and demonstrably coherent.

SESSION'S quartet starts with a fugue allotted to the viola in a wisely-placed, sonorous register which develops transparently. There are five movements played without pause and there is a wide palette within its 25-minute duration.

Babbitt is the acknowledged authority among contemporary 12-tone writers. Weinberg, his former pupil, writes in much the same manner—clear and abrupt statements, extreme contrasts. Babbitt used dialogues throughout his quartet, giving two protagonists at a time opportunites to chat or argue while their colleagues sit quiet but interested. Symmetrical structure seems [illegible] as important a factor as musical content. It would seem, however, that eventually a new notation system must be devised, possibly a staff with at least six lines, on which each note would be an integer and there would be no lowered or raised half-steps.

* * *

A FAVORABLY prejudiced audience accorded the performers and the three male composers vigorous appreciation. (Miss Crawford, born in 1901, lived to be 52). While there are many points of similarity in the two styles of music heard last night, there still must be a vast expanse of unexplored or thinly peopled territory where the materials are sufficiently fictile to allow and invite broad development.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
AUG 18 1966

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
AUG 19 1966

American Virtuosity at Its Best

Quartet Shines at Lenox Finale

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

LENOX — With Tuesday's concert by the Composers Quartet, the Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood attained true distinction.

Technically this concert was not part of the festival, but the final event of the Tuesday chamber series here is always designed to fit into the festival's general scheme.

The Composers Quartet (Matthew Raimondi, Anahid Ajemian, Bernard Zaslav, Seymour Barab) played the String Quartets No. 2 by Roger Sessions, Milton Babbitt, and Henry Weinberg, and the only quartet (alas) by Ruth Crawford Seeger.

America has produced a few international virtuosi in a class with any. Our most special, and perhaps unique, contribution in the performance world has, however, been the training of players, many of them young and many of them specialized in contemporary music, whose virtuosic resourcefulness goes far beyond what is generally understood by virtuosity, and who are to an extraordinary degree possessed of musical intelligence and dedication.

This is a characteristically American phenomenon and the Fromm program at Tanglewood during the last decade has been very much responsible for bringing it about. The four players of the Composers Quartet are not Tanglewood-Fromm products, but they stunningly represent the new American virtuosity and intelligence.

The Sessions Second Quartet is a large and serious work. It seems to be directly descended from Beethoven's Opus 131, and that relationship and the rhetorical stance the work assumes make me a little uncomfortable. Yet the performance by the Composers Quartet for the first time let me hear the piece in all its compositional richness and variety. It was superbly paced and articulated and the complex textures were wonderfully clarified to make it altogether one of the greatest string quartet performances in my experience.

Babbitt's Quartet No. 2 is all ginger and bite, with an excitingly tight relation of sonority and structure. Moreover, its sensuous appeal is a delight all on its own. Babbitt's ear for sonority is a fine one, and such a performance of so elegantly imagined a piece of writing made one regret what sometimes seems like his flight into electronic sounds, for all that one understands the necessity for the flight because there are not enough performers like the Composers Quartet.

The performance was remarkable as a whole, and nowhere more so in detail than in the octave passages near the end in which the octave doublings blossomed as tone colors in a way unprecedented in my experience of listening to string quartets.

For most persons, the quartet by Ruth Crawford Seeger came as a special revelation. Ruth Crawford was born in 1901 and died in 1953. She studied with and married Charles Seeger (and became the mother of Pete), a musicologist and a remarkable musician who was the first to teach the new music in this country more than 50 years ago.

When Mrs. Seeger wrote her quartet in 1931, neo-classicism and Nadia Boulanger staccatos dominated the thinking of American composers—the Open-Plains-of-Kansas school had not really materialized yet. Her quartet was part of the expressionist world, whose manifestations in America we are only beginning to get an inkling of.

That Mrs. Seeger was doing something that in taste and technique was ahead of its time by a quarter century is remarkable, but the more important thing about her quartet is what an assured work it is and how individual and original regardless of its date and place of composition.

Each of its ideas is of striking and arresting character and their development is a natural extension of their nature. Not least, Mrs. Seeger was a punctual composer with a most precise sense of when a development or series of events has run its course. Her quartet is a remarkable and beautiful creation, one that should become a part of standard repertory. It, too, was superbly played.

Henry Weinberg is a sensitive and serious musician and he writes the most complicated music I know. The dialectic of his Quartet No. 2, written from 1960 to 1964, rests on intricacies and subtleties, especially rhythmic, that I am not yet equipped to hear. I look forward to being able eventually to understand this music and to write about it, at present I cannot. I can, however, report the composer's own estimate of the performance as "wonderful."

glewood

eight instruments — piano and wind — four etches which have the of Charles Ives, involved nths through which lovely snatches of Rossini em- in demure naivete.

MIDLAND, MICH.
NEWS
D. 13,000

AUG 24 1966

Midlander wins award in music

LENOX, Mass. — Rob Roy McGregor, Jr., a 22 - year - old trumpet player from Midland was awarded the Albert Spalding Prize at performance at Tanglewood, recently.

The Albert Spalding Prize is awarded for the most promising and outstanding instrumentalist in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra and was given at a combined performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. Erish Leinsdorf and Aaron Copland were conducting.

McGregor who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. R. McGregor, 1120 Airfield lane, just completed his undergraduate work at the University of Michigan, where he studied trumpet with Clifford Lillya. He has played with the University of Michigan Symphony Orchestra and the Toledo Symphony Orchestra. This summer he has been playing in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra under a fellowship grant from the Fromm Music Foundation.

The Berkshire Music Center was established in Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, as a center where young musicians could continue professional training and add to their artistic experience under the guidance of eminent musicians. Liensdorf who awarded the prize, has been director of the Center since the 1963 season.

PRESENTATION — Erich Leinsdorf, left, music director of the Berkshire Music Center and the Boston Symphony Orchestra presents the Albert Spalding Prize to Rob Roy McGregor of Midland.

HICKSVILLE NEWS
Thursday, September 15, 1966

College Notes

Jeffrey F. Allen, of 4 Sunnyfield Road, Sandra M. Cobin of 6 Boulevard Drive, and Peter F. Ingvoldstad of 25 Spray Lane, all of Hicksville, will enter C. W. Post College of Long Island University, Brookville, as members of the freshman class this Sept.

Henry Paul Niemann, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry O. Neimann of 55 Lantern Road, Hicksville, will begin study later this month for a Master of Music degree at Manhattan School of Music in New York City.

Mr. Niemann, who is a graduate of Hicksville High School, and received a Bachelor of Science degree in education from Hofstra University this year, has recently attended the Berkshire Music Center of the Tanglewood Festival in Lenox, Mass. He is known as tenor soloist with the Hicksville Community Choir, and at Garden City Episcopal Church, and at Manhattan School will work toward his Master's degree in vocal performance.

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 49,594

AUG 27 1966

Noted European Conductor Thinks That Music Is the International Language

Pierre Salzmann, left, of Lisbon, Portugal, is guest here at home of Mr. and Mrs. Ilidio E. Carvalho, 20 Monson St. With him are, from left, Karen Marie Morrissey, the Carvalhos' granddaughter; Mrs. Salzmann, and Mrs. Carvalho and Mr. Carvalho, Mrs. Salzmann's aunt and uncle.

By MARIE MacDONALD
Social Writer

"Music is the international language and I have great admiration for the American composers of contemporary music," said Pierre Salzmann, Swiss conductor who has just completed eight weeks of concert work with the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in an interview at the home of his wife's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Ilidio Carvalho of 20 Monson St., where he and Mrs. Salzman were visiting before flying back to Portugal on Thursday.

Maestro Salzmann, only 33, came to Tanglewood on the invitation and a fellowship from Dr. Charles Munch, noted former conductor of the Boston Symphony, who was assisted by Mr. Salzman in the preparation of the choir, when he guest conducted last October in Lisbon.

Pierre Salzmann enjoyed working with the American musicians, particularly in contemporary music, and also enjoyed several parties given for the Tanglewood musicians, one by Mme. Koussevitzky, widow of the late Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony, who has visited the Salzmanns in Lisbon. Also, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was a commentator at one of the concerts. The concerts were also taped for radio and television and presented on Aug. 19.

Mr. and Mrs. Carvalho attended one of the Berkshire concerts and also enjoyed the television program.

In the Festival of Contemporary Music held last week, Mr. Salzmann derived special pleasure from conducting the baroque music by Vivaldi, Telemann and Scarlatti and from "Love Song for Medeighma" by Lentz, "Oiseaux Exotique" by Olivier Messiaen, "Dead Calm" by Earl Kim and "Spring" by Jack Fortner.

The conductor was born in France, but is a Swiss citizen and at present is making his home in Lisbon with his wife, the former Marie Theresa Carvalho Ferreira, and their two children, Jean Philippe, 6 years old, and Isabelle, 3 1-2 years old.

He started his musical studies at the age of 7, playing the piano, and began his professional career at the age of 18, being a graduate of the Conservatoire in Geneva. He was for four years a a teacher at the National Conservatory in Lisbon and will return to conduct the choir of the Julbenkian Foundation in Lisbon and to be organist of the German Church and conductor of the Bach choir.

While in Tanglewood he and his wife were housed at the Windsor Mountain School during their stay. He said Europe has nothing to offer like Tanglewood, with its meeting of minds of the best conductors, composers and instrumentalists in the country. Salzburg, he said, is too commercial, but he enjoyed working last year in Sienna, Italy, with the famous Austrian conductor, Hermann Scherchen, who died two months ago. He has a keen admiration for both Dr. Charles Munch and Eric Leinsdorf, present conductors of the Boston Symphony, with whom he worked at Tanglewood.

He likes jazz, popular music and especially folk music, which he said is often an inspiration for symphonic music, but his specialty is sacred and symphonic music. When asked what he thinks of the Beatles, he said, "That is an embarrasing question. I like some of the things they do, but I don't understand the admiration of the people for them. The Beatles are not that important."

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,785

AUG 17 1966

Tanglewood Concert To Be On Channel 2

Four brilliant young conductors who bid fair to mount the the great podiums of tomorrow will be the stars of a specially televised concert from Tanglewood of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra on Channel 2 Friday, August 19 at 8 p.m.

The batons will be held by Dalia Atlas of Haifa, Israel; Lawrence Foster of Los Angeles; Pierre Salzmann of Switzerland and Alois Springer of Luxembourg. Also appearing will be baritone soloist Donald Miller, a member of the faculty of the School of Music at Syracuse University. The orchestra itself is made up of 75 talented young musicians studying at the Berkshire Center this summer.

The program for the concert is Beethoven: Leonore Overture No. 3 (Lawrence Foster, conductor); Mahler: Songs of a wayfarer (Donald Miller, baritone; Pierre Salzmann, conductor); Stauss; Don Juan (Alois Springer, conductor); Mozart: Serenata Notturno (Lawrence Foster, conductor); and Debussy: La Mer (Dalia Atlas, conductor).

190

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 29,084

AUG 26 1966

AREA STUDENTS ON PROGRAM

. . . Talented high school musicians participated in a special music program this summer offered for the first time by Boston University in cooperation with the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Western Massachusetts. Courses were taught by Boston University faculty members, including Dr. Martin Arslanian (in photo) and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Studying with Dr. Arslanian near the Music Shed are, from left, Joseph Conte of Providence, Marie H. Grimard of Woonsocket, Rose Sarem of Providence and Joseph Grimes of Cumberland.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 133,303

AUG 22 1966

LEINSDORF MEETS MUSICIANS. Erich Leinsdorf, second from left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, meets three scholarship students at the Berkshire Music Center and Tanglewood Institute. Prof. Louis Krasner, right, Syracuse University music teacher and chairman of the seminar for music teachers, introduces students Miss Geraldine Elmer, student in the SU graduate school, left, and Mr. and Mrs. Sanford H. Reunig of Ithaca.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795

OCT 9 1966

Yale-ABC TV Writing Course Gets New Grant

The American Broadcasting Companies' grant to Yale University to maintain a course in television playwriting has been continued and increased through a $79,000 cash gift to cover the program's expenses for the 1966-67 academic year, it has been announced jointly by Leonard H. Goldenson, president of ABC, and Dr. Kingman Brewster Jr., president of Yale.

This new writing course was established last year at the Yale School of Drama through a gift from the American Broadcasting Companies, which provided grants of $5,000 each to seven fellowship students and the salaries of a writer-in-residence and his assistant, who presided over the seminars.

The increased 1966-67 plan, called the "Yale-ABC Playwriting Program: Writing for the Camera," provides the same grants to seven outstanding young writers, but this year's staff will be expanded to provide two lecturers in writing and a visiting critic who will supervise all productions growing out the seminars.

Lecturers Named

The new lecturers for the program, appointed by the Yale Corporation, will be writer-producer-directors Michael Roemer and Robert Young. Thomas Burrows, newly-appointed assistant to the dean of the Yale School of Drama, will serve as visiting critic and production supervisor for the writing course.

Commenting on the renewal of the grant, Goldenson said: "The first year of the Yale-ABC talent development program has been a source of great satisfaction to us, and we are proud to continue our association through this increased grant.

"The young writers involved in the fellowship program are in no way beholden to the ABC-TV network," he pointed out. "We encourage their work, we are eager to examine and consider it for broadcast on this network, but the recipients of the fellowships are under no obligations other than those outlined by the university. All fellowship selections are made by the Yale School of Drama, and the form taken by the seminars is exclusively the decision of those directly involved.

"It is our goal, through this fellowship program and the scholarships we have established at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, the summer fellowships for promising musicians at the Berkshire Music Center and our scholarship program at the University of Pennsylvania and Blair Academy, to help develop now the fresh talents that television continually requires. As our society becomes more complex so, too, do the communications media, and the needs of the future must be prepared for today."

Stimulation Hoped

"Yale has high hopes for the second year of the American Broadcasting Company's program to stimulate dramatic writing for film and television. Imaginative work with visual media should contribute to as well as draw upon the many areas of artistic, dramatic, and literary activity at the university," Brewster commented.

The general requirements for fellowship consideration are at least three years of advanced study in dramatic writing or the demonstration of outstanding promise in three or more years of professional writing.

The seminars on writing for the camera will also include five to seven regularly enrolled students in the School of Drama who will write a full-length television drama, screenplay or documentary in this course.

Roemer and Young, the new lecturers, wrote, produced, directed and photographed "Nothing But A Man," a double prize winner at the Venice Film Festival. Roemer, a former film critic for The Reporter magazine, has been writer-producer-director of over sixty-eight educational films currently being shown on television, and numerous television and feature films. Young is the winner of two George Polk Memorial Awards for television news documentaries, and is currently producing films with Roemer. Both are Harvard graduates.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

SEP 6 1966

Boutard Addresses Mahkeenac Group

STOCKBRIDGE — Roy Boutard, director of the Berkshire Garden Center spoke at the annual meeting of the Mahkeenac Heights Association Aug. 27 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Alpert, Mahkeenac Heights. More than 50 members attended.

Boutard spoke to the group about the work of the garden center and accepted a $50 contribution to further its work.

In other business the group voted to make a pledge to the Mark Obanhein fund which was established to provide a reward for information about the whereabouts of the 14-year-old son of Police Chief and Mrs. William J. Obanhein of Interlaken, who has been missing since early June.

The association also agreed to make a donation to the scholarship fund of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood "in appreciation and recognition of its expanding activities."

It was voted that the association should maintain a life membership in the Stockbridge Bowl Association because of that group's aim of maintaining the natural beauty of the Berkshires and conserving the area's natural resources.

Elected president for the coming year was Morris D. Purnell. Other officers elected were Mordecai Billig, vice president, and Mrs. Seymour Barash, secretary-treasurer.

Refreshments were served.

TIGHT BINDING

"POPS" AT TANGLEWOOD - CONT'D

d chairman
c teachers,
Miss Geraldine
SU graduate d Mrs. Sanford

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 2 1966

At Tanglewood

Fiedler Lists Additions To Pops Program Tomorrow

Arthur Fiedler, who makes his annual appearance at Tanglewood with the Boston Pops Orchestra tomorrow night has announced the program for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

As previously announced Mr. Fiedler will begin the concert with Sousa's Washington Post March followed by the overture to "William Tell" by Rossini. Stan Getz, the Evening's soloist, will then perform the world premiere of Eddie Sauter's Tanglewood Concerto which was dedicated to the soloist and Arthur Fiedler.

One of the most popular bossa nova songs performed by Stan Getz, the great exponent of the bossa nova sound, is the Girl from Ipanema by Gimbel-Jobim. Mr. Fiedler has invited Getz to play this music immediately following the Tanglewood Concerto.

The five compositions for saxophone and orchestra to be played by the soloist and the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler's direction will now include the traditional Eili, Eili; Three Ballads for Stan and Where Do You Go? by Wilder; The Bad and The Beautiful and A Song After Sundown by Raksin.

Mr. Fiedler and the Pops will also play Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltzes by Strauss and selections from "My Fair Lady" by Loewe. Included in the selections from the popular musical and motion picture are Get Me To The Church On Time, Wouldn't It Be Loverly, I've Grown Accustomed To Her Face, I Could Have Danced All Night, On The Street Where You Live, The Rain In Spain, With A Little Bit of Luck.

The remaining reserved seats for tomorrow's Boston Pops at Tanglewood Concert are available at the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. General admission tickets for the Tanglewood Lawns will be sold beginning at 4.00 p.m.

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 98,899
AUG 1 1966

This Week at Tanglewood; Pops Concert on Wednesday

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will feature jazz saxophonist Stan Getz in its annual Tanglewood program Wednesday, for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Guest conductor Friday and Saturday will be Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, music director of the Minneapolis Symphony. Friday's program will include Prokofiev's second suite from Romeo and Juliet, and Saint-Saens Cello Concerto with soloist Leslie Parnas. The closing work will be Shumann's Symphony No.

Saturday's concert will be devoted completely to "The Magic Flute" by Mozart. The cast will include: George Shirley as Tamino; Jane Marsh, Joanna Simon and Natyah Godfrey as the three ladies; John Reardon as Papageno; and Beverly Sills as the Queen of the Night.

On Sunday, the afternoon concert will see Mr. Skrowaczewski conducting Siant-Saens Piano Concerto No. 4, with Grant Johannesen as soloist. This concert will also include Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance by Samuel Barber and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

The 2½-hour "Open Rehearsal" for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund will begin at 10.30 Saturday morning.

The week-end prelude, Friday, will consist of songs by Mozart for soprano and piano performed by Phyllis Curtin and Richard Woitach, and the Organ Fantasia in F minor, K. 608 by Mozart. John Ferris will be organist.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 4 1966

Crowds Picnic on Lawn at Tanglewood

Whitestone

Mr. and Mrs. Walter N. Cooper and Mrs. Sumner M. Gamwell enjoyed the perfect weather last night before the Boston Pops concert.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 3 1966

Whitestone

CLEAR AND COOL is forecast for both the weather and the music at Boston Pops concert tonight at Tanglewood. Stan Getz, saxophone soloist, is shown rehearsing with conductor Arthur Fiedler. All 6,000 seats the Shed have been sold for the concert. Tickets to the grounds will go on sale at 4 this afternoon.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 4 1966

Whitestone

RIGHT BEHIND DADDY, the three sons of photographer Heinz Wiessenstein, who conducts the Whitestone Studio in Lenox during the summer, march with full equipment into Shed during Tanglewood pops concert. Left, Peter, 11; Robert, 9, David, 7.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,771
AUG 4 1966

"Camp" Night At Tanglewood

A sparkling Berkshire evening found 14,258 people, including what must have been the population of most of the summer camps in the area, gathered in the music shed and on the lawns of Tanglewood Wednesday night for the annual Pops concert. The concert was not as crisp as the weather, but the informal audience attracted by Arthur Fiedler's kind of music and the saxophone playing of Stan Getz did not appear to care.

Stan Getz, bossa nova star, was at a disadvantage when playing alone with the orchestra, just as Duke Ellington was last year on a similar occasion, because he could barely be heard above the orchestra. But beyond the acoustical flaw, this jazz artist just does not fit with the Boston Pops, which is a bouncy extrovert outfit under the Fiedler baton and not right for the sweet aching blues that Getz draws out of his instrument. When Getz and his own instrumental group were allowed to predominate, the program came to life.

Most disappointing was the Tanglewood Concerto by Sauter, written for this program and given its first performance Wednesday night. This was a beatless maundering in which neither soloist nor orchestra was at home and the saxophone was lost in it. Far better was "The Girl from Ipanema," a bossa nova favorite that showed the Stan Getz that people had come to hear. Later in the program, four compositions for saxophone and orchestra also served to display the marvelous plasticity of Getz' playing.

The Pops itself was not always up to form. The marches were great: Washington Post to start the concert and the Stars and Stripes Forever to conclude it. But the Overture to William Tell was nearly coughed down by an unusually croupy audience in the soft early passages and never quite got away from sounding like an old record. Tales from the Vienna Woods was distinguished by some very pleasant zither solo interludes by Toni Noichl but otherwise set only a few graying heads swaying.

The final medley of tunes from "My Fair Lady" was a welcome relief to the orchestra, obviously, and suited a clap-happy crowd that seemed at last to be hearing what it wanted. It was followed by expected encores: "The Shadow of Your Smile," "Ballad of the Green Beret," and the theme from "Batman."

—By Anbel B. Murphy

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 14,186
AUG 6 1966

Different Flavor Is Lent To Excellent Pops Concert

With customary verve and humour Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops brought to Tanglewood on Wednesday evening the kind of entertainment for which they are famous and loved.

The program was made doubly interesting and a trifle off-beat by the presence of Stan Getz as soloist. Mr. Getz, a jazz musician of the first magnitude, lent a slightly different flavor to the evening, and it was noted that it was a predominantly young audience of his followers who attended this performance.

The program began with two typical Boston Pops selections, The Washington Post March and The Overture to William Tell, the latter bringing a warm response from the audience for an old friend.

From then on, with the exception of Tales from the Vienna Woods, featuring Toni Noichl on the zither and some rousing and nostalgic selections from "My Fair Lady," the evening was dominated by Mr. Getz and his very fine saxophone.

The first selection in this portion of the program was "Tanglewood Concerto" by Sauter, dedicated to Stan Getz and Arthur Fiedler, and enjoying its world premiere. The Five Compositions for Saxophone and Orchestra by Wilder and Raskin gave the audience a chance to hear Stan Getz's virtuosity and style, both of which are impressive.

It should be noted that the portions of the program with Mr. Getz and orchestra were being recorded by RCA Victor for release next winter. WGBH-TV (Channel 2) of Boston was also there televising the program.

The evening closed with "My Fair Lady" selections; then we were treated to a lively and delightful group of encores, the frosting on the cake, as it were. There was a most amusing treatment of "Mame" among others, and an hilarious version of "Batman," complete with gunshots, feathers and other Batman paraphernalia floating down from above. The audience loved it, and whatever else may be said of Mr. Fiedler and the Boston Pops, one is always left with the feeling that one has had a very good time indeed.—A.B.C.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 5 1966

Letters

Campers at Pops

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

Wednesday's Pops Concert at Tanglewood should have proved to the orchestra's administration (if they didn't know it already) that the time has come to do something about the area's summer campers.

The concert was nothing short of chaos. Campers, uncontrolled by the counsellors, streamed up and down the aisles inside the shed, chattered and squabbled on the lawn and generally made the evening a joke. Not a musical joke because very few people could hear any music.

This is not a plea for better manners on the part of the campers. Their visits to Pittsfield on Wednesdays and their appearances at theatres and concert halls in the area have shown that requests for polite behavior and consideration are useless. The youngsters are seldom sufficiently controlled and in small enough groups to be controlled.

This is not to say the kids shouldn't be exposed to cultural offerings in the Berkshires. The area's theatres and musical attractions are excellent and the campers should be taken (but, please, not in busloads) to events they understand and will enjoy. Some of the camps, obviously, have neglected taste and benefit to the youngsters. Why should it be, for example, that 30 eight-year-old boys are taken to a student voice recital at Tanglewood's chamber music hall when the program is modern songs by Stravinsky and Berg. The little boys hated it and so accordingly did everyone else.

Theatre and music are, of course, businesses and the tickets the campers' parents buy must make a tidy haul for local impressarios. But when the audience can't hear the music, see the play or hear itself think, it's time for the box office to think of the adult customers, a much more permanent market.

The situation is the camps' fault for asking ushers and Tanglewood's administration to be baby sitters. But Tanglewood should take this chance to limit camp groups in size, age and frequency of attendance. Either that or take a deep breath and keep them out entirely.

LISA LANSING.
153 Bartlett Ave.,
Pittsfield.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 9 1966

Notes and Footnotes

STIRRED BY the violent reaction of serious music fans over last week's Pops Tanglewood concert at which 78 busloads of youthful campers turned the program into a big clambake, driving hundreds of ticket-buyers home, we talked with Mordacai Bauman and his wife Irma. They have for years run Indian Hill Music Camp in Stockbridge.

Their young people are serious about music, and the Baumans said right off that they took none to the concert in dispute. They felt there was little in the program by which they would profit. Mr. B added, "I don't feel that a serious institution such as Tanglewood needs to fall to that level to draw big audiences."

The Baumans further said that camps should be told frankly by the Tanglewood management if certain programs weren't for children. Youngsters' attention cannot be held by heavy, deeply profound compositions. But on the other hand, the Baumans see a responsibility of camp operators who should brief young people on the programs before they set out for Tanglewood. At Indian Hill, the youngsters were given talks most of one evening before going to Tanglewood, in which fine points of the music were explained, the composers' means and devices for achieving certain effects pointed out, and how coloration and depth are acquired.

On the grounds, supervision is a must, the Baumans said flatly. On their own, the kids turn the event into an outing or picnic, tear around after soda and hamburgs, and stage reunions with youngsters from other camps. If the councilors or supervisors shirk their duty, gathering in the buses to play cards, maybe, or have a beer party somewhere, the youngsters are bound to skylark.

This situation isn't insoluble at all. Mr. Bauman made the point that with some 100 camps in the Berkshires, why doesn't Tanglewood offer programs especially for them, say on one afternoon a week? This would re-establish harmony in a currently pretty raucous situation.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 4 1966

Stan Getz Joins Boston Pops At Music Shed

'Tanglewood Concerto' Premiere Called 'Uninteresting'

By PETER R. BORRELLI

LENOX—Stan Getz, the king of the musical development known as the Bossa Nova, joined Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Wednesday night at the Music Shed in the world premiere of Eddie Sauter's latest work, "Tanglewood Concerto."

Audience Relaxed

The concert held for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund drew the customary pops audience of young people and family groups — a total of 14,258 persons — all of them quite relaxed and contributing to the unbuttoned and informal atmosphere in which the pops functions most unpretentiously.

The "Tanglewood Concerto," presumably the highlight of the program, proved to be an uninteresting piece of music which failed both to display Getz as the fine and sensitive tenor saxophone he has proven to be in recording and live performances and to reveal anything new in Sauter as a composer.

Unfortunately, for more than 6000 persons on the lawn at the Music Shed, the sound system made it impossible to hear Getz at any distance. Inside the shed, the musical fare was equally disappointing as the orchestra (in what was ostensibly orchestral blending) drowned out the solo tenor saxophone.

Music Undistinguished

The music itself was undistinguished and interspersed with touches of music straight from Gershwin, west side orchestral, jazz and occasional passages reflecting a mystical oriental influence.

Aside from the difficulty with the jazz concerto the concert offered the customary pops musical fare in the customary informal impromptu manner that has made Fiedler and the pops a big favorite here.

Fiedler opened the concert with a blood-stirring selection, "The Washington Post March," immediately followed by Rossini's overture to "William Tell." Fiedler caught the audiences collective eye and ear as he conducted the overture — his stocky figure swaying with the music, the silver-haired papa of the Boston Pops cut the figure of the lone ranger himself as he came to the famous finale of the selection.

Bossa Nova Rendition

Before intermission Getz and four of his own accompanists performed Antonio Carlos Jobim's "The Girl From Ipanema." The song which Getz first recorded with vocalist Astrud Gilberto in 1963 illustrated the lyric floating figures that have made the Bossa Nova the new swing of American jazz.

Following intermission, Fiedler returned with a more traditional selection, Strauss' "Tales From the Vienna Woods, Waltzes."

When Getz returned to the stage the sound system again proved a problem as it did last year with Boston Pops guest, Duke Ellington. Nevertheless, Getz's performance of "Five Compositions for Saxophone and Orchestra" epitomized his cool approach to jazz.

It has been more than 10 years since Getz began to climb high in the popular polls, but the endless lyricism, unbelievable control of the horn and outstanding fluency he demonstrated still make him one of the finest listening experiences in jazz.

Other Selections

The following joyful selections from "My Fair Lady" rounded out the program and drew continuous applause: "Get Me to the Church on Time," "Wouldn't It Be Loverly," "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face," "I Could Have Danced All Night," "On the Street Where You Live," "The Rain in Spain" and "With a Little Bit of Luck."

As is also customary, the pops concert ended with a series of unprogrammed encores which for many youngsters and oldsters made the trip to Tanglewood the time of their life. Among the encores were: "The Shadow of Your Smile," "Ballad of the Green Beret," and the theme from "Batman."

The excited crowd marched to the exits to the pops traditional closing number, "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 61,129
AUG 4 1966

193

Music: 'Tanglewood Concerto' In World Premiere

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — World premiere of Eddie Sauter's 'Tanglewood Concerto," with Stan Getz as soloist was the big news at Tanglewood last night where Arthur Fiedler conducted the Boston Pops Orchestra for an audience of 14,258. Proceeds go to the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund.

The new concerto was neither the most interesting nor the most enjoyable thing on the program. It is dedicated to Getz and Fiedler.

Rest of the program was choice material from the Pops repertory plus Getz in a group of numbers for saxophone and orchestra.

The show got under woy with a bang. After all the top-heavy, intellectual and epic music heard here during the past ficve weeks of the Berkshire Music Festival, it was something of a jolt to hear Sousa's "Washington Post March" blared out with all its brassy bombast.

Fiedler and the orchestra then settled down to the long trek of Rossini's "William Tell Overture." It's quite some time before the Lone Ranger comes galloping into the score-the final part to be exact.

The first three sections uncovered stunning performance, Martin Hoherman's solo cello emblazoned the opening sun rise scene-what could be heard over the large and restless audience. The storm sequence was a rip-roaring business. Flutist James Patpoutsakis and English horn player, Lawrence Thorstenberg, made beautiful solo sounds for the peaceful third episode.

Tanglewood acoustics, being what they are, the concluding march sounded more like the opera's approaching Swiss Army than a Western horse and rider. This was sheer delight for the hundreds of youngsters from summer camps in the area who attended.

"Tanglewood Concerto," is primarily entertainment, by orchestra. Format is clear enough and it does make some allowance for impressions or improvisations. In brief passages, it is jazz on best behavior.

The work starts off on a thoughtful note in cellos, gradually gaining a little impetus to include solo saxophone. The solo instrument isn't prominent, except for brief passages. This is not necessarily belated but Fiedler's heavily applied orchestration. It was reminiscent of Duke Ellington's impression of "solo pianist", here last summer.

As Much a Concerto

Nothing much happens until the sluggish introduction in finished. Thereafter, it is as much a concerto for timpani and percussion as saxophone.

Getz took what advantage he could of his dextrous technique and sentimental tone. But there was little conversation between solo instrument and orchestra in the true concerto style. It sounded more like an orchestral work with occasional saxophone obligato.

The saxophonist had much better opportunity to display his talents in Gimbel-Jobim's "The Girl From Ipanema," it was initiated by Getz and a quartet of his own, joined by the full orchestra, and built to quite a storm of music and applause.

Getz sounded more like his old self and much more at home in familiars with dressy orchestra backgrounds. These were "Three Ballads for Stan", "Where Do You Go,?" "The Bad and the Beautiful," and "A Song after Sundown."

Balance of the program was choice morsels from the Pops Candy Box. Strauss' "Tales from the Vienna Woods" was a beautiful union of melodies - pliant, graceful and propelling. Its real vintage was accentuated by Toni Moichl's colorful-sounding zither solo.

Following the selections from Loewe's "My Fair Lady" came another program of encores, including the inevitable "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 4 1966

Music Review

The Boston Pops Fiasco

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD has had very, very few failures, but it will take much more time and much more planning to organize a scandal to beat the Boston Pops gala evening last night.

The whole thing was a disgrace from every angle. A crowd of 14,258 came for the fun and excitment enjoyed at past Pops concerts but the youngsters in the audience (78 buses brought part of that contingent) were restless, roving and noisy. They disturbed everyone on the lawns and distracted those in seats in the Shed, and may even have interfered with conductor Arthur Fiedler's concentration on his job.

* * *

AT INTERMISSION, there was a large exodus of more mature people, muttering "disgrace," "fiasco," "Coney Island," and other such expressions of disappointment as they left the grounds. Hundreds lined up at the ticket windows for refunds of their admission costs, and they were treated with courtesy and compliance. However, the greater share of those leaving took their licking and said nothing to the management.

It was a pity, too, for there are always more Berkshirites in the audience on Pops night than at any other Tanglewood event. Hitherto, they have always gone away exhilarated and happy.

Last night was totally different.

Even the music on stage wasn't up to par. Sousa's Washington Post March wasn't half as rousing as Fiedler customarily makes it. Perhaps the huge television cameras scattered about could have had something to do with the confusion. One was stationed right below the conductor's podium and the place where the soloist always stands. Those close to the machine certainly were prevented from giving their complete attention to the music by the gyrations of the cameramen.

* * *

FIEDLER STARTED the Rossini overture to "William Tell" with more noise going on than one hears at a playground. Possibly he thought that the ruckus-makers would quiet down when they heard the orchestra in action. Unfortunately, they didn't, which was a double pity, for Martin Hoherman played the opening cello solo with excellent tone and shape; the lovely melody which comes soon afterward was equally well played by Engish horn Laurence Thorstenberg, with the flute obbligato brilliantly played by James Pappoutsakis.

Then came the guest soloist of the evening: Stan Getz, saxophone. He first played a "Tanglewood Concerto" by Sauter, listed as a world premiere, and dedicated to Getz and Fiedler. I would make a small bet that all those who heard the world premiere may very possibly have heard, at the same time, the world terminal of that particular composition. It has an interminable introduction of banal stuff, in which the solo instrument scarcely ever was audible above the bombast of the orchestra's accompaniment.

* * *

THE SOLOIST was assigned little of substance and that little, unhappily, could not be heard well. By this time, added to the disturbance outside, the restlessness of the audience had compounded the mood. Even the members of the orchestra, if their faces revealed their true feelings, seemed both bewildered and ashamed of the music and of their own performance.

Mr. Getz next brought out four of his combo colleagues and they played "The Girl From Ipanema" by Gimbel-Jobim. The orchestra joined in when they felt the proper time had come even though Mr. Fiedler was obviously at sea some of the time.

The second-half of the program looked more promising but, for once, I did something right. I left.

BBC Economizes

The BBC is apparently continuing its economy campaign with Spartan rigor.

A forthcoming tv program is advertised as being "written and directed by Ronald Ayre, who also hums the soundtrack music."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 6 1966

Letters to the Editor

Tanglewood Torment

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

Mr. Jay Rosenfeld's review of the Pops at Tanglewood [Eagle, Aug. 4] raises a question with which we here at Tanglewood are deeply concerned, namely, how to keep a proper situation for the people who want to listen to the music and at the same time make the concerts available for all who want to come.

Most of the solutions which come readily to mind and may look easy have real bugs in them: (1) we are tempted to say that large groups of young people shouldn't be admitted, but we want young people who are prepared to listen to and enjoy the music to hear the Tanglewood concerts; (2) we could amplify the music and drown out the disturbances, but we pride ourselves on the natural acoustics here and are most reluctant to start down the electronic primrose path; (3) the idea of having sufficient police officers on hand to sit on every teen-age head would put us in a constabulary situation awesome to contemplate.

I do want to thank the adult public genuinely for the courtesy with which they absorbed the disagreeable situation on Wednesday evening—in talking with many people I did not encounter anyone who was unreasonably indignant, or who didn't seem to commiserate with us on the problem. And I would also like to complain bitterly about the irresponsibility of those in charge of large groups of children who through their carelessness and discourtesy have heedlessly put Tanglewood and the public in this awkward situation. But most of all, I want to assure the adult public that the problem is not being ignored, and we affirm our intention of giving performances in a proper atmosphere for satisfactory listening.

THOMAS D. PERRY Jr.
Manager, Boston
Symphony Orchestra.
Lenox.

194

ESPLANADE

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,058
JUN 23 1966

ASK THE GLOBE

ASK THE GLOBE serves readers by getting answers, solving problems and cutting red tape. Telephone AV 8-1515 any time, day or night, or write to "Ask the Globe" Boston Globe, Boston, Mass. 02107.

Questions will be answered each day in the EVENING GLOBE.

Q—I'd like to know the schedule of the Boston Pops Esplanade concerts and if there'll be any admission charge.—P.B., Newton.

A—The Esplanade concerts begin July 5 and run every night until July 16 with the exception of Sunday, July 10, when there is no concert. In addition, there are two special children's concerts on July 6 and July 13 which begin at 10:15 in the morning. Evening concerts start at 8:30 and all performances are free.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 9 1966

The Esplanade

I watched the evening skies grow pale
And seemed lost in a fairy tale,
Where little men in a great shell,
Made music grow and sing and swell.
I sat far off and still the sound
Swept over me, above, around.
The tones seemed tangible, of such
Clear shape and substance, one could touch
Each golden chord, each silver note
That set the river wind afloat.
Young lovers smiled, as if to own
The night and music theirs alone;
Yet, like moths in arrested flight,
White heads gleamed faintly through the night.
Old mem'ries stirred, old loves walked there,
Wakened by some familiar air.
On tip-toe to the melodies,
Our fair flag danced upon the breeze
And every star shone bright and true
And every stripe red, white or blue.
O, lovely land! Where man may rest
Beside the river's shining breast
And hear in peace the wondrous way
The little music-makers play;
Where cool night winds and languid sails
Stir quietly, as daylight pales.

MYRA P. ELLIS

Everett

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 29,084
JUL 5 1966

Sentinel (e)
FITCHBURG, Mass.
Circ. 20,016
JUL 5 1966

Evening Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 43,410
JUL 5 1966

Item (e)
CLINTON, Mass.
Circ. 3,473
JUL 5 1966

(e)
BORO, Mass.
1,785
1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Boston
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Circ. 6,000
JUL 1966

Music and Meteors

SUMMER arrives in Boston at approximately 8:30 p.m. on July 5, or shortly after a white-haired gentleman makes his way to the podium of Hatch Memorial Shell, raises his baton, and begins the Esplanade Concerts of the Boston Pops.

Aside from an amalgam of music and meteorology, the thirty-seventh season of Esplanade Concerts also represents one more affirmative vote for the concept that Arthur Fiedler more or less pioneered: that is, a heady mixture of light and classical music played virtually free of charge before an army of people sitting under the stars.

As a young violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1929, Fiedler began on his own initiative—and with limited financial backing from friends—the first Esplanade series. The heritage of concerts on the village green, he said, could be transported to an urban setting; at the same time classical music could be brought out of the hallowed concert halls and into the lap of the public.

Who would dispute such a rather pleasant idea? Many did, it seems, including some who lent financial support to Fiedler and his forty musicians. Fortunately, Fiedler was endowed with a fund-raising acuity comparable to his musical talent. As a result one Symphony patron, who preferred to remain anonymous, guaranteed the sum needed to make up the orchestra's weekly payroll if voluntary contributions proved insufficient.

Although the early response to Esplanade concerts was gratifying, Fiedler had to wait until 1935 before he could test his original idea—a program devoted entirely to symphonic music. At first he had played only one or two movements from a symphony, but that season he scheduled all nine Beethoven symphonies (excepting the choral part of the Ninth) and discovered, not to his surprise, that his audience eagerly accepted the programs.

Since 1940 Esplanade concerts have been administered by the Symphony trustees and the deficit of the concerts absorbed by the Symphony treasury. But it is still necessary for fund-raising programs to be conducted each year and thus each concert is usually "sponsored" by various business firms and corporations in Boston. This is accomplished by a firm's purchase of the back page of an Esplanade program and a brief announcement of gratitude during intermission.

The Hatch Memorial Shell, in which the orchestra performs, is the third such structure housing the concerts. The first, a wooden structure, was used for five years and gave way to a steel-plated one whose heat transfer properties are something still discussed by musicians who were with the orchestra at that time.

The wooden shell's eccentric acoustical properties were responsible for Arthur Fiedler's learning to conduct an orchestra in reverse. Before the shell was constructed a scale model of pasteboard and a small bell were used to test the acoustical properties of the projected shell. But the transformation from pasteboard and bell to wooden structure and full orchestra caused several acoustical quirks to develop.

Strong sounds, such as the bass drum, hardly projected beyond the first few rows while weak sounds, such as that of a piccolo, seemed to resound up and down the Charles.

An acoustical expert decided that the only remedy was a reverse seating arrangement for the orchestra. Fiedler, the first night he conducted, would turn to the violin section, as if to give a cue, and then, at the same time, point to the cymbals who were located on another part of the stage. Only through a certain adroitness and quick thinking did the music come out in logical sequence instead of reverse order.

The concerts—a few minor difficulties aside—also have proven of great value to musicians themselves. Young musicians have a chance to make solo or featured appearances, and Symphony personnel, who would not ordinarily get an opportunity to concertize, can do so during the season. (The Esplanade orchestra is made up entirely of BSO personnel, except for "name" players, who depart after the Pops season for Tanglewood.)

Even more important, Schubert wafting over a crowd sitting on the bank of a leisurely flowing river lends invaluable character and atmosphere to the city in summer. Without enclosures, gates or ticket windows, the banks of the Charles become, in fact, an auditorium. The Friday-afternoon affluent, and those who never set foot inside Symphony Hall are equals in every sense; there are no season subscriptions included in the last will and testament of Esplanade patrons. There are, instead, countless beneficiaries of Arthur Fiedler's heritage of music and green grass for all.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 66,826
JUL 5 1966

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 14,186
JUL 5 1966

News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 9,291
JUL 5 1966

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 16,222
JUL 5 1966

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 9,367
JUL 5 1966

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,258
JUL 5 1966

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 102,118
JUL 5 1966

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 29,064
JUL 5 1966

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 5 1966

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,836
JUL 5 1966

Herald (e)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
Circ. 16,524
JUL 5 1966

Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 29,049
JUL 5 1966

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,593
JUL 5 1966

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 146,612
JUL 5 1966

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
JUL 5 1966

Fiedler to Miss 38th Esplanade Concert Tonight

Boston —(UPI)— For the first time since their beginning, an esplanade concert on the banks of the Charles River will not be under Arthur Fiedler's baton when the 38th season opens, tonight.

Fiedler's engagement as guest conductor at Robin Hood Dell in Philadelphia was rained out yesterday, he told his wife, and his contract calls for him to be on hand for a makeup concert tonight.

Fiedler, who is also conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, inaugurated the esplanade concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra players in 1929. He was "very disturbed" at being unable to be here tonight, a spokesman for the Esplanade Orchestra said.

The spokesman said Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor, would take the podium for the 8:30 p.m. opening.

194

ESPLANADE

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,058
JUN 23 1966

ASK THE GLOBE

AV 8-1515

ASK THE GLOBE serves readers by getting answers, solving problems and cutting red tape. Telephone AV 8-1515 any time, day or night, or write to "Ask the Globe" Boston Globe, Boston, Mass. 02107.*

Questions will be answered each day in the EVENING GLOBE.

★

Q—I'd like to know the schedule of the Boston Pops Esplanade concerts and if there'll be any admission charge.—P.B., Newton.

A—The Esplanade concerts begin July 5 and run every night until July 16 with the exception of Sunday, July 10, when there is no concert. In addition, there are two special children's concerts on July 6 and July 13 which begin at 10:15 in the morning. Evening concerts start at 8:30 and all performances are free.

★

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,785
JUL 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Boston
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Circ. 6,000
JUL 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 9 1966

Music and Meteors

SUMMER arrives in Boston at approximately 8:30 p.m. on July 5, or shortly after a white-haired gentleman makes his way to the podium of Hatch Memorial Shell, raises his baton, and begins the Esplanade Concerts of the Boston Pops.

Aside from an amalgam of music and meteorology, the thirty-seventh season of Esplanade Concerts also represents one more affirmative vote for the concept that Arthur Fiedler more or less pioneered: that is, a heady mixture of light and classical music played virtually free of charge before an army of people sitting under the stars.

As a young violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1929, Fiedler began on his own initiative—and with limited financial backing from friends—the first Esplanade series. The heritage of concerts on the village green, he said, could be transported to an urban setting; at the same time classical music could be brought out of the hallowed concert halls and into the lap of the public.

Who would dispute such a rather pleasant idea? Many did, it seems, including some who lent financial support to Fiedler and his forty musicians. Fortunately, Fiedler was endowed with a fund-raising acuity comparable to his musical talent. As a result one Symphony patron, who preferred to remain anonymous, guaranteed the sum needed to make up the orchestra's weekly payroll if voluntary contributions proved insufficient.

Although the early response to Esplanade concerts was gratifying, Fiedler had to wait until 1935 before he could test his original idea—a program devoted entirely to symphonic music. At first he had played only one or two movements from a symphony, but that season he scheduled all nine Beethoven symphonies (excepting the choral part of the Ninth) and discovered, not to his surprise, that his audience eagerly accepted the programs.

Since 1940 Esplanade concerts have been administered by the Symphony trustees and the deficit of the concerts absorbed by the Symphony treasury. But it is still necessary for fund-raising programs to be conducted each year and thus each concert is usually "sponsored" by various business firms and corporations in Boston. This is accomplished by a firm's purchase of the back page of an Esplanade program and a brief announcement of gratitude during intermission.

The Hatch Memorial Shell, in which the orchestra performs, is the third such structure housing the concerts. The first, a wooden structure, was used for five years and gave way to a steel-plated one whose heat transfer properties are something still discussed by musicians who were with the orchestra at that time.

The wooden shell's eccentric acoustical properties were responsible for Arthur Fiedler's learning to [illegible] orchestra in reverse. Before [illegible] was constructed a scale model [illegible] board and a small bell were used to test the acous[illegible] jected shell. [illegible] transformation from pasteboard [illegible] bell to wooden structure and full orchestra caused several acoustical [illegible] to develop.

Strong sounds, such as the bass drum, hardly projected beyond the first few rows while weak sounds, such as that of a piccolo, seemed to resound up and down the Charles.

An acoustical expert decided that the only remedy was a reverse seating arrangement for the orchestra. Fiedler, the first night he conducted, would turn to the violin section, as if to give a cue, and then, at the same time, point to the cymbals who were located on another part of the stage. Only through a certain adroitness and quick thinking did the music come out in logical sequence instead of reverse order.

The concerts—a few minor difficulties aside—also have proven of great value to musicians themselves. Young musicians have a chance to make solo or featured appearances, and Symphony personnel, who would not ordinarily get an opportunity to concertize, can do so during the season. (The Esplanade orchestra is made up entirely of BSO personnel, except for "name" players, who depart after the Pops season for Tanglewood.)

Even more important, Schubert waiting over a crowd sitting on the bank of a leisurely flowing river lends invaluable character and atmosphere to the city in summer. Without enclosures, gates or ticket windows, the banks of the Charles become, in fact, an auditorium. The Friday-afternoon affluent and those who never set foot inside Symphony Hall are equals in every sense; there are no season subscriptions included in the last will and testament of Esplanade patrons. There are, instead, countless beneficiaries of Arthur Fiedler's heritage of music and green grass for all.

The Esplanade

I watched the evening skies grow pale
And seemed lost in a fairy tale,
Where little men in a great shell,
Made music grow and sing and swell.
I sat far off and still the sound
Swept over me, above, around.
The tones seemed tangible, of such
Clear shape and substance, one could touch
Each golden chord, each silver note
That set the river wind afloat.
Young lovers smiled, as if to own
The night and music theirs alone;
Yet, like moths in arrested flight,
White heads gleamed faintly through the night.
Old mem'ries stirred, old loves walked there,
Wakened by some familiar air.
On tip-toe to the melodies,
Our fair flag danced upon the breeze
And every star shone bright and true
And every stripe red, white or blue.
O, lovely land! Where man may rest
Beside the river's shining breast
And hear in peace the wondrous way
The little music-makers play;
Where cool night winds and languid sails
Stir quietly, as daylight pales.

MYRA P. ELLIS

Everett

Evening Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 43,410
JUL 5 1966

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 29,084
JUL 5 1966

Sentinel (e)
FITCHBURG, Mass.
Circ. 20,016
JUL 5 1966

Item (e)
CLINTON, Mass.
Circ. 3,473
JUL 5 1966

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 66,826
JUL 5 1966

Fiedler to Miss 38th Esplanade Concert Tonight

Boston —(UPI)— For the first time since their beginning, an esplanade concert on the banks of the Charles River will not be under Arthur Fiedler's baton when the 38th season opens, tonight.

Fiedler's engagement as guest conductor at Robin Hood Dell in Philadelphia was rained out yesterday, he told his wife, and his contract calls for him to be on hand for a makeup concert tonight.

Fiedler, who is also conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, inaugurated the esplanade concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra players in 1929. He was "very disturbed" at being unable to be here tonight, a spokesman for the Esplanade Orchestra said.

The spokesman said Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor, would take the podium for the 8:30 p.m. opening.

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 14,186
JUL 5 1966

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 16,222
JUL 5 1966

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 9,367
JUL 5 1966

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 5 1966

Herald (e)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
Circ. 16,524
JUL 5 1966

Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 29,049
JUL 5 1966

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 146,612
JUL 5 1966

News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 9,291
JUL 5 1966

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,258
JUL 5 1966

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 102,118
JUL 5 1966

Enterprise
BROCKTON, Mass.
JUL 5 1966

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,836
JUL 5 1966

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,593
JUL 5 1966

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
JUL 5 1966

The Evening Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, Pa.
D. 672,235
JUL 5 1966

Dell Concert Can[illegible] By Threatened R[illegible]

The Robin Hood Dell [illegible] canceled last night [illegible] threatening weather [illegible] presented tonight.

Arthur Fiedler will [illegible] the all-George Gersh[illegible] gram.

The program originally [illegible] uled for tonight will be [illegible] ed tomorrow night. The [illegible] includes Mendelssohn's [illegible] rides Overture, Brahms' [illegible] phony No. 3 in F M[illegible] Shostakovich's Symp[illegible] 5.

Anshel Brusilow [illegible] duct.

Evening G[illegible]
BOSTON, M[illegible]
Circ. 145[illegible]
JUL 5

MUSIC ON T[illegible] area on the E[illegible] these groups.

30[illegible]

A record crowd of [illegible] tended the opening [illegible] concert of the Esplan[illegible] today and sprawled [illegible] cool grass under [illegible] are.

Some 1000 Boston [illegible] school children were [illegible] for the first time under [illegible] auspices of the system [illegible] erty funds have enab[illegible] elementary schools to [illegible] children to cultural [illegible] such as the 80-man or[illegible] booming out classics fr[illegible] Hatch.

Only two children's [illegible] certs have been schedul[illegible] season, reportedly becau[illegible] Boston Symphony. O[illegible] has been wooed away fr[illegible] Esplanade's free offerin[illegible] Tanglewood. The second [illegible] cert will be given [illegible] Wednesday at 10:15 a.m.

Another group of 15[illegible] dren from Roxbury's [illegible] man School wore a unif[illegible] maroon sweatshirts [illegible] oned with "Boston-H[illegible] They were brought by [illegible] Ann O'Neill, music su[illegible] of the joint program [illegible] the Boston school de[illegible] and Harvard School of [illegible] tion.

All settled onto the [illegible] and became ripples in [illegible] of children. The sh[illegible] the audience during [illegible] cert's opening number [illegible] ber's "Coronation [illegible] from his opera "The [illegible] gradually d[illegible] muffled wrestling [illegible] grass-throwing [illegible]

Not that the [illegible] interest. They [illegible]

195

The Evening Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 672,235
JUL 5 1966

Dell Concert Canceled By Threatened Rain

The Robin Hood Dell concert canceled last night because of threatening weather will be presented tonight.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the all-George Gershwin program.

The program originally scheduled for tonight will be presented tomorrow night. The program includes Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F Major and Shostakovich's Symphony No. 5.

Anshel Brusilow will conduct.

Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206
JULY 5 1966

Dell Concert Rescheduled

An all-George Gershwin concert at Robin Hood Dell was postponed because of threatening weather Monday night and was rescheduled for Tuesday, at 8:30 P. M.

The Gershwin concert will be conducted by Arthur Fiedler and will feature pianist Earl Wild.

Tuesday's scheduled concert at the Dell, an orchestra symphonic program conducted by Anshel Brusilow, was rescheduled for Wednesday night.

A children's concert at 10:30 A. M. Wednesday, to be conducted by William Smith, was not affected by the schedule change.

The Evening Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 672,235
JUL 6 1966

Rain Again Postpones Concert at Dell

The Robin Hood Dell's all-Gershwin program, Concert No. 7, cancelled last night because of threatening weather, will be presented Friday night.

Arthur Fiedler, who had been scheduled to conduct, will be replaced by Johnny Green.

Concert No. 8, an all-symphonic program with Anshel Brusilow conducting, will be presented tonight.

Concert No. 9, featuring singer Roberta Peters, will go on as scheduled tomorrow night.

Cancellation of Monday and last night's programs because of threatening weather caused the reshuffling of the dates.

PHILADELPHIA DAILY NEWS
D. 245,503 SAT. 182,801
JUL 6 1966

MUSIC ON THE GREEN — Among 3000 who crowded grassy area on the Esplanade today for first children's concert were these groups. Left, Mrs. George Bray of Weston and children, Susan, Tom and George. At right are sisters, Kathy and Karen O'Hara. (Edison Farrand photos)

3000 Children at Esplanade Concert

A record crowd of 3000 attended the opening children's concert of the Esplanade series today and sprawled on the cool grass under an arc of fog.

Some 1000 Boston public school children were on hand for the first time under official auspices of the system. Poverty funds havt enabled 18 elementary schools to expose children to cultural treats such as the 90-man orchestra booming out classics from the Hatch.

Only two children's concerts have been scheduled this season, reportedly because the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been wooed away from the Esplanade's free offerings to Tanglewood. The second concert will be given next Wednesday at 10:15 a.m.

Another group of 150 children from Roxbury's Boardman School wore a uniform of maroon sweatshirts emblazoned with "Boston-Harvard. They were brought by Miss Ann O'Neill, music supervisor of the joint program run by the Boston school department and Harvard School of Education.

All settled onto the field and became ripples in the sea of children. The stillness of the audience during the concert's opening number, Meyerber's "Coronation March" from his opera "The Prophet," gradually disintegrated into muffled wrestling matches and grass-throwing bouts.

Not that the children lost interest. They still had one ear cocked toward the orchestra. They sang a full-throated "Frere Jacques" with B.S.O. publicist Laning Humphrey as he introduced the four sections of the orchestra in a composition by William Kraft.

Wood folding chairs, which rented for 15 cents were outnumbered by small tots' strollers. Caramel-coated popcorn kept small hands and mouths occupied and kept hair-pulling to a minimum.

Mrs. Thomas Gauger of Brookline, wife of the Boston Symphony percussionist, shepherded seven children to the concert, including her two sets of twins, ages two and five. Among the seven were a neighbor's children, Stephen and Susie Gosdanien.

Altogether, it was a good world for small people. Concluding the Star Spangled Banner, mothers opened insulated picnic cartons and dished out sandwiches and paper cups of milk on stroller trays converted to outdoor lunch counters.

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
JUL 6 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 7 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct tonight's Esplanade Program by the Boston Pops Orchestra, which begins at 8:30 and is as follows:

Overture to "Egmont" — Beethoven
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 36 — Beethoven
I. Adagio motto
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro motto
The Star Spangled Banner
Concerto for Viola — Handel
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante ma non troppo
III. Alegro motto
Soloist: ROBERT KAROL
Suite from "The Water Music" — Handel-Harty
I. Allegro
II. Air
III. Allegro decise.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357
JUL 7 1966

Pops Concerts Under Way in Boston

The 38th season of free concerts by the Boston Pops Orchestra is under way at the Charles River Esplanade in Boston.

The series of nightly concerts under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson and Arthur Fiedler, founder and music director, are held at the Edward Hatch Memorial Shell on Storrow Drive.

Concerts begin at 8:30 every night through Saturday July 16, with the exception of Sunday, July 10 when there will be no concert. In addition, there will be a children's concert at 10:15 a.m. on July 13.

Concerts are free but contributions are welcome and should be mailed to the Esplanade Concerts Fund, New England Merchants National Bank, 513 Boylston St., Boston.

Programs Listed

Programs for this week are as follows: TONIGHT (Dickson) — Beethoven, "Egmont" Overture and Symphony No. 2; The Star - Spangled Banner; Handel, Viola Concerto; Handel - Harty, Suite from "Water Music." FRIDAY (Dickson) — Beethoven, Symphony No. 3; The Star - Spangled Banner; Tchaikovsky, Capriccio Italien. SATURDAY (Fiedler) — Mozart, "The Marriage of Figaro," Overture; Beethoven, Violin Concerto in D major; The Star - Spangled Banner; Rimsky - Korsakoff, Capriccio Espagnole; Berlioz, Rakoczy March. SUNDAY — No concert.

195

ing to conduct an
Before the shell
le model of paste-
bell were used to perties of the pro-he transformation
l bell to wooden hestra caused sev-rks to develop.

as the bass drum,
ond the first few nds, such as that o resound up and

t decided that the everse seating arrchestra. Fiedler, ucted, would turn s if to give a cue,
he time, point to re located on an-
ge. Only through nd quick thinking out in logical se-
verse order.
w minor difficul-proven of great emselves. Young nce to make solo es, and Symphony
ld not ordinarily o concertize, can son. (The Esplade up entirely of t for "name" play-
r the Pops season

nt, Schubert wafttting on the bank
g river lends in-nd atmosphere to Without enclosures, ows, the banks of
in fact, an audi-
afternoon affluent, er set foot inside equals in every eason subscriptions will and testament
ns. There are, ineficiaries of Arthur music and green

The Evening Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 672,235

JUL 5 1966

Dell Concert Canceled By Threatened Rain

The Robin Hood Dell concert canceled last night because of threatening weather will be presented tonight.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the all-George Gershwin program.

The program originally scheduled for tonight will be presented tomorrow night. The program includes Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F Major and Shostakovich's Symphony No. 5.

Anshel Brusilow will conduct.

Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206

JULY 5 1966

Dell Concert Rescheduled

An all-George Gershwin concert at Robin Hood Dell was postponed because of threatening weather Monday night and was rescheduled for Tuesday, at 8:30 P. M.

The Gershwin concert will be conducted by Arthur Fiedler and will feature pianist Earl Wild.

Tuesday's scheduled concert at the Dell, an orchestra symphonic program conducted by Anshel Brusilow, was rescheduled for Wednesday night.

A children's concert at 10:30 A. M. Wednesday, to be conducted by William Smith, was not affected by the schedule change.

The Evening Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 672,235

JUL 6 1966

Rain Again Postpones Concert at Dell

The Robin Hood Dell's all-Gershwin program, Concert No. 7, cancelled last night because of threatening weather, will be presented Friday night.

Arthur Fiedler, who had been scheduled to conduct, will be replaced by Johnny Green.

Concert No. 8, an all-symphonic program with Anshel Brusilow conducting, will be presented tonight.

Concert No. 9, featuring singer Roberta Peters, will go on as scheduled tomorrow night.

Cancellation of Monday and last night's programs because of threatening weather caused the reshuffling of the dates.

PHILADELPHIA DAILY
NEWS
D. 245,503 SAT. 182,801

JUL 6 1966

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838

JUL 6 1966

MUSIC ON THE GREEN—Among 3000 who crowded grassy area on the Esplanade today for first children's concert were these groups. Left, Mrs. George Bray of Weston and children, Susan, Tom and George. At right are sisters, Kathy and Karen O'Hara. (Edison Farrand photos)

3000 Children at Esplanade Concert

A record crowd of 3000 attended the opening children's concert of the Esplanade series today and sprawled on the cool grass under an arc of fog.

Some 1000 Boston public school children were on hand for the first time under official auspices of the system. Poverty funds havt enabled 18 elementary schools to expose children to cultural treats such as the 90-man orchestra booming out classics from the Hatch.

Only two children's concerts have been scheduled this season, reportedly because the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been wooed away from the Esplanade's free offerings to Tanglewood. The second concert will be given next Wednesday at 10:15 a.m.

Another group of 150 children from Roxbury's Boardman School wore a uniform of maroon sweatshirts emblazoned with "Boston-Harvard. They were brought by Miss Ann O'Neill, music supervisor of the joint program run by the Boston school department and Harvard School of Education.

All settled onto the field and became ripples in the sea of children. The stillness of the audience during the concert's opening number, Meyerber's "Coronation March" from his opera "The Prophet," gradually disintegrated into muffled wrestling matches and grass-throwing bouts.

Not that the children lost interest. They still had one ear cocked toward the orchestra. They sang a full-throated "Frere Jacques" with B.S.O. publicist Laning Humphrey as he introduced the four sections of the orchestra in a composition by William Kraft.

Wood folding chairs which rented for 15 cents were outnumbered by small tots' strollers. Caramel-coated popcorn kept small hands and mouths occupied and kept hair-pulling to a minimum.

Mrs. Thomas Gauger of Brookline, wife of the Boston Symphony percussionist, shepherded seven children to the concert, including her two sets of twins, ages two and five. Among the seven were a neighbor's children, Stephen and Susie Gosdanien.

Altogether, it was a good world for small people. Concluding the Star Spangled Banner, mothers opened insulated picnic cartons and dished out sandwiches and paper cups of milk on stroller trays converted to outdoor lunch counters.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 7 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct tonight's Esplanade Program by the Boston Pops Orchestra, which begins at 8:30 and is as follows:

Overture to "Egmont" — Beethoven
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 36 — Beethoven
I. Adagio motto
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro motto
The Star Spangled Banner
Concerto for Viola — Handel
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante ma non troppo
III. Alegro motto
Soloist: ROBERT KAROL
Suite from "The Water Music" — Handel-Harty
I. Allegro
II. Air
III. Allegro deciso.

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357

JUL 7 1966

Pops Concerts Under Way in Boston

The 38th season of free concerts by the Boston Pops Orchestra is under way at the Charles River Esplanade in Boston.

The series of nightly concerts under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson and Arthur Fiedler, founder and music director, are held at the Edward Hatch Memorial Shell on Storrow Drive.

Concerts begin at 8:30 every night through Saturday July 16, with the exception of Sunday, July 10 when there will be no concert. In addition, there will be a children's concert at 10:15 a.m. on July 13.

Concerts are free but contributions are welcome and should be mailed to the Esplanade Concerts Fund, New England Merchants National Bank, 513 Boylston St., Boston.

Programs Listed

Programs for this week are as follows: TONIGHT (Dickson) — Beethoven, "Egmont" Overture and Symphony No. 2; The Star - Spangled Banner; Handel, Viola Concerto; Handel - Harty, Suite from "Water Music." FRIDAY (Dickson) — Beethoven, Symphony No. 3; The Star - Spangled Banner; Tchaikovsky, Capriccio Italien. SATURDAY (Fiedler) — Mozart, "The Marriage of Figaro," Overture; Beethoven, Violin Concerto in D major; The Star - Spangled Banner; Rimsky - Korsakoff, Capriccio Espagnole; Berlioz, Rakoczy March. SUNDAY — No concert.

196

Fiedler Among the Missing as Esplanade Concerts Open

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The 38th season of Esplanade concerts in the Hatch Memorial Shell opened before an audience of somewhere between 12 and 15 thousand on Tuesday evening.

Harry Ellis Dickson conducted Tchaikovsky's No. 4 and the Farandole from Bizet's "L'Arlesienne" music; Joela Jones, an apparently gifted and vigorous young pianist, was soloist in Edward MacDowell's Piano Concerto No. 2, a pretty piece that always done backwards.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 7 1966

Dickson, not Fiedler? Yes, Dickson, not Fiedler. Arthur Fiedler, who founded the Esplanade series in 1929, was in Philadelphia conducting the opening concert of the Robin Hood Dell series. That was really supposed to happen Monday night. It seems there is something known in the profession as Fiedler weather, which means no rain, and being, like Ezra Taft Benson, confident of having things on his side, Fiedler accepted the Robin Hood Dell date, sure everything would be fine. It did, however, rain down there in Philadelphia people held the world's champion fire chief to his rain clause in the contract, and the excellent Dickson took charge here.

I meant among other things that he and Miss Jones had to strike up a hasty acquaintance for MacDowell's sake, and in the end everything came out splendidly. Dickson is a solidly competent professional and a man who, for comparatively little publicity and glory, has worked long and hard for Boston's musical life.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 7 1966

This was the first Esplanade opeing Fiedler had missed, and accidental though it was, it is hard not to read it as still another sign of the decline of interest in the series. Not the interest in the public, of course, for the audiences get larger and larger, and that is the point.

The Esplanade concerts are not addressed to sophisticated tastes, but there is a huge public for what they have to offer. Still, the seasons have been getting shorter and shorter. With the expansion of activities at Tanglewood it is possible only in a very limited way to count on Boston Symphony players as the nucleus for an Esplanade orchestra. While Symphony men offer the concert advantage of knowing the Esplanade repertory well, thus making it safe to give the concerts unrehearsed — and that is a financial necessity— I hope that the very limited availablity of Symphony players and thus of Mr. Dickson not to mention Mr. Fiedler, will not strangle a concert series that gives pleasure to so many.

Last year's aborted series by the Women's Symphony was a professional and ethical disaster—the players are still not all paid for their concerts in July 1965!—but it did represent an attempt to fill a gap in Boston's Summer musical life. We need something more seriously managed than that, but surely the resources exist, for over-employment is not a problem for most American musicians during the Summer.

One would like to see Boston business, for example, rise to the task of helping to finance such a series. The Esplanade concerts should not diminish further. As for the moment, the series continues nightly, Sunday excepted, through Saturday, July 16.

ESPLANADE CHILDREN'S CONCERT — Although the skies were gray, spirits were aglow with anticipation as children gathered at Hatch Memorial Shell on banks of Charles River for annual Esplanade Children's concert. A prim Miss (below), wearing a cute summer bonnet, is pensive as she watches the conductor about to signal with his baton opening number.

(Record American Photos, John Murphy)

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

WEDNESDAY at 8:30 P.M.
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 1, Op. 21 — Beethoven
I. Adagio molto: Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Menuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Adagio: Allegro molto e vivace
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Piano Concerto No. 1 in E flat major — Liszt
Soloist: JOELA JONES
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2 (D minor) — Liszt

'Lenora' Overture No. 3 Masterpiece

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—The "Leonora" overture No. 3 is a product of "Beethoven's middle period," wrote the late Moses Smith, the Boston American's music critic for a decade, in comparing this materpiece to an "opening symphonic movement, in sonata form, in which the composer makes reference to the ensuing drama."

"The 'Leonora' No. 3 was one of four attempts he made in trying to find a suitable over-asserted categorically that the ideal "Fidelio" overture "will never be heard and never was written."

Great historical interest is attached to Beethoven's first symphony (Op. 21, in C) because it is the first work in symphonic format by one who raised that grand design to such high development. Here is the work of a genius who had carefully studied the greater symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, but whose own individuality was too tenacious to be subverted by any outside influence.

The uncompromising attitude of this composer toward more orthodoxy even at this early period is manifested admirably even by his very opening chord. This is the chord of the dominant seventh, a dissonance and, to shock pedants even further, a dissonance not even identified with the movement's key.

There are ideas in each of the four movements which show strength and boldness of thought that could only be Beethoven's. The basic character of the symphony is joyous and animated; strength, gaiety and grace motivate Opus 21, in which the creator matriculated as a symphonist.

DAZZLING PIONEER

Franz Liszt, not only as a creative composer, but also as a pioneer among flamboyantly dazzling pianists, contributed by his keyboard prowess to the trend away from the wholeness of music towards mere ivory-and-ebony acrobatics over 88 keys, as effectively thrilling as a circus high-wire act, but stretched out of all proportion to music content. If we were to divide Liszt's compositions into two categories, it would be most convenient to call one kind the brilliant-spectacular and the other the poetic-spiritual.

The E-flat concerto, composed in 1948, is a work of extraordinary unity, for the energetic main theme, introduced at the outset by the orchestra, dominates the opening as well as the concluding segment. All other important themes also recur several times in the course of the work. The concerto has four segments, all relatively short and played without a break.

All in all, this minor masterpiece, which might reasonably be called a rhapsody in purple plush, contains much fine music which can stand on its own legs against any composition for piano and orchestra requiring less than 20 minutes for performance. Falling into the brilliant-spectacular category, "its octave cadenzas suggest the relentless dash of an eagle upon its prey," Philip Hale wrote ture for his opera 'Fidelio.' Finest of the four and one of the great works of orchestral literature, the third 'Leonora' is often heard as an entr'acte for 'Fidelio'; but its principal func-

Turn to Page 15, Col. 3

sterepice

Fiery, spirited, breath-taking in its climatic effects and dynamic in its rhythmic resources it has obvious audience appeal. It "sparkled, tinkled, warbled, soared, swooped and raced along so that it was almost impossible to resist the itching to get up and dance," wrote George Bernard Shaw in the London Star of Feb. 23, 1889, after hearing a oLndon Symphony performance under the guest conductorship of George Henschel, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first music director. Its first BSO presentation was on Jan. 25, 1884, and it has ben good Listening ever since.

196

Fiedler Among the Missing as Esplanade Concerts Open

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The 38th season of Esplanade concerts in the Hatch Memorial Shell opened before an audience of somewhere between 12 and 15 thousand on Tuesday evening.

Harry Ellis Dickson conducted Tchaikovsky's No. 4 and the Farandole from Bizet's "L'Arlesienne" music; Joela Jones, an apparently gifted and vigorous young pianist, was soloist in Edward MacDowell's Piano Concerto No. 2, a pretty piece that always done backwards.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 7 1966

Dickson, not Fiedler? Yes, Dickson, not Fiedler. Arthur Fiedler, who founded the Esplanade series in 1929, was in Philadelphia conducting the opening concert of the Robin Hood Dell series. That was really supposed to happen Monday night. It seems there is something known in the profession as Fiedler weather, which means no rain, and being, like Ezra Taft Benson, confident of having things on his side, Fiedler accepted the Robin Hood Dell date, sure everything would be fine. It did, however, rain down there in Philadelphia people held the world's champion fire chief to his rain clause in the contract, and the excellent Dickson took charge here.

I meant among other things that he and Miss Jones had to strike up a hasty acquaintance for MacDowell's sake, and in the end everything came out splendidly. Dickson is a solidly competent professional and a man who, for comparatively little publicity and glory, has worked long and hard for Boston's musical life.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 7 1966

This was the first Esplanade opeing Fielder had missed, and accidental though it was, it is hard not to read it as still another sign of the decline of interest in the series. Not the interest in the public, of course, for the audiences get larger and larger, and that is the point.

The Esplanade concerts are not addressed to sophisticated tastes, but there is a huge public for what they have to offer. Still, the seasons have been getting shorter and shorter. With the expansion of activities at Tanglewood it is possible only in a very limited way to count on Boston Symphony players as the nucleus for an Esplanade orchestra. While Symphony men offer the concert advantage of knowing the Esplanade repertory well, thus making it safe to give the concerts unrehearsed — and that is a financial necessity— I hope that the very limited availablity of Symphony players and thus of Mr. Dickson not to mention Mr. Fiedler, will not strangle a concert series that gives pleasure to so many.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 7 1966

Last year's aborted series by the Women's Symphony was a professional and ethical disaster—the players are still not all paid for their concerts in July 1965!—but it did represent an attempt to fill a gap in Boston's Summer musical life. We need something more seriously managed than that, but surely the resources exist, for over-employment is not a problem for most American musicians during the Summer.

One would like to see Boston business, for example, rise to the task of helping to finance such a series. The Esplanade concerts should not diminish further. As for the moment, the series continues nightly, Sunday excepted, through Saturday, July 16.

ESPLANADE CHILDREN'S CONCERT — Although the skies were gray, spirits were aglow with anticipation as children gathered at Hatch Memorial Shell on banks of Charles River for annual Esplanade Children's concert. A prim Miss (below), wearing a cute summer bonnet, is pensive as she watches the conductor about to signal with his baton opening number.

(Record American Photos, John Murphy)

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

WEDNESDAY at 8:30 P.M.
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 1, Op. 21 — Beethoven
I. Adagio molto: Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Menuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Adagio: Allegro molto e vivace
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Piano Concerto No. 1 in E flat major — Liszt
Soloist: JOELA JONES
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2 (D minor) — Liszt

'Lenora' Overture No. 3 Masterpiece

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—The "Leonora" overture No. 3 is a product of "Beethoven's middle period," wrote the late Moses Smith, the Boston American's music critic for a decade, in comparing this materpiece to an "opening symphonic movement, in sonata form, in which the composer makes reference to the ensuing drama."

"The 'Leonora' No. 3 was one of four attempts he made in trying to find a suitable overture for his opera 'Fidelio.' Finest of the four and one of the great works of orchestral literature, the third 'Leonora' is often heard as an entr'acte for 'Fidelio'; but its principal func-

Turn to Page 16 Col. 3

asserted categorically that the ideal "Fidelio" overture "will never be heard and never was written."

Great historical interest is attached to Beethoven's first symphony (Op. 21, in C) because it is the first work in symphonic format by one who raised that grand design to such high development. Here is the work of a genius who had carefully studied the greater symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, but whose own individuality was too tenacious to be subverted by any outside influence.

The uncompromising attitude of this composer toward more orthodoxy even at this early period is manifested admirably even by his very opening chord. This is the chord of the dominant seventh, a dissonance and, to shock pedants even further, a dissonance not even identified with the movement's key.

There are ideas in each of the four movements which show strength and boldness of thought that could only be Beethoven's. The basic character of the symphony is joyous and animated; strength, gaiety and grace motivate Opus 21, in which the creator matriculated as a symphonist.

DAZZLING PIONEER

Franz Liszt, not only as a creative composer, but also as a pioneer among flamboyantly dazzling pianists, contributed by his keyboard prowess to the trend away from the wholeness of music towards mere ivory-and-ebony acrobatics over 88 keys, as effectively thrilling as a circus high-wire act, but stretched out of all proportion to music content. If we were to divide Liszt's compositions into two categories, it would be most convenient to call one kind the brilliant-spectacular and the other the poetic-spiritual.

The E-flat concerto, composed in 1948, is a work of extraordinary unity, for the energetic main theme, introduced at the outset by the orchestra, dominates the opening as well as the concluding segment. All other important themes also recur several times in the course of the work. The concerto has four segments, all relatively short and played without a break.

All in all, this minor masterpiece, which might reasonably be called a rhapsody in purple plush, contains much fine music which can stand on its own legs against any composition for piano and orchestra requiring less than 20 minutes for performance. Falling into the brilliant-spectacular category, "its octave cadenzas suggest the remorseless dash of an eagle upon its prey," Philip Hale wrote

'sterepice

Fiery, spirited, breath-taking in its climatic effects and dynamic in its rhythmic resources, it has obvious audience appeal. It "sparkled, tinkled, warbled, soared, swooped and raced along so that it was almost impossible to resist the itching to get up and dance," wrote George Bernard Shaw in the London Star of Feb. 23, 1889, after hearing a oLndon Symphony performance under the guest conductorship of George Henschel, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first music director. Its first BSO presentation was on Jan. 25, 1884, and it has ben good Listening ever since.

TIGHT BINDING

96

Fiedler Among the Missing as Esplanade Concerts Open

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The 38th season of Esplanade concerts in the Hatch Memorial Shell opened before an audience of sbmewhere between 12 and 15 thousand on Tuesday evening.

Harry Ellis Dickson conducted Tchaikovsky's No. 4 and the Farandole from Bizet's "L'Arlesienne" music; Joela Jones, an apparently gifted and vigorous young pianist, was soloist in Edward MacDowell's Piano Concerto No. 2, a pretty piece that always done backwards.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 7 1966

Dickson, not Fiedler? Yes, Dickson, not Fiedler. Arthur Fiedler, who founded the Esplanade series in 1929, was in Philadelphia conducting the opening concert of the Robin Hood Dell series. That was really supposed to happen Monday night. It seems there is something known in the profession as Fiedler weather, which means no rain, and being, like Ezra Taft Benson, confident of having things on his side, Fiedler accepted the Robin Hood Dell date, sure everything would be fine. It did, however, rain down there in Philadelphia people held the world's champion fire chief to his rain clause in the contract, and the excellent Dickson took charge here.

It meant among other things that he and Miss Jones had to strike up a hasty acquaintance for MacDowell's sake, and in the end everything came out splendidly. Dickson is a solidly competent professional and a man who, for comparatively little publicity and glory, has worked long and hard for Boston's musical life.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 7 1966

This was the first Esplanade opeing Fielder had missed, and accidental though it was, it is hard not to read it as still another sign of the decline of interest in the series. Not the interest in the public, of course, for the audiences get larger and larger, and that is the point.

The Esplanade concerts are not addressed to sophisticated tastes, but there is a huge public for what they have to offer. Still, the seasons have been getting shorter and shorter. With the expansion of activities at Tanglewood it is possible only in a very limited way to count on Boston Symphony players as the nucleus for an Esplanade orchestra. While Symphony men offer the concert advantage of knowing the Esplanade repertory well, thus making it safe to give the concerts unrehearsed — and that is a financial necessity— I hope that the very limited availablity of Symphony players and thus of Mr. Dickson not to mention Mr. Fiedler, will not strangle a concert series that gives pleasure to so many.

Last year's aborted series by the Women's Symphony was a professional and ethical disaster—the players are still not all paid for their concerts in July 1965!—but it did represent an attempt to fill a gap in Boston's Summer musical life. We need something more seriously managed than that, but surely the resources exist, for over-employment is not a problem for most American musicians during the Summer.

One would like to see Boston business, for example, rise to the task of helping to finance such a series. The Esplanade concerts should not diminish further. As for the moment, the series continues nightly, Sunday excepted, through Saturday, July 16.

ESPLANADE CHILDREN'S CONCERT — Although the skies were gray, spirits were aglow with anticipation as children gathered at Hatch Memorial Shell on banks of Charles River for annual Esplanade Children's concert. A prim Miss (below), wearing a cute summer bonnet, is pensive as she watches the conductor about to signal with his baton opening number.

(Record American Photos, John Murphy)

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

WEDNESDAY at 8:30 P.M.
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 1, Op. 21 — Beethoven
I. Adagio molto: Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Menuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Adagio: Allegro molto e vivace
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Piano Concerto No. 1 in E flat major — Liszt
Soloist: JOELA JONES
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2 (D minor) — Liszt

'Lenora' Overture No. 3 Masterpiece

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—The "Leonora" overture No. 3 is a product of "Beethoven's middle period," wrote the late Moses Smith, the Boston American's music critic for a decade, in comparing this materpiece to an "opening symphonic movement, in sonata form, in which the composer makes reference to the ensuing drama."

"The 'Leonora' No. 3 was one of four attempts he made in trying to find a suitable overture for his opera 'Fidelio.' Finest of the four and one of the great works of orchestral literature, the third 'Leonora' is often heard as an entr'acte for 'Fidelio'; but its principal func-

Turn to Page 16 Col. 3

asserted categorically that the ideal "Fidelio" overture "will never be heard and never was written."

Great historical interest is attached to Beethoven's first symphony (Op. 21, in C) because it is the first work in symphonic format by one who raised that grand design to such high development. Here is the work of a genius who had carefully studied the greater symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, but whose own individuality was too tenacious to be subverted by any outside influence.

The uncompromising attitude of this composer toward more orthodoxy even at this early period is manifested admirably even by his very opening chord. This is the chord of the dominant seventh, a dissonance and, to shock pedants even further, a dissonance not even identified with the movement's key.

There are ideas in each of the four movements which show strength and boldness of thought that could only be Beethoven's. The basic character of the symphony is joyous and animated; strength, gaiety and grace motivate Opus 21, in which the creator matriculated as a symphonist.

DAZZLING PIONEER

Franz Liszt, not only as a creative composer, but also as a pioneer among flamboyantly dazzling pianists, contributed by his keyboard prowess to the trend away from the wholeness of music towards mere ivory-and-ebony acrobatics over 88 keys, as effectively thrilling as a circus high-wire act, but stretched out of all proportion to music content. If we were to divide Liszt's compositions into two categories, it would be most convenient to call one kind the brilliant-spectacular and the other the poetic-spiritual.

The E-flat concerto, composed in 1948, is a work of extraordinary unity, for the energetic main theme, introduced at the outset by the orchestra, dominates the opening as well as the concluding segment. All other important themes also recur several times in the course of the work. The concerto has four segments, all relatively short and played without a break.

All in all, this minor masterpiece, which might reasonably be called a rhapsody in purple plush, contains much fine music which can stand on its own legs against any composition for piano and orchestra requiring less than 20 minutes for performance. Falling into the brilliant-spectacular category, "its octave cadenzas suggest the remorseless dash of an eagle upon its prey," Philip Hale wrote

sterepice

Fiery, spirited, breath-taking in its climatic effects and dynamic in its rhythmic resources it has obvious audience appeal. It "sparkled, tinkled, warbled, soared, swooped and raced along so that it was almost impossible to resist the itching to get up and dance," wrote George Bernard Shaw in the London Star of Feb. 23, 1889, after hearing a oLndon Symphony performance under the guest conductorship of George Henschel, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first music director. Its first BSO presentation was on Jan. 25, 1884, and it has ben good Listening ever since.

TIGHT BINDING

96

Fiedler Among the Missing as Esplanade Concerts Open

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The 38th season of Esplanade concerts in the Hatch Memorial Shell opened before an audience of somewhere between 12 and 15 thousand on Tuesday evening.

Harry Ellis Dickson conducted Tchaikovsky's No. 4 and the Farandole from Bizet's "L'Arlesienne" music; Joela Jones, an apparently gifted and vigorous young pianist, was soloist in Edward MacDowell's Piano Concerto No. 2, a pretty piece that always done backwards.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JUL 7 1966

Dickson, not Fiedler? Yes, Dickson, not Fiedler. Arthur Fiedler, who founded the Esplanade series in 1929, was in Philadelphia conducting the opening concert of the Robin Hood Dell series. That was really supposed to happen Monday night. It seems there is something known in the profession as Fiedler weather, which means no rain, and being, like Ezra Taft Benson, confident of having things on his side, Fiedler accepted the Robin Hood Dell date, sure everything would be fine. It did, however, rain down there in Philadelphia people held the world's champion fire chief to his rain clause in the contract, and the excellent Dickson took charge here.

It meant among other things that he and Miss Jones had to strike up a hasty acquaintance for MacDowell's sake, and in the end everything came out splendidly. Dickson is a solidly competent professional and a man who, for comparatively little publicity and glory, has worked long and hard for Boston's musical life.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 7 1966

This was the first Esplanade opeing Fielder had missed, and accidental though it was, it is hard not to read it as still another sign of the decline of interest in the series. Not the interest in the public, of course, for the audiences get larger and larger, and that is the point.

The Esplanade concerts are not addressed to sophisticated tastes, but there is a huge public for what they have to offer. Still, the seasons have been getting shorter and shorter. With the expansion of activities at Tanglewood it is possible only in a very limited way to count on Boston Symphony players as the nucleus for an Esplanade orchestra. While Symphony men offer the concert advantage of knowing the Esplanade repertory well, thus making it safe to give the concerts unrehearsed — and that is a financial necessity— I hope that the very limited availablity of Symphony players and thus of Mr. Dickson not to mention Mr. Fiedler, will not strangle a concert series that gives pleasure to so many.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 7 1966

Last year's aborted series by the Women's Symphony was a professional and ethical disaster—the players are still not all paid for their concerts in July 1965!—but it did represent an attempt to fill a gap in Boston's Summer musical life. We need something more seriously managed than that, but surely the resources exist, for over-employment is not a problem for most American musicians during the Summer.

One would like to see Boston business, for example, rise to the task of helping to finance such a series. The Esplanade concerts should not diminish further. As for the moment, the series continues nightly, Sunday excepted, through Saturday, July 16.

ESPLANADE CHILDREN'S CONCERT — Although the skies were gray, spirits were aglow with anticipation as children gathered at Hatch Memorial Shell on banks of Charles River for annual Esplanade Children's concert. A prim Miss (below), wearing a cute summer bonnet, is pensive as she watches the conductor about to signal with his baton opening number.

(Record American Photos, John Murphy)

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

WEDNESDAY at 8:30 P.M.
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 1, Op. 21 — Beethoven
I. Adagio molto: Allegro con brio
II. Andante cantabile con moto
III. Menuetto: Allegro molto e vivace
IV. Adagio: Allegro molto e vivace
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Piano Concerto No. 1 in E flat major — Liszt
Soloist: JOELA JONES
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2 (D minor) — Liszt

'Lenora' Overture No. 3 Masterpiece

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—The "Leonora" overture No. 3 is a product of "Beethoven's middle period," wrote the late Moses Smith, the Boston American's music critic for a decade, in comparing this materpiece to an "opening symphonic movement, in sonata form, in which the composer makes reference to the ensuing drama."

"The 'Leonora' No. 3 was one of four attempts he made in trying to find a suitable overture for his opera 'Fidelio.' Finest of the four and one of the great works of orchestral literature, the third 'Leonora' is often heard as an entr'acte for 'Fidelio'; but its principal func-word on the subject when he asserted categorically that the ideal "Fidelio" overture "will never be heard and never was written."

Turn to Page 16 Col. 3

Great historical interest is attached to Beethoven's first symphony (Op. 21, in C) because it is the first work in symphonic format by one who raised that grand design to such high development. Here is the work of a genius who had carefully studied the greater symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, but whose own individuality was too tenacious to be subverted by any outside influence.

The uncompromising attitude of this composer toward more orthodoxy even at this early period is manifested admirably even by his very opening chord. This is the chord of the dominant seventh, a dissonance and, to shock pedants even further, a dissonance not even identified with the movement's key.

There are ideas in each of the four movements which show strength and boldness of thought that could only be Beethoven's. The basic character of the symphony is joyous and animated; strength, gaiety and grace motivate Opus 21, in which the creator matriculated as a symphonist.

DAZZLING PIONEER

Franz Liszt, not only as a creative composer, but also as a pioneer among flamboyantly dazzling pianists, contributed by his keyboard prowess to the trend away from the wholeness of music towards mere ivory-and-ebony acrobatics over 88 keys, as effectively thrilling as a circus high-wire act, but stretched out of all proportion to music content. If we were to divide Liszt's compositions into two categories, it would be most convenient to call one kind the brilliant-spectacular and the other the poetic-spiritual.

The E-flat concerto, composed in 1948, is a work of extraordinary unity, for the energetic main theme, introduced at the outset by the orchestra, dominates the opening as well as the concluding segment. All other important themes also recur several times in the course of the work. The concerto has four segments, all relatively short and played without a break.

All in all, this minor masterpiece, which might reasonably be called a rhapsody in purple plush, contains much fine music which can stand on its own legs against any composition for piano and orchestra requiring less than 20 minutes for performance. Falling into the brilliant-spectacular category, "its octave cadenzas suggest the remorseless dash of an eagle upon its prey," Philip Hale wrote

sterepice

Fiery, spirited, breath-taking in its climatic effects and dynamic in its rhythmic resources, it has obvious audience appeal. It 'sparkled', tinkled, warbled, soared, swooped and raced along so that it was almost impossible to resist the itching to get up and dance," wrote George Bernard Shaw in the London Star of Feb. 23, 1889, after hearing a oLndon Symphony performance under the guest conductorship of George Henschel, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first music director. Its first BSO presentation was on Jan. 25, 1884 and it has ben good Listening ever since.

The ARTS

TIGHT BINDING

96

Fiedler Among the Missing as Esplanade Concerts Open

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The 38th season of Esplanade concerts in the Hatch Memorial Shell opened before an audience of somewhere between 12 and 15 thousand on Tuesday evening.

Harry Ellis Dickson conducted Tchaikovsky's No. 4 and the Farandole from Bizet's "L'Arlesienne" music; Joela Jones, an apparently gifted and vigorous young pianist, was soloist in Edward MacDowell's Piano Concerto No. 2, a pretty piece that always done backwards.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 7 1966

Dickson, not Fiedler? Yes, Dickson, not Fiedler. Arthur Fiedler, who founded the Esplanade series in 1929, was in Philadelphia conducting the opening concert of the Robin Hood Dell series. That was really supposed to happen Monday night. It seems there is something known in the profession as Fiedler weather, which means no rain, and being, like Ezra Taft Benson, confident of having things on his side, Fiedler accepted the Robin Hood Dell date, sure everything would be fine. It did, however, rain down there in Philadelphia people held the world's champion fire chief to his rain clause in the contract, and the excellent Dickson took charge here.

It meant among other things that he and Miss Jones had to strike up a hasty acquaintance for MacDowell's sake, and in the end everything came out splendidly. Dickson is a solidly competent professional and a man who, for comparatively little publicity and glory, has worked long and hard for Boston's musical way to c life.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 7 1966

This was the first Esplanade opeing Fiedler had missed, and accidental th it was, it is hard no it as still anothe decline of in ies. Not public ences and tha

The Es not addres tastes, but public for w offer. Still, t been getting shorter. With th activities at Tan possible only in a year's aborted series by men's Symphony was ssional and ethical he players are still for their concerts but it did rep- empt to fill a n's Summer need some- ly managed ly the re- over-em- blem for ins dur-ton business, for example, rise to the task of helping to finance such a series. The Esplanade concerts should not diminish further. As for the moment, the series continues nightly, Sunday excepted, through Saturday, July 16.

Symph

ESPLANADE CHILDREN'S CONCERT — Although the skies were gray, spirits were aglow with anticipation as children gathered at Hatch Memorial Shell on banks of Charles River for annual Esplanade Children's concert. A prim Miss (below), wearing a cute summer bonnet, is pensive as she watches the conductor about to signal with his baton opening number.

(Record American Photos, John Murphy)

NAME ADDRESS
$10 FOXBORO RACEWAY
$10 WONDERLAND PARK
$20 ROCKINGHAM
This is my entry number
Drop a circle around the post position you select to win. Mind Betty, to win the most of every dollar on every race, you must check ONLY ONE each to be eligible.
For Races of Saturday, July 9 or 16
On July 9, change Suffolk Downs to Rockingham Park.
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

'Leonora' No. 3 Masterepice

Continued from Back Page

tion is to serve as one of the staples of the symphonic repertoire.

"The 'Leonora' No. 3 is a most dramatic composition, the excitement of which is intensified with at least a synopsis of the drama of 'Fidelio'," he advised. The third 'Leonora' overture was called by Wagner a complete drama in itself and it has become among Beethoven's more popular compositions as an independent concert piece.

ROLLAND'S ADVICE

As to whether the second or third overture is preferable, Romain Rolland's advice should be heeded: "Let us prefer them both!" Perhaps Olin Downes, music critic for the now-defunct Boston Post, said the lastt word on the subject when he asserted categorically that the ideal "Fidelio" overture "will never be heard and never was written."

Great historical interest is attached to Beethoven's first symphony (Op. 21, in C) because it is the first work in symphonic format by one who raised that grand design to such high development. Here is the work of a genius who had carefully studied the greater symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, but whose own individuality was too tenacious to be subverted by any outside influence.

The uncompromising attitude of this composer toward more orthodoxy even at this early period is manifested admirably even by his very opening chord. This is the chord of the dominant seventh, a dissonance and, to shock pedants even further, a dissonance not even identified with the movement's key.

There are ideas in each of the four movements which show strength and boldness of thought that could only be Beethoven's. The basic character of the symphony is joyous and animated; strength, gaiety and grace motivate Opus 21, in which the creator matriculated as a symphonist.

DAZZLING PIONEER

Franz Liszt, not only as a creative composer, but also as a pioneer among flamboyantly dazzling pianists, contributed by his keyboard prowess to the trend away from the wholeness of music towards mere ivory-and-ebony acrobatics over 88 keys, as effectively thrilling as a circus high-wire act, but stretched out of all proportion to music content. If we were to divide Liszt's compositions into two categories, it would be most convenient to call one kind the brilliant-spectacular and the other the poetic-spiritual.

The E-flat concerto, composed in 1948, is a work of extraordinary unity, for the energetic main theme, introduced at the outset by the orchestra, dominates the opening as well as the concluding segment. All other important themes also recur several times in the course of the work. The concerto has four segments, all relatively short and played without a break.

All in all, this minor masterpiece, which might reasonably be called a rhapsody in purple plush, contains much fine music which can stand on its own legs against any composition for piano and orchestra requiring less than 20 minutes for performance. Falling into the brilliant-spectacular category, "its octave cadenzas suggest the remorseless dash of an eagle upon its prey," Philip Hale wrote (1936) in his "Boston Symphony Programme Notes."

2D MOST FAMOUS

Liszt also composed 15 Hungarian rhapsodies for piano solo four more were published posthumously) wherein he incorporated the melodies, rhythms, lush sentiment and passionate lament of Hungarian gypsy music. Half a dozen of them were arranged for orchestral performance by the composer, Franz Dopler and, in the case of the Bostonian's favorite, by Mueller-Berghaus.

Perhaps this "Second Hungarian Rhapsody" is the most famous of all, and among Liszt's better-known works.

Fiery, spirited, breath-taking in its climatic effects and dynamic in its rhythmic resources, it has obvious audience appeal. It "sparkled, tinkled, warbled, soared, swooped and raced along so that it was almost impossible to resist the itching to get up and dance," wrote George Bernard Shaw in the London Star of Feb. 23, 1889, after hearing a oLndon Symphony performance under the guest conductorship of George Henschel, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first music director. Its first BSO presentation was on Jan. 25, 1884, and it has ben good Listening ever since.

197

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JUL 7 1966

Children's Turn At Esplanade

An ear cocked toward the orchestra and a hand in the popcorn box, an army of Boston small ones —approximately 3000—attended the opening children's concert of the Esplanade series Wednesday.

It was a time for lazing on the grass, muffled wrestling matches, and even joining in on a chorus of "Frere Jacques."

The Boston Symphony's next cultural treat for children will be given next Wednesday at 10:15 a.m. at the Hatch Shell.

UNDER THE SUN at Wednesday's Esplanade children's concert were Shawn Allen (right) of Needham, who mixed music with popcorn, and Carla Stock (below) of Danvers, intrigued by a composition. (Edison Farrand Photo)

The ARTS

Lending an Ear to Music At Esplanade Youth Concert

(Herald Photos by James O'Callaghan)

FIRST CHILDREN'S ESPLANADE CONCERT, attended by thousands of youngsters, parents and teachers gets under way (left) as Harry Ellis Dickson, conductor, lifts baton. Sister St. Stephen of Bayview, Me., below, watches with Renee Robinson, 7, and Mary Strong, 5, both of Boston, while at bottom, right Susan Bray, 6 months, of Weston, listens intently to her first concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 7 1966

TIGHT BINDING

198

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 8 1966

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

THURSDAY AT 8:30 P. M.
Overture to "Egmont" Beethoven
Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36 Beethoven
I. Adagio molto
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Concerto for Viola in B minor Handel-Casadesus
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante ma non troppo
III. Allegro molto
Soloist: ROBERT KAROL
Suite from "The Water Music" Handel-Harty
I. Allegro
II. Air
III. Allegro deciso

'Egmont' Overture Written for Drama

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—"The 'Egmont' overture was part of the incidental music (nine numbers in all) Beethoven wrote for Goethe's drama of that title," according to Moses Smith, for 10 years the Boston American's music critic. "It is important to recall that Egmont was a Dutch revolutionary hero. Beethoven, no mean rebel himself, may well have identified himself with Egmont in his own struggle for artistic freedom."

This overture in effect is a symphonic poem in miniature, far ahead of its time, concentrating upon the historical significance of the Goethe tragedy rather than its human relationships. There are three segments, representing, in turn, oppression, conflict and victory.

The first part has been described as "the stern command

Turn to Page 2, Column 1

Symphony Programme Notes, yet, "never was Beethoven more wretched physically and mentally than when he wrote this symphony, music that breathes forth serenity, beauty, gayety and courage."

It is far removed from the classical symphony of his predecessors and to the music-loving Viennese who heard it there for the first time it seemed strangely bold and even repellent in its novelty. One contemporary critic declaimed that Beethoven's "anxiety to achieve something novel and surprising was much too evident." Others condemned it as too long (half an hour), too wild and too bizarre.

HANDEL'S FORMAT

Well labeled by Camille Bellaigue, French critic, as "an heroic lie," the second symphony is full of serenity and courage in the face of the composer's incipient deafness. There even is gaiety and ebullience as the work ends with a spirited rondo using a bold, almost rough, good-natured

When George Frederick Handel (he Anglicized his names) emigrated from Germany to England, where he lived and worked the rest of his life, he brought with him a fully developed system of musical composition along Continental lines. He was particularly adept in the concerted format — pitting a soloist or several instruments against a small orchestra for antiphonal effects.

Certainly the viola was not a customary solo instrument in Handel's time, so the concerto for viola to be played by Robert Karol can not be regarded as an original Handelian creation. We do know that it presumably was discovered and worked out from Handel's melody of the solo part and a sketchy figured bass (perhaps to be played on an organ) by Henri Casadesus, uncle of the celebrated French pianist and founder of the Parisian "Societe des Instruments Anciens."

"The 'Water Music' is a good example of Handel's amalgam of varying musical influences," according to Moses Smith. "It was composed for a concert on the Thames for George I and consisted originally of 21 pieces played by an orchestra on a barge near the one containing the royal party. From these 21 pieces Sir Hamilton Harty extracted and arranged a suite of six pieces."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 8 1966

Salute to Rain At Esplanade

Thursday night's rain receivxed a fittting salute at the Esplanade concert when the orchestra capped the evening with a suite from Handel's Water Music.

The suite followed several outbursts, none of which dispersed the enthusiastic audience of 5000.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 8 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct tonight's Esplanade Program at the Hatch Memorial Shell by the Charles River, which begins at 8:30 and is as follows:

Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica"
"Eroica," I, Allegro con brio; II, Marcia funebre: adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto
The Star Spangled Banner
"Capriccio Italien. Tchaikovsky.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 9 1966

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

FRIDAY AT 8:30 P. M
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major "Eroica" Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Capriccio Italien Tchaikovsky

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 9 1966

Esplanade Program

Arthur Fiedler returns to conduct tonight's Esplanade Concert by the Boston Pops Orchestra. The 8:30 program is as follows:

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Violin Concerto in D minor, Op. 61
I. Allegro, ma non troppo
II. Larghetto
III. Rondo Beethoven
Soloist—Roger Shermont
The Star Spangled Banner
*Capriccio Espagnole, Op. 34 Rimsky-Korsakov
Alborada—Variations—Alborada—Gypsy Scene—Fandango of the Asturias
*Rakoczy March Berlioz

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 11 1966

Esplanade Program

Arthur Fiedler makes his last local appearance with the Boston Pops this season at tonight's Esplanade Concert, which begins at 8:30 and is as follows:

Overture to "Oberon" Weber
Symphony No. 8, in B minor "Unfinished" Schubert
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto
The Star-Spangled Banner
Piano Concerto No. 2, in A maior Liszt
Soloist: Samuel Lipman
Les Preludes, Symphonic Poem Liszt

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 286,021
JUL 10 1966

Esplanade Concerts By Boston Pops In Final Week

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the first of the final-week Boston Pops programs on the Esplanade at Hatch Memorial Shell. Then he will turn over the podium to Harry Ellis Dickson, who will finish the season for the Pops.

All evening programs will be at 8:30, with the children's program Wednesday morning at 10:15.

MONDAY
Overture to "Oberon" Weber
Symphony No. 8, in B minor "Unfinished" Schubert
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto
The Star-Spangled Banner
Piano Concerto No. 2, in A major Liszt
Soloist: Samuel Lipman
Les Preludes, Symphonic Poem Liszt

TUESDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture to "Fidelio" Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Romance No. 2 in F, Op. 50, for Violin Beethoven
Havanaise for Violin Saint-Saens
Soloist George Zazofsky
Invitation to the Dance Weber

WEDNESDAY MORNING
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Children's Program
Overture to "Light Cavalry" Suppe
Andante and Finale, from Symphony No. 94 in G major, "Surprise" Haydn
First Movement from Piano Concerto, K. 459 Mozart
Soloist: Jeanne C. Lee
Waltz of the Flowers, from "The Nutcracker" Tchaikovsky
On the Trail, from "The Grand Canyon Suite" Grofe
Golden Age Polka Shostakovich
Mosquito Dance White
76 Trombones from "The Music Man" Willson
The Star-Spangled Banner

WEDNESDAY NIGHT
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture to "Don Giovanni" Mozart
Symphony No. 4, in B flat major, Op. 60 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
The Animals' Carnival (Grand Zoological Fantasia) Saint-Saens
Sailor's Dance, from "The Red Poppy" Gliere

THURSDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Symphonie Espagnole, Op. 21 Lalo
Soloist: Fredy Ostrovsky
French Military March Saint-Saens

FRIDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra Gershwin
Soloist: Anthony Paratore
Strike Up the Band Gershwin-Green

SATURDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Concerto No. 5 in A, K. 219 Mozart
Soloist: John Korman
Voices of Spring, Waltzes Strauss
The Prayer of Transksgiving Valerius-Kremser

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
JUL 10 1966

The Esplanade Concerts

The programs have been announced for the second week of the 38th season of Esplanade concerts in the Hatch Memorial shell. All evening concerts are at 8:30, and while they are free of charge, contributions are welcomed.

MONDAY (Arthur Fiedler conducting): Weber, ~~Oberon~~ Overture; Schubert, Unfinished Symphony; Liszt, Piano Concerto No. 2 in A, Samuel Lipman soloist; Liszt, Les Preludes.

TUESDAY (Harry Ellis Dickson conducting): Beethoven, Fidelio Overture and Fifth Symphony; Beethoven, Romance in F, and Saint-Saens, Havanaise, both with George Zazofsky, violin soloist; Weber, Invitation to the Dance.

WEDNESDAY (Dickson): Mozart, Don Giovanni Overture; Beethoven, Fourth Symphony; Saint-Saens, Carnival of Animals; Gliere, Sailors Dance.

THURSDAY (Dickson): Beethoven, Pastoral Symphony; Lalo, Symphonie Espagnole, Fredy Ostrovsky as violin soloist; Saint-Saens, French Military March.

FRIDAY (Dickson): Beethoven, Seventh Symphony; Gershwin, Piano Concerto, with Anthony Paratore as soloist; Gershwin-Green, Strike Up the Band.

SATURDAY (Dickson): Closing program of the season: Beethoven, Eighth Symphony; Mozart, Violin Concerto in A, John Korman soloist; Strauss, Voices of Spring; Valerius-Kremser, Prayer of Thanksgiving.

The Star Spangled Banner is played at the beginning of the second half of each concert.

In addition, Wednesday morning at 10:15, Harry Ellis Dickson will lead a children's program including Suppe, Light Cavalry Overture; Andante and finale from Haydn's Surprise Symphony; Mozart, Piano Concerto in B flat, K.450, with Jeanne C. Lee as soloist, and music by Tchaikovsky, Grofe, Shostakovich, White and Willson.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 12 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson conducts the Boston Pops Esplanade Concert tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River.

Overture to "Fidelio" Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven
The Star Spangled Banner
Romance No. 2 in F, Op. 50, for Violin Beethoven
Havanaise for Violin Saint-Saens
Soloist George Zazofsky
Invitation to the Dance Weber

TIGHT BINDING

48

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 8 1966

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

THURSDAY AT 8:30 P. M.
Overture to "Egmont" Beethoven
Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36 Beethoven
I. Adagio molto
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Concerto for Viola in B minor Handel-Casadesus
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante ma non troppo
III. Allegro molto
Soloist: ROBERT KAROL
Suite from "The Water Music" Handel-Harty
I. Allegro
II. Air
III. Allegro deciso

'Egmont' Overture Written for Drama

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—"The 'Egmont' overture was part of the incidental music (nine numbers in all) Beethoven wrote for Goethe's drama of that title," according to Moses Smith, for 10 years the Boston American's music critic. "It is important to recall that Egmont was a Dutch revolutionary hero. Beethoven, no mean rebel himself, may well have identified himself with Egmont in his own struggle for artistic freedom."

This overture in effect is a symphonic poem in miniature, far ahead of its time, concentrating upon the historical significance of the Goethe tragedy rather than its human relationships. There are three segments, representing, in turn, oppression, conflict and victory.

The first part has been described as "the stern command

Turn to Page 7, Column 1

Symphony Programme Notes, yet, "never was Beethoven more wretched physically and mentally than when he wrote this symphony, music that breathes forth serenity, beauty, gayety and courage."

It is far removed from the classical symphony of his predecessors and to the music-loving Viennese who heard it there for the first time it seemed strangely bold and even repellent in its novelty. One contemporary critic declaimed that Beethoven's "anxiety to achieve something novel and surprising was much too evident." Others condemned it as too long (half an hour), too wild and too bizarre.

HANDEL'S FORMAT

Well labeled by Camille Bellaigue, French critic, as "an heroic lie," the second symphony is full of serenity and courage in the face of the composer's incipient deafness. There even is gaiety and ebullience as the work ends with a spirited rondo using a bold, almost rough, good-natured

When George Frederick Handel (he Anglicized his names), emigrated from Germany to England, where he lived and worked the rest of his life, he brought with him a fully developed system of musical composition along Continental lines. He was particularly adept in the concerted format — pitting a soloist or several instruments against a small orchestra for antiphonal effects.

Certainly the viola was not a customary solo instrument in Handel's time, so the concerto for viola to be played by Robert Karol can not be regarded as an original Handelian creation. We do know that it presumably was discovered and worked out from Handel's melody of the solo part and a sketchy figured bass (perhaps to be played on an organ) by Henri Casadesus, uncle of the celebrated French pianist and founder of the Parisian "Societe des Instruments Anciens."

"The 'Water Music' is a good example of Handel's amalgam of varying musical influences," according to Moses Smith. "It was composed for a concert on the Thames for George I and consisted originally of 21 pieces played by an orchestra on a barge near the one containing the royal party. From these 21 pieces Sir Hamilton Harty extracted and arranged a suite of six pieces."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JUL 8 1966

Salute to Rain At Esplanade

Thursday night's rain receivxed a fittting salute at the Esplanade concert when the orchestra capped the evening with a suite from Handel's Water Music.

The suite followed several outbursts, none of which dispersed the enthusiastic audience of 5000.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 8 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct tonight's Esplanade Program at the Hatch Memorial Shell by the Charles River, which begins at 8:30 and is as follows:

Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica"
"Eroica," I. Allegro con brio; II. Marcia funebre: adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto
The Star Spangled Banner
*Capriccio Italian. Tchakovsky.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 8 1966

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

FRIDAY AT 8:30 P. M.
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major "Eroica" Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Capriccio Italien Tchaikovsky

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 9 1966

Esplanade Program

Arthur Fiedler returns to conduct tonight's Esplanade Concert by the Boston Pops Orchestra. The 8:30 program is as follows:

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Violin Concerto in D minor, Op. 61
I. Allegro, ma non troppo
II. Larghetto
III. Rondo Beethoven
Soloist—Roger Shermont
The Star Spangled Banner
*Capriccio Espagnole, Alborada—Variations—Alborada—Gypsy. Scene—Fandango of the Austurias Rimsky-Korsakoff
*Rakoczy March Berlioz

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 11 1966

Esplanade Program

Arthur Fiedler makes his last local appearance with the Boston Pops this season at tonight's Esplanade Concert, which begins at 8.30 and is as follows:

Overture to "Oberon" Weber
Symphony No. 8, in B minor "Unfinished" Schubert
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto
The Star-Spangled Banner
Piano Concerto No. 2, in A major Liszt
Soloist: Samuel Lipman
Les Preludes, Symphonic Poem Liszt

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 286,021

JUL 10 1966

Esplanade Concerts By Boston Pops In Final Week

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the first of the final-week Boston Pops programs on the Esplanade at Hatch Memorial Shell. Then he will turn over the podium to Harry Ellis Dickson, who will finish the season for the Pops.

All evening programs will be at 8:30, with the children's program Wednesday morning at 10:15.

MONDAY
Overture to "Oberon" Weber
Symphony No. 8, in B minor "Unfinished" Schubert
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto
The Star-Spangled Banner
Piano Concerto No. 2, in A major Liszt
Soloist: Samuel Lipman
Les Preludes, Symphonic Poem Liszt

TUESDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture to "Fidelio" Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Romance No. 2 in F, Op. 50, for Violin Beethoven
Havanaise for Violin Saint-Saens
Soloist George Zazofsky
Invitation to the Dance Weber

WEDNESDAY MORNING
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Children's Program
Overture to "Light Cavalry" Suppe
Andante and Finale, from Symphony No. 94 in G major, "Surprise" Haydn
First Movement from Piano Concerto, K. 450 Mozart
Soloist: Jeanne C. Lee
Waltz of the Flowers, from "The Nutcracker" Tchaikovsky
On the Trail, from "The Grand Canyon Suite" Grofe
Golden Age Polka Shostakovitch
Mosquito Dance White
76 Trombones from "The Music Man" Willson
The Star-Spangled Banner

WEDNESDAY NIGHT
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture to "Don Giovanni" Mozart
Symphony No. 4, in B flat major, Op. 60 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
The Animals' Carnival (Grand Zoological Fantasia) Saint-Saens
Sailor's Dance, from "The Red Poppy" Gliere

THURSDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Symphonie Espagnole, Op. 21 Lalo
Soloist: Fredy Ostrovsky
French Military March Saint-Saens

FRIDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra Gershwin
Soloist: Anthony Paratore
Strike Up the Band Gershwin-Green

SATURDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Concerto No. 5 in A, K. 219 Mozart
Soloist: John Korman
Voices of Spring, Waltzes Strauss
The Prayer of Tranksgiving Valerius-Kremser

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 12 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson conducts the Boston Pops Esplanade Concert tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River.

Overture to "Fidelio" Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven
The Star Spangled Banner
Romance No. 2 in F. Op. 50, for Violin Beethoven
Havanaise for Violin Saint-Saens
Soloist: George Zazofsky
Invitation to the Dance Weber

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JUL 10 1966

The Esplanade Concerts

The programs have been announced for the second week of the 38th season of Esplanade concerts in the Hatch Memorial shell. All evening concerts are at 8:30, and while they are free of charge, contributions are welcomed.

MONDAY (Arthur Fiedler conducting): Weber, ~~Oberon~~ Overture; Schubert, Unfinished Symphony; Liszt, Piano Concerto No. 2 in A, Samuel Lipman soloist; Liszt, Les Preludes.

TUESDAY (Harry Ellis Dickson conducting): Beethoven, Fidelio Overture and Fifth Symphony; Beethoven, Romance in F, and Saint-Saens, Havanaise, both with George Zazofsky, violin soloist; Weber, Invitation to the Dance.

WEDNESDAY (Dickson): Mozart, Don Giovanni Overture; Beethoven, Fourth Symphony; Saint-Saens, Carnival of Animals; Gliere, Sailors Dance.

THURSDAY (Dickson): Beethoven, Pastoral Symphony; Lalo, Symphonie Espagnole, Fredy Ostrovsky as violin soloist; Saint-Saens, French Military March.

FRIDAY (Dickson): Beethoven, Seventh Symphony; Gershwin, Piano Concerto, with Anthony Paratore as soloist; Gershwin-Green, Strike Up the Band.

SATURDAY (Dickson): Closing program of the season: Beethoven, Eighth Symphony; Mozart, Violin Concerto in A, John Korman soloist; Strauss, Voices of Spring; Valerius-Kremser, Prayer of Thanksgiving.

The Star Spangled Banner is played at the beginning of the second half of each concert.

In addition, Wednesday morning at 10:15, Harry Ellis Dickson will lead a children's program including Suppe, Light Cavalry Overture; Andante and finale from Haydn's Surprise Symphony; Mozart, Piano Concerto in B flat, K.450, with Jeanne C. Lee as soloist, and music by Tchaikovsky, Grofe, Shostakovich, White and Willson.

TIGHT BINDING

98

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 8 1966

...NADE PROGRAM

Concerto for Viola in B minor
Handel-Casadesus
...egro moderato
...ma non troppo
...ROL

Egmo... For Hol... Military He...

Continued from Back

...-willed tyranny and ... and plaints of the dov... trodden." The betrayed Cou... ...ment's heroism, the strength and nobility of his character, speak out unmistakably in the majestic opening for strings and in the equally noble second theme, while the struggle for liberation is described in the developmental portion.

ALIENATED LISTENERS

Beethoven's second symphony (Op. 36, in D) "is an answer to those who insist that the emotions of a composer must find a vent in the music composed at the time," Philip Hale wrote 30 years ago in his "Boston Symphony Programme Notes;" yet, "never was Beethoven more wretched physically and mentally than when he wrote this symphony, music that breathes forth serenity, beauty, gayety and courage."

It is far removed from the classical symphony of his predecessors and to the music-loving Viennese who heard it there for the first time it seemed strangely bold and even repellent in its novelty. One contemporary critic declaimed that Beethoven's "anxiety to achieve something novel and surprising was much too evident." Others condemned it as too long (half an hour), too wild and too bizarre.

HANDEL'S FORMAT

Well labeled by Camille Bellaigue, French critic, as "an heroic lie," the second symphony is full of serenity and courage in the face of the composer's incipient deafness. There even is gaiety and ebullience as the work ends with a spirited rondo using a bold, almost rough, good-natured

When George Frederick Handel (he Anglicized his names) emigrated from Germany to England, where he lived and worked the rest of his life, he brought with him a fully developed system of musical composition along Continental lines. He was particularly adept in the concerted format — pitting a soloist or several instruments against a small orchestra for antiphonal effects.

Certainly the viola was not a customary solo instrument in Handel's time, so the concerto for viola to be played by Robert Karol can not be regarded as an original Handelian creation. We do know that it presumably was discovered and worked out from Handel's melody of the solo part and a sketchy figured bass (perhaps to be played on an organ) by Henri Casadesus, uncle of the celebrated French pianist and founder of the Parisian "Societe des Instruments Anciens."

"The 'Water Music' is a good example of Handel's amalgam of varying musical influences," according to Moses Smith. "It was composed for a concert on the Thames for George I and consisted originally of 21 pieces played by an orchestra on a barge near the one containing the royal party. From these 21 pieces Sir Hamilton Harty extracted and arranged a suite of six pieces."

Plymouth
332-9810
...ON

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JUL 8 1966

Salute to Rain At Esplanade

Thursday night's rain received a fittting salute at the Esplanade concert when the ...estra capped the evening ...uite from Handel's ...sic.

...ite followed several ...s, none of which dis... the enthusiastic audi... of 5000.

...England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
...2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 9 1966

Esplanade Program

Arthur Fiedler returns to conduct tonight's Esplanade Concert by the Boston Pops Orchestra. The 8:30 program is as follows:

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" — Mozart
Violin Concerto in D minor, Op. 61
I. Allegro, ma non troppo
II. Larghetto — Beethoven
III. Rondo
Soloist—Roger Shermont
The Star Spangled Banner
*Capriccio Espagnole, Alborada—Variations—Alborada—Gypsy Scene—Fandango of the Asturias — Rimsky-Korsakoff
*Rakoczy March — Berlioz

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 8 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct tonight's Esplanade Program at the Hatch Memorial Shell by the Charles River, which begins at 8:30 and is as follows:

Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica" — Beethoven
"Eroica," I. Allegro con brio; II. Marcia funebre: adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto
The Star Spangled Banner
*Capriccio Italian. Tchakovsky.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 8 1966

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

FRIDAY AT 8:30 P. M.
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major "Eroica" — Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Capriccio Italien — Tchaikovsky

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 11 1966

Esplanade Program

Arthur Fiedler makes his last local appearance with the Boston Pops this season at tonight's Esplanade Concert, which begins at 8:30 and is as follows:

Overture to "Oberon" — Weber
Symphony No. 8, in B minor "Unfinished" — Schubert
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto
The Star-Spangled Banner
Piano Concerto No. 2, in A major — Liszt
Soloist: Samuel Lipman
Les Preludes, Symphonic Poem — Liszt

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 286,021

JUL 10 1966

Esplanade Concerts By Boston Pops In Final Week

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the first of the final-week Boston Pops programs on the Esplanade at Hatch Memorial Shell. Then he will turn over the podium to Harry Ellis Dickson, who will finish the season for the Pops.

All evening programs will be at 8:30, with the children's program Wednesday morning at 10:15.

MONDAY
Overture to "Oberon" — Weber
Symphony No. 8, in B minor "Unfinished" — Schubert
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto
The Star-Spangled Banner
Piano Concerto No. 2, in A major — Liszt
Soloist: Samuel Lipman
Les Preludes, Symphonic Poem — Liszt

TUESDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture to "Fidelio" — Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67 — Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Romance No. 2 in F, Op. 50, for Violin — Beethoven
Havanaise for Violin — Saint-Saens
Soloist George Zazofsky
Invitation to the Dance — Weber

WEDNESDAY MORNING
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Children's Program
Overture to "Light Cavalry" — Suppe
Andante and Finale, from Symphony No. 94 in G major, "Surprise" — Haydn
First Movement from Piano Concerto, K. 459 — Mozart
Soloist: Jeanne C. Lee
Waltz of the Flowers, from "The Nutcracker" — Tchaikovsky
On the Trail, from "The Grand Canyon Suite" — Grofe
Golden Age Polka — Shostakovitch
Mosquito Dance — White
76 Trombones from "The Music Man" — Willson
The Star-Spangled Banner

WEDNESDAY NIGHT
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Overture to "Don Giovanni" — Mozart
Symphony No. 4, in B flat major, Op. 60 — Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
The Animals' Carnival (Grand Zoological Fantasia) — Saint-Saens
Sailor's Dance, from "The Red Poppy" — Gliere

THURSDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68 — Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Symphonie Espagnole, Op. 21 — Lalo
Soloist: Fredy Ostrovsky
French Military March — Saint-Saens

FRIDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92 — Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra — Gershwin
Soloist: Anthony Paratore
Strike Up the Band — Gershwin-Green

SATURDAY
Harry Ellis Dickson conducting
Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93 — Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Concerto No. 5 in A, K. 219 — Mozart
Soloist: John Korman
Voices of Spring, Waltzes — Strauss
The Prayer of Tranksgiving — Valerius-Kremser

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 12 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson conducts the Boston Pops Esplanade Concert tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River.

Overture to "Fidelio" — Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67 — Beethoven
The Star Spangled Banner
Romance No. 2 in F, Op. 50, for Violin — Beethoven
Havanaise for Violin — Saint-Saens
Soloist George Zazofsky
Invitation to the Dance — Weber

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JUL 10 1966

The Esplanade Concerts

The programs have been announced for the second week of the 38th season of Esplanade concerts in the Hatch Memorial shell. All evening concerts are at 8:30, and while they are free of charge, contributions are welcomed.

MONDAY (Arthur Fiedler conducting): Weber, Oberon Overture; Schubert, Unfinished Symphony; Liszt, Piano Concerto No. 2 in A. Samuel Lipman soloist; Liszt, Les Preludes.

TUESDAY (Harry Ellis Dickson conducting): Beethoven, Fidelio Overtue and Fifth Symphony; Beethoven, Romance in F, and Saint-Saens, Havanaise, both with George Zazofsky, violin soloist; Weber, Invitation to the Dance.

WEDNESDAY (Dickson): Mozart, Don Giovanni Overture; Beethoven, Fourth Symphony; Saint-Saens, Carnival of Animals; Gliere, Sailors Dance.

THURSDAY (Dickson): Beethoven, Pastoral Symphony; Lalo, Symphonie Espagnole, Fredy Ostrovsky as violin soloist; Saint-Saens, French Military March.

FRIDAY (Dickson): Beethoven, Seventh Symphony; Gershwin, Piano Concerto, with Anthony Paratore as soloist; Gershwin-Green, Strike Up the Band.

SATURDAY (Dickson): Closing program of the season: Beethoven, Eighth Symphony; Mozart, Piano Concerto No. 5, A, John Korman soloist; Strauss, Voices of Spring; Valerius-Kremser, Prayer of Thanksgiving.

The Star Spangled Banner is played at the beginning and the second half of each concert.

In addition, Wednesday morning at 10:15, Harry Ellis Dickson will lead a children's program including Suppe's Light Cavalry Overture; Andante and finale from Haydn's Surprise Symphony; Mozart's Piano Concerto in B flat, K.450, with Jeanne C. Lee as soloist, and music by Tchaikovsky, Grofe, Shostakovitch, White and Willson.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 12 1966

'Oberon' Overture Fiedler's Prelude

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Weber's "Oberon" overture has long been favored as a concert prelude by Arthur Fiedler, who is conducting tonight's orchestral concert in the Hatch Shell, since he perforce was prevented from opening the Esplanade series by a previous commitment.

The overtures to his operas are Weber's best orchestral works, and of all these overtures that to "Oberon" perhaps is the most imaginative. Certainly this noble composer did succeed in pouring a good deal of chivalric spirit and beautiful music into his score for this nonsensical melodrama.

"Oberon's" overture, last—and best—piece to be written, begins with an introductory adagio after the mythical monarch's horn has sounded. Flutes and clarinets reply to the horn-call in light passage-work. A brief marchlike section is barely audible, and the strings carry on in dreamy whispers.

With the utterance of a chord for full orchestra, the listener is whisked into a world of chivalric legend and romance. Of the three principal themes heard, the brilliant first is taken from a vocal quartet in the second act; the second motif is given first to the clarinet, from an aria sung by the hero in the first act, and the third theme is the celebrated solo from the heroine's big scene, "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster," only excerpt from this forgotten music, apart from the overture, which is heard regularly now. There is a develop-instrument and developed in magnificent variations.

Turn to Page 19, Col. 3

A rather gloomy march forms a strange contrast to the sensitivity of this introduction. The concerto consists of the development, enlargement and metamorphosis of this principal theme, with various subsidiary themes serving to bind the different segments of the work in-

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

ARTHUR FIEDLER,
Conductor

Overture to "Oberon" Weber
Symphony No. 8, in B minor "Unfinished" Schubert
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Piano Concerto No. 2, in A major Liszt
Soloist: SAMUEL LIPMAN
Les Preludes, Symphonic Poem No. 3 Liszt

things uncompleted. His aim would seem to have been the incorporation of the inner world of the imagination within the symphonic pattern and, as a landscape is transformed in a painter's vision, he aimed to transmute traditional usage into the realm of the free, lyrical contemplation—an epitome of the romantic creed of emotion and spontaneous creativity.

"He aims, above all, at wholeness, at integrated emotion and poignancy. The two movements of the Unfinished Symphony do not differ substantially from one another; the initial allegro moderato resembles in content and treatment the andante that follows. Similarly the instruments. He does not bother about being startling or trying to dazzle us, but enchants us, holding us bewitched within the magic spell.

LISZT AS PIANIST

"The poem goes on its way, now serene, now anguished, always in Schubert's own fashion, its dynamic contrasts the token of emotional ebb and flow rather than simply devices in the music to vary and sustain interest. So let the sweet spell unfold, the tempests rage; we are led imperceptibly, with the end of the andante, to a state of ecstasy.

have surpassed him in single qualities, but none has united all talents in so stupendous fashion as much as he. In velocity, wide stretches, double-notes, octaves and a whole system in itself of interlocking passages, he all but attained the impossible.

Liszt's two piano concerti rank among his more important and better-known works. Tonight's A major concerto, more romantic than the so-called "Triangle" concerto (performed at last Wednesday evening's Esplanade concert), is not without its moments of what Harold C. Schonberg of the New York Times has happily described as "rolling pompposity." Since it has only one movement, it was labeled originally "Concert Symphonique," but also has been described as a "Symphonic Poem for Piano and Orchestra" and "The Life and Adventures of a Melody" by that celebrated Boston musicologist, William Foster Apthorpe, for one principal theme dominates the entire work.

It is voiced at the very opening of the concerto by the orchestra and is a melody of exultant and stately character. This theme appears first very dreamily in the woodwinds, then in the strings, decorated by the piano. Finally, it is taken up properly by the solo consisted in the development of the symphonic poem or tone poem—a continuous, one-movement "symphony," based upon literary or pictorial premise. "In his 13 symphonic poems Liszt achieves a unity of expression and form which may be sought for in vain in the symphonies of the period," Constant Lambert, English composer, critic and conductor wrote (1934) in his "Music Ho!"

Most popular and most perfectly constructed of these 13 is the third one, "Les Preludes," picturing life as a series of preludes to the unknown song of death. In the last segment of this rather oversensational tone poem, the blare of the brass choir, delivered with all the enthusiasm of Liszt's bravura style, excites us to martial ardor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 13 1966

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

TUESDAY at 8:30 p. m.
Overture to "Fidelio" Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio
II. Andante con moto
III. Allegro
IV. Allegro: Presto

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Romance No. 2 in F, Op. 50, for Violin Beethoven
Havanaise for Violin, Op. 83 Saint-Saens
Soloist:
GEORGE ZAZOFSKY
Invitation to the Dance Weber

Rolfe Boswell's notes on the Esplanada program appear on Page 20.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 13 1966

...And The Herald's Readers Write:

Action Needed on Charles River

To the Editor of The Herald:

I am not a constant complainer or "griper" but I feel that, at long last, the city of Boston, the industries within the Metropolitan District, and the suburban towns must find a solution to one of our state's most pressing problems — the Charles River.

We citizens of Boston are living in what has been called, and rightly so, the cultural center of the United States. The number of high quality colleges with world-renowned reputation is unmatched in any other part of America, or for that matter, the World. Our museums have been well stocked with the finest the art world has to offer. Our professional theaters present to us the best of the dramatic, comic and musical plays which the American theatre offers. The movie houses of Boston bring entertainment to millions of Bostonians and their visitors each year. We have some of the most unique restaurants in the World — the menus offer foods appealing to the most discriminating. Boston's most unique feature, however, is that here, history lives on. Through careful planning and renewing, Boston today has retained many of the historical sites which we read about in our American History books, and at the same time bringing forth a new face buildings which will contain the history of tomorrow and the future.

And yet, all of this is lost if: 1) visitors admiring the beauty of the Marsh Chapel at B.U., are subjected to a breeze off the river; 2) Bostonians must sit in front of the Hatch Shell listening to the magnificance of the Boston Symphony and at the same time breathe in a disgusting smell not unlike decaying rubbish; 3) a water skiing show must perform in a river whose content puts their very health in danger; 4) and residents of some of our better communities have to sell their $50,000 and $60,000 homes in fashionable neighborhoods because the river behind those homes smells of decaying industrial wastes.

The time has come for all of us — legislators, public citizens, students, and every other concerned Bostonian, to see that the Charles River becomes a landmark for the state and not a sore-spot. We have already achieved greatness in the past, and we have great potential for more in the future — but only if we act. I urge all of you to write or contact your elected officials who have the power to initiate legislation for cleaning up the river. Remember: your obligation to your legislators does not end with your vote which elects them. Your letters and suggestions are one of the best ways of getting your point of view across to them. There is no more pressing problem facing us today in Boston than the increasing decay of the Charles River. With proper action now, tomorrow may bring the "new Boston" a little closer to reality.

STEPHEN W. CRANE
Needham Heights

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 13 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson conducts the Boston Pops twice Wednesday at the children's concert Wednesday morning at 10 and the regular Esplanade Concert Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River.

Children's Program

Overture to "Light Cavalry"
Andante and Finale, from Symphony No. 94 in G major, "Surprise" Haydn
First Movement from piano Concerto, K. 450 Mozart
Soloist: Jeanne C. Lee
Waltz of the Flowers, from "The Nutcracker" Tchaikovsky
On the Trail, from "The Grand Canyon Suite" Grofe
Golden Age Polka Shostakovitch
Mosquito Dance White
76 Trombones from "The Music Man" Willson
The Star-Spangled Banner

Evening Program

Overture to "Don Giovanni" Mozart
Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, Op. 60 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
The Animals' Carnival (Grand Zoological Fantasia) Saint-Saens
Sailor's Dance, from "The Red Poppy" Glière

INFORMATION OBSCURED

199

Record-American (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 41,...

CREDIT PROBLEMS
GET A FRESH START
NEED MONEY or a TRANSFORMATION
DICK WINTHROP
254-3994
PLATES

Fiedler ... beron'

Continued from Back Page

ment of the material thus presented and Rezia's stirring theme dominates the brilliant coda.

WHY UNFINISHED

Many outlandish theories have been set forth as to why Schubert left his B-minor symphony unfinished. One theorizer offered the comment that Schubert composed this work as "a tribute to the glory of the incomplete." In rebuttal, Marcel Schneider, in his biography of Schubert (Paris, 1959), commented logically, if not musicologically:

"So long as Schubert did not find that he had mastered his purpose, he stopped, and left things uncompleted. His aim would seem to have been the incorporation of the inner world of the imagination within the symphonic pattern and, as a landscape is transformed in a painter's vision, he aimed to transmute traditional usage into the realm of the free, lyrical contemplation—an epitome of the romantic creed of emotion and spontaneous creativity.

"He aims, above all, at wholeness, at integrated emotion and poignancy. The two movements of the Unfinished Symphony do not differ substantially from one another; the initial allegro moderato resembles in content and treatment the andante that follows. Similarly the instruments. He does not bother about being startling or trying to dazzle us, but enchants us, holding us bewitched within the magic spell.

LISZT AS PIANIST

"The poem goes on its way, now serene, now anguished, always in Schubert's own fashion, its dynamic contrasts the token of emotional ebb and flow rather than simply devices in the music to vary and sustain interest. So let the sweet spell untold, the tempests rage; we are led imperceptibly, with the end of the andante, to a state of ecstasy.

su... How, possible ... ment throu... ments? Schub... Even so, as he le... finished, which den... phonic orthodoxy in both... and content, occupies an unq... place among 19th century symphonies and, indeed, in the whole corpus of Schubert's works, the true inspiration of an artist still seeking to find himself."

Better this way than inglorious completion!

Franz Liszt was the most phenomenal pianist in the history of music. Others may have surpassed him in single qualities, but none has united all talents in so stupendous fashion as much as he. In velocity, wide stretches, double-notes, octaves and a whole system in itself of interlocking passages, he all but attained the impossible.

Liszt's two piano concerti rank among his more important and better-known works. Tonight's A - major concerto, more romantic than the so-called "Triangle" concerto (performed at last Wednesday evening's Esplanade concert), is not without its moments of what Harold C. Schonberg of the New York Times has happily described as "rolling pompposity." Since it has only one movement, it was labeled originally "Concert Symphonique," but also has been described as a "Symphonic Poem for Piano and Orchestra" and "The Life and Adventures of a Melody" by that celebrated Boston musicologist William Foster Apthorpe, for one principal theme dominates the entire work.

It is voiced at the very opening of the concerto by the orchestra and is a melody of exultant and stately character. This theme appears first very dreamily in the woodwinds, then in the strings, decorated by the piano. Finally, it is taken up properly by the solo to ... max ... main the... into a march, ... ano and orches... lyrical idea triumph... over all the dramatic ... themes.

"LES PRELUDES"

Liszt's greatest single achievement in orchestral music consisted in the development of the symphonic poem or tone poem—a continuous, one-movement "symphony," based upon literary or pictorial premise. "In his 13 symphonic poems Liszt achieves a unity of expression and form which may be sought for in vain in the symphonies of the period," Constant Lambert, English composer, critic and conductor wrote (1934) in his "Music Ho!"

Most popular and most perfectly constructed of these 13 is the third one, "Les Preludes," picturing life as a series of preludes to the unknown song of death. In the last segment of this rather oversensational tone poem, the blare of the brass choir, delivered with all the enthusiasm of Liszt's bravura style, excites us to martial ardor.

...nd developed in ...riations.

...ny march forms ...t to the sensi... ...oduction. The ...f the devel... ...t and meta... principal ...ubsidiary ...the dif... ...ork in... ...rated ...big ...hty ...his ...e

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

ARTHUR FIEDLER,
Conductor

Overture to "Oberon" Weber
Symphony No. 8, in B minor "Unfinished" Schubert
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Piano Concerto No. 2, in A major Liszt
Soloist: SAMUEL LIPMAN
Les Preludes, Symphonic Poem No. 3 Liszt

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 13 1966

ESPLANADE PROGRAM

TUESDAY at 8:30 p. m.

Overture to "Fidelio" Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio
II. Andante con moto
III. Allegro
IV. Allegro: Presto

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Romance No. 2 in F, Op. 50, for Violin Beethoven
Havanaise for Violin, Op. 83 Saint-Saens
Soloist:
GEORGE ZAZOFSKY
Invitation to the Dance Weber

Rolfe Boswell's notes on the Esplanada program appear on Page 20.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 13 1966

...And The Herald's Readers Write:

Action Needed on Charles River

To the Editor of The Herald:

I am not a constant complainer or "griper" but I feel that, at long last, the city of Boston, the industries within the Metropolitan District, and the suburban towns must find a solution to one of our state's most pressing problems — the Charles River.

We citizens of Boston are living in what has been called, and rightly so, the cultural center of the United States. The number of high quality colleges with world-renowned reputation is unmatched in any other part of America, or for that matter, the World. Our museums have been well stocked with the finest the art world has to offer. Our professional theaters present to us the best of the dramatic, comic and musical plays which the American theatre offers. The movie houses of Boston bring entertainment to millions of Bostonians and their visitors each year. We have some of the most unique restaurants in the World — the menus offer foods appealing to the most discriminating. Bost...'s most unique feature, however, is that here, history lives on. Through careful planning and renewing, Boston today has retained many of the historical sites which we read about in our American history books, and at the same time bringing forth a new face ... buildings which will contain the history of tomorrow and the future.

And yet, all of this is lost if: 1) visitors admiring the beauty of the Marsh Chapel at B.U., are subjected to a breeze off the river; 2) Bostonians must sit in front of the Hatch Shell listening to the magnificance of the Boston Symphony and at the same time breathe in a disgusting smell not unlike decaying rubbish; 3) a water skiing show must perform in a river whose content puts their very health in danger; 4) and residents of some of our better communities have to sell their $50,000 and $60,000 homes in fashionable neighborhoods because the river behind those homes smells of decaying industrial wastes.

The time has come for all of us — legislators, public citizens, students, and every other concerned Bostonian, to see that the Charles River becomes a landmark for the state and not a sore-spot. We have already achieved greatness in the past, and we have great potential for more in the future — but only if we act. I urge all of you to write or contact your elected officials who have the power to initiate legislation for cleaning up the river. Remember: your obligation to your legislators does not end with your vote which elects them. Your letters and suggestions are one of the best ways of getting your point of view across to them. There is no more pressing problem facing us today in Boston than the increasing decay of the Charles River. With proper action now, tomorrow may bring the "new Boston" a little closer to reality.

STEPHEN W. CRANE
Needham Heights

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 13 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson conducts the Boston Pops twice Wednesday at the children's concert Wednesday morning at 10 and the regular Esplanade Concert Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River.

Children's Program

Overture to "Light Cavalry"
Andante and Finale, from Symphony No. 94 in G major, "Surprise" Haydn
First Movement from piano Concerto, K. 450 Mozart
Soloist: Jeanne C. Lee
Waltz of the Flowers, from "The Nutcracker" Tchaikovsky
On the Trail, from "The Grand Canyon Suite" Grofe
Golden Age Polka Shostakovitch
Mosquito Dance White
76 Trombones from "The Music Man" Willson
The Star-Spangled Banner

Evening Program

Overture to "Don Giovanni" Mozart
Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, Op. 60 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
The Animals' Carnival (Grand Zoological Fantasia) Saint-Saens
Sailor's Dance, from "The Red Poppy" Gliere

Concerts

...Y (Dickson): Beethov... Symphony; Gershwin, Pia... with Anthony Parat... ...t; Gershwin-Green, Str... Band.

...DAY (Dickson): Closi... of the season: Beethov... Symphony; Mozart, Vio... in A, John Korm... Strauss, Voices of Spri... Kremser, Prayer of Than...

Star Spangled Bann... ...ed at the beginning ...cond half of each co... addition, Wednesd... ...ng at 10:15, Harry El... ...n will lead a childre... ...m including Sup... Cavalry Overture; A... and finale from Hayd... ...ise Symphony; Moz... Concerto in B f... with Jeanne C. Lee... and music by Tchai... Grofe, Shostakovi... and Willson.

200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 13 1966

Beethoven's 5th Symphony Esplanade Standout

(By ROLFE BOSWELL) — Of the four overtures composed by Beethoven for his only opera, "Fidelio," three of these, all keyed in C, bear the name of "Leonora," after the name of the heroine.

The "Fidelio" overture, being played tonight, was written for the second revival of the ill-fated opera, which took place in May, 1814. It is far more conventional than any "Leonora" overture, quoting none of the musical material of the opera itself. It is apparent that Beethoven wanted to write some festive, introductory music for his opera without going into any details of the drama.

Its key is E major and the overture begins brightly and attractively, setting a tone of happy excitement. An allegro segment storms ahead, with joyous animation. Before the coda, horncalls from the introduction appear once again and rushing fanfare enter to conclude this charming and thoroughly musical curtain-raiser.

"SUBLIME NOISE"

"Beethoven's Fifth Symphony is the most sublime noise that has ever penetrated into the ear of man," wrote Edward Morgan Foster, and it owes its popularity to several reasons, not the least being that Opus 67 is a work combining powerful emotional appeal with the utmost forcefulness and directness of expression.

Never in musical history has so much been written by so many about so few notes as about the opening four notes of Beethoven's "V-for-Victory" symphony. The impetus was given by the composer himself, if indeed he ever uttered the words ascribed to him: "This is Fate knocking at the door."

More than any other great composer, Beethoven used his music to express definite personal experiences. He always tried to subordinate his innate facilities and the classical niceties of which he was capable to inner and less available emotions. Here was an innovator who never lost contact with his creative energies.

'STORM OF EMOTION'

Bernard Shaw has written, "He used the old patterns all his life with dogged conservatism, but he imposed on them such an overwhelming charge of human energy and passion, including that highest passion which accompanies thought and reduces the passion of the physical appetites to mere animalism, that he not only played Old Harry with their symmetry, but often made it impossible to notice at all that there was any pattern at all beneath the storm of emotion."

In addition to his great violin concerto, played by Roger Snermont at last Saturday's Esplanade concert, Beethoven composed two romances for violin and orchestra, Op. 40 in G and Op. 50 in F. Despite the numberings, both date from 1803, the Eroica year.

SHORTER FORMS

They are very similar in form and mood and, as the titles indicate, they are songlike in character, romance or "Romanze" being a song. In both brief works, the solo violin introduces the principal theme — with orchestral accompaniment in the F-major romance, without it in the one keyed in G.

"They are beautiful in their way," wrote Marion M. Scott, "not easy as to technique, very difficult to interpret satisfactorily. Their music leaves one where it found one. I suspect Beethoven had no strong poetic idea when he composed them." But he did provide violinists with much-needed material in the shorter forms for "pops" concerts and encores.

This also is true of the Havanaise, Op. 83 of Camille Saint-Saens, who spread a central theme of genuine Spanish origin throughout the entire piece. It is in the opening and closing moments, however, that the French composer's decided originality of conception shines through with such beauty.

A few months after his marriage in 1817, Weber wrote his Invitation to the Dance for his bride and it is one of his few compositions for the piano which have retained popularity. This dance suite with introduction and coda and, therefore, in its format an anticipation of the future Viennese waltz, was published at Dresden in 1819.

It offers great attraction to arrangers. There have been new versions for piano, another for two pianos, also two violins and, for orchestra, one by Hector Berlioz (1819) and another, even more brilliant, by Felix Weingartner in 1896. Both versions are heard frequently in concert and on the air, while the Berlioz transcription is the music for the ballet "Spectre de la Rose," created by Michel Fokine in 1911.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 13 1966

THE ROVING EYE

By ROBERT TAYLOR

THE FADING ESPLANADE

The last Esplanade Concert of 1966 takes place Saturday night; the series, it seems, just began. This is no illusion of advancing age. Any way you look at it, 11 concerts can scarcely be deemed a season.

Many Bostonians are upset over the attrition of the series recently, and have voiced a justifiable concern. The symbol of the Hatch Shell denotes our city's culture in many places around the globe. Bostonians believe in music the way burghers of other metropolitain centers believe in intelligence or energy or vulgarity or empire.

Only the Esplanade fulfills this public need; the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's regular season, the Berkshire Festival belong to a musical elite, Pops is a law unto itself, Only the Esplanade affords the Bostonian a chance to enjoy a water view, a patch of night sky, a sense of greenery and open space under the conditions best suited to satisfy the Puritan conscience. Our blistering summers and sneaky winters implant a distrust of nature, but time spent listening to music is never wasted.

★ ★ ★

The Esplanade concerts, oddly enough, are not critic's or musician's concerts, although Arthur Fiedler in his wisdom established the policy of solid, serious programming. The size of the crowd and the various distractions of the surroundings make concentrated listening exceedingly difficult. Yet the concerts create an experience, a rare encounter with a lively spirit of living together. Boston likes to refer to itself as Athens (the implied comparison seems inappropriate), but one seldom has a chance to think of oneself as an Athenian, that is, a citizen whose identity is inseparable from the city's.

The modern world fragments. It isolates. Our sense of community depends upon a network of mass communications. Literature abounds in evidence of the modern city as an arena of loneliness, alienation and despair. The Esplanade concerts restore a proud, precious and vital solidarity; we are a common people with common institutions of poetry and music, exulting in, of all things, the uniqueness of a crowd.

The concerts have the most dramatic setting for music in Boston. Throughout the years we have done our best to spoil this setting, but somehow the drama endures. Storrow Drive ended a period in which one could hear the concerts in virtually bucolic quiet. Vista and perspective have been lost to the encroachments of several hideous constructions. Yet sailboats still fleck the Charles, and the music still creeps past them on the waters.

★ ★ ★

Mrs. Patrick Campbell once said that you can do what you like in London as long as you don't do it in the street and don't frighten the horses; and there are times when her quip comes to mind at an Esplanade evening. Still, it is a remarkably decorous and attentive crowd, especially in the folding-chairs down front. During the summer of 1942, when we couldn't afford concerts and were just this side of induction — the aimless limbo between school and the military which has since become a national commonplace — we used, to arrive early, and got to know several of our seatmates, as one will with regularity.

Because of the blackout, the concerts began early that summer. You were often treated to a superbly melancholy sunset over the Carter's Ink sign: the last measures of the Pastoral Symphony faded as the sun plumeted like a molten gong. People really sang The Star-Spangled Banner that year.

We were going to war, and like many young men before and after, had a fatalistic attitude toward the whole thing; but here, upholding life, was one center of gravity. Civilization may be a frail support, but it's all we have.

Now it appears that The Esplanade Concerts are dying, another small felicity sacrificed, and this is the way the world ends: not with a bang but a whimper.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4300
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
JUL 21 1966

Q—How many people attend an average evening at the Esplanade concerts? Also, why can't the season be extended longer than it is now? It used to be three or four weeks.
—M.B., Hulbrook and F.X.M., Norwood.

A—According to Boston Symphony officials attendance figures for this year's concerts were larger in two weeks than during last year's three-week schedule. Attendance averaged over 15,000 nearly every night of the first week and over 20,000 on the nights of the second week. One gloomy night in the first week, attendance figures hit the only low, about 6000.

Unfortunately, the money doesn't come in as fast as the audience. Funds to pay the 80 musician orchestra come from three sources: the business community, the individual donor and the program booklet and chair rentals.

Year after year, a substantial deficit must be paid out of the general fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There is a substantial difference in cost between a free Esplanade concert period of three weeks, which costs nearly $100,000, and of two weeks costing $60,000.

Now, the B.S.O. is able to spend an extra week at Tanglewood where the audience makes donations.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 14 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson conducts tonight's Boston Pops program at the Hatch Memorial Shell, beginning at 8:30.

Symphony No. 6 in F major, Op. 68 "Pastoral," Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Symphonie Espagnole, Op. 21 Lalo
Soloist: Fredy Ostrovsky
French Military March Saint-Saens

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 15 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct this season's next-to-last Pops program tonight at 8:30 at the Hatch Shell. The program:

Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra Gershwin
Soloist: Anthony Paratore
Strike Up the Band Gershwin-Green

128 World
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 10,000
AUG 10

* * *

Our editor managed to catch a couple of the Boston Symphony ESPLANADE CONCERTS during its brief two-week stay at the shell on the Charles river, craning his neck with 20,000 others to observe Erich Leinsdorf who unexpectedly picked up the baton one evening. Packed off to Tanglewood since July 2, the orchestra can still be enjoyed there under the Berkshire trees till August 31.

* * *

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JUL 13 1966

Beethoven's 5th Symphony Esplanade Standout

(By ROLFE BOSWELL) — Of the four overtures composed by Beethoven for his only opera, "Fidelio," three of these, all keyed in C, bear the name of "Leonora," after the name of the heroine.

The "Fidelio" overture, being played tonight, was written for the second revival of the ill-fated opera, which took place in May, 1814. It is far more conventional than any "Leonora" overture, quoting none of the musical material of the opera itself. It is apparent that Beethoven wanted to write some festive, introductory music for his opera without going into any details of the drama.

Its key is E major and the overture begins brightly and attractively, setting a tone of happy excitement. An allegro segment storms ahead, with joyous animation. Before the coda, horncalls from the introduction appear once again and rushing fanfare enter to conclude this charming and thoroughly musical curtain-raiser.

"SUBLIME NOISE"

"Beethoven's Fifth Symphony is the most sublime noise that has ever penetrated into the ear of man," wrote Edward Morgan Foster, and it owes its popularity to several reasons, not the least being that Opus 67 is a work combining powerful emotional appeal with the utmost forcefulness and directness of expression.

Never in musical history has so much been written by so many about so few notes as about the opening four notes of Beethoven's "V-for-Victory" symphony. The impetus was given by the composer himself, if indeed he ever uttered the words ascribed to him: "This is Fate knocking at the door."

More than any other great composer, Beethoven used his music to express definite personal experiences. He always tried to subordinate his innate facilities and the classical niceties of which he was capable to inner and less available emotions. Here was an innovator who never lost contact with his creative energies.

'STORM OF EMOTION'

Bernard Shaw has written, "He used the old patterns all his life with dogged conservatism, but he imposed on them such an overwhelming charge of human energy and passion, including that highest passion which accompanies thought and reduces the passion of the physical appetites to mere animalism, that he not only played Old Harry with their symmetry, but often made it impossible to notice at all that there was any pattern at all beneath the storm of emotion."

In addition to his great violin concerto, played by Roger Snermont at last Saturday's Esplanade concert, Beethoven composed two romances for violin and orchestra, Op. 40 in G and Op. 50 in F. Despite the numberings, both date from 1803, the Eroica year.

SHORTER FORMS

They are very similar in form and mood and, as the titles indicate, they are songlike in character, romance or "Romanze" being a song. In both brief works, the solo violin introduces the principal theme—with orchestral accompaniment in the F-major romance, without it in the one keyed in G.

"They are beautiful in their way," wrote Marion M. Scott, "not easy as to technique, very difficult to interpret satisfactorily. Their music leaves one where it found one. I suspect Beethoven had no strong poetic idea when he composed them." But he did provide violinists with much-needed material in the shorter forms for "pops" concerts and encores.

This also is true of the Havanaise, Op. 83 of Camille Saint-Saens, who spread a central theme of genuine Spanish origin throughout the entire piece. It is in the opening and closing moments, however, that the French composer's decided originality of conception shines through with such beauty.

A few months after his marriage in 1817, Weber wrote his Invitation to the Dance for his bride and it is one of his few compositions for the piano which have retained popularity. This dance suite with introduction and coda and, therefore, in its format an anticipation of the future Viennese waltz was published at Dresden in 1819.

It offers great attraction to arrangers. There have been new versions for piano, another for two pianos, also two violins and, for orchestra, one by Hector Berlioz (1819) and another, even more brilliant, by Felix Weingartner in 1896. Both versions are heard frequently in concert and on the air, while the Berlioz transcription is the music for the ballet "Spectre de la Rose," created by Michel Fokine in 1911.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 13 1966

THE ROVING EYE

By ROBERT TAYLOR

THE FADING ESPLANADE

The last Esplanade Concert of 1966 takes place Saturday night; the series, it seems, just began. This is no illusion of advancing age. Any way you look at it, 11 concerts can scarcely be deemed a season.

Many Bostonians are upset over the attrition of the series recently, and have voiced a justifiable concern. The symbol of the Hatch Shell denotes our city's culture in many places around the globe. Bostonians believe in music the way burghers of other metropolitain centers believe in intelligence or energy or vulgarity or empire.

Only the Esplanade fulfills this public need; the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's regular season, the Berkshire Festival belong to a musical elite, Pops is a law unto itself, Only the Esplanade affords the Bostonian a chance to enjoy a water view, a patch of night sky, a sense of greenery and open space under the conditions best suited to satisfy the Puritan conscience. Our blistering summers and sneaky winters implant a distrust of nature, but time spent listening to music is never wasted.

★ ★ ★

The Esplanade concerts, oddly enough, are not critic's or musician's concerts, although Arthur Fiedler in his wisdom established the policy of solid, serious programming. The size of the crowd and the various distractions of the surroundings make concentrated listening exceedingly difficult. Yet the concerts create an experience, a rare encounter with a lively spirit of living together. Boston likes to refer to itself as Athens (the implied comparison seems inappropriate), but one seldom has a chance to think of oneself as an Athenian, that is, a citizen whose identity is inseparable from the city's.

The modern world fragments. It isolates. Our sense of community depends upon a network of mass communications. Literature abounds in evidence of the modern city as an arena of loneliness, alienation and despair. The Esplanade concerts restore a proud, precious and vital solidarity; we are a common people with common institutions of poetry and music, exulting in, of all things, the uniqueness of a crowd.

The concerts have the most dramatic setting for music in Boston. Throughout the years we have done our best to spoil this setting, but somehow the drama endures. Storrow Drive ended a period in which one could hear the concerts in virtually bucolic quiet. Vista and perspective have been lost to the encroachments of several hideous constructions. Yet sailboats still fleck the Charles, and the music still creeps past them on the waters.

★ ★ ★

Mrs. Patrick Campbell once said that you can do what you like in London as long as you don't do it in the street and don't frighten the horses; and there are times when her quip comes to mind at an Esplanade evening. Still, it is a remarkably decorous and attentive crowd, especially in the folding-chairs down front. During the summer of 1942, when we couldn't afford concerts and were just this side of induction — the aimless limbo between school and the military which has since become a national commonplace — we used, to arrive early, and got to know several of our seatmates, as one will with regularity.

Because of the blackout, the concerts began early that summer. You were often treated to a superbly melancholy sunset over the Carter's Ink sign: the last measures of the Pastoral Symphony faded as the sun plumeted like a molten gong. People really sang The Star-Spangled Banner that year.

We were going to war, and like many young men before and after, had a fatalistic attitude toward the whole thing; but here, upholding life, was one center of gravity. Civilization may be a frail support, but it's all we have.

Now it appears that The Esplanade Concerts are dying, another small felicity sacrificed, and this is the way the world ends: not with a bang but a whimper.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
JUL 21 1966

Q—How many people attend an average evening at the Esplanade concerts? Also, why can't the season be extended longer than it is now? It used to be three or four weeks.
—M.B., Holbrook and F.X.M., Norwood.

A—According to Boston Symphony officials attendance figures for this year's concerts were larger in two weeks than during last year's three-week schedule. Attendance averaged over 15,000 nearly every night of the first week and over 20,000 on the nights of the second week. One gloomy night in the first week, attendance figures hit the only low, about 6000.

Unfortunately, the money doesn't come in as fast as the audience. Funds to pay the 80 musician orchestra come from three sources: the business community, the individual donor and the program booklet and chair rentals.

Year after year, a substantial deficit must be paid out of the general fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There is a substantial difference in cost between a free Esplanade concert period of three weeks, which costs nearly $100,000, and of two weeks costing $60,000.

Now, the B.S.O. is able to spend an extra week at Tanglewood where the audience makes donations.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 14 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson conducts tonight's Boston Pops program at the Hatch Memorial Shell, beginning at 8:30.

Symphony No. 6 in F major, Op. 68 "Pastoral" — Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner — Lam
Symphonie Espagnole, Op. [illegible] — Lalo
Soloist: Fredy Ostrovsky
French Military March — Saint-Saens

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 15 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct this season's next-to-last Pops program tonight at 8:30 at the Hatch Shell. The program:

Symphony No. 7. In A major, Op. 92 — Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra — Gershwin
Soloist: Anthony Paratore
Strike Up the Band — Gershwin-Green

128 World
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 10,000

AUG 10

* * *

Our editor managed to catch a couple of the Boston Symphony ESPLANADE CONCERTS during its brief two-week stay at the shell on the Charles river, craning his neck with 20,000 others to observe Erich Leinsdorf who unexpectedly picked up the baton one evening. Packed off to Tanglewood since July 2, the orchestra can still be enjoyed there under the Berkshire trees till August 31.

* * *

TIGHT BINDING

201

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 14 1966

A REALLY HEATED CONCERT—While most of the nation was smothered Wednesday by a heat wave, a record crowd continued to blanket the lawn about Hatch Shell on Memorial Drive to listen to Boston's Esplanade Concert. The rising temperatures and the soul-satisfying music has put an irresistible combination in guise of straw hats and umbrellas.
Record American Photos, John Murphy

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
JUL 13 1966

Hovering Blimp Jolts Boston Symphony Serenity

BOSTON (UPI) — Beethoven was blitzed by a blimp Tuesday night at an outdoor concert of the Boston Symphony.

Violinist George Zazofsky was playing the delicate strains of Beethoven's Romance Number 2 when the roar of engines drowned out his solo.

A blimp with rapidly flashing lights spelling out the virtues of a brand of tires was hovering over the audience of some 12,000 persons gathered on the banks of the Charles River.

"It was a ridiculous display of stupid advertising," irate Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson said. "To come over 12,000 people — to drown out the music — this is ridiculous."

Dickson, assistant to Boston Pops Conductor Arthur Fiedler, added, "After they'd completed their piece of good work, they disappeared in the night."

The concert was completed without further interruption.

The blimp had just come to Boston after three days in the New Bedford area.

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 49,594
JUL 13 1966

News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 9,291
JUL 13 1966

The Miami Herald
MIAMI, FLA.
D: 369,982 SUN. 442,677
JULY 14 1966

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 220,629
JUL 13 1966

ORLANDO, FLA.
STAR
D. 31,500
JULY 14 1966

Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 81,654
JUL 13 1966

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,630
JUL 13 1966

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 13 1966

BINGHAMTON PRESS
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

AUBURN CITIZEN ADVERTISER
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Circ. 8,697
JUL 13 1966

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 9,291
JUL 13 1966

DUNKIRK OBSERVER
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

ONEIDA DISPATCH
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

JAMESTOWN POST JOURNAL
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

CANANDAIGUA MESSENGER
Thursday, July 14, 1966

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 13 1966

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 13 1966

The Cleveland Press
D. 370,759
JUL 13 1966

Advertising Blimp Blitzes the BSO And Beethoven

BOSTON (UPI) — Beethoven was blitzed by a blimp Tuesday night at an outdoor concert of the Boston Symphony.

Violinist George Zazofsky was playing the delicate strains of Beethoven's Romance No. 2 when the roar of engines drowned out his solo.

A blimp with rapidly flashing lights spelling out the virtues of a brand of tires was hovering over the audience of some 12,000 persons gathered on the banks of the Charles River.

"It was a ridiculous display of stupid advertising," irate Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson said. "To come over 12,000 people — to drown out the music — this is ridiculous."

Concert Under Stars—and Blimp

Beethoven was blitzed by a blimp at an outdoor concert of the Boston Symphony last night.

Violinist George Zazofsky was playing the delicate strains of Beethoven's Romance No. 2 when the roar of the engines drowned out his solo.

A blimp, its flashing lights spelling out the virtues of a certain brand of tires, was hovering over the audience of 12,000 persons who had gathered on the banks of the Charles River in Boston.

"It was a ridiculous display of stupid advertising," said the irate conductor, Ellis Dickson, asisstant to Arthur Fiedler.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 13 1966

Beethoven's 5th Symphony Esplanade Standout

(By ROLFE BOSWELL) — Of the four overtures composed by Beethoven for his only opera, "Fidelio," three of these, all keyed in C, bear the name of "Leonora," after the name of the heroine.

The "Fidelio" overture, being played tonight, was written for the second revival of the ill-fated opera, which took place in May, 1814. It is far more conventional than any "Leonora" overture, quoting none of the musical material of the opera itself. It is apparent that Beethoven wanted to write some festive, introductory music for his opera without going into any details of the drama.

Its key is E major and the overture begins brightly and attractively, setting a tone of happy excitement. An allegro segment storms ahead, with joyous animation. Before the coda, horncalls from the introduction appear once again and rushing fanfare enter to conclude this charming and thoroughly musical curtain-raiser.

"SUBLIME NOISE"

"Beethoven's Fifth Symphony is the most sublime noise that has ever penetrated into the ear of man," wrote Edward Morgan Foster, and it owes its popularity to several reasons, not the least being that Opus 67 is a work combining powerful emotional appeal with the utmost forcefulness and directness of expression.

Never in musical history has so much been written by so many about so few notes as about the opening four notes of Beethoven's "V-for-Victory" symphony. The impetus was given by the composer himself, if indeed he ever uttered the words ascribed to him: "This is Fate knocking at the door."

More than any other great composer, Beethoven used his music to express definite personal experiences. He always tried to subordinate his innate facilities and the classical niceties of which he was capable to inner and less available emotions. Here was an innovator who never lost contact with his creative energies.

'STORM OF EMOTION'

Bernard Shaw has written, "He used the old patterns all his life with dogged conservatism, but he imposed on them such an overwhelming charge of human energy and passion, including that highest passion which accompanies thought and reduces the passion of the physical appetites to mere animalism, that he not only played Old Harry with their symmetry, but often made it impossible to notice at all that there was any pattern at all beneath the storm of emotion."

In addition to his great violin concerto, played by Roger Snermont at last Saturday's Esplanade concert, Beethoven composed two romances for violin and orchestra, Op. 40 in G and Op. 50 in F. Despite the numberings, both date from 1803, the Eroica year.

SHORTER FORMS

They are very similar in form and mood and, as the titles indicate, they are songlike in character, romance or "Romanze" being a song. In both brief works, the solo violin introduces the principal theme—with orchestral accompaniment in the F-major romance, without it in the one keyed in G.

"They are beautiful in their way," wrote Marion M. Scott, "not easy as to technique, very difficult to interpret satisfactorily. Their music leaves one where it found one. I suspect Beethoven had no strong poetic idea when he composed them." But he did provide violinists with much-needed material in the shorter forms for "pops" concerts and encores.

This also is true of the Havanaise, Op. 83 of Camille Saint-Saens, who spread a central theme of genuine Spanish origin throughout the entire piece. It is in the opening and closing moments, however, that the French composer's decided originality of conception shines through with such beauty.

A few months after his marriage in 1817, Weber wrote his Invitation to the Dance for his bride and it is one of his few compositions for the piano which have retained popularity. This dance suite with introduction and coda and, therefore, in its format an anticipation of the future Viennese waltz, was published at Dresden in 1819.

It offers great attraction to arrangers. There have been new versions for piano, another for two pianos, also two violins and, for orchestra, one by Hector Berlioz (1819) and another, even more brilliant, by Felix Weingartner in 1896. Both versions are heard frequently in concert and on the air, while the Berlioz transcription is the music for the ballet "Spectre de la Rose," created by Michel Fokine in 1911.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 13 1966

THE ROVING EYE

By ROBERT TAYLOR

THE FADING ESPLANADE

The last Esplanade Concert of 1966 takes place Saturday night; the series, it seems, just began. This is no illusion of advancing age. Any way you look at it, 11 concerts can scarcely be deemed a season.

Many Bostonians are upset over the attrition of the series recently, and have voiced a justifiable concern. The symbol of the Hatch Shell denotes our city's culture in many places around the globe. Bostonians believe in music the way burghers of other metropolitain centers believe in intelligence or energy or vulgarity or empire.

Only the Esplanade fulfills this public need; the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's regular season, the Berkshire Festival belong to a musical elite, Pops is a law unto itself, Only the Esplanade affords the Bostonian a chance to enjoy a water view, a patch of night sky, a sense of greenery and open space under the conditions best suited to satisfy the Puritan conscience. Our blistering summers and sneaky winters implant a distrust of nature, but time spent listening to music is never wasted.

★ ★ ★

The Esplanade concerts, oddly enough, are not critic's or musician's concerts, although Arthur Fiedler in his wisdom established the policy of solid, serious programming. The size of the crowd and the various distractions of the surroundings make concentrated listening exceedingly difficult. Yet the concerts create an experience, a rare encounter with a lively spirit of living together. Boston likes to refer to itself as Athens (the implied comparison seems inappropriate), but one seldom has a chance to think of oneself as an Athenian, that is, a citizen whose identity is inseparable from the city's.

The modern world fragments. It isolates. Our sense of community depends upon a network of mass communications. Literature abounds in evidence of the modern city as an arena of loneliness, alienation and despair. The Esplanade concerts restore a proud, precious and vital solidarity; we are a common people with common institutions of poetry and music, exulting in, of all things, the uniqueness of a crowd.

The concerts have the most dramatic setting for music in Boston. Throughout the years we have done our best to spoil this setting, but somehow the drama endures. Storrow Drive ended a period in which one could hear the concerts in virtually bucolic quiet. Vista and perspective have been lost to the encroachments of several hideous constructions. Yet sailboats still fleck the Charles, and the music still creeps past them on the waters.

★ ★ ★

Mrs. Patrick Campbell once said that you can do what you like in London as long as you don't do it in the street and don't frighten the horses; and there are times when her quip comes to mind at an Esplanade evening. Still, it is a remarkably decorous and attentive crowd, especially in the folding-chairs down front. During the summer of 1942, when we couldn't afford concerts and were just this side of induction — the aimless limbo between school and the military which has since become a national commonplace — we used, to arrive early, and got to know several of our seatmates, as one will with regularity.

Because of the blackout, the concerts began early that summer. You were often treated to a superbly melancholy sunset over the Carter's Ink sign: the last measures of the Pastoral Symphony faded as the sun plumeted like a molten gong. People really sang The Star-Spangled Banner that year.

We were going to war, and like many young men before and after, had a fatalistic attitude toward the whole thing; but here, upholding life, was one center of gravity. Civilization may be a frail support, but it's all we have.

Now it appears that The Esplanade Concerts are dying, another small felicity sacrificed, and this is the way the world ends: not with a bang but a whimper.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
JUL 21 1966

Q—How many people attend an average evening at the Esplanade concerts? Also, why can't the season be extended longer than it is now? It used to be three or four weeks. —M.B., Holbrook and F.X.M., Norwood.

A—According to Boston Symphony officials attendance figures for this year's concerts were larger in two weeks than during last year's three-week schedule. Attendance averaged over 15,000 nearly every night of the first week and over 20,000 on the nights of the second week. One gloomy night in the first week, attendance figures hit the only low, about 6000.

Unfortunately, the money doesn't come in as fast as the audience. Funds to pay the 80 musician orchestra come from three sources: the business community, the individual donor and the program booklet and chair rentals.

Year after year, a substantial deficit must be paid out of the general fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There is a substantial difference in cost between a free Esplanade concert period of three weeks, which costs nearly $100,000, and of two weeks costing $60,000.

Now, the B.S.O. is able to spend an extra week at Tanglewood where the audience makes donations.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 14 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson conducts tonight's Boston Pops program at the Hatch Memorial Shell, beginning at 8:30.

Symphony No. 6 in F major, Op. 68 "Pastoral," Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Symphonie Espagnole, Op. 21 Lalo
Soloist: Fredy Ostrovsky
French Military March Saint-Saens

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 15 1966

Esplanade Program

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct this season's next-to-last Pops program tonight at 8:30 at the Hatch Shell. The program:

Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92 Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra Gershwin
Soloist: Anthony Paratore
Strike Up the Band Gershwin-Green

128 World
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 10,000
AUG 10

* * *

Our editor managed to catch a couple of the Boston Symphony ESPLANADE CONCERTS during its brief two-week stay at the shell on the Charles river, craning his neck with 20,000 others to observe Erich Leinsdorf who unexpectedly picked up the baton one evening. Packed off to Tanglewood since July 2, the orchestra can still be enjoyed there under the Berkshire trees till August 31.

* * *

TIGHT BINDING

20/

tandout

compositions for the piano which have retained popularity. This dance suite with introduction and coda and, therefore, in its format an anticipation of the future Viennese waltz, was published at Dresden in 1819.

It offers great attraction to arrangers. There have been new versions for piano, another for two pianos, also two violins and, for orchestra, one by Hector Berlioz (1819) and another, even more brilliant, by Felix Weingartner in 1896. Both versions are heard frequently in concert and on the air, while the Berlioz transcription is the music for the ballet "Spectre de la Rose," created by Michel Fokine in 1911.

wsclip Agency Inc.
22106 • 742-

Globe
N, Mass.
45,838
1 1966

ple attend an average evening at the so, why can't the season be extended It used to be three or four weeks. F.X.M., Norwood.

Boston Symphony officials attendance concerts were larger in two weeks 's three-week schedule. Attendance nearly every night of the first week he nights of the second week. One irst week, attendance figures hit the money doesn't come in as fast as pay the 80 musician orchestra come e business community, the individual n booklet and chair rentals. a substantial deficit must be paid out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. al difference in cost between a free riod of three weeks, which costs near- wo weeks costing $60,000. is able to spend an extra week at he audience makes donations.

Herald (m)
STON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
UL 14 1966

nade Program

Ellis Dickson conducts 's Boston Pops program at atch Memorial Shell, be g at 8:30.

ny No. 6 in F major, "Pastoral," Beethoven
The Star-Spangled Banner
onie Espagnole, Op. 21 Laid
Soloist: Fredy Ostrovsky
Military March Saint-Saens

128 World
NORWOOD, Mass.
eekly Circ. 10,000

r editor managed to catch ple at the Boston Symphony ANADA CONCERTS during rief two-week stay at the on the Charles river, cran- r neck with 20,000 others to ve Erich Leinsdorf who un- edly picked up the baton vening. Packed off to Tan- od since July 2, the orches- an still be enjoyed there un- the Berkshire trees till Au- 1.

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 14 1966

A REALLY HEATED CONCERT—While most of the nation was smothered Wednesday by a heat wave, a record crowd continued to blanket the lawn about Hatch Shell on Memorial Drive to listen to Boston's Esplanade Concert. The rising temperatures and the soul-satisfying music has put an irresistible combination in guise of straw hats and umbrellas.
Record American Photos, John Murphy

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
JUL 13 1966

Hovering Blimp Jolts Boston Symphony Serenity

BOSTON (UPI) — Beethoven was blitzed by a blimp Tuesday night at an outdoor concert of the Boston Symphony.

Violinist George Zazofsky was playing the delicate strains of Beethoven's Romance Number 2 when the roar of engines drowned out his solo.

A blimp with rapidly flashing lights spelling out the virtues of a brand of tires was hovering over the audience of some 12,000 persons gathered on the banks of the Charles River.

"It was a ridiculous display of stupid advertising," irate Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson said. "To come over 12,000 people — to drown out the music — this is ridiculous."

Dickson, assistant to Boston Pops Conductor Arthur Fiedler, added, "After they'd completed their piece of good work, they disappeared in the night."

The concert was completed without further interruption.

The blimp had just come to Boston after three days in the New Bedford area.

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 49,594
JUL 13 1966

News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 9,291
JUL 13 1966

The Miami Herald
MIAMI, FLA.
D: 369,932 SUN. 442,677
JULY 14 1966

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON
D. 283,679
JUL 13 1966

ORLANDO, FLA.
STAR
D. 31,500
JULY 14 1966

Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 81,654
JUL 13 1966

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,630
JUL 13 1966

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 13 1966

BINGHAMTON PRESS
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

AUBURN CITIZEN ADVERTISER
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Circ. 8,697
JUL 13 1966

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 9,291
JUL 13 1966

DUNKIRK OBSERVER
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

ONEIDA DISPATCH
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

JAMESTOWN POST JOURNAL
Wednesday, July 13, 1966

CANANDAIGUA MESSENGER
Thursday, July 14, 1966

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 13 1966

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JUL 13 1966

The Cleveland Press
D. 370,759
JUL 13 1966

Advertising Blimp Blitzes the BSO And Beethoven

BOSTON (UPI) — Beetho- yen was blitzed by a blimp Tuesday night at an outdoor concert of the Boston Sym- phony.

Violinist George Zazofsby was playing the delicate strains of Beethoven's Ro- mance No. 2 when the roar engines drowned out his solo.

A blimp with rapidly flashing lights spelling out e virtues of a brand of es was hovering over the dience of some 12,000 per- ns gathered on the banks the Charles River.

"It was a ridiculous dis- y of stupid advertising," te Conductor Harry Ellis ckson said. "To come er 12,000 people — to own out the music — this ridiculous."

Concert Under Stars—and Blimp

Beethoven was blitzed by a blimp at an outdoor concert of the Boston Symphony last night.

Violinist George Zazofsky was playing the delicate strains of Beethoven's Romance No. 2 when the roar of the engines drowned out his solo.

A blimp, its flashing lights spelling out the virtues of a certain brand of tires, was hovering over the audience of 12,000 persons who had gathered on the banks of the Charles River in Boston.

"It was a ridiculous display of stupid advertising," said the irate conductor, Ellis Dickson, asisstant to Arthur Fiedler.

202

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,500
JUL 2 8 1966

CONCERT EFFORT Harry Ellis Dickson (right), conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Esplanade Concert in the absence of Arthur Fiedler, presents New England Life's John Mitchell, 285 Commonwealth Ave., with a certificate of appreciation for the company's support of the summer concert program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,205
AUG 9 1965

THE TRUSTEES of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have presented the Ford Motor Company Boston District Community Relations Committee with a citation for the company's support and sponsorship of the annual Esplanade Concerts in the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River. Arthur Fiedler is the founder and director of the fifteen free concert series, made possible through corporate gifts. His associate conductor, Harry Ellis Dickson (right), presented the citation in hand-lettered medieval script to Wayne W. Moore, assistant Boston district sales manager, Lincoln-Mercury Division.

MISCELANOUS

203

JUNIOR KEYNOTES
WORCESTER, MASS.
5 TI. A YR. - CIRC. N. AVAIL.

MAR 1966

Restorations Among Glowing Achievements of NFMC

by Ada Holding Miller
Past National President of NFMC

Tanglewood And The Little Red House

The Hawthorne Cottage is a replica of the "Little Red House" where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1850-51. Impoverished when he arrived at Tanglewood, Hawthorne was visited and encouraged by Longfellow, Holmes, Melville, and Fanny Kemble—the "jungle of literary lions" living and writing in the Berkshires of western Massachusetts.

This replica, replacing the original building destroyed by fire in 1891, was built and presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the NATIONAL FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS. Now used as music studios for the Berkshire Music Center, the Cottage is open to the public before each Festival concert.

The Berkshire Festival has grown into an internationally renowned center visited each summer by more than a quarter-million persons, who, during the eight week season, hear twenty-four concerts by the Orchestra, eight public rehearsals of the Orchestra, eight chamber music concerts and more than fifty concerts by the three hundred students of the Orchestra's summer school of music, the Berkshire Music Center, which is in session at Tanglewood (summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra), for the Festival period. Berkshire residents raised sufficient funds to build the 6000-seat Music Shed at Tanglewood.

It was just one hundred and sixteen years ago that Nathaniel Hawthorne left Salem, Massachusetts, having been removed from his remunerative position at the Salem Customs House because of political reasons.

Accordingly, he and his family moved to the seclusion of "THE LITTLE RED HOUSE" as he always called it, situated in the region known as "Tanglewood." And rightly named! It was too far from the house to the lake nearby, there was a jungle of trees and underbrush so thick that one would never dream that there was a beautiful lake to be seen, nor even Monument Mountain, one of the Berkshire range, which to this day seems always shrouded in a bluish-lavender mist.

Hawthorne himself, called the house "an ugly house", but when Mrs. Hawthorne had unpacked the furniture and her ornaments, it became home to them for a year and a half. After this period, Hawthorne returned to Salem.

This short period of isolation and quiet stillness proved to be of immeasurable importance to the world. Here, Hawthorne was encouraged and surrounded with some of the noblest literary lights of his day. He was visited by Oliver Wendell Holmes, Fanny Kemble, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, and Herman Melville of Moby Dick fame lived just down the road a mile or so.

In this simple Little Red House Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales," "The Wonder Book," and "The House of the Seven Gables". If you have not read every one of these delightful books run now to your nearest library and prepare yourself for hours of sheer joy. When you pass through Salem, be sure and visit The House of The Seven Gables which remains exactly as it was when Hawthorne lived in Salem. But, let me warn you not to eat that extra sandwich before climbing up and around the secret stairway!

To get back to The Little Red House, which burned down in 1890, the idea of restoring it was born in a hotel room in 1942 in Providence, Rhode Island. Mrs. Guy Gannett was our National President at that time, a woman of vision and always unafraid to try some new project. She became the Chairman of this venture at once and undertook the raising of the money necessary to do the restoration. Wisely, she chose both men and women for this committee who could easily drive to Tanglewood, for it was and still is off the beaten track. Many meetings with the architects and carpenters were held. The most careful research was done by every member of the committee, for you may be sure that no detail, however simple, was overlooked. It was agreed that the replica must be completely authentic.

Mrs. Gannett and I watched every nail and board pounded into place, including the raising of the rooftree and the building of the huge chimney built from the original stones. Our first inspection of the location took place on a very cold day in early Spring, and I must say that the outlook was not prepossessing. We saw that the old foundation was practically intact and could be used again. Being an old New England Yankee, I knew that after any fire the place to search for treasures would be the old cellar hole.

Nothing daunted, I gave a flying leap and landed "all of a piece" as we say in New England. I knew that there must be a crane somewhere in the rubble for how else could the cooking pots be hung? After much digging around and prodding with a large stick, sure enough, I unearthed the old crane still intact and also two

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
MAR 5 1966

Hills Conference Annual Meeting To Be April 12

The Berkshire Hills Conference will hold its annual dinner meeting April 12 at Eastover in Lenox, John V. Geary, executive director of the area tourist promotion agency, announced today.

He said that A. John Tuller of Great Barrington, a past president of the organization, will be chairman of the committee in charge.

Mr. Tuller will be assisted by Howard Wooster of Williamstown, John T. McPhillips of Lenox, conference president, and Mr. Geary.

A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be present, Mr. Geary said, to receive an award from the conference honoring the orchestra on the 30th anniversary of the BSO's affiliation with the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. N. AVAIL.
MAR 2 1966

FLORIDA GETS IN ON LONGHAIR FESTIVALS

• Daytona Beach, March 1.

A warm weather music festival on the order of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual Tanglewood stint has been slated for this summer here. It may be first major longhair festival in the deep south.

London Symphony will head up the musicmaking in 17 concerts skedded from July 28 through Aug. 21. Colin Davis, its conductor, will be the festival's music director.

TROY MORNING RECORD
Tuesday, February 8, 1966

Question Box

Q—What language is spoken by the gypsies?

A—Most of them speak the Romany language of their forefathers, which is based on ancient Sanscrit or Prakrit.

Q—Which of all the planets has the smallest orbit?

A—Mercury.

Q—How much of the earth's surface is covered by the sea?

A—More than 70 per cent, 139,000,000 square miles.

Q—What is the name of the [illegible] the Berkshires [illegible] Symphony [illegible] summer [illegible] owned [illegible] Tanglewood, formerly Nathaniel Hawthorne's home at Stockbridge, Mass.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 69,614 SUN. 119,446
MAR 2 1966

Rubinstein and Leinsdorf

An item called "Travel News from Czechoslovakia" brings tidings of pianist Artur Rubeinstein, who will play the palace on March 24, and of Erich Leinsdorf, who leads the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood each summer.

The master musicians are among "noted American artists" who will take part in the Prague Spring Festival in May. Rubenstein, who is coming to Albany under the auspices of Capital Newspapers, will go to Prague to be soloist in Smetana Hall, where Leinsdorf will lead the Czech Philharmonic.

SO[illegible]

Summer festivals! This is the season when culture moves to pastoral settings and [illegible] gets [illegible] with grass stains. The whole nation seems to be exploding with summer festivals in '66, and there will be no end to it until we run out of symphony orchestras. Some of the most important and choice attractions: The [illegible] Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Massachusetts, with the Boston Symphony, starting July 2; the Meadow Brook Music Festival of Oakland University, Michigan, now in its third year, with the Detroit Symphony performing in the beautiful new Baldwin Memorial Pavilion, starting June 2[illegible]; the Marlboro (Vermont) Musical Festival, [illegible] its 16th season June 20, with Pablo Casals [illegible] the chamber orchestra for two weeks [illegible] Then there are the Stratford Summer Festival [illegible] the Arts, (California) [illegible] on "20th Century Innovations" masterworks from the early years of our era; the Aspen (Colorado) [illegible] Music Festival, with a [illegible] summer parade of top artists. And, of course, the ever-jumping jazz festival at Newport, Rhode Island, which will fill the [illegible] back so[illegible]

McCALL'S MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 8.136.800
JULY 1966

MISCELANOUS

203

Available from NFMC Headquarters

Junior Achievement Record Book

3¼" in size • of high quality • in NFMC ed leather on padded front with gold-stamped insignia and ip • expandable cover • stiff back cover heets of gray filler in each book • post white gift box.
which will portray, protect, and pre-fill and proud to show—a book you of your achievements—a book that for the Junior Achievement Record ing.
ncluding postage and handling uarly sells at $6.00 in stationer stores)
et; 10 or more, 4¢ per sheet.

s, covered with the rust of ages still in fair condition. Also I disco ed some old bottles which had taken on a quamarine color from being buri some hundred ars or more. S how I managed climb back to ground and I apped the tre in old news-pers and bro them home to rovidence for ional cleaning.
hese were inco ed later on in one of the studio

While the exte of the house, even to the pur the yard, was reproduced exact was decided to adapt the interio modern usage by creating two va d studios which would become inn ately useful. Dr.
Serge Koussevitzk ppropriated one at once and Pi sky the other.
Both were to be ed for teaching purposes and still . Besides the two studios inside th house there is a small parlor which was authentically furnished by the late Mrs. Russell
Hatch of the Massachusetts Federation; a small kitchenette and storage space.

To raise the huge sum necessary to complete the project, Mrs. Gannett had to borrow funds many times for the war demands curtailed money-raising considerably. Many State Federations, clubs and individuals; contributed liberally. Finally the entire amount had been found with the exception of the last $3,000 needed before we could turn over the deed to the house and the keys, and this, in time for the dedication ceremonies.

This was a never-to-be-forgotten day in our NFMC history. Many celebrities were present, including Manning Hawthorne, Hawthorne's great grandson, Richard Manning, a cousin of Hawthorne, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, grandson of the poet and many of our federation members as well. This ceremony took place in 1947.

By 1952 both our beloved Mrs. Gannett and Mr. Robert W. Roberts had passed on. Both had given freely of their substance and of themselves. Our Lady Bountiful, Mrs. Roberts, had given us the last amount needed to pay off our indebtedness. It was rightly decided in 1952 therefore that the two studios be properly dedicated. With dignified and moving ceremony one studio was named "The Anne M. Gannett" and the other, "The Robert W. Roberts Studio." Name plaques were placed over the fireplaces. Mrs. Roberts and Mrs. Gannett's daughter, Mrs. Jean Gannett Arnzen were present as well as many of our federation members.

During the season The Little Red House is open to visitors daily at definite hours and it has already proven to be a main attraction of the whole Berkshire Festival area. Looking at the photographs of the house many times, I have often wondered just why the original builders placed that tiny slanting window in the ell of the house. It must have been to let some degree of light into those tiny upper rooms originally, for surely nobody could climb up to that precarious angle to attempt to open the window!

Now that the entire project has been so magnificently achieved we can make one true and pertinent statement. "It was a GREAT tribute to GREAT people by a GREAT and GRATEFUL organization."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
MAR 5 1966

Hills Conference Annual Meeting To Be April 12

The Berkshire Hills Conference will hold its annual dinner meeting April 12 at Eastover in Lenox, John V. Geary, executive director of the area tourist promotion agency, announced today.

He said that A. John Tuller of Great Barrington, a past president of the organization, will be chairman of the committee in charge.

Mr. Tuller will be assisted by Howard Wooster of Williamstown, John T. McPhillips of Lenox, conference president, and Mr. Geary.

A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be present, Mr. Geary said, to receive an award from the conference honoring the orchestra on the 30th anniversary of the BSO's affiliation with the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.
MAR 2 1966

FLORIDA GETS IN ON LONGHAIR FESTIVALS

Daytona Beach, March 1.

A warm weather music festival on the order of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual Tanglewood [illegible] has been slated for this summer here. It may be first major longhair festival in the deep south.

London Symphony will head up the musicmaking in 17 concerts slotted from July 28 through Aug. 21. Colin Davis, its conductor, will be the festival's music director.

TROY MORNING RECORD
Tuesday, February 8, 1966

Question Box

Q—What language is spoken by the gypsies?

A—Most of them speak the Romany language of their forefathers, which is based on ancient Sanscrit or Prakrit.

Q—Which of all the planets has the smallest orbit?

A—Mercury.

Q—How much of the earth's surface is covered by the sea?

A—More than 70 per cent—139,000,000 square miles.

Q—What is the name of the [illegible] Berkshires where the Boston Symphony performs [illegible] summer, and who formerly owned it?

A—Tanglewood, formerly Nathaniel Hawthorne's home at Stockbridge, Mass.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 69,614 SUN. 119,446
MAR 2 1966

Rubinstein and Leinsdorf

An item called "Travel News from Czechoslovakia" brings tidings of pianist Artur Rubeinstein, who will play the palace on March 24, and of Erich Leinsdorf, who leads the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood each summer.

The master musicians are among "noted American artists" who will take part in the Prague Spring Festival in May. Rubenstein, who is coming to Albany under the auspices of Capital Newspapers, will go to Prague to be soloist in Smetana Hall, where Leinsdorf will lead the Czech Philharmonic.

Summer festivals! This is the season when culture moves to pastoral settings and [illegible] with grass stains. The whole nation seems to be exploding with summer festivals in '66, and there will be no end to it until we run out of symphony orchestras. Some of the most important and choice attractions: The famed Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Massachusetts, with the Boston Symphony, starting July 2; the Meadow Brook Music Festival of Oakland University, Michigan, now in its third year, with the Detroit Symphony performing in the beautiful new Baldwin Memorial Pavilion, starting June 27; the Marlboro (Vermont) Musical Festival, commencing its 16th season June 20, with Pablo Casals conducting the chamber orchestra for two weeks from [illegible]. Then there are the Stanford Summer Festival of the Arts, (Calif.) focusing on "20th Century Innovations," [illegible] works from the early years of our era; the Aspen (Colorado) Music Festival, with an all-summer parade of top artists. And, of course, the ever-jumping jazz festival at Newport, Rhode Island, which will fill the [illegible] days of July with [illegible] and bring back some of the big bands we all [illegible]

McCALL'S MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 8,136,800
JULY 1966

MISCELANOUS

203

Available from NFMC Headquarters

Junior Achievement Record Book

2¾" in size • of high quality • in NFMC ed leather with gold-stamped insignia and on padded front cover • stiff back cover ip • expandable cover • stiff back cover sheets of gray filler with metal screw post white gift box. which will portray, protect, and pre- of your achievements—a book you fill and proud to show—a book that s for the Junior Achievement Record ing. including postage and handing tularly sells at $6.00 in stationer stores) eet; 10 or more, 4¢ per sheet.

the rust of dition. Also I bottles which marine color ome hundred w I managed ground and I in old news- em home to nal cleaning. d later on in f the house, he yard, was as decided to modern usage studios which tely useful. Dr. propriated one ky the other. d for teaching Besides the two ouse there is a as authentically ate Mrs. Russell chusetts Federa- ette and storage space.

To raise the h sum necessary to complete the p ct, Mrs. Gannett had to borrow funds many times for the war demands curtailed money-raising considerably. Many State Federations, clubs and individuals, contributed liberally. Finally the entire amount had been found with the exception of the last $3,000 needed before we could turn over the deed to the house and the keys, and this, in time for the dedication ceremonies.

This was a never-to-be-forgotten day in our NFMC history. Many celebrities were present, including Manning Hawthorne, Hawthorne's great grandson, Richard Manning, a cousin of Hawthorne, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, grandson of the poet and many of our federation members as well. This ceremony took place in 1947.

By 1952 both our beloved Mrs. Gannett and Mr. Robert W. Roberts had passed on. Both had given freely of their substance and of themselves. Our Lady Bountiful, Mrs. Roberts, had given us the last amount needed to pay off our indebtedness. It was rightly decided in 1952 therefore that the two studios be properly dedicated. With dignified and moving ceremony one studio was named "The Anne M. Gannett" and the other, "The Robert W. Roberts Studio." Name plaques were placed over the fireplaces. Mrs. Roberts and Mrs. Gannett's daughter, Mrs. Jean Gannett Arnzen were present as well as many of our federation members.

During the season The Little Red House is open to visitors daily at definite hours and it has already proven to be a main attraction of the whole Berkshire Festival area. Looking at the photographs of the house many times, I have often wondered just why the original builders placed that tiny slanting window in the ell of the house. It must have been to let some degree of light into those tiny upper rooms originally, for surely nobody could climb up to that precarious angle to attempt to open the window!

Now that the entire project has been so magnificently achieved we can make one true and pertinent statement. "It was a GREAT tribute to GREAT people by a GREAT and GRATEFUL organization."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177

MAR 5 1966

Hills Conference Annual Meeting To Be April 12

The Berkshire Hills Conference will hold its annual dinner meeting April 12 at Eastover in Lenox, John V. Geary, executive director of the area tourist promotion agency, announced today.

He said that A. John Tuller of Great Barrington, a past president of the organization, will be chairman of the committee in charge.

Mr. Tuller will be assisted by Howard Wooster of Williamstown, John T. McPhillips of Lenox, conference president, and Mr. Geary.

A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be present, Mr. Geary said, to receive an award from the conference honoring the orchestra on the 30th anniversary of the BSO's affiliation with the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAR 2 1966

FLORIDA GETS IN ON LONGHAIR FESTIVALS

Daytona Beach, March 1.

A warm weather music festival on the order of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual Tanglewood stint has been slated for this summer here. It may be first major longhair festival in the deep south.

London Symphony will head up the musicmaking in 17 concerts skedded from July 28 through Aug. 21. Colin Davis, its conductor, will be the festival's music director.

TROY MORNING RECORD
Tuesday, February 8, 1966

Question Box

Q—What language is spoken by the gypsies?

A—Most of them speak the Romany language of their forefathers, which is based on ancient Sanscrit or Prakrit.

Q—Which of all the planets has the smallest orbit?

A—Mercury.

Q—How much of the earth's surface is covered by the sea?

A—More than 70 per cent—139,705,000 square miles.

Q—What is the name of the estate in the Berkshires where the Boston Symphony performs during the summer, and who formerly owned it?

A — Tanglewood, formerly Nathaniel Hawthorne's home at Stockbridge, Mass.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
Circ. Sun 115,443

MAR 2 1966

Rubinstein and Leinsdorf

An item called "Travel News from Czechoslovakia" brings tidings of pianist Artur Rubeinstein, who will play the palace on March 24, and of Erich Leinsdorf, who leads the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood each summer.

The master musicians are among "noted American artists" who will take part in the Prague Spring Festival in May. Rubenstein, who is coming to Albany under the auspices of Capital Newspapers, will go to Prague to be soloist in Smetana Hall, where Leinsdorf will lead the Czech Philharmonic.

Summer festivals: This is the season when culture moves to pastoral settings and [illegible] gets [illegible] with grass stains. The whole nation seems to be exploding with summer festivals in '66, and there will be no end to it until we run out of symphony orchestras. Some of the most important and choice attractions: The famed Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Massachusetts, with the Boston Symphony, starting July 2; the Meadow Brook Music Festival of Oakland University, Michigan, now in its third year, with the Detroit Symphony performing in the beautiful new Baldwin Memorial Pavilion, starting June 27; the Marlboro (Vermont) Musical Festival, commencing its 16th season June 20, with Pablo Casals conducting the chamber orchestra for two weeks from July 27. Then there are the Stanford Summer Festival of the Arts (California), focusing on "20th Century Innovations," masterworks from the early years of our era; the Aspen (Colorado) Music Festival, with an all-summer parade of top artists. And, of course, the ever-jumping jazz festival at Newport, Rhode Island, which will fill the first four days of July with rhythm and bring back some [illegible] big bands we all loved. For further festivals, consult your local schedules. [illegible] music w[illegible]ing distance.

McCALL'S MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 8.136.800

JULY 1966

2204

ATLANTIC
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 279,,900

MAR 1966

March 1966, 75 cents

THE Atlantic

Brooke of Massachusetts:
Where I Stand

Robert Lowell
Conor Cruise O'Brien

Erich Leinsdorf
What Makes Opera Run

204

ATLANTIC
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 279,900
1966

6

A computer is baby-sitting these young trees

Red fox in a harvested area which was reforested by helicopter seeding

Keeping track of millions of trees growing on Weyerhaeuser lands used to be a laborious job. Today it's a different story. Our computers play back the answers we need at the flick of a button.

How much wood we're growing. How fast. Where to re-seed or hand plant new crops. How much we can safely cut without eventually running out of trees.

This is up-to-date tree farming at work for you and your children. For their children. And their children.

It's the kind of scientific forestry that means there will be trees on our lands, always. Trees to make the lumber, plywood, paper, cartons and scores of other products you use. Trees, too, to protect watersheds, shelter wildlife and beautify recreation areas.

Yes, America can have trees and still enjoy their products. To learn more, write us at Box A-5, Tacoma, Washington 98401, for a free booklet. Printed, of course, on paper from our tree farms.

Where the future grows . . . Weyerhaeuser

THE ATLANTIC

5454

WHAT MAKES OPERA RUN

BY ERICH LEINSDORF

Of the nearly four thousand operas that have been produced on stage, only forty or fifty have survived in current repertory. Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf was for many years a conductor of opera at the Metropolitan in New York and abroad. In this first of two articles he writes about the shortcomings and the virtues that spell failure or enduring popularity.

EVER since I moved to Boston to conduct symphony concerts exclusively, one of the principal questions put to me in interviews is "How much do you miss opera?" Mind you, not "Do you miss opera?", because the questioner takes it for granted that it is impossible for one who has conducted so much opera to live without it, but "How much?" Half-seriously and half-facetiously I reply that my nostalgia at this stage, less than four years after my last Metropolitan performance, is still controlled.

A European may gradually become saturated with the operatic repertory, but this rarely happens in the English-speaking world, which is ever more fascinated by this hybrid theatrical form. The reasons for the belated popularity of opera in the United States lie outside the realm of musical or theatrical aesthetics; for many years, financial support here was channeled mainly toward the symphony orchestra, which to the austere philosophy of Anglo-Protestantism appears worthy and uplifting while much of opera is tinsel and circus.

Since 1937, when I first looked at the American scene, the picture has changed radically. The Metropolitan then played a sixteen-week season, and that was all the operatic fare available to New York in a year. Now there are twenty-seven to twenty-nine weeks of the Met, twelve of the City Opera, two of the National Company, and performances by special organizations of a list of r works. In Chicago and New Orleans, opera been revived, and the West Coas artistic enterprise in the San Fran pany, whose ascendancy is bein development of Los Angeles as city.

To analyze the reason fo affection of the public, w outset between those op and those which are to specialized audiences. Opera, compiled by 3800 titles of oper I have picked at r find? C. E. diB Lassen's Le nelius' Der und Isolde, ko's The Moravia, Rognyed Nado

Copyright © 19

204
ATLANTIC
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 279,,900
1966
5454

THE ATLANTIC

WHAT MAKES OPERA RUN

BY ERICH LEINSDORF

Of the nearly four thousand operas that have been produced on stage, only forty or fifty have survived in current repertory. Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf was for many years a conductor of opera at the Metropolitan in New York and abroad. In this first of two articles he writes about the shortcomings and the virtues that spell failure or enduring popularity.

EVER since I moved to Boston to conduct symphony concerts exclusively, one of the principal questions put to me in interviews is "How much do you miss opera?" Mind you, not "Do you miss opera?", because the questioner takes it for granted that it is impossible for one who has conducted so much opera to live without it, but "How much?" Half-seriously and half-facetiously I reply that my nostalgia at this stage, less than four years after my last Metropolitan performance, is still controlled.

A European may gradually become saturated with the operatic repertory, but this rarely happens in the English-speaking world, which is ever more fascinated by this hybrid theatrical form. The reasons for the belated popularity of opera in the United States lie outside the realm of musical or theatrical aesthetics; for many years, financial support here was channeled mainly toward the symphony orchestra, which to the austere philosophy of Anglo-Protestantism appears worthy and uplifting while much of opera is tinsel and circus.

Since 1937, when I first looked at the American scene, the picture has changed radically. The Metropolitan then played a sixteen-week season, and that was all the operatic fare available to New York in a year. Now there are twenty-seven to twenty-nine weeks of the Met, twelve of the City Opera, two of the National Company, and performances by special organizations of a list of rare works. In Chicago and New Orleans, opera has been revived, and the West Coast boasts a major artistic enterprise in the San Francisco Opera Company, whose ascendancy is being challenged by the development of Los Angeles as an opera-producing city.

To analyze the reason for opera's hold upon the affection of the public, we must distinguish at the outset between those operas which are truly loved and those which are tolerated, appreciated by small specialized audiences, or totally ignored. Annals of Opera, compiled by Alfred Loewenberg, lists about 3800 titles of operas performed from 1597 to 1940. I have picked at random the year 1865. What do we find? C. E. diBarbieri's Perdita, or A Winter's Tale, Lassen's Le Captif, Meyerbeer's L'Africaine, Cornelius' Der Cid, Faccio's Amleto, Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, von Suppé's Beautiful Galatea, Moniuszko's The Haunted Castle, Sebor's The Templars in Moravia, Marchetti's Romeo e Giulietta, Serov's Rognyeda, Basin's Le Voyage en Chine, von Flotow's Naida, and that is it.

Of the thirteen works premiered during that year, current repertory retains only one of them, Tristan. We know the names of Meyerbeer, Cornelius, and von Suppé. Maybe some people recall the names of Moniuszko and von Flotow, but neither of these composers figures on opera or concert programs, notwithstanding a recent revival of Martha by the Metropolitan Opera in New York. I did record the comic opera The Barber of Baghdad by Cornelius in 1956, and while the music is charming, I realized then that a stage performance, particularly outside the German provinces, is no longer likely to happen, for the story is a silly yarn about a love-sick young man who is helped in the oddest way by a quasi-philosophical barber, and the Wagnerian-style music is somewhat ill suited to the text.

Copyright © 1966, by The Atlantic Monthly Company, Boston, Mass., 02116. All rights reserved.

Most operas see the light of day for a very short time, then are relegated to library shelves and to secondhand music stores. Therefore our musical snobs should stop looking down on such perennials as The Barber of Seville or La Bohème. La Bohème will be seventy years old this year. It had its premiere in Turin on February 1, 1896; within three years it was given in twenty-eight different cities including Buenos Aires, Rio de Janeiro, Los Angeles, Tunis, Smyrna, and in all the better known musical capitals of Europe.

The enormous effort it takes to conceive, compose, and fully orchestrate an operatic score does not necessarily ensure a lasting success. The surviving and successful operas — and by successful I mean broadly popular in a variety of countries — number only from forty to sixty works. Eight by Wagner, an equal number by Verdi, four to six Puccinis, three to five Mozarts, a number of single works from the French repertory, a few of the older Italians — Rossini, Donizetti — a small number by Richard Strauss make up the staples without which repertory cannot exist. Whether you count eight or sixteen Verdi operas in this group depends on the localities you are canvassing. In Glyndebourne, for example, Macbeth has been produced repeatedly but never Aïda; in Tokyo, Rome, or London, Aïda is rated as one of the most popular works, but not Macbeth. With every one of the prolific operatic composers — Mozart, Wagner, Verdi, Puccini, Strauss — this relative rating is necessary, and accordingly, the popular repertory varies from three dozen to five dozen works.

From the category of works played only for a specialized audience, I recall a beautiful and typical example. The German composer Hans Pfitzner wrote a long and difficult opera in three acts called Palestrina. It is an attempt to dramatize the pain of the creative process by showing the melancholy Palestrina torn between a cardinal's peremptory order to write a model Mass and his own doubts of his creative powers. The composition takes place on stage with nine dead composers appearing to Palestrina as symbols of the immortality of great music. By contrast, the second act shows the Council of Trent during a tumultuous session; and what had seemed the central theme in Act One — a composer in his quest for inspiration — becomes the world of church politics in Act Two.

When I was a student, my colleagues and I never missed a performance of this work. It was given regularly, once in the fall and once in the spring, in a rather small auditorium. It never drew more than half a house, and that half was made up of music students and priests. Perhaps the priests went to bone up on the Council of Trent, and perhaps they went because there was no wild lovemaking and love music to corrupt them. In any case, the opera never had a genuine following among the general public. It never made the international circuit. Performances in five German cities, plus Vienna, Switzerland, and Antwerp, constitute the geographical range of Palestrina. The length of the work cannot be the reason for its failure since equally long works by Wagner are high on the list of favorites. The heavy German texture cannot be responsible, as once again Wagner, and Strauss, have made the popularity charts. Thus I suspect that the subject matter, in its eminent suitability for priests, was the cause of its limited appeal.

In that long work no woman plays a role. The composer's dead wife is part of a dream sequence; the other female voices, a soprano and a mezzo, belong to two boys, son and disciple of Palestrina. The opera is entirely devoid of any love interest, and I suggest that the loyalty of the public has always been weakest when a love story was missing and strongest when love inspired the composer to write music of great fervor and sensual effect. The love stories of the most popular, successful, and enduring operas are so full of passion that their impact from the stage, as expressed through beautifully timbered human voices, preferably at extreme ranges, has no equal in music or theater.

Any analysis will show how prominent are the elements of passion and love among successful operas. We generally consider five works of Mozart to be part of the standard repertory: Seraglio, Figaro, Don Giovanni, Così fan Tutte, and The Magic Flute. Of these five the second and third hold a special position of affection, while the other three, musically just as great, are less successful because their libretti are less capable of arousing true compassion on the part of the audience.

The Magic Flute suffers from the worst fate of all. While the text was being written by Emanuel Schikaneder, a bankrupt theater manager who was determined to seek his fortunes anew with the help of the great Mozart, a rival impresario premiered a show called Kasperl, or The Merry Bassoon Player, taken from the same source as The Magic Flute. Schikaneder quickly changed all the principal characters from good person to bad person and vice versa. But in his haste he did not bother to make these changes on what he had already written, the shift taking place in the middle of the first act.

Any kind of audience participation in the suffering of the principal characters therefore becomes impossible. When a great score — and all of these three works, Seraglio, Così, and Magic Flute, are among the most sublime ever written — is provided with an inferior libretto, many listeners simply sit back and enjoy the incomparable music, but they do not get much out of the work as a whole.

It is maddening to musicians that Falstaff, the greatest score by Verdi, has not attained the popular acclaim accorded Traviata, Rigoletto, Trovatore, and Aïda. Falstaff, with a wonderful comedy text taken by Boito from Henry IV and The Merry Wives of Windsor, is one of the few truly miraculous scores, not only in terms of Verdi's own development but by any and all standards. It is an exuberant, exhilarating piece of music; but the fact that a love story (and it is only puppy love between young Miss Ford and young Mr. Fenton) has been relegated to the background has impeded the popular success of the work.

Rheingold and Siegfried are far less popular with even the Wagner enthusiasts than are Walküre and Götterdämmerung, and Parsifal has not attracted as large an audience as Tristan. Among Puccini's works, Suor Angelica and Gianni Schicchi (another chef d'oeuvre) cannot hold a candle to Bohème, Tosca, and Butterfly for audience popularity. Puccini proves most eloquently that when story and score drip with passion, the public goes wild. People are also completely enchanted when they are witnessing in an exotic setting problems of love which never occur in a lifetime on the block where they live or in the offices where they work.

Fatal ending of tragic love, passions fighting taboos, and the scorn of the establishment are themes with the strongest appeal because audiences feel and identify with these situations. Look at the three masterpieces of Puccini: hero and heroine live together without the benefit of clergy. What greater thrill than to witness the glorious exchange of arias between Mimi and Rodolfo, the duets of Tosca and Cavaradossi, and the long preparation for the "wedding night" by Butterfly and Pinkerton.

Verdi too gives us in his most successful works either love that cannot but lead to disaster — Aïda and Radames — or love that is illicit, as in Rigoletto and Traviata. In Walküre we see the tragedy of incestuous love, and in Carmen we find a weak man with a beautiful tenor voice fatally attracted by a gypsy, when all forces of decency have him marked as the future husband of a blonde childhood sweetheart who sings the prettiest tunes.

RARELY in the history of opera have there been successful comic works. Mozart's Figaro, Rossini's Barber of Seville, Wagner's Meistersinger, and Strauss's Rosenkavalier are the only ones which have remained in standard repertory without interruption.

These four comedies have one significant motif in common: the assumption of a false identity by one of the principals — Cherubino, Count Almaviva, Magdalena, and Octavian. Their disguises serve in each case to frustrate the ridiculous lover, who in a comedy is the indispensable third party. The ridiculous thirds are Count Almaviva in Mozart's Figaro, Doctor Bartolo in Rossini's work, Beckmesser in Meistersinger, and Baron Ochs in Rosenkavalier. In the first and last of this distinguished quartet, the piquancy of the disguise is heightened by having the boy's role acted by a female. It speaks ill for the understanding of certain film and opera producers that at times Octavian has been assigned to a man. What was intended as delightful and amusing masquerade in the original thus becomes slightly questionable, semiperverted buffoonery.

Opera, unlike the spoken dramatic comedy, is not the proper medium for social satire. And whatever sociological overtones we might find in Meistersinger and Rosenkavalier are more in the eyes of the beholders than in the minds of librettist and composer. The social significance in The Marriage of Figaro by Beaumarchais has been eliminated almost entirely by da Ponte, notwithstanding the fact that many contemporary stage directors bend over backward to instill rebellion into the love comedy. The jus primae noctis, which in Beaumarchais has all the earmarks of an intolerable social evil contributing to revolt of the peasantry and the servants, is in The Marriage of Figaro only part of a very attractive love chase. To make the seigneur's "right of the first night" appear as an intolerable hardship to the servant, the lord should be an evil, revolting man on whom the public can lavish its hate. But Count Almaviva in Figaro is no worse than a very active woman chaser. Indeed, there is very little in him of a grand seigneur oppressing his servants to the point where revolt becomes justified. Social satire is an intellectual exercise admirably suited to spoken dialogue but out of place with music.

But why is it that no matter how carefully the great comedy score Falstaff is produced, or how well it is performed, it retains only a limited attractiveness which puts it in group two of our repertory?

One of the reasons is that although it contains all the elements of a successful comedy, they are not effectively related to one another. The protagonist, Falstaff, has no connection with the lovers, Nanetta and Fenton, and their ultimate good fortune in marrying despite the earlier objections by the girl's father is really in no way linked with the central comedy.

Compare the second act finale, when the two lovers stand kissing behind a screen and are discovered during the chase after Falstaff, with a similar scene in the second act of Meistersinger, when Walther and Eva are hidden behind some bushes beside Pogner's house while Beckmesser, the man who is being fooled, sings to a girl in the window, supposing her to be Eva. All this is known to Hans Sachs, who not only disturbs the serenade of the ridiculous lover but in his song contrives to insert many allusions to the girl sitting with her lover in the shadow of her father's house.

In Falstaff there are two unrelated actions: Ford and his companions chasing after the old rogue, and the love affair of the young couple, who need not even be there to alter the situation; while in Meistersinger all five principals are inextricably bound together.

Disguise, which in the four greatest comic operas plays such a large part, is used in Falstaff, too, when Ford visits Falstaff's residence as Mr. Fontana. Logically speaking, Ford need not disguise himself since Falstaff has never met him before; therefore he merely assumes a different name. Again the device is there, but not as an essential, dramatically cogent motif.

Dr. Caius, representing in Falstaff what Beckmesser is in Meistersinger, never develops into a real character and is made so ridiculous that it is hard to conceive why he would ever have been promised the hand of Ford's daughter. Beckmesser, however, has never been chosen by Pogner. He may qualify through artistry, since Pogner has promised Eva's hand to "him who will win the crown of the Meistersinger," but this is quite different from having been chosen. Beckmesser is not an established suitor to either the audience or the girl, while Dr. Caius has been officially chosen by Ford; being of a ridiculous deportment and revolting appearance, the Doctor adds nothing but incongruity to the play.

The comedy ends with the marriage of the lovers, which, strange to say, has rarely inspired the finest musical inventions. The great death scene has produced much finer music than the happy ending. Think of Gilda, Violetta, Otello, Tristan, Siegfried, and many more. Stronger still is the combination of love and death. Wagner makes it into a whole philosophy in Tristan und Isolde, but it has been a basic motif in many tragic operas, be it in Ballo in Maschera, La Bohème, or Wozzeck.

Much has been made recently of the popularity and revival of the bel canto operas which have lain dormant for the better part of a hundred and fifty years, allegedly for want of singers. I do not believe that lack of singers was the reason. There were plenty of singers to perform the roles in Meyerbeer, which are just as difficult to negotiate as anything written by the earlier Italian bel canto composers. Bel canto was dependent on the availability of castrati. The disappearance of castrati as distinguished singers — or the reluctance to make an able choirboy into a mastersinger by castration — was a progressive development in European civilization. But I don't think that the reasons were humanitarian, since humanitarianism was not conspicuous in Western civilization. I think that with the transition from a small, mostly aristocratic audience to a large, middle-class subscription public and with the establishment of permanent theaters to replace touring troupes, a new focus of interest began to determine style, content, and purpose of opera. The desire was no longer for virtuoso singing by desexed master vocalists, but for an artful expression of the passionate urge between the sexes.

Perhaps it is worthwhile to remind ourselves that with Idomeneo, an opera seria with a castrato in one of the leads, Mozart bade farewell to that form and ventured next into the German Singspiel, Abduction From the Seraglio. That the libretto did not quite come up to the great fire and passion of Mozart's all-understanding heart is a small calamity. But here we have a forerunner of nineteenth-century operetta, based on the formula of a serious couple, a gay couple, a comedian, a certain amount of trouble between the couples, and an inevitable reconciliation at the finale.

The proliferation of operettas during the nineteenth century, particularly in Vienna and Budapest, undoubtedly deprived opera of many comic works and drove composers to tragic subjects as sophisticated people demanded more than the facile conflicts and easy solutions offered in operetta. Thus tragedy, passion, and death became the landmarks of triumphant operas traveling over the world stages and still in public favor.

It would be worthy of an extensive literary critique and analysis to show how a few operatic archetypes of the eighteenth and early nineteenth century influenced the dramatis personae in later works. I think particularly of three operas which served as models: Mozart's Figaro (1786) and Don Giovanni (1787), and Beethoven's Fidelio (1805). The latter is a unique case among the great repertory pieces. With part of our audiences it is a favorite for its wondrously beautiful score, high standard of morality, and more recently, its political timeliness. Since the end of World War II, revivals of Fidelio have been many and frequent. Political prisoners and a tyrannical, corrupt governor naturally recall to mind the Third Reich. If not all the public has taken Fidelio to heart as much as its grandeur and emotional sublimity warrant, it is again for reasons of a nonoperatic book. The story is indeed a paean to a most devoted wife, but opera lovers are out for less elevating thrills.

In Rocco, the jailer, there was created a prototype who had several variations in later works. The money-minded father of the marriageable girl becomes Daland in The Flying Dutchman (1843), Pogner in Meistersinger (1868), and Faninal in Rosenkavalier (1911). Just as the Byronic hero eventually becomes Rhett Butler, each of these characters gets more strongly and simply drawn with time, and it may well be that the development of a dramatic prototype over several decades reveals the public's increasingly jaded taste, which must be stimulated to laughter or compassion by ever sharper dramatic devices.

Rocco manifests his philosophy about money in an aria telling the young lovers that without money it is difficult to be happy in marriage. (Gustav Mahler felt that this greedy sentiment was below the general high moral tone of Fidelio and omitted the "gold" aria altogether.) Daland, the Norwegian sea captain, seeing cases of treasures carried ashore by the crew of the unknown skipper whom he has just met, is ready on that score to take him home and introduce him as his future daughter. It is quite clear from these examples that what is wealth is for Daland and the Marschal hinted at in classic opera is here put very realistically before us; where one's imagination is free to fill in the details of Cherubino's chases and the Countess's dreams and yearnings, little is left to guesswork when one sees Octavian and the schallin in bed, and hears the details of the Marschal marriage, her early biography, and the This comment does not omit the theatrical value as a reflection warrant, it is again for reasons of a nonoperatic book. The story is indeed a paean to a most devoted wife, but opera lovers are out for less elevating thrills.

In Rocco, the jailer, there was created a prototype who had several variations in later works. The money-minded father of the marriageable girl becomes Daland in The Flying Dutchman (1843), Pogner in Meistersinger (1868), and Faninal in Rosenkavalier (1911). Just as the Byronic hero eventually becomes Rhett Butler, each of these characters gets more strongly and simply drawn with time, and it may well be that the development of a dramatic prototype over several decades reveals the public's increasingly jaded taste, which must be stimulated to laughter or compassion by ever sharper dramatic devices.

Rocco manifests his philosophy about money in an aria telling the young lovers that without money it is difficult to be happy in marriage. (Gustav Mahler felt that this greedy sentiment was below the general high moral tone of Fidelio and omitted the "gold" aria altogether.) Daland, the Norwegian sea captain, seeing cases of treasures carried ashore by the crew of the unknown skipper, whom he has just met, is ready on that evidence alone to take him home and introduce him to his daughter. It is quite clear that the stranger's wealth is for Daland a sufficient passport to accept him as his future son-in-law.

In Pogner, cultural snobbery has been added to wealth, and while he wonders in the second act if he hasn't been a bit vain in putting his daughter up as a prize for the best Meistersinger, he is a sympathetic and yet accurate image, not of the medieval, but of the nineteenth-century rich German bourgeois who had to manifest his concern for culture if he desired to be a fully respected member of society. Finally, in Faninal we see the caricature of the moneyed man. A war profiteer, he will marry off his daughter to a man of the wrong age, boorish, unfit for his child, but with a genuine title to bestow. Our Herr von Faninal, willing to pay the debts of the impoverished, squandering, whoring baron, is a true portrait of many twentieth-century fathers who sell their daughters for titles, real or spurious, at great expense to themselves, and remain as oblivious to the human characteristics of the intended as Faninal.

Other characters in Rosenkavalier are drawn more radically than their prototypes in Mozart–da Ponte's Marriage of Figaro. Octavian derives in a direct line from Cherubino. But whereas Cherubino chases around the estate to steal a quick kiss from a maid or country girl, Octavian spends night after night in bed with an older woman. The Marschallin herself is an extreme Countess Almaviva. Both ladies have been disappointed by negligent husbands; but while the Count comes back to his wife from his flirtations for what we assume will be a spotty but still well-matched conjugal existence, the Marschal was never loved, and we do not expect him back in his wife's arms. It was a marriage ordered by convention, and the girl who came from a convent was abandoned or neglected by her husband very soon. The Marschal spends most of his time hunting big game in the southern provinces of the Austrian empire.

Without detracting from Hofmannsthal's achievement in writing the charming libretto for Rosenkavalier, it is clear from these examples that what is hinted at in classic opera is here put very realistically before us; where one's imagination is free to fill in the details of Cherubino's chases and the Countess's dreams and yearnings, little is left to guesswork when one sees Octavian and the Marschallin in bed, and hears the details of her forced marriage, her early biography, and her later life.

This comment does not lessen the literary and theatrical value of the book; it should serve only as a reflection on the culture in our theater, patronized as it is by people who demand more and more explicit acting out of the problems presented by the dramatist.

In Octavian, the Marschallin, and Faninal, the classical prototypes of Cherubino, the Countess, and Rocco are easily recognizable. Ochs, seemingly an original creation, shows how dramatic motifs and situations tend to appear over and over again because their appeal to the public is time-tested.

In the first scene of Don Giovanni, Leporello sings his famous aria "Madamina." It is a showpiece during which he exhibits to a startled Elvira, abandoned by the Don, a list of all the girls who over the years have been lovers of his master. It is in modern lingo a "little black book," where conquests are noted. It is gaudy and bawdy, a piece such as only Mozart in music and Shakespeare in words could conceive.

This aria has its counterpart in Act One of Rosenkavalier; the Baron regales the Marschallin with his own amorous routines chez Lerchenau, tells how he judges the four seasons of the year by their suitability to lovemaking, and gives detailed descriptions of the various types of females whom he finds more or less to his liking. He has an entire rule book of the mechanics of seduction at the tip of his tongue, and delivers it in very spirited, high-speed, six-eight time to the alternately amused and slightly miffed Marschallin.

There is a difference between the two pieces; Leporello's aria is not only one of the highlights in Don Giovanni, it has become a showpiece on the recital platform for bassos who normally do not sing Leporello on stage. The role is performed by the buffo, while the principal basso cantante is cast as Don Giovanni, yet principal bassos are happy to sing "Madamina" in concert. Most of our famous Dons have sung this great aria; its latter-day successor, the narrative of Ochs, not only never made the recital platform, it is even shortened in most performances of Rosenkavalier. The piece, brilliant though it is, presents difficulties of delivery which make it an unlikely candidate for the top ten basso arias.

It seems to me that each composer is inspired by some different variety of the love theme and conflict. Whether constant return to a basic motif is a psychological clue to the composer's own personality, I leave to the amateur analysts to determine. Verdi found his best libretti in novels or dramas where a love affair between the soprano and the tenor conflicts with a third party (the baritone or mezzo). These love affairs, some platonic, some less so, are "challenged" by fathers in Rigoletto and Traviata; by a betrayed husband in Ballo in Maschera; by a rival mezzo in Aida; and in Don Carlo by the basso, who happens to be not only the husband of the soprano but also the father of the tenor.

The lower voices usually represent violated social custom. Rigoletto — baritone — knows that the Duke is married and has taken but a very temporary fancy to his daughter; father Germont — baritone — knows that his son's liaison jeopardizes the chances of a proper marriage for his daughter; Renato — a baritone — the betrayed husband in Ballo in Maschera, needs no explanation; in Don Carlo the betrayed father and husband is the King, who cannot live in his exalted realm with suspected betrayal behind his back; and Amneris — a mezzo — speaks not only as an enraged, jealous woman, she personifies a social order which frowns upon a victorious general who prefers the slave daughter of the vanquished enemy to the royal offspring of his own country.

Just as Verdi showed great preference for the couple that rebels against society and is punished, so did Wagner have a predilection for the hero who violates every ground rule of society, yet in the end is redeemed, mostly by self-sacrificing, loving women. And since Wagner saw himself in most of his hero-figures, it is perfectly conceivable that Verdi, too, portrayed his own life upon the stage. Verdi's young wife died in 1840. In 1847 he met in Paris the singer Giuseppina Strepponi, who lived with him for twelve years before they were married.

In 1852 the father of Verdi's first wife seems to have complained of Miss Strepponi to Verdi. Verdi replied:

> In my house there lives a lady, free, independent, a lover like myself of solitude, possessing a fortune that shelters her from all need. Neither I nor she owes to anyone at all an account of our actions. On the other hand, who knows what relationship exists between us? What affairs? What ties? What claims I have on her and she on me? Who knows whether she is or is not my wife? And if she is, who knows what the reasons are for not making the fact public? Who knows whether that is a good thing or a bad one? And even if it is a bad thing, who has the right to ostracize us? I will say this, however: in my house she is entitled to as much respect as myself — more, even; and no-one is allowed to forget that on any account. And finally, she has every right, both on account of her conduct and her character, to the consideration she never fails to show to others.

The situation must at times have been difficult for such a public figure as Verdi, and may account for the compassionate understanding of irregular relationships which he brought to his operas.

Mozart is more complex. It seems to me that he developed in his four late works (Seraglio excepted) the strange and fascinating concept of dividing woman into three different parts. In Figaro, Countess, Cherubino, and Susanna; in Don Giovanni, Donna Anna, Donna Elvira, and Zerlina; in Così, Fiordiligi, Dorabella, and Despina; and in Magic Flute, the Queen, Pamina, and Papagena. In all four works the first-named expresses the more austere woman, the second sings the most passionate music, and the third is the cuddly, kittenish, warm, and primitive girl.

Mozart, the unique dramatic genius who understood every facet of life, knew that it was impossible to create one role representing woman as he saw and dreamt of her. He chose libretti where he found woman divided into her components; this adds to the fascination of casting and singing Mozart roles. Like Shakespeare, Mozart was a performer himself and knew that a company of singers would show up best if all its virtues and talents were exhibited. By writing three good roles, he enabled three gifted women to shine.

Strauss followed Mozart, perhaps consciously, in favoring the female voice. He excelled in writing for sopranos and mezzo-sopranos but, unlike Mozart, was not equally at home with male voices. Three women sing in Rosenkavalier — the Marschallin, Octavian, and Sophie; in Elektra it is the protagonist, her mother, Klytemnestra, and her sister, Chrysothemis, who carry most of the score; in Ariadne the Composer, Ariadne, and Zerbinetta; in Frau ohne Schatten, the Empress, the dyer's wife, and the nurse.

This is no coincidence. Composers pick their librettists and then influence them to a degree, because a composer must do so if he is to be inspired by the text delivered to him.

OPERAS THAT SURVIVE

Selected by Erich Leinsdorf

	Chestnuts	Vintage Wine	Larks' Tongues
French	Carmen Faust Manon (Massenet)	The Tales of Hoffmann	Pelléas et Mélisande Samson et Dalila Werther
Italian	The Barber of Seville Lucia di Lammermoor Cavalleria Rusticana I Pagliacci	Norma Don Pasquale La Gioconda	La Cenerentola L'Elisir d'Amore Andrea Chénier
Verdi	Rigoletto La Traviata Il Trovatore Aïda	Un Ballo in Maschera La Forza del Destino Don Carlos Otello	Ernani Macbeth Simon Boccanegra Falstaff
Puccini	La Bohème Madame Butterfly Tosca	Manon Lescaut Turandot	La Fanciulla del West Il Tabarro Gianni Schicchi
Slav		Boris Godunov	La Pique Dame Eugene Onegin The Bartered Bride
Mozart	The Marriage of Figaro	Don Giovanni The Magic Flute	Idomeneo The Abduction from the Seraglio Così fan Tutte
German		Fidelio Die Fledermaus	Orfeo (Gluck) Der Freischutz Wozzeck
Wagner	Lohengrin Tannhäuser	The Flying Dutchman Tristan und Isolde Die Meistersinger Die Walküre Götterdämmerung	Das Rheingold Siegfried Parsifal
R. Strauss	Der Rosenkavalier	Salome Elektra	Ariadne

SHOWTHROUGH

205

AMERICAN HOME
NEW YORK, N. Y.
10 TI. A YR. 3,773,800

SUM. 1966

NEW PRODUCTS

MUSIC FESTIVALS FOR FAMILY FUN

Evening into night, hundreds of people, the sound of music ... and suddenly a crowd turns into a ... Thats music under the stars . . . and it ... music into sheer romance or jazz ... excitement. To help you find the summer festivals will work its best magic on you, we consulted the ... Guides ... all over the country. ... just that; for more and greater details see the Guides of your region. Summer plans now for July and August.

In the Northeast there are band concerts at Bangor, chamber music concerts at Brunswick and Camden, all in Maine. At Lenox, Massachusetts, you'll find the famous Berkshire Music Festival (Tanglewood) with the Boston Symphony. Very near there is the Berkshire ... with jazz and folk music. Rhode Island ... the Jazz Festival at Newport. Jazz, opera, folk music ... and Vermont offers the music festival at Marlboro under the direction of Rudolph Serkin.

SCHOLASTIC TEACHER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD WEEK EDITION
W. 2,683,800

APR 15 1966

Foremost outdoor summer music festival in U. S. is Boston Symphony's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Huge audiences often number 15,000 people for a single concert. Above, conductor Erich Leinsdorf rehearses the orchestra in modernistic, specially-designed acoustical shell.

VALATIE ROUGH NOTES
Friday, April 22, 1966

Notes of a Red-Headed Secretary

Dear Boss,

Nice note from Ted Shawn this week telling us the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival will open its 34th year on June 23rd . . . Some of the season's highlights will be the East coast debut of the San Diego Ballet . . . The Berkshire Symphony will mark its 30th year at Tanglewood when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the opening concert on July 2 . . .

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177

MAR 8 1966

Music Stadium at Downs? BHC Takes Some Soundings

Use of the Berkshire Downs track in Hancock for a "music stadium" is being investigated by the Berkshire Hills Conference.

John V. Geary, executive director of the area tourist promotion agency, said his board of directors has authorized him to study the music stadium possibility.

He said in a membership bulletin that the directors took the action after he suggested that the owner of the track probably would be looking for other uses for the Hancock property because of the expected loss of commercial racing dates this year.

"I have told our directors," Mr. Geary reported "that I would hate to see that property used for something like drag racing. Certainly this would not help the Berkshire image as a center of cultural, historic and natural attractions. Based on the thought that the best way to prevent such an unfortunate occurrence is to come up with alternatives, our directors have authorized me to pursue such possibilities."

Mr. Geary said he has been working with Herbert Frank of the Stern-Frank Advertising Agency in Boston on use of the track as a summer music stadium for popular music concerts or musical comedy.

"Our preliminary investigations have convinced us that, with a minimum of cost, a portable stage can be constructed flush with the lower level of the Berkshire Downs grandstand," Mr. Geary said.

He pointed out that the track has other necessary facilities such as concession stands, ticket offices, parking and rest rooms.

Mr. Geary also disclosed that the conference is planning a special promotional program this year to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's affiliation with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 221,211
APR 26 1966

Musical Chairs

Saratoga Center Opening With a Stunner—in Length

By MARGO MILLER
Globe

Whatever else the season may yield, the program for the opening of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center is a stunner—in length. It is about 100 minutes of music. Eugene Ormandy's all Beethoven concert will open with "The Consecration of the House," an overture which shows up at many dedicatory concerts. He and the Philadelphia Orchestra will then do the Symphony No. 8. After intermission comes the Ninth.

The Saratoga music season runs Aug. 4-24. Against the dog days, Ormandy has an air-conditioned podium. The New York City Ballet has the first part of the season, July 8-31. For information about both, address the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga, N.Y. 12866. They will send a black and tan folder, which includes the information that a month of flat racing begins Aug. 1.

About 60 miles east of Saratoga, Tanglewood is readying itself for the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival. The theme this Summer is the Romantic Concerto. Opera in concert form proving popular last year with "Lohengrin" spread over a week-end, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Mozart's "The Magic Flute" in a single evening performance. (Ormandy is countering with "Der Rosenkavalier" and "Die Fledermaus.") The Tanglewood dates are July 2-Aug. 21. Beethoven's Ninth closes the season.

Just music at Tanglewood. If you want dance you have to go off the reservation about 12 miles to Ted Shawn's Jacob's Pillow Festival in the hilltown of Becket.

Each of the three festivals is full of smiles. Competition? Hardly mentioned, in public. They say there are enough tourists to go around. Shawn has taken the precaution of adding Thursday matinees. Tanglewood, hoping to catch late-starting weekenders, will delay the Friday concerts until 9 p.m., but offer chamber music at 7 p.m. for early birds. All Saratoga events will begin at 8:30. Tanglewood's Saturdays at 8. Sunday matinees are 30 minutes earlier, at 2:30, in the Berkshires. Both festivals request "appropriate dress" in and outside their Music Sheds.

Roy Hemming for Scholastic

These young autograph seekers have just heard a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf (in dark glasses) at the summer music festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Are young people as interested in making music as listening to it? Yes, says a national music organization. It estimates that 12,000,000 youths take music lessons and play instruments.

Such activities will be spotlighted during National Music Week, May 1-8. Its purpose: "To develop understanding and appreciation of music, and to encourage more participation in music."

Robert Rickert, our cover photographer, won Honorable Mention in the 1965 Scholastic Photography Awards, sponsored by Eastman Kodak Co. Bob attended Rincon H.S., Tucson, Ariz.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
JUNIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,389,900

APR 22 1966

SHOWTHROUGH

AMERICAN HOME
NEW YORK, N. Y.
10 TI. A YR. 3,773,800

CUM. 1966

FESTIVALS FOR FAMILY FUN

Deepening into night, hundreds of people, the music . . . and suddenly a crowd turns into a city! That's music under the stars . . . and it chamber music into sheer romance or jazz kind of excitement. To help you find the summer will work its best magic on you, we consulted Travel Guides to locate festivals all over the course the sampling here is just that; for greater details, see the Guide of your region. plans now for July and August.

In the Northeast there are band concerts at Bangor, chamber music concerts at Brunswick and Camden, all in Maine. At Lenox, Massachusetts, you'll find the famous Berkshire Music Festival (Tanglewood) with the Boston Symphony. Very near there is the Berkshire Music Barn with jazz and folk music. Rhode Island has the big Festival at Newport . . . jazz, opera, folk music . . . and Vermont offers the music lover a festival at Marlboro under the direction of Rudolph Serkin.

SCHOLASTIC TEACHER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD WEEK EDITION
W. 2.683.800

APR 15 1966

Roy Hemming for Scholastic

Foremost outdoor summer music festival in U. S. is Boston Symphony's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., whose audiences often number 15,000 people for a single concert. Above, conductor Erich Leinsdorf rehearses the orchestra in modernistic, specially-designed acoustical shell.

VALATIE ROUGH NOTES
Friday, April 22, 1966

Notes of a Red-Headed Secretary

Dear Boss,

Nice note from Ted Shawn this week telling us the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival will open its 34th year on June 23rd . . . . One of the season's highlights will be the East coast debut of The San Diego Ballet . . . . The Berkshire Symphony will mark its 30th year at Tanglewood when Erich Leinsdorf conducts the opening concert on July 2 . . .

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177

MAR 8 1966

205

Music Stadium at Downs? BHC Takes Some Soundings

Use of the Berkshire Downs track in Hancock for a "music stadium" is being investigated by the Berkshire Hills Conference.

John V. Geary, executive director of the area tourist promotion agency, said his board of directors has authorized him to study the music stadium possibility.

He said in a membership bulletin that the directors took the action after he suggested that the owner of the track probably would be looking for other uses for the Hancock property because of the expected loss of commercial racing dates this year.

"I have told our directors," Mr. Geary reported "that I would hate to see that property used for something like drag racing. Certainly this would not help the Berkshire image as a center of cultural, historic and natural attractions. Based on the thought that the best way to prevent such an unfortunate occurrence is to come up with alternatives, our directors have authorized me to pursue such possibilities."

Mr. Geary said he has been working with Herbert Frank of the Stern-Frank Advertising Agency in Boston on use of the track as a summer music stadium for popular music concerts or musical comedy.

"Our preliminary investigations have convinced us that, with a minimum of cost, a portable stage can be constructed flush with the lower level of the Berkshire Downs grandstand," Mr. Geary said.

He pointed out that the track has other necessary facilities such as concession stands, ticket offices, parking and rest rooms.

Mr. Geary also disclosed that the conference is planning a special promotional program this year to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's affiliation with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 221,211
APR 26 1966

Musical Chairs

Saratoga Center Opening With a Stunner—in Length

By MARGO MILLER
Globe

Whatever else the season may yield, the program for the opening of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center is a stunner—in length. It is about 100 minutes of music. Eugene Ormandy's all Beethoven concert will open with "The Consecration of the House," an overture which shows up at many dedicatory concerts. He and the Philadelphia Orchestra will then do the Symphony No. 8. After intermission comes the Ninth.

The Saratoga music season runs Aug. 4-24. Against the dog days, Ormandy has an air-conditioned podium. The New York City Ballet has the first part of the season, July 8-31. For information about both, address the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga, N.Y. 12866. They will send a black and tan folder, which includes the information that a month of flat racing begins Aug. 1.

About 60 miles east of Saratoga, Tanglewood is readying itself for the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival. The theme this Summer is the Romantic Concerto. Opera in concert form proving popular last year with "Lohengrin" spread over a week-end, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Mozart's "The Magic Flute" in a single evening performance. (Ormandy is countering with "Der Rosenkavalier" and "Die Fledermaus.") The Tanglewood dates are July 2-Aug. 21. Beethoven's Ninth closes the season.

Just music at Tanglewood. If you want dance you have to go off the reservation about 12 miles to Ted Shawn's Jacob's Pillow Festival in the hilltown of Becket.

Each of the three festivals is full of smiles. Competition? Hardly mentioned, in public. They say there are enough tourists to go around. Shawn has taken the precaution of adding Thursday matinees. Tanglewood, hoping to catch late-starting weekenders, will delay the Friday concerts until 9 p.m., but offer chamber music at 7 p.m. for early birds. All Saratoga events will begin at 8:30. Tanglewood's Saturdays at 8. Sunday matinees are 30 minutes earlier, at 2:30, in the Berkshires. Both festivals request "appropriate dress" in and outside their Music Sheds.

Roy Hemming for Scholastic

These young autograph seekers have just heard a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf (in dark glasses) at the summer music festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Are young people as interested in making music as listening to it? Yes, says a national music organization. It estimates that 12,000,000 youths take music lessons and play instruments.

Such activities will be spotlighted during National Music Week, May 1-8. Its purpose: "To develop understanding and appreciation of music, and to encourage more participation in music."

Robert Rickert, our cover photographer, won Honorable Mention in the 1965 Scholastic Photography Awards, sponsored by Eastman Kodak Co. Bob attended Rincon H.S., Tucson, Ariz.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
JUNIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1.389.900

APR 22 1966

706

HAMMOND, LA.
STAR
D. 5,000

MAY 17 1966

Stargazing

Local views on the news

QUESTION - What did you think of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players recently appearing here? Have you noticed a decrease or increase in cultural opportunity and participation in Hammond?

* * *

MRS. JOHN DESMOND, wife and mother, Greenlawn Avenue, Hammond.

"I enjoyed it thoroughly. We are very lucky to have gotten them, especially since this was their only southern stop. I have noticed an increase in cultural events during my 8½ years here. The only disappointing thing is that not enough people go.

"Although the audience was a nice size for the Boston concert, there were still too many empty seats. Dr. Wilcox and the Fine Arts Committee should be congratulated for a wonderful contribution."

* * *

MRS. LEONCE ALBIN, telephone sales clerk, 150 Rosewood, Hammond.

"I missed the concert, although I really wanted to attend. We enjoy classical music and would like to have more of it here.

"My daughter was able to take violin lessons from Mr. Richardson at the college. This is another kind of available opportunity that we are glad she has."

* * *

MRS. R. W. REIMERS, householder, 708 Thomas St., Hammond.

"I went both nights, and think it's the most marvelous thing we've ever had in Hammond. I certainly think we need more cultural attractions here. So much of what is available is nice, but often unprofessional.

"The college offers a lot, but there are so many free attractions that people often avoid the things that cost more. The more professional entertainment we have, the better it will be for the entire town."

* * *

MRS. HANS SCHNEIDER, housewife, 802 W. Thomas, Hammond.

"The Boston Concert was one of the finest things we've had in years.

"Bad timing is the main thing wrong with the cultural events in Hammond -- everything comes in bunches with some months offering nothing. This affects attendance.

"For example, after a period of no attractions, we had several things last month. There are many people who are interested, but they can't do everything at once, and can take only so much at a time."

DOLLY ADAMS

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONNTHLY 22.500

JUN 1966

Richard Bouchett, organist of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, is the winner of the 1966 Young Artists' Competition sponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Boston AGO Chapter. In addition to receiving a $500 cash award, he will be sponsored in recital in Symphony Hall, Boston, in the 1966-1967 season.

Mr. Bouchett holds the BMus degree from the University of Oklahoma, the SMM degree from Union Theological Seminary, and the Artist's Diploma from the Curtis Institute of Music. He is presently enrolled in the doctoral program at Union Theological Seminary. His organ teachers include Adrienne Reisner, Emmet Smith, Mildred Andrews, Alexander McCurdy, Gustav Leonhardt and Robert Baker.

In addition to his recital in Symphony Hall, he will be playing numerous recitals throughout the country.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

MAY 1966

Leinsdorf to Conduct in Prague and Paris Following Japanese Trip

In order to make his trip to Japan possible Eric Leinsdorf had to revise his plans for European appearances which now will begin, with an engagement on May 16 as guest conductor of the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra during the Prague Spring Festival. On June 1, 3 and 5 he will be in Paris with the Metropolitan Opera conducting three performances of Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro." Until June 21, Mr. Leinsdorf will be in Rome conducting the recording of Verdi's "Un Ballo in Maschera" for RCA Victor Records. He will return to Boston before proceeding to his summer residence in Stockbridge, Mass., where he will take up his duties as Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight week Berkshire Festival which opens on Saturday, July 2.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 444,396 SUN. 553,012

JUN 6 1966

Paris Fans Rebuked for Jeering Met

Reuters

PARIS—The music critic of the Paris newspaper Le Figaro rebuked theater audiences who whistled and jeered at the New York Metropolitan Opera Company's performances here last week, said "I believe we are becoming the worst brought-up people in the world."

"Clarendon" added: "In Paris, we no longer like the artists; we lie in wait for them. And at the least weakness, we whistle at them without a thought for what they represent, for the effort they are making and for the legitimate fear which haunts them in their first appearance on the French scene."

He compared the Paris audiences with those in a bullring or music hall and declared: "In the name of what? Of a pretension of so-called 'connoisseurs' who, armed with the fresh and suspicious wisdom of record-collectors, claim with frank boorishness that they are 'defenders' of Mozart. God protect Mozart from such defenders."

Figaro's critic went on to say that his rebuke of the audiences did not mean that he found nothing wrong in the New York troupe's performance of "The Marriage of Figaro."

"Certainly not," he said. "It was an error to give the role of the Countess to Lucine Amara, who lacked style.

"Certain details of the production were shocking," he said. "For example, never has Cherubin treated the Countess with such off-handedness and neither the decor nor the stage work are very convincing. They have neither the taste nor the grace of the 18th century.

"But in return tell me if you have often met a Figaro such as this. Thanks to Cesare Siepi, I have had the revelation of a character more alert than happy, extremely intelligent, quite formidable.

"Siepi's great, deep voice gives him real dimension. As great a comedian as a singer, Siepi is quite simply the best Figaro I have ever heard.

"Teresa Strats is an adorable Cherubin. Suzanne (Judith Raskin) is excellent. All the others are well-placed. After a rather slow overture, Erich Leinsdorf conducted well."

TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, June 25, 1966

FM Listeners To Get Music From Tanglewood

Tanglewood really will be a summer music festival for area FM radio listeners.

The entire Tanglewood season—from chamber quartets to orchestral concerts — will be broadcast live by WAMC (90.3mc.), FM station of the Albany Medical College.

Dr. Frank M. Woolsey Jr., director of the station, said the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had invited WAMC to provide exclusive area radio coverage of the 1966 Tanglewood season in the belief that "it will stimulate interest as well as attendance at this summer's Berkshire Music Festival."

Dr. Woolsey added, "We are grateful to the orchestra's management for giving us the opportunity to bring this outstanding musical and cultural event to our listeners. To broadcast the entire proram of America's most distinguished summer music festival is a rare privilege.

WAMC will broadcast music from Tanglewood every day from July 2 through Aug. 25.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 167,000

JUN 25 1966

Under Erich Leinsdorf's and guests' batons, the Tanglewood-Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass. stretches grandly from July 2 to Aug. 21. Mozart and Bach are predominantly represented. Tickets: $3.50-$7; information: write Symphony Hall, Boston

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

JUN 19 1966

In Concert: Area Becomes Music Center

By JOAN SIMMONS

Although New York City is the undisputed music center of the country throughout most of the year it now has several rivals during the summer months—a season which in the past was rather meager in its serious musical offerings for public consumption.

Tanglewood proved that it is feasible for a symphony orchestra to follow the audience to its summer retreats. Since 1936 the Boston Symphony Orchestra has successfully drawn large numbers to its weekend concerts at the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass.

Following the Lead

Following the lead of Tanglewood, other organizations have established summer homes in northeastern New York and Western New England drawing leading personalities from all segments of musical entertainment to perform in the area's music centers, making the Capital District a serious competitor for New York City's reputation during July and August.

No longer is popular summer entertainment limited to band concerts and musical comedies, for ballet and the opera as well as the more serious concert form is coming to the fore in schedules for the 1966 summer season.

Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival is entering its 34th year in the Ted Shawn Theatre in Lee, Mass. opening June 23 with a troup of 40 students from the New York City High School for Performing Arts. Following weeks will feature such noted talents as Edward Villella and his company with Patricia McBride in the premiere of the Shostakovich Ballet Suites, choreographed by Mr. Villella.

706

HAMMOND, LA.
STAR
D. 5,000

MAY 17 1966

Stargazing

Local views on the news

QUESTION - What did you think of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players recently appearing here? Have you noticed a decrease or increase in cultural opportunity and participation in Hammond?

* * *

MRS. JOHN DESMOND, wife and mother, Greenlawn Avenue, Hammond.

"I enjoyed it thoroughly. We are very lucky to have gotten them, especially since this was their only southern stop. I have noticed an increase in cultural events during my 13 years here. The only disappointing thing is that not enough people go.

"Although the audience was a nice size for the Boston concert, there were still too many empty seats. Dr. Wilcox and the fine Arts Committee should be congratulated for a wonderful contribution."

* * *

MRS. LEONCE ALBIN, telephone sales clerk, 150 Rosewood, Hammond.

"I missed the concert, although I really wanted to attend. We enjoy classical music and would like to have more of it here.

"My daughter was able to take violin lessons from Mr. Richardson at the college. This is another kind of available opportunity that we are glad she had."

* * *

MRS. F. W. REIMERS, householder, 708 Thomas St., Hammond.

"I went both nights, and think it's the most marvelous thing we've ever had in Hammond. I certainly think we need more cultural attractions here. So much of what is available is nice, but often unprofessional.

"The college offers a lot, but there are so many free attractions that people often avoid the things that cost more. The more professional entertainment we have, the better it will be for the entire town."

* * *

MRS. HANS SCHNEIDER, housewife, 802 W. Thomas, Hammond.

"The Boston Concert was one of the finest things we've had in years.

"Bad timing is the main thing wrong with the cultural events in Hammond-- everything comes in bunches with some months offering nothing. This affects attendance.

"For example, after a period of no attractions, we had several things last month. There are many people who are interested, but they can't do everything at once, and can take only so much at a time."

Questioner: DOLLY ADAMS

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONNTHLY 22,500

JUN 1966

Richard Bouchett, organist of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, is the winner of the 1966 Young Artists' Competition sponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Boston AGO Chapter. In addition to receiving a $500 cash award, he will be sponsored in recital in Symphony Hall, Boston, in the 1966-1967 season.

Mr. Bouchett holds the BMus degree from the University of Oklahoma, the SMM degree from Union Theological Seminary, and the Artist's Diploma from the Curtis Institute of Music. He is presently enrolled in the doctoral program at Union Theological Seminary. His organ teachers include Adrienne Reisner, Emmet Smith, Mildred Andrews, Alexander McCurdy, Gustav Leonhardt and Robert Baker.

In addition to his recital in Symphony Hall, he will be playing numerous recitals throughout the country.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

MAY 1966

Leinsdorf to Conduct in Prague and Paris Following Japanese Trip

In order to make his trip to Japan possible Eric Leinsdorf had to revise his plans for European appearances which now will begin, with an engagement on May 16 as guest conductor of the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra during the Prague Spring Festival. On June 1, 3 and 5 he will be in Paris with the Metropolitan Opera conducting three performances of Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro." Until June 21, Mr. Leinsdorf will be in Rome conducting the recording of Verdi's "Un Ballo in Maschera" for RCA Victor Records. He will return to Boston before proceeding to his summer residence in Stockbridge, Mass., where he will take up his duties as Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight week Berkshire Festival which opens on Saturday, July 2.

JUN 6 1966

Paris Fans Rebuked for Jeering Met

Reuters

PARIS—The music critic of the Paris newspaper Le Figaro, rebuking theater audiences who whistled and jeered at the New York Metropolitan Opera Company's performances here last week, said "I believe we are becoming the worst brought-up people in the world."

"Clarendon" added: "In Paris, we no longer like the artists; we lie in wait for them. And at the least weakness, we whistle at them without a thought for what they represent, for the effort they are making and for the legitimate fear which haunts them in their first appearance on the French scene."

He compared the Paris audiences with those in a bullring or music hall and declared: "In the name of what? Of a pretension of so-called 'connoisseurs' who, armed with the fresh and suspicious wisdom of record-collectors, claim with frank boorishness that they are 'defenders' of Mozart. God protect Mozart from such defenders."

Figaro's critic went on to say that his rebuke of the audiences did not mean that he found nothing wrong in the New York troupe's performance of "The Marriage of Figaro."

"Certainly not," he said. "It was an error to give the role of the Countess to Lucine Amara, who lacked style. . . .

"Certain details of the production were shocking," he said. "For example, never has Cherubin treated the Countess with such off-handedness and neither the decor nor the stage work are very convincing. They have neither the taste nor the grace of the 18th century.

"But in return tell me if you have often met a Figaro such as this. Thanks to Cesare Siepi, I have had the revelation of a character more alert than happy, extremely intelligent, quite formidable.

"Siepi's great, deep voice gives him real dimension. As great a comedian as a singer, Siepi is quite simply the best Figaro I have ever heard.

"Teresa Strats is an adorable Cherubin. Suzanne (Judith Raskin) is excellent. All the others are well-placed. After a rather slow overture, Erich Leinsdorf conducted well."

TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, June 25, 1966

FM Listeners To Get Music From Tanglewood

Tanglewood really will be a summer music festival for area FM radio listeners.

The entire Tanglewood season—from chamber quartets to orchestral concerts — will be broadcast live by WAMC (90.3mc.), FM station of the Albany Medical College.

Dr. Frank M. Woolsey Jr., director of the station, said the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had invited WAMC to provide exclusive area radio coverage of the 1966 Tanglewood season in the belief that "it will stimulate interest as well as attendance at this summer's Berkshire Music Festival."

Dr. Woolsey added, "We are grateful to the orchestra's management for giving us the opportunity to bring this outstanding musical and cultural event to our listeners. To broadcast the entire proram of America's most distinguished summer music festival is a rare privilege.

WAMC will broadcast music from Tanglewood every day from July 2 through Aug. 25.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 167,000

JUN 25 1966

►Under Erich Leinsdorf's and guests' batons, the Tanglewood-Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass. stretches grandly from July 2 to Aug. 21. Mozart and Bach are predominantly represented. Tickets: $3.50-$7: information: write Symphony Hall, Boston

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 172,097

JUN 19 1966

In Concert: Area Becomes Music Center

By JOAN SIMMONS

Although New York City is the undisputed music center of the country throughout most of the year it now has several rivals during the summer months—a season which in the past was rather meager in its serious musical offerings for public consumption.

Tanglewood proved that it is feasible for a symphony orchestra to follow the audience to its summer retreats. Since 1936 the Boston Symphony Orchestra has successfully drawn large numbers to its weekend concerts at the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass.

Following the Lead

Following the lead of Tanglewood, other organizations have established summer homes in northeastern New York and Western New England drawing leading personalities from all segments of musical entertainment to perform in the area's music centers, making the Capital District a serious competitor for New York City's reputation during July and August.

No longer is popular summer entertainment limited to band concerts and musical comedies, for ballet and the opera as well as the more serious concert form is coming to the fore in schedules for the 1966 summer season.

Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival is entering its 34th year in the Ted Shawn Theatre in Lee, Mass. opening June 23 with a troup of 40 students from the New York City High School for Performing Arts. Following weeks will feature such noted talents as Edward Villella and his company with Patricia McBride in the premiere of the Shostakovich Ballet Suites; choreographed by Mr. Villella.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 444,396 SUN. 553,012
JUN 14 1966

Postlude

Leguia Plays Kodaly Sonata With Inspiration

By Paul Hume

Luis Leguia is a cellist who formerly played in the National Symphony Orchestra and is now a member of the Boston Symphony. His recital last night in the Phillips Collection was of Boston Symphony caliber, and served as still another reminder of the fine players who have played here and who now play in the country's leading orchestras.

Hume

It was when he reached the Kodaly sonata for solo cello in the second half of his program that Leguia showed last night's large audience the real measure of his gifts. This sonata is one of the great yardsticks of the cello repertoire. Its unusual tuning system is only the first shot in a test that explores every technical device of which each hand is capable.

Bowing devices, fingering, simultaneous legato playing with the right arm while doing guitarlike pizzicati with the left hand, these do not begin to exhaust the list of demands that Kodaly makes. But, just as the composer makes the fiendish demands for musical reasons, so did Leguia play the spots right off them, always to a musical end.

It was the shape, the sound, and the spirit that came out of his music, and quite as much in the excitement of the finale, with its great rushing chords across the strings as in the slow beauty of the middle movement's song. Leguia played with inspiration in every phrase.

From this it is clear that his problems in the first half of the evening can honestly be chalked up against the fact that no orchestra plays a more demanding season than the Boston, and a man who must keep up with its schedule cannot hope to keep the Schubert Arpeggione Sonata, or even a formulated bit of routine by Valentini at his fingertips.

The Valentini Sonata was polite, the Schubert little more, though Leguia's tone is never less than a thing to enjoy for the sheer lovely quality with which he continually invests it. Judith Geber played reticent piano in the two accompanied works.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
JUN 23 1966

MUSIC FROM LENOX

For the first time in the history of the Berkshire Music Festival all Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will be broadcast live from Tanglewood on WGBH-FM, beginning with the inaugural concert Saturday, July 2 at 8 p.m., from Lenox, Mass.

The Denver Post
The Voice of the Rocky Mountain Empire
D. 252,084 SUN. 339,533
JUN 10 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY: Erich Leinsdorf conducting, Joseph Silverstein, violin soloist. Program: Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Mendelssohn's Violin Concert, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 — 7:30, KEML-FM.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 11,700
JUN 15 1966

7 Arts product overseas

Seven Arts TV reports sales in nine more foreign markets. Pay-TV, Ltd., London, and Radio Eireann, Dublin, have each bought the 13 one-hour "Boston Symphony Concerts." CJCH-TV, Halifax, N. S., and CJCB-TV, Sydney, N. S., have bought the five "Man in Space" programs. "Marine Boy" has been sold in five Latin-American countries, including Argentina, Brazil, Curacao, Urguay and Venezuela. "Out of the Inkwell" has been sold to Saudi Arabia.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
JUN 28 1966

In Brief . . .

Representative Roger A. Sala's bid for re-election for an eighth term raises the question of whether his North Adams constituency will wink at his vacation last year, when he blithely sojourned in Italy for two months during the height of the sales-tax fight. That trip, incidentally, did nothing to confirm the lawmakers' chronic complaint of hard work and long hours justifying pay raises . . . Although Ashley Falls residents may not be wholly happy with the plan to close their elementary school and send village children to the Sheffield Center School, the plan fits in well with the Southern Berkshire Regional program for centralizing and improving all facilities in the district.

The milder dog-restraint ordinance to be considered by the City Council tonight meets some of the objections posed by the "dog lovers" in the last several weeks of debate, but does not quell them all. Some anti-restrainers have been muttering ominously about a long hot summer ahead . . . The Berkshire Music Center is not as well-known to the general public as the Berkshire Festival concerts themselves, but as a topnotch summer school it has had a special place in the musicians' world. It is good to see the center opening again under the leadership of Boston Symphony Orchestra music director Erich Leinsdorf.

COSMOPOLITAN
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 885,482
JULY 1966

For a combination of picnics and fine summer music through September, head for the hills—Lenox, Massachusetts. Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Music Barn features top artists in jazz and folk music. Write ahead for tickets. If you're staying more than one night, write for accommodations to the Berkshire Hills Conference, 100 North Street, Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Lodging for one night may be arranged, on arrival, at the Information Booth in the Community Center, Lenox.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
JUN 29 1966

Lenox

BSO Noncommittal on Bid For Town's Bicentennial

LENOX — A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra told the Bicentennial Committee Tuesday night at Eastover that the BSO would do all it could to participate in the anniversary of the town's incorporation next year, but that no firm commitment could be made at present.

Sanford Sistare, director of press relations for Tanglewood, said the committee should determine what type of participation it would like from the orchestra and then submit the proposal to Thomas D. Perry Jr., the general manager. Sistare said any decision of this type would have to be made by the board of trustees of the orchestra and would depend completely on the schedule of commitments for next summer.

The committee agreed that, if it could be arranged, a bicentennial [illegible] concert on a weekday night during the regular Tanglewood season would be the best type of participation for the orchestra in the town's celebration. A number of committee members said since the orchestra is so much a part of the town, it should play a full role in the festivities.

Mrs. John D. Bender, secretary of the committee, asked Sistare about the possibility of commissioning a commemorative song or musical piece for the bicentennial. Sistare said such arrangements have been made for other occasions, but the committee would have to make the arrangements directly with a composer.

Other details of the anniversary discussed were a re-creation of the first town meeting, to be held Feb. 25, the day after the town's regular annual town meeting and a parade, block dance, bicentennial ball, barbecue and church memorial services, all to be held during the bicentennial week of June 20-28.

Announcements of final details of these and other events including sponsors, will [illegible] meeting of [illegible]

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
JUN 27 1966

In the works at NBC is a "live" weekly show-biz version of the old Ralph Edwards tear jerker, "This Is Your Life." The NBC project, titled "Salute," would "surprise" a celebrity-type with a homescreen tribute from performing pals. Bob Finkel, who formerly masterminded the Andy Williams and Perry Como shows, is putting the prospective series together for a possible 1967 start. Finkel said some of the old movie-marquee names, seldom seen on TV, would be among the likely guests-of-honor . . . Dean Martin wound up the TV season dear to the hearts of New York viewers. The latest New York Metro program ratings from American Research Bureau put him right behind "Batman" among the favorites.

The Telephone Hour will begin color-filming operations next month for a one-hour fall program on the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood . . . NBC, which carries the Telephone Hour, has already scheduled a two-hour "live" Sunday afternoon telecast in August of a festival concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
JUN 27 1966

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
JUN 27 1966

HOTEL-MOTEL
MANAGEMENT REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 12,600
JUL 1966

Four hundred thousand tourists are expected to visit this region to attend concerts at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood Festival in Lenox, and the summer-long dance program at Jacob's Pillow in Becket, according to the Berkshire Hills Conference, an area-development group.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 441,316 SUN. 553,012
JUN 14 1966

Postlude

Leguia Plays Kodaly Sonata With Inspiration

By Paul Hume

Luis Leguia is a cellist who formerly played in the National Symphony Orchestra and is now a member of the Boston Symphony. His recital last night in the Phillips Collection was of Boston Symphony caliber, and served as still another reminder of the fine players who have played here and who now play in the country's leading orchestras.

Hume

It was when he reached the Kodaly sonata for solo cello in the second half of his program that Leguia showed last night's large audience the real measure of his gifts. This sonata is one of the great yardsticks of the cello repertoire. Its unusual tuning system is only the first shot in a test that explores every technical device of which each hand is capable.

Bowing devices, fingering, simultaneous legato playing with the right arm while doing guitarlike pizzicati with the left hand, these do not begin to exhaust the list of demands that Kodaly makes. But, just as the composer makes the fiendish demands for musical reasons, so did Leguia play the spots right off them, always to a musical end.

It was the shape, the sound, and the spirit that came out of his music, and quite as much in the excitement of the finale, with its great rushing chords across the strings as in the slow beauty of the middle movement's song. Leguia played with inspiration in every phrase.

From this it is clear that his problems in the first half of the evening can honestly be chalked up against the fact that no orchestra plays a more demanding season than the Boston, and a man who must keep up with its schedule cannot hope to keep the Schubert Arpeggione Sonata, or even a formulated bit of routine by Valentini at his fingertips.

The Valentini Sonata was polite, the Schubert little more, though Leguia's tone is never less than a thing to enjoy for the sheer lovely quality with which he continually invests it. Judith Geber played reticent piano in the two accompanied works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
JUN 28 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
JUN 23 1966

MUSIC FROM LENOX

For the first time in the history of the Berkshire Music Festival all Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will be broadcast live from Tanglewood on WGBH-FM, beginning with the inaugural concert Saturday, July 2 at 8 p.m., from Lenox, Mass.

The Denver Post
Rocky Mountain News
D. 243,[illegible]
JUN 10 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY: Erich Leinsdorf conducting, Joseph Silverstein, violin soloist. Program: Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Mendelssohn's Violin Concert, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 — 1 p.m., KFML-FM (98.5).

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 11,700
JUN 15 1966

7 Arts product overseas

Seven Arts TV reports sales in nine more foreign markets. Pay-TV, Ltd., London, and Radio Eireann, Dublin, have each bought the 13 one-hour "Boston Symphony Concerts." CJCH-TV, Halifax, N. S., and CJCB-TV, Sydney, N. S., have bought the five "Man in Space" programs. "Marine Boy" has been sold in five Latin-American countries, including Argentina, Brazil, Curacao, Urguay and Venezuela. "Out of the Inkwell" has been sold to Saudi Arabia.

In Brief . . .

Representative Roger A. Sala's bid for re-election for an eighth term raises the question of whether his North Adams constituency will wink at his vacation last year, when he blithely sojourned in Italy for two months during the height of the sales-tax fight. That trip, incidentally, did nothing to confirm the lawmakers' chronic complaint of hard work and long hours justifying pay raises . . . Although Ashley Falls residents may not be wholly happy with the plan to close their elementary school and send village children to the Sheffield Center School, the plan fits in well with the Southern Berkshire Regional program for centralizing and improving all facilities in the district.

The milder dog-restraint ordinance to be considered by the City Council tonight meets some of the objections posed by the "dog lovers" in the last several weeks of debate, but does not quell them all. Some anti-restrainers have been muttering ominously about a long hot summer ahead . . . The Berkshire Music Center is not as well-known to the general public as the Berkshire Festival concerts themselves, but as a topnotch summer school it has had a special place in the musicians' world. It is good to see the center opening again under the leadership of Boston Symphony Orchestra music director Erich Leinsdorf.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
JUN 29 1966

Lenox

BSO Noncommittal on Bid For Town's Bicentennial

LENOX — A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra told the Bicentennial Committee Tuesday night at Eastover that the BSO would do all it could to participate in the anniversary of the town's incorporation next year, but that no firm commitment could be made at present.

Sanford Sistare, director of press relations for Tanglewood, said the committee should determine what type of participation it would like from the orchestra and then submit the proposal to Thomas D. Perry Jr., the general manager. Sistare said any decision of this type would have to be made by the board of trustees of the orchestra and would depend completely on the schedule of commitments for next summer.

The committee agreed that, if it could be arranged, a bicentennial "pops" concert on a weekday night during the regular Tanglewood season would be the best type of participation for the orchestra in the town's celebration. A number of committee members said, since the orchestra is so much a part of the town, it should play a full role in the festivities.

Mrs. John D. Bender, secretary of the committee, asked Sistare about the possibility of commissioning a commemorative song or musical piece for the bicentennial. Sistare said such arrangements have been made for other occasions, but the committee would have to make the arrangements directly with a composer.

Other details of the anniversary discussed were a re-creation of the first town meeting, to be held Feb. 25, the day after the town's regular annual town meeting and a parade, block dance, bicentennial ball, barbecue and church memorial services all to be held during the bicentennial week of June 20-28.

Announcements of final details of these and other events, including sponsors, will be made at the next meeting of the committee in August.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
JUN 27 1966

* * *

In the works at NBC is a "live" weekly show-biz version of the old Ralph Edwards tear-jerker, "This Is Your Life." The NBC project, titled "Salute," would "surprise" a celebrity-type with a homescreen tribute from performing pals. Bob Finkel, who formerly masterminded the Andy Williams and Perry Como shows, is putting the prospective series together for a possible 1967 start. Finkel said some of the old movie-marquee names, seldom seen on TV, would be among the likely guests-of-honor . . . Dean Martin wound up the TV season dear to the hearts of New York viewers. The latest New York Metro program ratings from American Research Bureau put him right behind "Batman" among the favorites.

* * *

The Telephone Hour will begin color-filming operations next month for a one-hour fall program on the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood . . . NBC, which carries the Telephone Hour, has already scheduled a two-hour "live" Sunday afternoon telecast in August of a festival concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
JUN 27 1966

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
JUN 27 1966

COSMOPOLITAN
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 3,5,482
JULY 1966

For a combination of picnics and fine summer music through September, head for the hills—Lenox, Massachusetts. Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Music Barn features top artists in jazz and folk music. Write ahead for tickets. If you're staying more than one night, write for accommodations to the Berkshire Hills Conference, 100 North Street, Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Lodging for one night may be arranged, on arrival, at the Information Booth in the Community Center, Lenox.

HOTEL-MOTEL
MANAGEMENT REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 12,600
JUL 1966

Four hundred thousand tourists are expected to visit this region to attend concerts at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood Festival in Lenox, and the summer-long dance program at Jacob's Pillow in Becket, according to the Berkshire Hills Conference, an area-development group.

TIGHT BINDING

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 10,176
JUN 25 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,433
JUN 25 1966

Where But New England

Ordeal and No Triumph

It was a fine sunny Sunday afternoon. The taxi driver who drove me from LaGuardia into New York city was friendly and full of hope for Mayor John Lindsay, I was headed for the banquet and presentation of the Emmy Awards, sacred symbols in the world of TV.

"I'll be [illegible] to Boston on an 11 o'clock [illegible] of Kennedy. Why don't you meet me and take me out?" He promised to be at the corner of 5th and 44th Street at 10:45.

If you have wondered whether these awards are rigged, take it from a stand - in loser, they are on the level. Erich Leinsdorf had been nominated for an award for "Individual Achievements in Music." He had conducted the Boston Symphony to TV glory in a musical saga of Beethoven entitled "Ordeal and Triumph." With Leinsdorf in Japan, I was nominated as a trustee of the Orchestra, to proceed to New York and trip up to the podium were he declared the winner. "Surely they wouldn't expect you to be there if he weren't a likely winner."

The ball room was rigged up like a Cecil de Mille set. A gigantic podium with flights of steps like a pagoda was set in the center of an imposing though temporary stage. It looked like an enormous wedding cake.

There were two super TV screens on the walls to keep you in running touch with Danny Kaye's Hollywood going on. Bill Cosby, who admitted that he was wearing tails for the first time, was operating as M.C. with Betty Furness to assist. The great names on the silver screen arrived and departed after taking part in the ritual.

I was conducted to my table by a network executive where I nestled in with a group of Britishers from BBC who had hopes for some of their overseas nominees. "You must be important" chirped one of the lovely British ladies. "They have been leveling the camera at this table and I see there is a big card with your name on it." I explained my marginal relationship as a Leinsdorf stand - in but, of course, was happily suspicious that something was up and that the Boston Symphony was in for a big evening.

Before the program went into living rooms across the country, the word was passed to sweep the vodka bottles under the table. With some grumbling, there was general compliance.

But to the delight of all, there were frequent islands in the program when the cameras switched from the ball room to dog food and other commercial participants. During these life-saving interludes glasses were hastily re-charged.

The evening dragged on. There was a fine feeling of Boston camaraderie when Julia Child, the incomparable queen of gastronomia, was declared the winner for educational TV. The ladies around me knew of her, had watched her program and were enthusiastic about her choice.

Finally the classification I awaited was announced, I cleared my throat, reviewed my little scrap of a speech of acceptance, and lined up my course through the maze of tables. The moment had arrived. I listened to the fatal words, "And now the envelope, if you please." As I pressed my hands down on the chair seat for a speedy take - off, I heard the name of another, not the Boston Symphony or its brilliant conductor.

"You look a bit pale, old boy," said my British friend. "Perhaps we shouldn't wait for the commercial" and she dredged up the bottle.

All dressed up and no place to go, I looked at my watch. It was 11:15. The taxi - driver had been waiting, if he had kept his word, for a half hour. I had stood him up. I felt even sorrier for this breach of contract than I did for my wild goose chase to New York and my role as a stood - up stand - in.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N. J.
MONTHLY 245,100
JUL 1966

CONDUCTORS

Conductors of the Boston Symphony concerts at the Tanglewood Festival will be, besides director Erich Leinsdorf, Sir Adrian Boult, Sixten Ehrling, Szymon Goldberg, Seiji Ozawa, Thomas Schippers, and Stanislaw Skrowaczewski.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 7 1966

Plan Conference For Symphonies

LENOX—For the second consecutive summer, press and public relations officers of the major symphony orchestras in the United States and Canada will hold their annual conference at Tanglewood. The three-day series of meetings will be held on July 12, 13 and 14 with representatives from at least a dozen orchestras attending.

Among the topics to be discussed at the Tanglewood conference are: national and tour publicity; program magazines; annual reports, budgets; fund raising, including annual and major campaign efforts; materials for schools; radio and television broadcasts; summer activities, and graphic design.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's press staff will be hosts for the Tanglewood sessions.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 2 1966

Tanglewood Festival to Be On Bell Telephone Hour

This summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be the subject of a full-length "Bell Telephone Hour" documentary to be televised next fall over the NBC network.

047

One of 16

The Tanglewood program is one of 16 such shows which the network will present on alternate Sundays from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. The idea of on location filming of fine arts activities represents a departure from the 26-year-old regular format of studio and music hall concerts.

According to Henry Jaffe, the Bell Hour's producer, NBC cameramen will begin six weeks of filming in color at Tanglewood on July 11.

Excerpts of Concerts

Part of the program, Mr. Jaffe said, will consist of excerpts from actual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, and the Boston Pops Orchestra. There will be interviews with Erich Leinsdorf and Arthur Fiedler, as well as with a number of prominent singers and instrumentalists who will appear with the orchestra.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
JUL 3 1966

How Green Grows the Grass

CAN a lawn survive if hundreds of thousands of people tramp and sit on it during the hottest months of the summer? It can and does. The 20-acre lawn at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is probably one of the most famous verdant greenswards in New England. Over 240,000 people attend the Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass., each year and in spite of eight weeks of rough treatment, the lawn remains luxurious and green.

The secret lies in the carefully planned program of intense care which has been set down by James Kiley, Superintendent of Tanglewood. The original problems were soil compaction, too much thatch (build up of dead grass), and lack of a grass root system. To combat the compaction, the lawn is aerified several times in the spring and fall. To do this a spiked machine is pulled over the lawn to poke deep holes into the turf at regularly spaced intervals. During the summer months, when thousands of visitors walk on the grass daily, a slicing machine is used every seven to 10 days. This machine cuts vertical slices down through the roots. Both of these processes allow water, fertilizer and air to reach the roots.

In August, soil samples are taken and tested for acidity. If lime is needed, to reduce acidity, it is applied until the winter months when the ground is frozen.

In September, approximately [illegible] yards of top dressing are applied to the most heavily trampled areas. Then after using an aero-thatching machine to remove thatch and dead grass, the lawns are heavily fertilized. This helps to establish a strong root system while the growing season is still in progress. A lighter application of fertilizer is also applied when spring growth is well under way. This is usually [illegible] weeks after the first mowing. In spring herbicides are applied to control weeds.

According to Mr. Kiley, the program, strictly followed, has brought the Tanglewood lawn to its present excellent condition. But neither these methods would be of any avail without sufficient water. During the last few years of severe drought an irrigation system had to be installed. It draws water from a spring pond on the Tanglewood property. Since the great lawn provides seats for thousands of concert goers who like to sit on the grass, it is a vital part of Tanglewood and deserves the best of care.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 1 1966

Predicts Record Tourist Traffic To Start Today

John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference in Pittsfield, predicted that the Berkshire summer tourist traffic will break all previous records.

First wave of visitors is expected to start this evening for the July 4 weekend. He said that hotels and motels in the area are 98 per cent sold out for this weekend and for the July 22 and 29 weekends.

Although the tourist traffic normally drops off in August, Mr. Geary said that a live NBC telecast from Tanglewood on Aug. 14 is sure to stir added business.

In addition, he said, nine crew members for the Bell Telephone Hour will spend five weeks in the Berkshires starting July 11, to film Berkshire attractions for a fall program.

Deseret News
SALT LAKE CITY, UT
D. 89,141
JUL 8 1966

By HAROLD LU
Deseret News Mu

Americans who are d lican industry that is n to dig up $76,750,000 i for the Ford Foundatio encouragement from th orchestras. Yes, indee
The American symph surprisingly pre-emine numbers of concerts, and ubiquity. For example:
The New York
Philharmonic was founded in 1842 (five years before the Mormon Pioneers reached Salt Lake Valley), which was the same year that the Vienna
Philharmonic was founded.
The Boston Symphony came into existence in 1881, one yea
Philharmonic. The S was founded in 1885, dam Concertgebouw and Cincinnati orche don Symphony. The major orchestras in 51½ years.

THERE I and t Hawthorn winds a li tiny water trees. Th and filled dense sha
This w
— the ma
Boston b
Tappan w his heirs and the E
Today, i elmed e sculpture
Mahkeen
at last se years ag son drew
In 19
moved

TIGHT BINDING

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 10,176
JUN 25 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,433
JUN 25 1966

Where But New England

Ordeal and No Triumph

It was a fine sunny Sunday afternoon. The taxi driver who drove me from LaGuardia into New York city was friendly and full of hope for Mayor John Lindsay, I was headed for the banquet and presentation of the Emmy Awards, sacred symbols in the world of TV.

"I'll be returning to Boston on an 11 o'clock plane out of Kennedy. Why don't you meet me and take me out?" He promised to be at the corner of 5th and 44th Street at 10:45.

If you have wondered whether these awards are rigged, take it from a stand - in loser, they are on the level. Erich Leinsdorf had been nominated for an award for "Individual Achievements in Music." He had conducted the Boston Symphony to TV glory in a musical saga of Beethoven entitled "Ordeal and Triumph." With Leinsdorf in Japan, I was nominated as a trustee of the Orchestra, to proceed to New York and trip up to the podium were he declared the winner. "Surely they wouldn't expect you to be there if he weren't a likely winner."

The ball room was rigged up like a Cecil de Mille set. A gigantic podium with flights of steps like a pagoda was set in the center of an imposing though temporary stage. It looked like an enormous wedding cake.

There were two super TV screens on the walls to keep you in running touch with Danny Kaye's Hollywood going - on. Bill Cosby, who admitted that he was wearing tails for the first time, was operating as M.C. with Betty Furness to assist. The great names on the silver screen arrived and departed after taking part in the ritual.

I was conducted to my table by a network executive where I nestled in with a group of Britishers from BBC who had hopes for some of their overseas nominees. "You must be important" chirped one of the lovely British ladies. "They have been leveling the camera at this table and I see there is a big card with your name on it." I explained my marginal relationship as a Leinsdorf stand - in but, of course, was happily suspicious that something was up and that the Boston Symphony was in for a big evening.

Before the program went into living rooms across the country, the word was passed to sweep the vodka bottles under the table. With some grumbling, there was general compliance.

But to the delight of all, there were frequent islands in the program when the cameras switched from the ball room to dog food and other commercial participants. During these life-saving interludes glasses were hastily re-charged.

The evening dragged on. There was a fine feeling of Boston camaraderie when Julia Child, the incomparable queen of gastronomia, was declared the winner for educational TV. The ladies around me knew of her, had watched her program and were enthusiastic about her choice.

Finally the classification I awaited was announced. I cleared my throat, reviewed my little scrap of a speech of acceptance, and lined up my course through the maze of tables. The moment had arrived. I listened to the fatal words, "And now the envelope, if you please." As I pressed my hands down on the chair seat for a speedy take - off, I heard the name of another, not the Boston Symphony or its brilliant conductor.

"You look a bit pale, old boy," said my British friend. "Perhaps we shouldn't wait for the commercial" and she dredged up the bottle.

All dressed up and no place to go, I looked at my watch. It was 11:15. The taxi - driver had been waiting, if he had kept his word, for a half hour. I had stood him up. I felt even sorrier for this breach of contract than I did for my wild goose chase to New York and my role as a stood - up stand - in.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N. J.
MONTHLY 245,100
JUL 1966

CONDUCTORS

Conductors of the Boston Symphony concerts at the Tanglewood Festival will be, besides director Erich Leinsdorf, Sir Adrian Boult, Sixten Ehrling, Szymon Goldberg, Seiji Ozawa, Thomas Schippers, and Stanislaw Skrowaczewski.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JUL 7 1966

Plan Conference For Symphonies

LENOX—For the second consecutive summer, press and public relations officers of the major symphony orchestras in the United States and Canada will hold their annual conference at Tanglewood. The three-day series of meetings will be held on July 12, 13 and 14 with representatives from at least a dozen orchestras attending.

Among the topics to be discussed at the Tanglewood conference are: national and tour publicity; program magazines; annual reports, budgets; fund raising, including annual and major campaign efforts; materials for schools; radio and television broadcasts; summer activities, and graphic design.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's press staff will be hosts for the Tanglewood sessions.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 2 1966

Tanglewood Festival to Be On Bell Telephone Hour

This summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be the subject of a full-length "Bell Telephone Hour" documentary to be televised next fall over the NBC network.

One of 16

The Tanglewood program is one of 16 such shows which the Bell Hour will present on alternate Sundays from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m. The idea of on location filming of fine arts activities represents a departure from the show's 26-year-old regular format of studio and music hall concerts.

According to Henry Jaffe, the Bell Hour's producer, NBC cameramen will begin six weeks of filming in color at Tanglewood on July 11.

Excerpts of Concerts

Part of the program, Mr. Jaffe said, will consist of excerpts from actual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, and the Boston Pops Orchestra. There will be interviews with Erich Leinsdorf and Arthur Fiedler, as well as with a number of prominent singers and instrumentalists who will appear with the orchestra.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
JUL 3 1966

How Green Grows the Grass

CAN a lawn survive if hundreds of thousands of people tramp and sit on it during the hottest months of the summer? It can and does. The 20-acre lawn at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is probably one of the most famous verdant greenswards in New England. Over 240,000 people attend the Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass., each year and in spite of eight weeks of rough treatment, the lawn remains luxurious and green.

The secret lies in the carefully planned program of intense care which has been set down by James Kiley, Superintendent of Tanglewood. The original problems were soil compaction, too much thatch (build up of dead grass), and lack of a grass root system. To combat the compaction, the lawn is aerified several times in the spring and fall. To do this a spiked machine is pulled over the lawn to poke deep holes into the turf at regularly spaced intervals. During the summer months, when thousands of visitors walk on the grass daily, a slicing machine is used every seven to 10 days. This machine cuts vertical slices down through the roots. Both of these processes allow water, fertilizer and air to reach the roots.

In August, soil samples are taken and tested for acidity. If lime is needed, to reduce acidity, it is applied until the winter months when the ground is frozen.

In September, approximately yards of top dressing are applied to the most heavily trampled areas. Then after using an aero-thatching machine to remove thatch and dead grass, the lawns are heavily fertilized. This helps to establish a strong root system while the growing season is still in progress. A lighter application of fertilizer is also applied when spring growth is well under way. This is usually weeks after the first mowing. In spring herbicides are applied to control weeds.

According to Mr. Kiley, the program, strictly followed, has brought the Tanglewood lawn to its present excellent condition. But without these methods would be of any use without sufficient water. During the last few years of severe drought an irrigation system had to be installed. It draws water from a spring fed pond on the Tanglewood property. Since the great lawn provides seats for thousands of concert goers who like to sit on the grass, it is a part of Tanglewood and deserves the best of care.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 1 1966

Predicts Record Tourist Traffic To Start Today

John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference in Pittsfield, predicted that the Berkshire summer tourist traffic will break all previous records.

First wave of visitors is expected to start this evening for the July 4 weekend. He said that hotels and motels in the area are 98 per cent sold out for this weekend and for the July 22 and 29 weekends.

Although the tourist traffic normally drops off in August, Mr. Geary said that a live NBC telecast from Tanglewood on Aug. 14 is sure to stir added business.

In addition, he said, the crew members for the Bell Telephone Hour will spend five weeks in the Berkshires starting July 11, to film Berkshire attractions for a fall program.

Deseret New
SALT LAKE CITY, UT
D. 89,141
JUL 8 1966

By HAROLD LU
Deseret News Mu

Americans who are d ican industry that is n to dig up $76,750,000 i for the Ford Foundatio encouragement from th orchestras. Yes, indee

The American symph surprisingly pre-emine numbers of concerts, and ubiquity. For example:

The New York Philharmonic was founded in 1842 (five years before the Mormon Pioneers reached Salt Lake Valley), which was the same year that the Vienna Philharmonic was founded.

The Boston Symphony came into existence in 1881, one year Philharmonic. The S was founded in 1885, dam Concertgebouw and Cincinnati orche don Symphony. The major orchestras in 51½ years.

NOR

By Today
the summ
Symphon
wood, ho just a lo

BOS
BOS
MON

JUL

THERE IS a and the Hawthorne winds a little tiny waterfall trees. The and filled wi dense shadow
This was,
— the magni
Boston ba
Tappan wh his heirs and the B
Today, th
elmed e sculpture
Mahkeen
at last se years ag son drew
In 19 moved

208

Deseret News
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
D. 89,141
JUL 8 1966

Surprisingly Pre-Eminent

By HAROLD LUNDSTRUM
Deseret News Music Editor

Americans who are digging and American industry that is now going to have to dig up $76,750,000 in matching funds for the Ford Foundation grants can take encouragement from the history of their orchestras. Yes, indeed!

The American symphony orchestras are surprisingly pre-eminent in terms of age, numbers of concerts, and ubiquity. For example:

The New York Philharmonic was founded in 1842 (five years before the Mormon Pioneers reached Salt Lake Valley), which was the same year that the Vienna Philharmonic was founded.

The Boston Symphony came into existence in 1881, one year before the Berlin Philharmonic. The St. Louis Symphony was founded in 1885, before the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, and the Chicago and Cincinnati orchestras before the London Symphony. The average age of the 25 major orchestras in the United States is 51½ years.

OUR MUSICAL WHIRL

Most European orchestras are connected with, or are outgrowths of, opera houses. The number of concerts of symphonic music they play is limited. The Vienna Philharmonic gives 23 concerts in a year. The London Symphony performed 66 concerts in 1963-64.

In the same year, the Utah Symphony gave 73 concerts, the Boston Symphony, 121; the Philadelphia Orchestra, 159; the New York Philharmonic, 183.

Furthermore, the 33 largest cities of the United States and almost as many smaller ones have symphony orchestras of stature. But in France, there are only two professional symphony orchestras outside Paris; in England there are five outside London. Aside from the orchestras maintained by the Italian state radio, there is only one symphony orchestra in Italy.

And here is one of the most encouraging statistics for the fund-raisers to keep in mind. The amount of governmental support that our American orchestras have received has been small, indeed. The total income from tax sources to the 25 major orchestras (a large part of which is for performances of special services, usually concerts for children) amounted to only 4.9 per cent of their total budgets. Five of the 25 received no public money.

In contrast, professional orchestras in Britain, France, Italy, and Germany receive virtually all their support from governmental sources.

Thirty years ago most players in the great American orchestras came to the United States after receiving their musical training in their native countries. Today this is no longer true. For example: There is only one foreign-born, foreign-trained musician in the Utah Symphony.

Even in the much discussed area of conducting personnel, seven of the 25 major orchestras are native Americans, and 10 are naturalized Americans.

In a word: Americans seem equal to the task of raising the necessary $76,750,000 to match the Ford Foundation grants.

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 206,715
JUL 1 1966

Nearly 250,000 persons, for example, last year paid admission prices to hear the Boston Symphony perform at its popular Tanglewood center in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts at Lenox.

Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,500
JUL 7 1966

Live From Tanglewood

Six full-length Berkshire Festival concerts will be broadcast live from Tanglewood on WGBH-FM this week.

On Sunday, July 10, at 2:30 p.m. Sir Adrian Boult will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Mozart program including the Symphony No. 34, Piano Concerto in D, K. 175 with Malcolm Frager as soloist and the Symphony No. 39.

This will be followed Tuesday (July 12) at 8 p.m. by a program featuring the Guarneri Quartet in chamber music of Mozart, Webern and Beethoven.

Chamber music is also the highlight on Wednesday at 8 as talented students attending the Berkshire Music Center are heard in a live performance, and on Thursday at the same hour a program of contemporary music will be broadcast.

The week concludes with two more concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Friday (July 15) at 9 p.m. Syzmon Goldberg will be both conductor and violin soloist in an all-Bach program featuring the Violin Concerto in E, Suite No. 2, Four Fugues from "The Art of the Fugue" and the Suite No. 4.

The final concert (Saturday, July 16 at 8 p.m.) brings Erich Leinsdorf to the podium for a performance of Bach's "St. John Passion" with the Tanglewood Choir and soloists Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Ernest Haefliger and Walter Carriger, tenor; [illegible] bass.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 8 1966

Reporter - at - Large

Tanglewood Is More Than Music

By LINDA SHAPIRO

Today we feature Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Tanglewood, however, is more than just a [illegible]

It's 210 acres of sheer beauty as only the Berkshires can boast . . . in formal gardens, sweeping lawns, sky and lake.

It is tradition as only native New Englanders can build.

It is people thousands and thousands of people from thousands of places swarming in year after year, as attested to by the variety of license plates one sees in the parking area.

It is the finest artists from the world of music performing with one of the world's all-time great orchestras. Conductors Monteaux, Stern, Piatagorsky, Munch, Bernstein and this year Ehrich Leinsdorf.

And it's memories that bring tears and laughter . . . as in the early days when society's cream waded ankle deep through the mud in long gowns and tuxedos before the present Shed was built.

Or the thunder of a summer storm beating perfect time to Leonard Bernstien's rendition of "Rhapsody in Blue."

Or of standing, shouting, weeping ovations for the small Russian, Serge Koussevitsky, who created the Festival and brought the new American composers into the limelight of symphonic music.

Foremost Music Festival

Today Tanglewood is the world's foremost music festival and it is copied everywhere. It still stands after thirty years in authority as a kind patron giving the opportunity for study at the Festival School under masters, and as a showcase for the new artists to perform and have their works heard beside the treasures of the masters.

If this summer's visit to Tanglewood is to be your first, least some part is familiar — perhaps the soloist like Van Cliburn on July 23 . . . or a piece of music which you have heard often.

Or plan to attend an open rehearsal held each Saturday morning when the atmosphere is a bit more relaxed and the performance not as long.

Or consider some of the special events like the Boston Pops annual concert on August 3, when the program is light, gay, and a great deal of fun. There is still something slightly unsettling to long-time concert goers at hearing the great orchestra end the evening with a lush arrangement of "I Want To Hold Your Hand."

Or plan on the Gala Evening on Aug. 10 when Tanglewood shows off with a little bit of everything including performances by the students. This evening starts early with picnic suppers on the lawn and continues on with a taste of everything in the classical tradition.

Acoustics Exceptional

Prices for tickets range from $2 for the open rehearsals; $2.50 for general admission to the grounds, where you sit out on the lawn (bring your own chair or blanket); and from $3.50 to $7 in the big shed.

The acoustics are exceptional, so that you can hear from anywhere inside and from a remarkable distance outside under the stars, or under the sun of a lovely Sunday afternoon.

Perhaps you'd rather just go down and take a look around before you decide on a concert and on your feeling of Tanglewood. If so, drive down during the day and take a free guided tour of the grounds. It's practically an assured fact that the majesty and the beauty of the place will bring you back for a concert.

Some practical tips: If you plan to eat out in the neighborhood of Tanglewood before a concert, plan to arrive for dinner at least two hours before concert time. The traffic gets very, very heavy and you may have to rush through your meal or arrive late at the concert, which is not fashionable at first nighting at the theater.

Many Varieties of Dress

Many varieties of dress are seen at Tanglewood — including shorts and slacks on the lawn and semi-formal and formal wear in the Shed.

You can take the children, but the concerts are planned primarily for adult audiences. And in order to provide the necessary quiet for others, it's better to leave the young ones at home. Furthermore, there are no reduced rates for children of any ages. So if the kids really want to go, take them to an open rehearsal on Saturday morning.

Parking is free on the grounds. There is a cafeteria serving box lunches and beverages, but it is expensive.

(Rt. 7 or 20 to the monument in Lenox, follow the signs.)

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
JUL 1966

THERE IS a glen between his house and the lake," wrote Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1848, "through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great root of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all dense shadow of obscurity."

This was, and still is, Tanglewood — the magnificent, 210-acre estate of Boston banker William Aspinwall Tappan which, in 1936, was given by his heirs to Serge A. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Today, the hemlocked, birched and elmed estate, with its beautifully sculptured gardens overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, is filled with people — at last season's count, 250,000. Thirty years ago, Tanglewood's concert season drew no more than 15,000.

In 1938, the Symphony players moved out of a circus tent into the 208

Deseret News
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
D. 89,141
JUL 8 1966

Surprisingly Pre-Eminent

By HAROLD LUNDSTRUM

Deseret News Music Editor

Americans who are digging and American industry that is now going to have to dig up $76,750,000 in matching funds for the Ford Foundation grants can take encouragement from the history of their orchestras. Yes, indeed!

The American symphony orchestras are surprisingly pre-eminent in terms of age, numbers of concerts, and ubiquity. For example:

The New York Philharmonic was founded in 1842 (five years before the Mormon Pioneers reached Salt Lake Valley), which was the same year that the Vienna Philharmonic was founded.

The Boston Symphony came into existence in 1881, one year before the Berlin Philharmonic. The St. Louis Symphony was founded in 1885, before the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, and the Chicago and Cincinnati orchestras before the London Symphony. The average age of the 25 major orchestras in the United States is 51½ years.

OUR MUSICAL WHIRL

Most European orchestras are connected with, or are outgrowths of, opera houses. The number of concerts of symphonic music they play is limited. The Vienna Philharmonic gives 23 concerts in a year. The London Symphony performed 66 concerts in 1963-64.

In the same year, the Utah Symphony gave 73 concerts, the Boston Symphony, 121; the Philadelphia Orchestra, 139; the New York Philharmonic, 183.

Furthermore, the 33 largest cities of the United States and almost as many smaller ones have symphony orchestras of stature. But in France, there are only two professional symphony orchestras outside Paris; in England there are five outside London. Aside from the orchestras maintained by the Italian radio, there is only one symphony orchestra in Italy.

And here is one of the most encouraging statistics for the fund-raisers to keep in mind. The amount of governmental support that our American orchestras have received has been small, indeed. The total income from tax sources to the 25 major orchestras (a large part of which is for performances of special services, usually concerts for children) amounted to only 4.9 per cent of their total budgets. Five of the 25 received no public money.

In contrast, professional orchestras in Britain, France, Italy, and Germany receive virtually all their support from governmental sources.

Thirty years ago most players in the great American orchestras came to the United States after receiving their musical training in their native countries. Today this is no longer true. For example: There is only one foreign-born, foreign-trained musician in the Utah Symphony.

Even in the much discussed area of conducting personnel, seven of the 25 major orchestras are native Americans, and 10 are naturalized Americans.

In a word: Americans seem equal to the task of raising the necessary $76,750,000 to match the Ford Foundation grants.

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 206,715
JUL 1 1966

Nearly 250,000 persons, for example, last year paid admission prices to hear the Boston Symphony perform at its popular Tanglewood center in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts at Lenox.

Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,500
JUL 7 1966

Live From Tanglewood

Six full-length Berkshire Festival concerts will be broadcast live from Tanglewood on WGBH-FM this week.

On Sunday, July 10, at 2:30 p.m. Sir Adrian Boult will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Mozart program including the Symphony No. 34, Piano Concerto in D, K. 175 with Malcolm Frager as soloist and the Symphony No. 39.

This will be followed Tuesday (July 12) at 8 p.m. by a program featuring the Guarneri Quartet in chamber music of Mozart, Webern and Beethoven.

Chamber music is also the highlight on Wednesday at 8 as talented students attending the Berkshire Music Center are heard in a live performance, and on Thursday at the same hour a program of contemporary music will be broadcast.

The week concludes with two more concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Friday (July 15) at 9 p.m. Syzmon Goldberg will be both conductor and violin soloist in an all-Bach program featuring the Violin Concerto in E, Suite No. 2, Four Fugues from "The Art of the Fugue" and the Suite No. 4.

The final concert (Saturday, July 16 at 8 p.m.) brings Erich Leinsdorf to the podium for a performance of Bach's "St. John Passion" with the Tanglewood Choir and soloists Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Ernest Haefliger and Walter Carriger, tenor; [illegible] bass.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
JUL 8 1966

Reporter - at - Large

Tanglewood Is More Than Music

By LINDA SHAPIRO

Today we feature Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Tanglewood, however, is more than just [illegible]

It's 210 acres of sheer beauty as only the Berkshires can boast . . . in formal gardens, sweeping lawns, sky and lake.

It is tradition as only native New Englanders can build.

It is people thousands and thousands of people from thousands of places swarming in year after year, as attested to by the variety of license plates one sees in the parking area.

It is the finest artists from the world of music performing with One of the world's all-time great orchestras. Conductors Monteaux, Stern, Piatagorsky, Munch, Bernstein and this year Ehrich Leinsdorf.

And it's memories that bring tears and laughter . . . as in the early days when society's cream waded ankle deep through the mud in long gowns and tuxedos before the present Shed was built.

Or the thunder of a summer storm beating perfect time to Leonard Bernstein's rendition of "Rhapsody in Blue."

Or of standing, shouting, weeping ovations for the small Russian, Serge Koussevitsky, who created the Festival and brought the new American composers into the limelight of symphonic music.

Foremost Music Festival

Today Tanglewood is the world's foremost music festival and it is copied everywhere. It still stands after thirty years in authority as a kind patron giving the opportunity for study at the Festival School under masters, and as a showcase for the New artists to perform and have their works heard beside the treasures of the masters.

If this summer's visit to Tanglewood is to be your first, least some part is familiar — perhaps the soloist like Van Cliburn on July 23 . . . or a piece of music which you have heard often.

Or plan to attend an open rehearsal held each Saturday morning when the atmosphere is a bit more relaxed and the performance not as long.

Or consider some of the special events like the Boston Pops annual concert on August 3, when the program is light, gay, and a great deal of fun. There is still something slightly unsettling to long-time concert goers at hearing the great orchestra end the evening with a lush arrangement of "I Want To Hold Your Hand."

Or plan on the Gala Evening on Aug. 10 when Tanglewood shows off with a little bit of everything including performances by the students. This evening starts early with picnic suppers on the lawn and continues on with a taste of everything in the classical tradition.

Acoustics Exceptional

Prices for tickets range from $2 for the open rehearsals; $2.50 for general admission to the grounds, where you sit out on the lawn (bring your own chair or blanket); and from $3.50 to $7 in the big shed.

The acoustics are exceptional, so that you can hear from anywhere inside and from a remarkable distance outside under the stars, or under the sun of a lovely Sunday afternoon.

Perhaps you'd rather just go down and take a look around before you decide on a concert and on your feeling of Tanglewood. If so, drive down during the day and take a free guided tour of the grounds. It's practically an assured fact that the majesty and the beauty of the place will bring you back for a concert.

Some practical tips: If you plan to eat out in the neighborhood of Tanglewood before a concert, plan to arrive for dinner at least two hours before concert time. The traffic gets very, very heavy and you may have to rush through your meal or arrive late at the concert, which is not fashionable at first nighting at the theater.

Many Varieties of Dress

Many varieties of dress are seen at Tanglewood — including shorts and slacks on the lawn and semi-formal and formal wear in the Shed.

You can take the children, but the concerts are planned primarily for adult audiences. And in order to provide the necessary quiet for others, it's better to leave the young ones at home. Furthermore, there are no reduced rates for children of any ages. So if the kids really want to go, take them to an open rehearsal on Saturday morning.

Parking is free on the grounds. There is a cafeteria serving box lunches and beverages, but it is expensive.

(Rt. 7 or 20 to the monument in Lenox, follow the signs.)

$116,000 Music Shed, initially designed by Eliel Saarinen and his son, Eero (who later was to design the leaf-like acoustical canopy). In 1940, Koussevitsky launched the educational phase of the Festival, the Berkshire Music Festival, which today boasts such graduates as pianists Seymour Lipkin, Julius Katchen and Lukas Foss, New York Philharmonic conductor-composer Leonard Bernstein and St. Louis Symphony conductor Eleazar de Carvallho. In time, the 6,037-seat Shed was complemented by a 1,200-seat music theatre, a 500-seat chamber music hall, 15 small studios — and thanks to the Baldwin Piano & Organ Co., 90 pianos and two electronic organs, delivered "fresh" each summer and then sold at discount at conclusion of the Center's session.

Some of t[illegible] countered [illegible] as if by [illegible] affords a view of the lobster boats.

One wild Spring, we chartered a "210," a very fast but very wet open boat, from Ray Hunt in Marblehead, and beat back and forth for a week between the harbors of Massachusetts

Deseret News
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
D. 89,141

JUL 8 1966

Surprisingly Pre-Eminent

By HAROLD LUNDSTRUM

Deseret News Music Editor

Americans who are digging and American industry that is now going to have to dig up $76,750,000 in matching funds for the Ford Foundation grants can take encouragement from the history of their orchestras. Yes, indeed!

The American symphony orchestras are surprisingly pre-eminent in terms of age, numbers of concerts, and ubiquity. For example:

The New York Philharmonic was founded in 1842 (five years before the Mormon Pioneers reached Salt Lake Valley), which was the same year that the Vienna Philharmonic was founded.

The Boston Symphony came into existence in 1881, one year before the Berlin Philharmonic. The St. Louis Symphony was founded in 1885, before the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, and the Chicago and Cincinnati orchestras before the London Symphony. The average age of the 25 major orchestras in the United States is 51½ years.

OUR MUSICAL WHIRL

Most European orchestras are connected with, or are outgrowths of, opera houses. The number of concerts of symphonic music they play is limited. The Vienna Philharmonic gives 23 concerts in a year. The London Symphony performed 66 concerts in 1963-64.

In the same year, the Utah Symphony gave 73 concerts, the Boston Symphony, 121; the Philadelphia Orchestra, 159; the New York Philharmonic, 183.

Furthermore, the 33 largest cities of the United States and almost as many smaller ones have symphony orchestras of stature. But in France, there are only two professional symphony orchestras outside Paris; in England there are five outside London. Aside from the orchestras maintained by the Italian state radio, there is only one symphony orchestra in Italy.

And here is one of the most encouraging statistics for the fund-raisers to keep in mind. The amount of governmental support that our American orchestras have received has been small, indeed. The total income from tax sources to the 25 major orchestras (a large part of which is for performances of specific services, usually concerts for children) amounted to only 4.9 per cent of their total budgets. Five of the 25 received no public money.

In contrast, professional orchestras in Britain, France, Italy, and Germany receive virtually all their support from governmental sources.

Thirty years ago most players in the great American orchestras came to the United States after receiving their musical training in their native countries. Today this is no longer true. For example: There is only one foreign-born, foreign-trained musician in the Utah Symphony.

Even in the much discussed area of conducting personnel, seven of the 25 major orchestras are native Americans, and 10 are naturalized Americans.

In a word: Americans seem equal to the task of raising the necessary $76,750,000 to match the Ford Foundation grants.

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 206,715

JUL 1 1966

Nearly 250,000 persons, for example, last year paid admission prices to hear the Boston Symphony perform at its popular Tanglewood center in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts at Lenox.

Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,500

JUL 7 1966

Live From Tanglewood

Six full-length Berkshire Festival concerts will be broadcast live from Tanglewood on WGBH-FM this week.

On Sunday, July 10, at 2:30 p.m. Sir Adrian Boult will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Mozart program including the Symphony No. 34, Piano Concerto in D, K. 175 with Malcolm Frager as soloist and the Symphony No. 39.

This will be followed Tuesday (July 12) at 8 p.m. by a program featuring the Guarneri Quartet in chamber music of Mozart, Webern and Beethoven.

Chamber music is also the highlight on Wednesday at 8 as talented students attending the Berkshire Music Center are heard in a live performance, and on Thursday at the same hour a program of contemporary music will be broadcast.

The week concludes with two more concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Friday (July 15) at 9 p.m. Syzmon Goldberg will be both conductor and violin soloist in an all-Bach program featuring the Violin Concerto in E, Suite No. 2, Four Fugues from "The Art of the Fugue" and the Suite No. 4.

The final concert (Saturday, July 16 at 8 p.m.) brings Erich Leinsdorf to the podium for a performance of Bach's "St. John Passion" with the Tanglewood Choir and soloists Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Ernest Haefliger and Walter Carriger, tenors and N... bass.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503

JUL 8 1966

Reporter - at - Large

Tanglewood Is More Than Music

By LINDA SHAPIRO

Today we feature Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Tanglewood, however, is more than just a lot of classical music.

It's 210 acres of sheer beauty as only the Berkshires can boast . . . in formal gardens, sweeping lawns, sky and lake.

It is tradition as only native New Englanders can build.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JUL 1966

THERE IS a glen between his house and the lake," wrote Nathaniel Hawthorne in 1848, "through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great root of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all dense shadow of obscurity."

This was, and still is, Tanglewood — the magnificent, 210-acre estate of Boston banker William Aspinwall Tappan which, in 1936, was given by his heirs to Serge A. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Today, the hemlocked, birched and elmed estate, with its beautifully sculptured gardens overlooking Lake Mahkeenac, is filled with people — at last season's count, 250,000. Thirty years ago, Tanglewood's concert season drew no more than 15,000.

In 1938, the Symphony players moved out of a circus tent into the

It is people thousands and thousands of people from thousands of places swarming in year after year, as attested to by the variety of license plates one sees in the parking area.

It is the finest artists from the world of music performing with one of the world's all-time great orchestras. Conductors Monteaux, Stern, Piatagorsky, Munch, Bernstein and this year Ehrich Leinsdorf.

And it's memories that bring tears and laughter . . . as in the early days when society's cream waded ankle deep through the mud in long gowns and tuxedos before the present Shed was built.

Or the thunder of a summer storm beating perfect time to Leonard Bernstien's rendition of "Rhapsody in Blue."

Or of standing, shouting, weeping ovations for the small Russian, Serge Koussevitsky, who created the Festival and brought the new American composers into the limelight of symphonic music.

Foremost Music Festival

Today Tanglewood is the world's foremost music festival and it is copied everywhere. It still stands after thirty years in authority as a kind patron giving the opportunity for study at the Festival School under masters, and as a showcase for the new artists to perform and have their works heard beside the treasures of the masters.

If this summer's visit to Tanglewood is to be your first, least some part is familiar — perhaps the soloist like Van Cliburn on July 23 . . . or a piece of music which you have heard often.

Or plan to attend an open rehearsal held each Saturday morning when the atmosphere is a bit more relaxed and the performance not as long.

Or consider some of the special events like the Boston Pops annual concert on August 3, when the program is light, gay, and a great deal of fun. There is still something slightly unsettling to long-time concert goers at hearing the great orchestra end the evening with a lush arrangement of "I Want To Hold Your Hand."

Or plan on the Gala Evening on Aug. 10 when Tanglewood shows off with a little bit of everything including performances by the students. This evening starts early with picnic suppers on the lawn and continues on with a taste of everything in the classical tradition.

Acoustics Exceptional

Prices for tickets range from $2 for the open rehearsals; $2.50 for general admission to the grounds, where you sit out on the lawn (bring your own chair or blanket); and from $3.50 to $7 in the big shed.

The acoustics are exceptional, so that you can hear from anywhere inside and from a remarkable distance outside under the stars, or under the sun of a lovely Sunday afternoon.

Perhaps you'd rather just go down and take a look around before you decide on a concert and on your feeling of Tanglewood. If so, drive down during the day and take a free guided tour of the grounds. It's practically an assured fact that the majesty and the beauty of the place will bring you back for a concert.

Some practical tips: If you plan to eat out in the neighborhood of Tanglewood before a concert, plan to arrive for dinner at least two hours before concert time. The traffic gets very, very heavy and you may have to rush through your meal or arrive late at the concert, which is not fashionable at first nighting at the theater.

Many Varieties of Dress

Many varieties of dress are seen at Tanglewood — including shorts and slacks on the lawn and semi-formal and formal wear in the Shed.

You can take the children, but the concerts are planned primarily for adult audiences. And in order to provide the necessary quiet for others, it's better to leave the young ones at home. Furthermore, there are no reduced rates for children of any ages. So if the kids really want to go, take them to an open rehearsal on Saturday morning.

Parking is free on the grounds. There is a cafeteria serving box lunches and beverages, but it is expensive.

(Rt. 7 or 20 to the monument in Lenox, follow the signs.)

210

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378

JUL 17 1966

Berkshire Patrons Less But Boxoffice Is Robust

By Joseph Kaye
(The Star's New York Correspondent)

LENOX, MASS.—At the end of two weeks of listening the impression is still that the Berkshire Music Festival remains a prime musical event in, and out, of this country. Though the Boston Symphony Orchestra, around which this festival is built, has been playing here for 30 summers there has been no diminishing of enthusiasm or slackening of effort to achieve the highest level of excellence. Under the leadership of Erich Leinsdorf the orchestra is playing with more brilliance than one can recall, and there is the continuing feeling of inspiration that has been symbolic at Tanglewood.

The Berkshire Festival is a complex of concerts by the Boston Symphony, the Berkshire Music Center for advanced study by selected students and incidental smaller concerts weekdays. The Boston orchestra performs only during weekends, almost always on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday matinees. The concerts are given in a large wooden acoustically fine shed seating about 6,000.

This year there was a change in programming. Usually the festival begins with two weeks of Mozart, Bach. This year it started with a weekend of varied music and gave over the second week to Mozart and the third to Bach. Another change was a novel one: preceding Friday night concert was a "Prelude" of interesting music lasting about an hour. This is included in the price of the main concert. The bonus prelude starts at 7, after which the audience can stroll through the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood and indulge in a post-dinner drink (soft) bought at the comprehensive snack bar.

THE FIRST prelude had a novel number indeed, Mozart's "scatological" canon songs which he wrote for comradely singing at convivial gatherings. The word "scatological "may be discreetly defined as "scandalous" or more discreetly as "earthy." (One of the lines reads: "In Prater gibts Dreck.") The canons were revived by the Tanglewood Choir under Alfred Nash, who gave the recital a touch of staginess by moving his singers around in appropriate patterns. It was a delightful, if surprising performance. In a general sense, the collection could be dubbed a mild "Carmina Burana."

Outstanding during the first weekend was the Mahler 4th, Roger Sessions' Psalm 140, and the Brahms piano concerto No. 2 played by Abbey Simon. Remaining in one's mind was Simon's presentation of the andante movement, poetically, romantically and with virtuosity. If the listener could imagine the huge shed suddenly transfigured with clouds of mystic sounds, this indulgence could be allowed. Mahler seems a curious case in musical history. A master orchestral technician, his creative material appears superficial and imitative of popular music. The thought runs through one's mind that he would have made a superb composer of operetta. The Sessions Psalm, with Anne Elgar the soloist, was composed for an anniversary of the Princeton Theological School. It is a shrill item, the voice high and hard in spirit and the orchestra in tumultuous obbligato. Maybe one could term it a prolonged shriek of protest.

The second, Mozartian, weekend, was made even more attractive by the playing of two concertos for [illegible] by Frager, the [illegible] pianist, and one by Claude Frank. Frager has become an outstanding artist. His progress since he won the Leventritt award in New York seven years ago has been remarkable. At that time he was an eager youth of 20, immensely gratified at having won the prize but determined to finish his studies at Columbia university before doing anything serious about his music. He did continue at Columbia until he graduated — magna cum laude. Then came the business of making himself a better musician. After he performed the D major concerto he was given an ovation by the audience.

Leinsdorf played the Serenade in D major (with the posthorn) at one of these concerts, and the beauties of Tanglewood cannot have included anything more lovely than the performance, as performed by this conductor and his world-famed band of music makers.

THE TWO weekends combined drew a combined audience of over 43,000 (counting those who occupied the lawn space surrounding the open sides of the shed). This is less than the evening Tanglewood concerts are accustomed to. But this year there has been competition from the new festival in Saratoga, N. Y., created by the New York City Ballet (now dancing there) and the incoming Philadelphia orchestra.

Some competition has also come from the Marlboro festival in Vermont, directed by Rudolf Serkin. Nevertheless the cash intake based upon an average of $4 a ticket (the prices are $7 to $12.50 for the lawn) should have reached a figure well over $170,000, an amount to be regarded with awe.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JUL 10 1966

'Ghost Schedule'

Leinsdorf Pencils In Boston Symphony Plans

By MARGO MILLER

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—The term "ghost schedule" comes up so often in conversation with Erich Leinsdorf on his and the Boston Symphony's plans for the future.

A "ghost schedule," it would seem, is a good deal of pencil work upon a calendar which stretches through 1970.

Pencilled in, but not yet made flesh, are these possibilities:

—The orchestra's tour to Japan in the Spring of 1969, to play in the new concert hall at Kyoto, Boston's sister city.

—A Beethoven cycle for the composer's bicentennial in 1970.

—The introduction to symphony hall of a series of chamber concerts known as "preludes," to precede full orchestra programs by the Boston Symphony.

—And for Leinsdorf himself a stepped-up schedule of guest conducting abroad — Amsterdam's Concertgebouw in 1967, part of the Mahler cycle at 1967 Vienna festival, L'orchestre nationale in Paris in 1968, an as yet unselected English orchestra at the Edinburgh festival of 1968 and in 1967 and 1968 three opera recordings at RCA's Rome studios.

Leinsdorf, who came to Boston in the 1962-63 season, is now on what he calls a "sine die" contract. It means "without date," is equivalent to university tenure or serving an institution at the pleasure of both parties.

Rumors around Boston had Leinsdorf being replaced by Karayan or Bernstein at the end of this season. Leinsdorf says he is not leaving Boston.

The Boston Symphony has not been in Europe in 10 years, a fact which RCA is mindful of. The recording company urged the American soprano Leotyne Price, for example, to give concerts in Paris. Without personal appearances, they had trouble moving records off the shelves.

Leinsdorf's guest conducting abroad is in part a proxy for the Boston Symphony. Also, he likes working vacations, pronouncing them refreshing musically.

On the proposed Japanese tour, to take up the "ghost schedule", Leinsdorf could give no odds. Things like financing, dates, the most number of concerts for the least fatigue to an orchestra which will be between the strenuous Symphony Hall and Tanglewood seasons — these are considerations conductor and management have to face.

"The Boston Symphony hasn't the incentive to tour the other orchestras have. We invented, you might say, the 48-week season with a month's paid holiday. We don't work."

If Japan looks ify at the moment, Beethoven is some sort of birthday cake. Scheduling here means clearing 1969's programs of Beethoven, the better to present him afresh in the bicentennial year.

For the centennial, Leinsdorf says he is thinking of the nine symphonies, of course, but not the "Wellington", the concertos, the overtures, the "Egmont" music, a suite from the "Prometheus" ballet, "Missa Solemnis," a concert version of "Fidelio."

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the string quartet come into these plans. The notion of starting an orchestra concert evening with a chamber music "prelude" is being tried out this Summer at the Berkshire Festival. Patrons get both concerts for the price of one, an economic incentive, to be sure, but, more important, a chance to hear chamber works which don't show up on a run-of-the-mill program.

BACK STAGE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 6,900

JUL 15 1966

7 Arts' "Tanglewood" On Bell Hour in Fall

Bell Telephone's one-hour Tanglewood documentary acquired from Seven Arts Television which will be presented on the NBC Network next Fall, began a 6-week production schedule at Tanglewood beginning July 11, it was announced by W. Robert Rich, Exec. V.P. and G.M. of Seven Arts Television and Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Producer, Henry Jaffe Enterprises, Inc., will film all of the events surrounding this summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, which will include excerpts from actual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Symphony Chamber players and the Boston Pops Orchestra, Rich continued. "The Boston Symphony Orchestra is represented by Seven Arts Television in all its TV activities," Rich noted.

W. Robert Rich

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378

JUL 10 1966

Music

By John Haskins
(The Star's Music Editor)

LAST WEEK THE Boston Symphony celebrated its 30th anniversary as the principal performing element at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, historic site of the Berkshire Music Festival, the senior summer music festival in the United States. Tanglewood came into being during the regime of Serge Koussevitzky's musical directorship of the Boston orchestra, as an extension of the orchestra's regular season, and like Topsy it grew and grew, conservative in programming, bigger by the year, and in a sense, commercial. The Berkshire Festival and its attached school of music has attracted the big names and the aspiring students, and has become an institution.

210

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378

JUL 17 1966

Berkshire Patrons Less But Boxoffice Is Robust

By Joseph Kaye
(The Star's New York Correspondent)

LENOX, MASS.—At the end of two weeks of listening the impression is still that the Berkshire Music Festival remains a prime musical event in, and out, of this country. Though the Boston Symphony Orchestra, around which this festival is built, has been playing here for 30 summers there has been no diminishing of enthusiasm or slackening of effort to achieve the highest level of excellence. Under the leadership of Erich Leinsdorf the orchestra is playing with more brilliance than one can recall, and there is the continuing feeling of inspiration that has been symbolic of Tanglewood.

The Berkshire Festival is a complex of concerts by the Boston Symphony, the Berkshire Music Center for advanced study by selected students and incidental smaller concerts weekdays. The Boston orchestra performs only during weekends, almost always on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday matinees. The concerts are given in a large wooden acoustically fine shed seating about 6,000.

This year there was a change in programming. Usually the festival begins with two weeks of Mozart-Bach. This year it started with a weekend of varied music and gave over the second week to Mozart and the third to Bach. Another change was a novel one: preceding each Friday night concert there is a "Prelude" of interesting music lasting about an hour. This is included in the price of the main concert. The bonus prelude starts at 7, after which the audience can stroll through the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood and indulge in a post-dinner drink (soft) bought at the comprehensive snack bar.

THE FIRST prelude had a novel number indeed, Mozart's "scatological" canons, songs which he wrote for comradely singing at convivial gatherings. The word "scatological "may be discreetly defined as "scandalous" or more discreetly as "earthy." (One of the lines reads: "In Prater gibts Dreck."). The canons were revived by the Tanglewood Choir under Alfred Nash, who gave the recital a touch of stageyness by moving his singers around in appropriate patterns. It was a delightful, if surprising performance. In a general sense, the collection could be dubbed a mild "Carmina Burana."

Outstanding during the first weekend was the Mahler 4th, Roger Sessions' Psalm 140, and the Brahms piano concerto No. 2 played by Abbey Simon. Remaining in one's mind was Simon's presentation of the andante movement, poetically, romantically and with virtuosity. If the listener could imagine the huge shed suddenly transfigured with clouds of mystic sounds, this indulgence could be allowed. Mahler seems a curious case in musical history. A master orchestral technician, his creative material appears superficial and imitative of popular music. The thought runs through one's mind that he would have made a superb composer of operetta. The Sessions Psalm, with Anne Elgar the soloist, was composed for an anniversary of the Princeton Theological School. It is a shrill item, the voice high and hard in spirit and the orchestra in tumultuous obbligato. Maybe one could term it a prolonged shriek of protest.

The second, Mozartian, weekend, was made even more attractive by the playing of two concertos by Mal colm Frager, the St. Louis pianist, and one by Claude Frank. Frager has become an outstanding artist. His progress since he won the Leventritt award in New York seven years ago has been remarkable. At that time he was an eager youth of 20, immensely gratified at having won the prize but determined to finish his studies at Columbia university before doing anything serious about his music. He did continue at Columbia until he graduated — magna cum laude. Then came the business of making himself a better musician. After he performed the D major concerto he was given an ovation by the audience.

Leinsdorf played the Serenade in D major (with the posthorn) at one of these concerts, and the beauties of Tanglewood cannot have included anything more lovely than the Andantino, as performed by the conductor and his wonderful band of music makers.

THE TWO weekend concerts drew a combined audience of over 43,000 (counting those who occupied the lawn-space surrounding the open sides of the shed). This is less than the opening Tanglewood concerts are accustomed to. But this year there has been competition from the new festival in Saratoga, N. Y., shared by the New York City Ballet (now dancing there) and the incoming Philadelphia orchestra.

Some competition has also come from the Marlboro festival in Vermont, directed by Rudolf Serkin. Nevertheless the cash intake based upon an average of $4 a ticket (the prices are $7 to $12.50 for the lawn), should have reached a figure well over $170,000, an amount to be regarded with awe.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JUL 10 1966

'Ghost Schedule'

Leinsdorf Pencils In Boston Symphony Plans

By MARGO MILLER

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—The term "ghost schedule" comes up so often in conversation with Erich Leinsdorf on his and the Boston Symphony's plans for the future.

A "ghost schedule," it would seem, is a good deal of pencil work upon a calendar which stretches through 1970.

Pencilled in, but not yet made flesh, are these possibilities:

—The orchestra's tour to Japan in the Spring of 1969, to play in the new concert hall at Kyoto, Boston's sister city.

—A Beethoven cycle for the composer's bicentennial in 1970.

—The introduction to symphony hall of a series of chamber concerts known as "preludes," to precede full orchestra programs by the Boston Symphony.

—And for Leinsdorf himself a stepped-up schedule of guest conducting abroad — Amsterdam's Concertgebouw in 1967, part of the Mahler cycle at 1967 Vienna festival, L'orchestre nationale in Paris in 1968, an as yet unselected English orchestra at the Edinburgh festival of 1968 and in 1967 and 1968 three opera recordings at RCA's Rome studios.

Leinsdorf, who came to Boston in the 1962-63 season, is now on what he calls a "sine die" contract. It means "without date," is equivalent to university tenure or serving an institution at the pleasure of both parties.

Rumors around Boston had Leinsdorf being replaced by Karayan or Bernstein at the end of this season. Leinsdorf says he is not leaving Boston.

The Boston Symphony has not been in Europe in 10 years, a fact which RCA is mindful of. The recording company urged the American soprano Leotyne Price, for example, to give concerts in Paris. Without personal appearances, they had trouble moving records off the shelves.

Leinsdorf's guest conducting abroad is in part a proxy for the Boston Symphony. Also, he likes working vacations, pronouncing them refreshing musically.

On the proposed Japanese tour, to take up the "ghost schedule", Leinsdorf could give no odds. Things like financing, dates, the most number of concerts for the least fatigue to an orchestra which will be between the strenuous Symphony Hall and Tanglewood seasons — these are considerations conductor and management have to face.

"The Boston Symphony hasn't the incentive to tour the other orchestras have. We invented, you might say, the 48-week season with a month's paid holiday. We don't work."

If Japan looks ify at the moment, Beethoven is some sort of birthday cake. Scheduling here means clearing 1969's programs of Beethoven, the better to present him afresh in the bicentennial year.

For the centennial, Leinsdorf says he is thinking of the nine symphonies, of course, but not the "Wellington", the concertos, the overtures, the "Egmont" music, a suite from the "Prometheus" ballet, "Missa Solemnis," a concert version of "Fidelio."

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the string quartet come into these plans. The notion of starting an orchestra concert evening with a chamber music "prelude" is being tried out this Summer at the Berkshire Festival. Patrons get both concerts for the price of one, an economic incentive, to be sure, but, more important, a chance to hear chamber works which don't show up on a run-of-the-mill program.

BACK STAGE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 6,900

JUL 15 1966

7 Arts' "Tanglewood" On Bell Hour in Fall

Bell Telephone's one-hour Tanglewood documentary acquired from Seven Arts Television which will be presented on the NBC Network next Fall, began a 6-week production schedule at Tanglewood beginning July 11, it was announced by W. Robert Rich, Exec. V.P. and G.M. of Seven Arts Television and Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Producer, Henry Jaffe Enterprises, Inc., will film all of the events surrounding this summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, which will include excerpts from actual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Symphony Chamber players and the Boston Pops Orchestra, Rich continued. "The Boston Symphony Orchestra is represented by Seven Arts Television in all its TV activities," Rich noted.

W. Robert Rich

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378

JUL 10 1966

Music

By John Haskins
(The Star's Music Editor)

LAST WEEK THE Boston Symphony celebrated its 30th anniversary as the principal performing element at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, historic site of the Berkshire Music Festival, the senior summer music festival in the United States. Tanglewood came into being during the regime of Serge Koussevitzky's musical directorship of the Boston orchestra, as an extension of the orchestra's regular season, and like Topsy it grew and grew, conservative in programming, bigger by the year, and in a sense, commercial. The Berkshire Festival and its attached school of music has attracted the big names and the aspiring students, and has become an institution.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JUL 10 1966

Happenings in Berkshires

The annual eight-week Summer music festival at Tanglewood at Lenox in the Berkshires is again under way. The Tanglewood is the Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Nearby in Becket, the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival is celebrating its 33d season in the Ted Shawn Theater. The new cultural addition to the area this Summer is Berkshire Theater Festival in Stockbridge. Located in the red-barn Berkshire Playhouse, the group is offering Robinson Jeffers' "The Cretan Woman" through July 16; Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice," July 19-30; Beckett's "Waiting for Godot," Aug. 2-13 and a one week revue opening on Aug. 16.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

JUL 19 1966

Regional Roundup

Opening Saturday Of Koussevitzky Composers' Studio

Dedication of the Koussevitzky Studio for Composers on the Koussevitzky estate, Seranak, in Lenox will take place Saturday afternoon.

The project of constructing a studio for composers as a memorial to the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, has been sponsored jointly by the National Federation of Music Clubs and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Called Welcome Retreat

The new composers studio is to provide a creative musician with peaceful and natural surroundings. This will serve as a quiet contrast to the busy life of Tanglewood.

Mrs. Koussevitzky said that she did not consider her late husband's estate, Seranak, a private residence, but rather a welcome retreat, the beauty and the peacefulness of which will offer greater time to absorb and fulfill the creativeness of composing in an atmosphere free from distraction.

The composers will have an opportunity to work closely with the Berkshire Music Center and its students as the studio is just a few minutes from Tanglewood.

Copland to Speak

A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be represented at the dedication. Aaron Copland will deliver the dedication on behalf of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

There will be close coordination between the Berkshire Music Center and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the selection of the composers who will be in residence at the studio. It is expected that the studio will be available for six months of the year.

Paul Fromm, head of the Fromm Music Foundation, wrote, "I could not think of a more appropriate memorial to Serge Koussevitzky."

Thornton Wilder wrote to Mrs. Koussevitzky, "Your insight is all too justified. Composers — in this era of omnipresent radio and television—must have a haven from sound. (Our masters were of much sterner stuff. Mozart's lodgings were often over cafes, where dancing and singing were usually going on.)"

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Festival and Berkshire Music Center said, "The dedication of the Koussevitzky Studio for Composers is yet another fulfillment of Serge Koussevitzky's dream to provide an environment in which young musicians could devote themselves to the study of music. To Mrs. Koussevitzky, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the National Federation of Music Clubs many composers will owe their gratitude for providing them with these facilities in such beautiful and peaceful surroundings."

Rev. Theodore Ferris, rector of Trinity Church in Boston and member of the board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has written the following blessing for the dedication: "May the beauty of this place open the eyes and ears of those who live and work here to the beauty that is often hidden in the clouds of ugliness. And may the music they make brighten the world for those whose lives are dark and dreary."

Singing of Alleluia

The dedication will close with the singing of the Tanglewood Alleluia.

Mrs. Koussevitzky said she hoped the future would bring continued fulfillment in keeping with the ideas for which the Koussevitzky Studio for Composers was conceived.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 20 1966

Surgery Forces Munch Absence From Israel

Charles Munch, who was scheduled to conduct on the opening night of the sixth annual Israel Festival of Music and Drama, was forced to cancel his appearance because of surgery.

The cancellation brought the first news that the former Boston Symphony conductor had undergone an operation. It was assumed that he was in a Paris hospital.

Dr. Munch was replaced at the Tel Aviv concert Tuesday evening by Georges Pretre, who left the Salzburg Festival to fill in.

Amherst Record
AMHERST, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,162

JUL 29 1966

Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1966 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Wilton Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,105

JUL 27 1966

Berkshire Music Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists, through Aug. 22, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JUL 10 1966

Happenings in Berkshires

The annual eight-week Summer music festival at Tanglewood at Lenox in the Berkshires is again under way. The Tanglewood is the Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Nearby in Becket, the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival is celebrating its 33d season in the Ted Shawn Theater. The new cultural addition to the area this Summer is Berkshire Theater Festival in Stockbridge. Located in the red-barn Berkshire Playhouse, the group is offering Robinson Jeffers' "The Cretan Woman" through July 16; Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice," July 19-30; Beckett's "Waiting for Godot," Aug. 2-13 and a one week revue opening on Aug. 16.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

JUL 19 1966

Regional Roundup

Opening Saturday Of Koussevitzky Composers' Studio

Dedication of the Koussevitzky Studio for Composers on the Koussevitzky estate, Seranak, in Lenox will take place Saturday afternoon.

The project of constructing a studio for composers as a memorial to the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, has been sponsored jointly by the National Federation of Music Clubs and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Called Welcome Retreat

The new composers studio is to provide a creative musician with peaceful and natural surroundings. This will serve as a quiet contrast to the busy life of Tanglewood.

Mrs. Koussevitzky said that she did not consider her late husband's estate, Seranak, a private residence, but rather a welcome retreat, the beauty and the peacefulness of which will offer greater time to absorb and fulfill the creativeness of composing in an atmosphere free from distraction.

The composers will have an opportunity to work closely with the Berkshire Music Center and its students as the studio is just a few minutes from Tanglewood.

Copland to Speak

A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be represented at the dedication. Aaron Copland will deliver the dedication on behalf of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

There will be close coordination between the Berkshire Music Center and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in the selection of the composers who will be in residence at the studio. It is expected that the studio will be available for six months of the year.

Paul Fromm, head of the Fromm Music Foundation, wrote, "I could not think of a more appropriate memorial to Serge Koussevitzky."

Thornton Wilder wrote to Mrs. Koussevitzky, "Your insight is all too justified. Composers — in this era of omnipresent radio and television—must have a haven from sound. (Our masters were of much sterner stuff. Mozart's lodgings were often over cafes, where dancing and singing were usually going on.)"

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Berkshire Festival and Berkshire Music Center said, "The dedication of the Koussevitzky Studio for Composers is yet another fulfillment of Serge Koussevitzky's dream to provide an environment in which young musicians could devote themselves to the study of music. To Mrs. Koussevitzky, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the National Federation of Music Clubs many composers will owe their gratitude for providing them with these facilities in such beautiful and peaceful surroundings."

Rev. Theodore Ferris, rector of Trinity Church in Boston and member of the board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has written the following blessing for the dedication: "May the beauty of this place open the eyes and ears of those who live and work here to the beauty that is often hidden in the clouds of ugliness. And may the music they make brighten the world for those whose lives are dark and dreary."

Singing of Alleluia

The dedication will close with the singing of the Tanglewood Alleluia.

Mrs. Koussevitzky said she hoped the future would bring continued fulfillment in keeping with the ideas for which the Koussevitzky Studio for Composers was conceived.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 20 1966

Surgery Forces Munch Absence From Israel

Charles Munch, who was scheduled to conduct on the opening night of the sixth annual Israel Festival of Music and Drama, was forced to cancel his appearance because of surgery.

The cancellation brought the first news that the former Boston Symphony conductor had undergone an operation. It was assumed that he was in a Paris hospital.

Dr. Munch was replaced at the Tel Aviv concert Tuesday evening by Georges Pretre, who left the Salzburg Festival to fill in.

Amherst Record
AMHERST, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,162

JUL 28 1966

Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1966 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Wilton Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,105

JUL 27 1966

Berkshire Music Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists, through Aug. 22, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 16 1966

As I Hear It

Cultural Shopping Center

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

IF ANYONE had told Henry Higginson when he started the Boston Symphony in 1881 that his orchestra one day would be playing for two solid summer months each year out in the wilds of Western Massachusetts, a full mile from even a small village, he might possibly have answered "Oh, yeh, and I suppose we will be going to the moon at about the same time, eh?"

It takes no very original research to see what the automobile has done to our manner of living. It is plain that we can live many miles from where we work, find stores and services not only in town but also in areas which we once identified as "in the country." We take mobility in stride for any purpose —and that doesn't exclude culture by any means.

The first venture of this nature in this vicinity was the chamber music colony established by the late Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge in 1918 on the ridge of South Mountain, a place which up to then had been a picnic and outing spot for the venturesome and stalwart. The Ted Shawn Dance Festival, founded in remote Pittsfield in 1932, was next in line; they came, not necessarily in the order of their appearance, the Jacques Gordon quartet colony in Falls Village, the Cummington School of the Arts and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

* * *

THE FESTIVAL made what was then a bold step, but which now by comparison looks a bit feeble, on the Hanna Farm in Stockbridge in 1934. The various steps leading up to the donation of the Tanglewood estate and the construction of a great shed in 1938 are well known to everyone. Except for the war years when gasoline was rationed, the festivals have expanded and continued in strength with steadily increasing prestige and scope.

Just as we have observed how the success of one shopping center or motel or eating house brings emulators in droves, so now appear on the horizon emulators of our cultural centers far from a metropolis and attainable, for all practical purposes, only by private car. We are not particularly concerned with the success of any commercial venture competing with previous established ones, other than to wish them all well, but when another music center shows up we all wonder, as little as it may affect us, if and how much it will affect the older institution.

The Saratoga Performing Arts Center (SPAC) gave its inaugural performances last weekend. It is a formidable establishment. The building represents an expenditure of some $4 million. (The Shed at Tanglewood in 1938 cost $100,000.) It is situated in a 2,000-acre park and it is jointly sponsored by the state of New York, local community associations and individuals. There is quite a grand hotel adjacent to it, which offers tennis, golf, swimming, inviting paths for walking and shaded benches for resting. Nothing has been spared to make the Center attractive to health- or culture-seekers, for a day or a week. The race track within easy reach cannot be a deterrent.

* * *

THE MONTH of July will be devoted only to ballet, and the New York City ballet company in full force, with its orchestra, is on hand for the entire engagement. The Philadelphia Symphony comes with its main conductor, Eugene Ormandy, in August with a schedule similar to that of Tanglewood, including concert performances of opera. Here there should be real competition—artistically—but not really on a box-office basis. There is a public in the Saratoga area, 80 miles from Tanglewood, which can easily support the new venture, if it is so minded, without affecting the Berkshire Festival attendance one bit. Indeed, it may stimulate interest in some to see and hear both orchestras.

The SPAC building is primarily built as a ballet theater. Its dimensions, equipment, backstage facilities such as rehearsal and dressing rooms were designed with dancing and dancers in mind. But a movable shell will make orchestra performances perfectly feasible, to be sure.

The landscaping and parking facilities have been given much thought. SPAC has had the advantage of inspecting the Tanglewood center and, at its start, it is a more mature institution than was Tanglewood in its early years. However, the Saratoga personnel do not view our Berkshire establishment as a rival. Rather, they think in terms of coexistence and made a most cordial gesture of fraternity by inviting the entire Boston orchestra to attend last Saturday's performance.

* * *

THE NEW YORKERS speak of lifting their sights as time goes on to include some of the features which are established parts of the Tanglewood summer, such as a school and possibly other academic projects. Their structure is awesomely beautiful. The parterre seats 3,100 people and the seats, rising in serried steps, are fixed permanently in solid and huge concrete crescents. The balcony seats another 2,000. The sides are open and occupants of the seats, which extend to the edge below the high-caverned roof above them, can possibly become dampened with rain or a windy spray when the weather is not favorable. The seats painted in alternate chocolate brown and blue make a restful pattern.

The Berkshire Festival originally was purely orchestral. Later the Music Center included opera in its curriculum. This was dropped, not for lack of success, but for a combination of reasons, financial possibly, and also because of lack of drive and aggression in the leadership. This was not a step forward. In its day we had Benjamin Britten himself here to stage his new "Peter Grimes" and "Albert Herring." We had Boris Goldovsky reviving neglected old operas. We had some marvellous young singers who went on to national and international recognition due, in no little measure, to the prestige and training acquired in the Berkshires.

* * *

TIMES AND fashions change. Little in the field of culture is constant. We have had the opportunity in this area to observe the vicissitudes of summer theatre over a period of years. There are thousands of us Monday morning quarterbacks on the cultural fields, to whom profit and loss sheets are not a factor in our recommendations. I believe, after some thought, that there is ample room for Tanglewood and Saratoga, as well as the changeover to opera at Lewisohn Stadium, and the new summer series at Philharmonic Hall and all the other attractions and distractions.

One detail should be mentioned before closing this essay. It may not be apparent to many of us, but as you approach Saratoga you can appreciate what the towns of Lenox and Stockbridge have done to keep Tanglewood in its special character.

When a new supermarket comes to town, the others shout from the rooftops about their trading stamps. Cultural shopping centers can hardly do quite that, but if an extra little fillip can be exerted without disturbing the status quo too violently, it might be in order.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
JUL 24 1966

Aaron Copland Dedicates New Koussevitsky Studio

By RICHARD C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — The major dedication speech Saturday afternoon for the new Koussevitsky studio for composers on the Koussevitsky estate, Seranak, could hardly have been given by a more appropriate man—Aaron Copland.

Site Dedicated

And he said "I can't think of a more appropriate place to put up a studio for the composition of music. This site was dedicated to the creativity of music . . . and it was made so by Koussevitsky."

The studio is a memorial to Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1924 to 1949 and founder of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in 1940.

This is the first summer since the center's founding that composer Copland has not been head of the center's composition department and the first in more than 10 years he has not been chairman of the center's faculty.

Religious Passion

"Serge Koussevitsky used to mystify me a wee bit," he said. "I never connected conductors with assistance to young composers . . .

"I shall never forget the passion that he brought to music, a passion that was almost religious. At the source of it was the interest he had in the fate of young composers . . .

"He was emotionally interested, vitally concerned in their work and willing to play it."

Peaceful Facilities

Seranak is about a uarter of a mile from the Tanglewood main gate, and the studio is about 100 yards from Seranak's gate. It is planned to provide peaceful facilities for a working composer and his family for about six months a year.

The selection of the beneficiaries will be made by the seven members of the Koussevitsky Foundation's board of directors, one of whom is Copland's successor as head of the BMC composition department, Gunther Schuller.

The studio consists of two frame buildings of semicontemporary design with cathedral ceilings and natural redwood siding.

Two Bedrooms

One is a 24-by-36-foot dwelling with an eight-foot-wide porch, full-size cellar and two bedrooms.

Fifteen feet away is a 20-by-24-foot studio building which is essentially one room, although it has complete plumbing and heating facilities including a kitchenette.

The buildings are insulated and heated and expected to be ready for occupancy by September 1.

Cost About $40,000

Total cost to the foundation and the National Federation of Music Clubs, cosponsor, including grading and grass, connection to the town water system and installation of a fire hydrant 100 feet away, will be about $40,000.

Other speakers on the short program, all introduced by Mrs. Koussevitsky, were Dr. Merle Montgomery, vice-president of the New England Region of the Music Club Federation; Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Rep. Silvio Conte of Pittsfield.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
SALEM, Mass.
Circ. 27,687
JUL 20 1966

BEARS REPETITION

Here it was mid-July. As the orchestra (Boston Symphony) waited for Director Erich Leinsdorf to come onstage for the start of the concert, a camera cast its all-seeing eye out from the Symphony Hall stage. It picked up late arrivals coming down the aisles to their seats, men with overcoats over their arms, women still with theirs on (after all, the gentler sex sits in coats). The scene seemed incongruous, what with the temperature outside in the 80s. Not at all; what we were looking at on our TV set was a tape of a BSO concert that was put on for the paying guests last November. Incidentally the playing of the Schubert Fifth, the Prokovieff First Piano Concerto and the Brahms First was superb.

LONG ISLAND DAILY PRESS
Sunday, July 10, 1966

Tanglewood Strikes Right Chord With Summer Visitors

SPECIAL TO THE PRESS

BOSTON, Mass.—"A landscape that combines every variety of beauty—valleys, in the hollow of which lie small lakes, glittering like sapphires, uplands . . . hills . . . woods . . . noble masses of granite rock . . . clear mountain brooks—all this, under a cloud varied sky, such as generally canopies mountain districts, the sunset glories of which are often magnificent."

Such is the manner in which Fanny Kemble, renowned Shakespearean actress of the nineteenth century, described the Berkshires of western Massachusetts. The same description could apply to the area today for once out of the few small cities and towns of the region one finds the mountain scenery much as it was a hundred or more years ago. At that period there resided in the Berkshires a number of nineteenth century literary giants. Melville, Holmes and Longfellow were sometimes residents of Pittsfield. In fact, Melville wrote his "Moby Dick" at "Arrow head," still to be seen on Holmes Road, Pittsfield.

* * *

OVERLOOKING Stockbridge Bowl, or more properly, Lake Mahkeenac, was Tanglewood, the mid-nineteenth century gentleman's estate of William Aspinwall Tappan. At the edge of this lovely property was the little red cottage made immortal by its then struggling resident, Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Today, Tanglewood is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as it has been for 30 summers following the 1936 gift of the property to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. The red cottage was destroyed by fire in the 1890's but has been rebuilt on the original foundations and now serves as studios for the orchestra's flourishing educational arm, the Berkshire Music Center which last summer celebrated its 25th Anniversary.

* * *

TWO YEARS prior to the gift of Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony, a series of summer concerts began in the Berkshires. These were the beginnings of today's Berkshire Festival the best known and longest of the major music festivals in this country. In the beautiful surroundings of formal gardens, hemlock hedges, avenues of tall pines, and great lawns, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives 24 concerts in the Music Shed which possesses such fine natural acoustics that an equal number of patrons can be seated comfortably on the grass and easily hear the music.

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where for eight weeks the orchestra presents the Berkshire Festival.

For this summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has chosen the Romantic concerto as the theme. On each of six weekends with full orchestra, two or three concerts will be performed by well known soloists.

The Festival opens on July 2 and concludes eight weeks later on Sunday afternoon, August 21 with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

A brochure with complete program and ticket information for this summer's Berkshire Festival is available from the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115. This brochure contains some information on the variety of other cultural attractions in the Berkshires. Further details on these and on accommodations may be obtained from the Berkshire Hills Conference, 100 North St., Pittsfield, Mass. 01203.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 25 1966

Area Tourist Business 'Excellent,' May Be Headed for Record Summer

By THOMAS O. MORTON

Berkshire County's tourist business barometer is on the rise.

A spot check with area tourist attractions and commercial operations indicates that business was excellent over the weekend and might be headed for a record summer season, beating the 1965 peak.

At Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra attendance for the three days—Friday through Sunday—was 36,231. This is a record during the four years Erich Leinsdorf has been the BSO director. However, it is still short of the all-time weekend record of 40,239 set the final week in the 1959 season.

14,375 for Van Cliburn

The weekend attendance at Tanglewood peaked at 14,375 for pianist Van Cliburn's performance Saturday evening. Attendance was 7,320 Friday night, 3,940 Saturday morning, and 10,596 Sunday afternoon.

This past weekend marked the midpoint for the 1966 summer season for both Tanglewood and Jacob's Pillow.

Attendance at the Pillow is on a par with the 1965 season, according to a spokesman for the dance theatre. The spokesman viewed this as evidence that the Jacob's Pillow box office is not being hurt from its new competition, the New York City Ballet appearing at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center in nearby New York State.

Saratoga's ballet season opened July 8 and will run through July 31. This will be followed by a series of 14 concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra Aug. 4-24.

A more accurate measurement of what effect Saratoga will have on Tanglewood, or vice versa, will be possible after Van Cliburn's appearance at Saratoga Aug. 6, when he will repeat the same program presented in Lenox Saturday.

Rooms Demand Heavy

John V. Geary, executive director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, area tourist promotion agency, said the demand for rooms was heavy over the weekend but that there was space available in private guest homes to take care of most requests.

The Southern Berkshire Chamber of Commerce reportedly filled every available room in Great Barrington and most surrounding towns.

Great Barrington Police Chief Emmett J. Shea said traffic was "exceptionally heavy," even for a summer weekend. The traffic in that area reached its peak early Sunday afternoon as several thousand spectators drove to the air show at the Great Barrington Airport.

Chief David N. Lane of the Lenox Police Department said 3,965 cars were jammed into parking lots at Tanglewood for the Saturday night concert. He said the traffic was the heaviest of the season.

Lee Police Chief John J. Boyne said vehicular and pedestrian traffic in that town was also the heaviest of the summer Saturday night, making Lee's Main Street "the most congested area in Berkshire County."

Reports of banner tourist business also came from North Berkshire. Mohawk Trail resident Ernest Briggs, one of the leading specialists in the Mohawk Indian-type gift trade, said he had probably the highest non-holiday volume in recent summers.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JUL 24 1966

Death of a Station

Music on Boston Radio: Our Very Own Wasteland

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

The recent sharp curtailment of classical music broadcasting by radio station WBCN has brought a large volume of mail to this office—more, indeed, than any single musical issue in a long time. WBCN used to broadcast about 16 hours of serious music per day. Now, because the management has found such programming "not economical," meaning they have had difficulty finding commercial sponsors, serious music broadcasts have been reduced to 25 hours per week. Most of what comes out of WBCN now is the Melachrino strings Henry Mancini sort of thing.

Benjamin Moore of this department last week conducted an informal telephone survey on the state of broadcast classical music in this area, and came up with these findings:

WBCN: See above.

WBOS: About 8 hours a week.

WBRS: Phone disconnected.

WBUR: About 42 hours a week, including broadcasts of Boston Symphony and Cincinnati Symphony concerts. The station is supported by Boston University.

WBZ: About 36 hours a week, all on FM and on tapes prepared by Westinghouse for the station.

WCOP: None.

WCRB: 25 hours a day they say. Our more prosaic arithmetic makes it 19 hours daily (about 5 hours of that on the light side), and including broadcasts of Boston Symphony, Cleveland Orchestra, New York Philharmonic, as well as material from the BBC and CBC.

WEEI: About 30 hours a week, all between about 1 a.m. and 5:30 a.m.

WERS: 15-hours a week.

WEZE: Some Pops-type material.

WGBH: 35-40 hours a week, 25-30 hours of it delayed or immediate broadcasts of live performances, including this Summer all events at Tanglewood.

WHDH: None.

WHIL: None.

WHRB: No answer.

WILD: 2 hours each Sunday.

WLYN: None.

WMEX: None.

WNAC: Metropolitan Opera broadcasts in season, but nothing else.

WORL: None.

WTBS: About 24 hours a week now, somewhat more during the Winter including pickups of concerts at M.I.T.

WXHR: 42 hours a week. It actually adds up to about 400 hours a week.

But the figures fail to show the dreary quality of most of the program-building, which reflects everything that tends to make our public musical life monotonous and trivial.

Experience suggests that a considerable amount of what is statistically counted as classical or serious music would prove to be marginally so classifiable, including much popsy and even the absurdly named semi-classical material. That which is bona fide serious is apt to be put together unimaginatively and repetitiously.

I have, for example, the WCRB programs for July before me, and bear in mind that is one of the better stations. They are solid on Bach, Haydn (with a commendable number of the earlier symphonies), and Mozart, some Beethoven, Brahms, Schubert, Schumann, lots of Tchaikovsky. There is almost no music earlier than Bach's. The 20th century listings while they could be made to seem statistically impressive, are in fact removed from contemporary issues, because they are most likely to be Prokofiev, Shostakovich, Barber, etc.

WBUR is a little more imaginative, and so, in general is WHRB, though their orgies (72 hours uninterrupted Telemann, the complete recorded works of Fanny Mendelssohn, etc.) are pretty silly.

It is easy to understand the pain of the former WBCN fans, because there was a station where they knew that the symphonies of Beethoven and Brahms, however fine, were not the whole musical world.

And one thing radio can do, if nothing else as a reflection of all the enterprise about repertory that the record industry has shown, is to nourish, inform, and delight us by letting us hear the music that the ignorance and timidity of the orchestra and concert managements conceal from us.

As for WBCN, we recommend letters to the station that would give them a toehold when dealing with prospective sponsors.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 30 1966

Berkshire Week

The Summer Magazine of The Berkshire Eagle

July 30, 1966

Free

Erich Leinsdorf at Tanglewood

Grace Badorek in Profile

Where To Stay

Sixes and Sevens at Sharon

Vacation Map

Summer in STEP

Summer Directory

Song Swaps at Catamount

Where To Eat

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 20 1966

Dedication Set For New Studio For Composers

The dedication of the Koussevitzky Studio for Composers, situated on Seranak, the Koussevitzky estate in Lenox, will take place Saturday afternoon. The new composer's studio, designed to provide peaceful working surroundings for creative musicians, honors the memory of the late conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky.

A representative of the BSO, the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs (a cosponsoring organization for the project) will be present at the ceremonies. Aaron Copland, representing another sponsoring organization, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, will deliver the dedication speech. The ceremonies will conclude with the singing of the Tanglewood "Alleluia."

Present plans call for the studio to be in operation six months of the year. The Berkshire Music Center and the Koussevitzky Foundation will jointly select the studio's resident composers.

Boston 02106 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 30 1966

Berkshire Week in Review

Heavy Traffic

IN A WEEK notable for few big headlines the chief business in the Berkshires was summer business. Traffic was heavy on county highways as tourist attractions and commercial establishments reported that a new record season may be shaping up.

Huge crowd have been pouring into Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra, despite competition from the new Saratoga (N.Y.) Performing Arts Center. Last weekend's concerts had the largest attendance in the four years since Erich Leinsdorf became BSO director. Predictions are for another whopping weekend on all fronts, stimulated in part by parents' weekends at many area private camps.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
JUL 16 1966

215

Architectural Review

They Did Everything Right

By DONALD MOCHON

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.

THE SARATOGA Performing Arts Center, about 50 miles from Tanglewood as the crow flies, was unveiled to the general public last wek. Architecturally speaking, it might be possible to dismiss the theatre as a splendid example of honest American corn, but a closer examination of the whole project reveals that the New York Staters have done most of the big things right:

1. The site is located in a 1,500-acre state park, with all kinds of opportunities for family recreation.

2. The major highways leading to the Center have been reconstructed to handle traffic in large volume.

3. Inside the gates, provision for the movement of people and vehicles has been carefully thought out, and the system works beautifully, coming and going.

4. The theatre itself, as a piece of functional machinery, is absolutely first-rate.

5. The auditorium, with some qualifications, is highly effective, especially after dark.

6. Food and drink are available reasonably close at hand in surroundings that have style and character.

* * *

IF THE THEATRE building, which is the heart of the Center, lacks a certain amount of distinction, there are plenty of virtues to balance the account.

To begin with, the parking spaces are well designed to allow freedom of movement. After the evening performance on opening night, there was a minimum of delay for the capacity crowd to get out and on the road. Certainly the area can be emptied within 30 minutes. Landscaping has been provided which, in its maturity, will take the curse off the great American desert in which we usually leave our cars.

Saratoga's Festival Center Building.

Once on foot, the visitor approaches over a wide bridge with a view of the prewar, neo-Georgian buildings of the Saratoga Spa directly ahead. These are pretty dull stuff, but the contrast with the modern theatre building, which soon reveals itself on the left, works to the advantage of both. A nice counterpoint

The great auditorium, sitting in a dish of earth, with its folded-plate roof, its seven-story stage house, and the flying bridges which lead to the balcony is spectacular, to say the least. An architectural set-piece like this is no mean feat to design, and maybe it takes an Alvar Aalto to bring the whole thing off. Unfortunately, Mr. Aalto is in Finland.

* * *

WHAT THE architects have done well is take care of the audience, on the grass and under the roof. Except, perhaps, for extreme right and left, there doesn't seem to be a bad seat in the house. Vollmer Ostrower Associates, who were responsible for all architectural and engineering design, have wisely chosen to handle the interior space in workmanlike fashion, directing the focus to the stage. There is a great canopy over the proscenium which seems terribly distracting visually, but is justified (they say) for arcane acoustical reasons. During the day, in fact, the auditorium is filled with visual distractions, but once night falls and the curtain rises, all these fade discreetly into the background. Score one for the architects!

It will be interesting to be on hand some windy, rainy night. The sides are so open that the southern third of the audience might be generously dampened, and a lot of pincurls would not survive the evening. This is a serious problem for which there is no obvious solution.

The stage and its technical equipment are a pleasure to behold. This is the finest part of the whole ensemble, and at the evening performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," the settings (which will knock your eye out) were handled with flawless precision. It is hard to think of a summer theatre, or music shed, or what have you, with comparable facilities.

* * *

THE GOOD auditorium and excellent stage set a standard that the backstage area unhappily cannot match. On the outside, it is clothed in pedestrian fashion with a brick that is attractive close up but looks sort of artificial in toto, like papier maché. Internally, all the right spaces are there — rehearsal rooms, costume rooms and so on — but the planning is turgid in spots. That traditional backstage reception area, the greenroom, where Messrs. Ormandy and Balanchine will receive the plaudits of the elect, is as ugly a space as I have ever seen. Not in finish or furnishings, which are incomplete, but in size and shape and proportion, which now cannot be remedied. As for the star dressing rooms, the only word is dismal. Odd that Mr. Ormandy will stand in air-conditioned splendor on the podium and then return to such mean surroundings backstage.

To end on a positive note, the whole process of construction has been accomplished in a very good way by the builders — no mean feat in an age of less-than-careful craftsmanship. In this case, it contributes greatly to the total impression of the building.

It is not uncommon, as Eero Saarinen once said, for architectural critics to shoot from the hip. Finding fault with a complicated organism like a building, especially a theatre, is a pretty easy thing to do. Whatever reservations I may have about the architectural expression, I salute the architects for having done so many things so well. Make no mistake, the Saratoga Performing Arts Center is going to give a lot of pleasure to a lot of people, on stage and off, for a long time to come.

* * *

TWO DAYS LATER, I went back to Tanglewood and as much as I like the handsome simplicity of the Music Shed and its spectacular setting, it must be admitted that most of the physical facilities are in the Model-T category, with all the pleasures and inconveniences of that wonderful invention. There's not much to be done about it, either, outside of polishing up the brass and perhaps a major engine overhaul. We all might as well relax and enjoy the Venerable Classic of Lenox, and once in a while go over to the newfangled model in New York State, some night when the ballet is on stage and the weather is clear.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUL 25 1966

Koussevitzky Studio for Composers Dedicated

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

LENOX — The Koussevitzky Studio for Composers was dedicated here Saturday on the south slope of Seranak, Summer home of the Boston Symphony's late conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

The studio honors a man, who, in the words of composer Aaron Copland, did more than any other conductor to encourage new music.

To the one-room studio will come a composer selected by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. He and his family will spend the Summer in the neighboring four-room house. A 10-minute walk away is Tanglewood and the Berkshire Music Center, with its own faculty of composers and teachers.

The Koussevitzky Studio composer will have no duties at Tanglewood but, with blessings of the Boston Symphony, will have faculty privileges.

The first speaker at the dedication was Dr. Merle Montgomery, chairman of the Northeastern Region of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

The N.F.M.C. built the Koussevitzky Studio. "You know there is real interest, when you see a building," Dr. Montgomery said. The federation has also donated studios at Tanglewood, a replica of Nathaniel Hawthorne's cottage, the MacDowell Colony, the Interlochen Music Camp and at Chattaqua.

Cong. Silvio O. Conte, whose district includes the Berkshires, spoke of the government's newly kindled interest in the arts. Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony, brought greetings from the orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Messages were read from Mayor Collins and playright Thornton Wilder.

Copland, the composer most associated with Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center, reminisced of his early days with the conductor.

"Serge Koussevitzky used to mystify me a bit. Conductors don't usually encourage new young composers. The first time I met Koussevitzky I was 22 years old. I went to his apartment in Paris to play him some of my piano pieces. Prokofiev was there, making discouraging comments. I won't tell you what Koussevitzky said to me about my music, but let me say, nothing fazed him.

"Looking back, I think Koussevitzky was perhaps a frustrated composer. I think that, because of his persistence in playing American music. Premieres in Boston were like premieres nowhere else —such excitement, such eagerness."

The dedication ceremony was opened by Mrs. Olga Koussevitzky, the conductor's widow, who continues the work of the music foundation. Her nine-member board will select the composer, but it was she who 18 months ago went to the music club's national convention and in "her quiet and charming way" talked the federation into giving the studio, Dr. Montgomery said.

The ceremony closed with a performance by the Tanglewood choir of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia." The piece was written for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940 and has been sung there every year since.

Attending the dedication and the lawn party which followed at Seranak were a delegation from the National Federation of Music Clubs, Berkshire residents, Boston Symphony principals and Music Center faculty members.

TIGHT BINDING

216

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 6 1965

Tanglewood's Tappans

By Nancy Q. Keefe

Mary and Ellen Tappan, daughters of William Aspinwall Tappan and Caroline Sturgis Tappan, are pictured here with (standing) philosopher William James, who was among the illustrious visitors to Tanglewood in late 1800s.

THE LAST NOTES of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday afternoon concert died away. The listeners applauded, the musicians bowed and most of the audience moved toward the exits. But Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her daughter Daphne walked purposefully to the Green Room in Symphony Hall to see the conductor.

Mrs. Brooks had definitely decided at intermission to offer her family's estate at Tanglewood to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the BSO's summer home.

It was just 30 years ago, and Mrs. Brooks's daughter, now Mrs. Curtis Prout of Dover, remembers the day well.

"It was a very exciting occasion," she said, "and Dr. Koussevitzky was thrilled. He was, of course, very dramatic, and in his excitement he kissed my mother on both cheeks."

By April 1937, the legal transfer of Tanglewood to the BSO was complete, and the happy story of a permanent Berkshire Festival could begin.

* * * *

It was entirely fitting that Tanglewood should become a music center because from its beginning 117 years ago, it was a gathering place for artistic and creative minds.

The estate was founded in 1849 when William Aspinwall Tappan, newly married and already a successful Boston merchant, bought 210 acres of farmland next to Highwood, the only estate older than Tanglewood in the Lenox area.

Tappan's wife, the former Caroline Sturgis, knew Highwood's owner, Samuel Gray Ward, a well-to-do Bostonian, gentleman farmer and friend to the literary giants of those years — Emerson, Longfellow, Holmes, Melville, Hawthorne and Margaret Fuller.

During six or seven years before her marriage, Mrs. Tappan moved in the same circles, as a close friend of Emerson and Margaret Fuller. She wrote poetry, which appeared in the transcendentalist journal, The Dial, and did excel sketches and drawings, which are ex in several sketchbooks. She even lived Brook Farm for a few months.

Caroline Sturgis Tappan

As a young woman, she was an int gent and independent thinker caught in transcendentalism, "the Newne and the emerging American literary sc

As an old woman, the story goes, made a point of sitting prominently the window of her Boston home a Beacon St. on Sunday mornings, oste tiously sewing while her conserva neighbors walked to church.

The high humor in the picture o old lady in mild revolt against the ventions of the day probably manife itself as a refreshing nonconformity the young Caroline Sturgis Tappan. derstandably, then, she moved a creative thinkers in Boston and in them to Tanglewood.

* * * *

The Tappans knew Nathaniel H thorne and in 1851 invited him and family to live in the red cottage, w was already on the Tanglewood prop when the Tappans bought it.

(The red cottage now on the ground a reproduction of the original, w burned June 22, 1890. After the BSO quired Tanglewood, the National Fede tion of Music Clubs provided funds building the present cottage.)

Hawthorne was less than totally ha however. He missed the sea air e city pavements, but he did spend satisfying interludes in the Berk- writing in the cottage ("Tangle- Tales," "The Blithedale Romance" e plot outline for "The House of even Gables"), playing with his n in the orchards and woods or sing with Herman Melville after they t at a picnic on Monument Mountain.

thorne did not go to many picnics rties, although the Tappans and Lenox neighbors asked him often . His letters show him to have n irritable neighbor and a difficult So, 15 months and several argu- later, the Hawthornes left the red e and went back to Salem.

use of "Tanglewood Tales," it has lly been assumed that Hawthorne the name of the estate. But the s' great-granddaughter, Mrs. Prout, s quite firmly that the family named e Hawthorne arrived.

mother and great-aunt, Mary, al- said the family named it," Mrs. said. They considered it a logical lay on Highwood, the name of the next door.

rather poor relations between the ns and Hawthorne do make it un- the family would have adopted his for their home, but M. A. deWolfe says in "The Tale of Tanglewood" ulian Hawthorne credits his father he name.

* * * *

ough the red cottage was there the Tappans were putting together tate, the big house was not. They d a large stone house that would ull advantage of the view from the wn to Stockbridge Bowl and across Everett. Some friends asked them their son, a budding architect, de- he house.

result was not at all what they n mind, but they were too kind to

All photos on these pages are from the Tappan-Dixey-Brooks family albums and were available by Mrs. Curtis Prout, great-granddaughter of William and Caroline Sturgis Tap Rosamond Dixey Brooks, right, is shown here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Dixey. Mrs. Brooks in 1936 gave the Tanglewood estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Arthur and Ro daughter of R pan Dixey, are wood's now-fa when the her them) was still

In th Dixey staged during bors pl signed t curtain

The D who died was stati and Ros ham Bro Andrew

Rosam tion of in of life a family's and striki center of with famil dens, and

TIGHT BINDING

wood's Tappans

Caroline Sturgis Tappan

talist journal, The Dial, and did excellen sketches and drawings, which are extan in several sketchbooks. She even lived a Brook Farm for a few months.

As a young woman, she was an intell gent and independent thinker caught u in transcendentalism, "the Newness and the emerging American literary scen

As an old woman, the story goes, s made a point of sitting prominently the window of her Boston home at Beacon St. on Sunday mornings, ostent tiously sewing while her conservati neighbors walked to church.

The high humor in the picture of a old lady in mild revolt against the co ventions of the day probably manifest itself as a refreshing nonconformity the young Caroline Sturgis Tappan. U derstandably, then, she moved amo creative thinkers in Boston and invite them to Tanglewood.

* * * *

The Tappans knew Nathaniel Haw thorne and in 1851 invited him and h family to live in the red cottage, whi was already on the Tanglewood proper when the Tappans bought it.

(The red cottage now on the grounds a reproduction of the original, wh burned June 22, 1890. After the BSO a quired Tanglewood, the National Fede tion of Music Clubs provided funds building the present cottage.)

Hawthorne was less than totally hap

e, however. He missed the sea air the city pavements, but he did spend e satisfying interludes in the Berk- es, writing in the cottage ("Tangle- d Tales," "The Blithedale Romance" the plot outline for "The House of Seven Gables"), playing with his dren in the orchards and woods or versing with Herman Melville after they met at a picnic on Monument Mountain.

awthorne did not go to many picnics parties, although the Tappans and r Lenox neighbors asked him often ugh. His letters show him to have n an irritable neighbor and a difficult nt. So, 15 months and several argu- nts later, the Hawthornes left the red age and went back to Salem.

ecause of "Tanglewood Tales," it has erally been assumed that Hawthorne ned the name of the estate. But the pans' great-granddaughter, Mrs. Prout, ends quite firmly that the family named efore Hawthorne arrived.

My mother and great-aunt, Mary, al- ys said the family named it," Mrs. ut said. They considered it a logical d play on Highwood, the name of the te next door.

he rather poor relations between the pans and Hawthorne do make it un- ly the family would have adopted his e for their home, but M. A. deWolfe e says in "The Tale of Tanglewood" Julian Hawthorne credits his father the name.

* * * *

lthough the red cottage was there n the Tappans were putting together estate, the big house was not. They nned a large stone house that would full advantage of the view from the down to Stockbridge Bowl and across lt. Everett. Some friends asked them et their son, a budding architect, de- the house.

he result was not at all what they in mind, but they were too kind to say so. They constructed what is still the Main House on the Tanglewood grounds a rambling, steep-roofed, many-dormered building. The Tappans' children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren found it an enchanting place to play in.

Stone bench in the Tanglewood gardens now is inscribed with family names, used to be (above) a place for celebration pictures and (right) more formal portrayals like this of Rosamond Dixey Brooks and son, Shepherd.

The Tappans had two daughters, Ellen and Mary. Both of them, like their mother, had a keen interest in literature, drama and art. Ellen painted and sketched, and stenciled much of the house's woodwork, which is still colorful today.

She also planned the lavish formal gardens. She sketched their design on huge pieces of paper for Alexander MacConnachie, the irrepressible Scottish head gardener who is pictured in the family albums wearing his kilt.

Ellen brought music to the family when she married Richard C. Dixey, a Boston banker who also taught piano and appeared in local concerts. He gave Boston its first hearing of the opera "Lohengrin" by presenting it in concert form in 1872.

The Dixeys had friends among writers and musicians, and entertained many of them at Tanglewood and Beacon Street. Ignace Pederewski, early conductors of the BSO Sir George Henschel and Arthur Nikisch, pianist and composer Anton Rubinstein, the novelist Henry James and philosopher William James enjoyed their hospitality.

Mary Aspinwall Tappan never married. She lived with her family and was always a lively part of the Tanglewood scene. She was in her 80s when she and her niece, Mrs. Brooks presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * * *

In the days when Ellen and Richard Dixey occupied Tanglewood, the family staged private pageants and tableaux during the summer. Relatives and neighbors played the roles in costumes designed by Ellen. The stage complete with curtain was on the porch of the big house.

The Dixeys had two children, Arthur, who died at age 27 in Korea, where he was stationed with the diplomatic corps, and Rosamond, who became Mrs. Gorham Brooks and later was married to Andrew H. Hepburn.

Rosamond carried on the family tradition of interest in the arts and enjoyment of life at Tanglewood. Pictures in the family's collection show an animated and strikingly attractive Rosamond, the center of attention, laughing and talking with family and young friends in the gardens, and on the lawns, making human pyramids on the stone bench, and enjoying picnics and horseback riding around Lenox.

It was an era of ladies in long skirts with bustles and large-brimmed hats, of tentlemen in high collars and vests or blazers and boaters. There was time for enormous house parties and weddings on the lawn, with tents extending out from the porch.

Pictures of the bridal party were almost invariably taken by the stone bench, which was built about 1900. The inscription of family names was added after the presentation to the BSO.

* * * *

Tanglewood was also the scene of an annual gymkahna, a day of foot racing for people and animals, which was introduced to the area around the turn of the century by the British ambassador when he was a house guest of the Dixeys.

Although the Tappans and the Dixeys never pretended to be in a class with the millionaires who began to build their "cottages," as they called them, around Lenox in the 1880s and '90s, family pictures show the people at Tanglewood lived a comfortable and happy life.

Some of the hapiest scenes are dated 1912, the year the sun was setting on this kind of gracious living. In 1913, the income tax was born.

The family, however, maintained Tanglewood until 1936, and Mrs. Prout remembers spending happy childhood summers playing in the big house, enjoying the abundance of flowers, calling frogs in the pond with harmonicas.

An old family friend recently recalled walking with Rosamond Dixey Brooks one evening in "the moonlit peace of the green gardens at Tanglewood" in the '30s when Rosamond's aunt, Mary Tappan, was getting too old to live there alone and the expense of maintaining an estate was becoming overwhelming.

What to do with Tanglewood was on Rosamond's mind even then. The friend said she could picture a community of nuns at recreation walking among the flowers. Rosamond demurred.

"No," she said, "Tanglewood should be for thousands of people."

In visits to Tanglewood before her death in 1948, Rosamond was happy to see that thousands could enjoy the magnificent grounds. But she was especially pleased that artists and creative thinkers found a hospitable gathering place, as they had from the beginning.

Theatricals on the porch were common.

e Tappan-Dixey-Brooks family albums and were m granddaughter of William and Caroline Sturgis Tapp

Arthur and Rosamond Dixey, son and daughter of Richard and Ellen Tappan Dixey, are pictured on Tanglewood's now-famous lawns at a time when the hemlock hedge (behind them) was still very young.

218

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910
AUG 7 1966

Music

Perfect Attendance Caps Long Career of Oboist

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Of all the honors showered on Louis Speyer during a long career, his proudest achievement is 45 years of perfect attendance performing concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

No one will dispute that Speyer is the world's greatest English horn player. In recognition of this, a host of famous composers have created works especially for him. Among these are what Speyer refers to as "The Three H's" — Hill (Edward Burlingame), Honegger and Hindemith. Others are Sowerby, Mabel Daniels, Rauder, Freed and Walter Piston.

Speyer joined the Boston Symphony in 1919. He continues uninterrupted service through the final concert of the 1966 Berkshire Music Festival.

A native of France, Speyer came from a musical family. His father was violinist with the Colonne Orchestra of Paris.

"I started piano lessons and did badly," he says. "Then the violin and my father soon discovered that I didn't have the makings of a violinist. So I took up the oboe."

Was No Mistake

There was no mistake; he graduated from the Paris Conservatory with first prize in oboe.

All of this experience makes him uniquely qualified to perform his present duties in an administrative capacity at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer educational institution at Tanglewood.

"How does American talent compare with European?" we asked.

"Standards are higher in Europe," he replied. "In Europe, musical study begins at the age of eight — harmony, music theory — then an instrument is chosen.

"Some students at the Center are more interested in learning a repertory than in learning as much as they can about music."

What does Speyer think of the latest contemporary "experiments"?

Louis Speyer, English horn player, didn't miss a performance in 45 years.

electronic music, "chance music," etc?

"Awful," he says. "I don't like it. I like beauty in music. That is choppy dissonance."

Revolutionists

First World War "revolutionists" in France were "The Six," most famous of whom are Milhaud, Honegger and Poulenc.

"They were not taken seriously," says Speyer, "but neither were they protested as the new ones are today. It was never claimed that they were not musical."

Speyer had a unique experience with the "new music" when he performed at the premiere of Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring." This was in Paris in May, 1913, with Monteux conducting. It was the most belligerent audience in musical history.

Everything has been reported about it except what the players themselves thought of the music.

"We were too busy counting to form much of an opinion," he says. "But when the curtain went up on the ballet, we gasped. The colors were stunning."

Speyer, who has played under Nikisch, Rabaud, Monteux, Koussevitzky, Leinsdorf, has advice for the aspiring young musician.

"Study music first," he says. "Then take up an instrument. You have to learn your A-B-C's before you can read a book. Also, listen to fine orchestras and become inspired."

Speyer's brother-in-law is Jacques Burguet, Worcester resident and popular commentator at the Worcester Festival's Concert for Young People. Burguet is a half brother of Speyer's wife, Camille.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
AUG 3 1966

IN THE MAILBAG

Concerts Assured

LENOX — Recently several Boston publications have commented upon the shortened Esplanade season this year, with speculation and concern lest this indicate that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is losing its zeal for this series of free concerts, and that they are wasting away. The shortened season this year—there were 13 concerts (two children's and 11 evening programs) as compared to 14 in 1964 and 1965—was the result of a temporary bind in the Orchestra's winter, Pops, Esplanade, and summer season schedules and has no implications one way or the other for the future.

The Esplanade does indeed offer problems for presenting concerts — expense for one thing, traffic noise for another — but the enchantment of the river-front surroundings, the tradition of 37 years started by Arthur Fiedler, and the great enjoyment of these concerts by many thousands of people will not permit us to let them languish. The Orchestra also has an increasing problem of more demands upon it for concerts than it can readily cope with, and there has to be some selection within the Orchestra's year. Therefore there may have to be some occasional adjustments and alterations in the type and number of concerts and the pattern of the season, but the public may rest assured that the trustees of the Orchestra will continue to see to it that free concerts for the public are given each summer in the Hatch Shell.

THOMAS D. PERRY, Jr.
Manager
Boston Symphony Orch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
City Record
BOSTON, Mass.
Off. Boston Publication
Weekly Circ. 1,000
AUG 6 1966

Esplanade Concerts To Continue

A letter from Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make Bostonians happy, due to the fact that the famous Esplanade concerts will continue. A limitation of the concerts expressed doubt that the famous BSO would continue with this wonderful entertainment.

Mr. Perry's letter, however, dispels these fears, and should prompt all Bostonians to aid and support this cultural presentation by the world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 3 1966
Church St., Pittsfield

047

Notes and Footnotes

TOP BILLING: Almost all large summer symphony concerts are "fortified" with microphones and speakers, but Tanglewood still remains pure and unamplified. Although there are 15 microphones over the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the Shed stage, they are for taping the music, and for live broadcasting over WGBH-FM. However, in contrast, at last week's Philharmonic concert in Central Park, Manhattan, more than 75,000 turned out on the Sheep Meadow. For this spread, mikes were placed along what would be first and third base lines of a baseball diamond. This presents one big problem. Sound via the mike wires travels faster than the natural sound through the air. To prevent the resulting "ping-pong" effect a tape-delay system was used, slowing the current a fraction of a second en route, with everything coming out even.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 7,914
AUG 5 1966

Musical Events

Chamber music series in Millard Auditorium (air conditioned) of Hartt College, 200 Bloomfield Ave., West Hartford, Sun at 4 p.m.:

Chamber music, Aug 7.

Silvermine String Quartet in Gifford Auditorium, Silvermine College of Art, New Canaan, at 3 p.m.:

Chamber concert with guest artist Zadia Manacher, mezzo-soprano, works by Hindemith, Vivaldi, Locatelli, Sun, Aug 7.

Leonid Hambro, pianist, and trios by Beethoven, Dvorak, Shostakovich, Sun, Aug 28.

The Berkshire Quartet in its 37th season at Music Mountain, Falls Village, 25 miles south of Tanglewood, phone 824-7126, concerts, Sats at 8 p.m. July 9 thru Sept 3.

Julius Baker, flutist, guest soloist, playing Beethoven, Mozart and Bartok, Sat, Aug 6.

Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., concerts each week-end July 2 thru Aug 21, Friday at 8:30 p.m., Saturday at 8:30 p.m., Sunday at 3 p.m., daily except Mondays at 8 p.m., phone [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,259
AUG 3 1966

Berkshire Music Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists, through Aug. 22, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The Daily Times
MAMARONECK, N. Y.
D. 9,355
JULY 25 1966

WEEKEND IN TANGLEWOOD

Members of the board of the Westchester Philharmonic spent the weekend in Tanglewood, at the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Among those participating were Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Parker, 55 Beach Ave., Larchmont. Mr. Parker is a member of the board.

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 26,024
AUG 5 1966

Little Symphony Orchestra Going To Tanglewood

DANBURY — Forty - five members of Danbury's Little Symphony Orchestra will take a bus trip to the Tanglewood Music Festival on Saturday.

Leaving at 7 a.m., they are to be in Lenox, Mass., by 10, when they are to hear a morning rehearsal, probably of the Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

A picnic lunch and the return trip to Danbury will follow.

Among the music leaders in the area who will accompany the trip are Dr. Elizabeth Dominy, chairman of the Little Symphony, and John F. Burnett, conductor of the group. Many parents of the young instrumentalists also are going.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 6 1966

Attendance figures fascinate me, even if not for sporting events. For instance, how much [illegible] means to the Berkshires is shown by total attendance of 24,219 over the weekend—4,931 Friday night, 2,656 at open rehearsal Saturday morning, 7,307 Saturday night and 7,228 Sunday afternoon.

218

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910
AUG 7 1966

Music

Perfect Attendance Caps Long Career of Oboist

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Of all the honors showered on Louis Speyer during a long career, his proudest achievement is 45 years of perfect attendance performing concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Few will dispute that Speyer is the world's greatest English horn player. In recognition of this, a host of famous composers have created works especially for him. Among these are what Speyer refers to as "The Three H's" — Hill (Edward Burlingame), Honegger and Hindemith. Others are Sowerby, Mabel Daniels, Kauder, Freed and Walter Piston.

Speyer joined the Boston Symphony in 1919. He continued uninterrupted service through the final concert of the 1964 Berkshire Music Festival.

A native of France, Speyer came from a musical family. His father was violinist with the Colonne Orchestra of Paris.

"I started piano lessons and did badly," he says. "Then the violin and my father soon discovered that I didn't have the makings of a violinist. So I took up the oboe."

Was No Mistake

That was no mistake; he graduated from the Paris Conservatory with first prize in oboe.

All of this experience makes Speyer uniquely qualified to perform his present duties in an administrative capacity with the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer educational institution at Tanglewood.

"How does American talent compare with European?" we asked.

"Standards are higher in Europe," he replied. "In Europe, musical study begins at the age of eight — harmony, solfeggio theory — then an instrument is chosen.

"Some students at the Center are more interested in building a repertory than in learning as much as they can about music."

What does Speyer think of the latest contemporary idioms such as "serialism," electronic music, "chance music," etc?

"Awful," he says. "I don't like it. I like beauty in music. That is choppy dissonance."

Revolutionists

First World War "revolutionists" in France were "The Six," most famous of whom are Milhaud, Honegger and Poulenc.

"They were not taken seriously," says Speyer, "but neither were they protested as the new ones are today. It was never claimed that they were not musical."

Speyer had a unique experience with the "new music" when he performed at the premiere of Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring." This was in Paris in May, 1913, with Monteux conducting. It was the most belligerent audience in musical history.

Everything has been reported about it except what the players themselves thought of the music.

"We were too busy counting to form much of an opinion," he says. "But when the curtain went up on the ballet, we gasped. The colors were stunning."

Speyer, who has played under Nikisch, Rabaud, Monteux, Koussevitzky, Toscanini and Leinsdorf, has advice for the aspiring young musician.

"Study music first," he says. "Then take up an instrument. You have to learn your A-B-C's before you can read a book. Also, listen to fine orchestras and become inspired."

Speyer's brother-in-law is Jacques Burguet, Worcester resident and popular commentator at the Worcester Festival's Concert for Young People. Burguet is a half-brother of Speyer's wife, Camille.

Louis Speyer, English horn player, didn't miss a performance in 45 years.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
AUG 3 1966

IN THE MAILBAG

Concerts Assured

LENOX — Recently several Boston publications have commented upon the shortened Esplanade season this year, with speculation and concern lest this indicate that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is losing its zeal for this series of free concerts, and that they are wasting away. The shortened season this year—there were 13 concerts (two children's and 11 evening programs) as compared to 14 in 1964 and 1965—was the result of a temporary bind in the Orchestra's winter, Pops, Esplanade, and summer season schedules and has no implications one way or the other for the future.

The Esplanade does indeed offer problems for presenting concerts — expense for one thing, traffic noise for another — but the enchantment of the river-front surroundings, the tradition of 37 years started by Arthur Fiedler, and the great enjoyment of these concerts by many thousands of people will not permit us to let them languish. The Orchestra also has an increasing problem of more demands upon it for concerts than it can readily cope with, and there has to be some selection within the Orchestra's year. Therefore there may have to be some occasional adjustments and alterations in the type and number of concerts and the pattern of the season, but the public may rest assured that the trustees of the Orchestra will continue to see to it that free concerts for the public are given each summer in the Hatch Shell.

THOMAS D. PERRY, Jr.
Manager
Boston Symphony Orch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
City Record
BOSTON, Mass.
Off. Boston Publication
Weekly Circ. 1,000
AUG 6 1966

Esplanade Concerts To Continue

A letter from Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make Bostonians happy, due to the fact that the famous Esplanade concerts will continue. A limitation of the concerts expressed doubt that the famous BSO would continue with this wonderful entertainment.

Mr. Perry's letter, however, dispels these fears, and should prompt all Bostonians to aid and support this cultural presentation by the world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 3 1966
Church St., Pittsfield

Notes and Footnotes

TOP BILLING: Almost all large summer symphony concerts are "fortified" with microphones and speakers, but Tanglewood still remains pure and unamplified. Although there are 15 microphones over the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the Shed stage, they are for taping the music, and for live broadcasting over WGBH-FM. However, in contrast, at last week's Philharmonic concert in Central Park, Manhattan, more than 75,000 turned out on the Sheep Meadow. For this spread, mikes were placed along what would be first and third base lines of a baseball diamond. This presents one big problem. Sound via the mike wires travels faster than the natural sound through the air. To prevent the resulting "ping-pong" effect a tape-delay system was used, slowing the current a fraction of a second en route, with everything coming out even . . .

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 7,914
AUG 5 1966

Musical Events

Chamber music series in Millard Auditorium (air conditioned) of Hartt College, 200 Bloomfield Ave, West Hartford, Sun at 8 p.m.:

Chamber music, Aug 7.

Silvermine String Quartet in Gifford Auditorium, Silvermine College of Art, New Canaan, at 8 p.m.:

Chamber concert with guest artist Zalda Manacher, mezzo-soprano; works by Hindemith, Vivaldi, Locatelli, Sun Aug 7.

Leonid Hambro, pianist, piano trios by Beethoven, Dvorak, Shostakovitch, Sun, Aug 28.

The Berkshire Quartet in its 37th season at Music Mountain, Falls Village, 25 miles south of Tanglewood, phone 824-7126; concerts Sats at 8 p.m. Jury 2 thru Sept 3.

Julius Baker, flutist, guest soloist, playing Beethoven, Mozart and Bartok, Sat. Aug. 6.

Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., concerts each week-end July 2 thru Aug 21. Ticket office open 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily except Sundays 1-5 p.m., phone 413-637-1600. Write Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., 01240 for programs.

The Daily Times
MAMARONECK, N. Y.
D. 9,355
JULY 25 1966

WEEKEND IN TANGLEWOOD

Members of the board of the Westchester Philharmonic spent the weekend in Tanglewood, at the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Among those participating were Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Parker, of 55 Beach Ave., Larchmont. Mr. Parker is a member of the board.

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 26,024
AUG 5 1966

Little Symphony Orchestra Going To Tanglewood

DANBURY — Forty - five members of Danbury's Little Symphony Orchestra will take a bus trip to the Tanglewood Music Festival on Saturday.

Leaving at 7 a.m., they are to be in Lenox, Mass., by 10, when they are to hear a morning rehearsal, probably of the Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

A picnic lunch and the return trip to Danbury will follow.

Among the music leaders in the area who will accompany the trip are Dr. Elizabeth Dominy, chairman of the Little Symphony, and John F. Burnett, conductor of the group. Many aparents of the young instrumentalists also are going.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 6 1966

Attendance figures fascinate me, even if not for sporting events. For instance, how much Tanglewood means to the Berkshires is shown by total attendance of 24,219 over the weekend—4,931 Friday night, 2,856 at open rehearsal Saturday morning, 7,307 Saturday night and 7,-718 Sunday afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,259
AUG 3 1966

Berkshire Music Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists, through Aug. 22, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

2/9

The Houston Post
D. 267,620 SUN. 283,009

AUG 7 1966

Culture Kick In the Berkshires

BY RICHARD JOSEPH

LENOX, Mass

Back in what my children refer to as the olden days, summer used to be a time when the living was easy, fish were jumping, and what you did on vacation mostly was to find a big fat tree and lie under it flat on your back.

Nowadays, though, everybody seems to be on a culture kick. You "gotta" improve yourself, and summer is the season to do it, when you've got a little time to yourself. The Berkshire mountain lakes and streams around here are well stocked with trout and bass, but they're safer here than in an aquarium — everybody is too busy pursuing the seven arts to bother about goin' fishin'.

What used to be an easy going resort area is as studded with cultural events as Leningrad is during the winter, when everybody's snowed in and holed up until the ice breaks.

RIGHT HERE along the western edge of Massachusetts are 8 music centers, schools, and festivals; 17 art galleries, 5 major museums, the Jacob's Pillow Dance festival; 5 summer theatres and an art movie house.

And in Williamstown, 67 serious - minded young people are studying the Telugu language in preparation for the peace corps' applied nutrition program in Andrha Pradesh, India.

There also are 10 18-hole golf courses and 11 9-hole layouts, but who's got time for golf?

Heart of the cultural Berkshires is the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, a 210 acre estate overlooking a lake about a mile and a quarter west of Lenox.

IT GOT ITS start with the first Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts back in 1934. Two years later the beautifully landscaped Tanglewood Estate was given to the Boston Symphony orchestra in return for its agreement to participate in the Festival, and the 6,037-seat music shed was built in 1938, after an earlier concert, held in a tent, was rained on so badly that, according to one critic, "even the French horns were shipping water."

The Berkshire Music center was founded in 1940 by the Boston Symphony as the realization of the dream of Serge Koussevitsky, then its music director, to provide an environment in which young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their artistic exeprience thru the guidance of eminent musicians and teachers.

MORE THAN 20 principals and solo players of the Boston Symphony are included in the faculty. Attending the eight-week courses are about 300 students from Canada, Europe, South America, Japan, and all parts of the United States.

About a quarter of a million visitors attend the concerts during the eight-week season of the Berkshire Music festival in July and August.

The 24 concerts of the full Boston Symphony orchestra are given on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons for six weeks ending in mid - August; and there are chamber music concerts on Tuesday nights thru the summer. Saturday morning rehearsals of the symphony are also open to the public.

Seats for the symphony run from $3.50 to $7 for boxes. General admission to the lawns costs $2.50, and it's never completely sold out. As many as 10,000 people have listened to concerts while sprawled on the grass or seated in canvas chairs they brought along themselves.

ABOUT A DOZEN college boys and girls, some of them speaking French or German, act as guides for the free tours of the Tanglewood grounds. Individual wandering around is forbidden because of the rehearsals going on throughout the day in the 1,200 - seat theatre, the 500-seat Chamber Music hall, the barns and rehearsal stage, and 10 small studio buildings.

Also on the grounds is the Hawthorne cottage, a replica constructed on the site of the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1851 and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," and "The Wonder Book," edited "Twice Told Tales," and roughed out "Tanglewood Tales."

Tanglewood was known as "the jungle of literary lions" in the days when Hawthorne entertained Longfellow, Holmes, Melville, and Fanny Kemble at his home.

If you're planning a Berkshire trip as part of your August vacation you'll be able to enjoy some of the festival concerts, but be sure you have hotel or motel reservations should you plan to be there during the week - end Boston Symphony concerts.

PUBLIC - SPIRITED Lenox women will get stranded strangers into private homes in the village at reasonable prices, but weekend festival visitors sometimes have had to bed down as far away as Springfield, Mass., or Albany, N.Y.

Most visitors try to stop right here in Lenox, or in nearby Lee or Stockbridge. Two country inns — the Wheatleigh and the Avaloch —are within easy walking distance of Tanglewood.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,615

AUG 3 1966

GUEST EDITORIALS How Other Editors View Passing Scene

Two cents in 1876 were worth somewhat more than a nickel in 1966, and so it can be said that the Lenox Library in raising its overdue fines for the first time in 90 years, is only trying to keep pace with inflation. The continuity of library policy is not a subject on which editorial writers are given to writing with any frequency; but in the Berkshires the free public libraries, as institutions, are linked intimately with the area's history, and it is with pleasure that imagination dwells upon them.

The Tanglewood Festival makes the Berkshires a mecca for music lovers. But for the bookworm, the Berkshires possess advantages surpassing that: He has a reading festival all year round.

—BERKSHIRE EAGLE, PITTSFIELD

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,423

AUG 4 1966

More Broadcasts At Tanglewood

Exclusive live coverage of the 1966 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will continue to be the schedule highlight next week on WAMC-FM, 90.3 mc.

At 2:30 Sunday, American pianist Grant Johannesen will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Saint-Saens' Fourth Piano Concerto. The program, to be conducted by Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, includes Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance by Samuel Barber and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

At 8 p.m. Monday and Tuesday chamber music will be featured.

Other programs:

Wednesday, 8 p.m., "Tanglewood Gala;" Thursday, 8 p.m., Tanglewood Choir; Friday, 9 p.m., Sixten Erling conducting the Boston Symphony in Sibelius Symphony No. 1 and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4; Saturday, 8 p.m., Erich Leinsdorf conducting in Hindemith's Mathis der Maler and Tchaikovsky's Rococco Variations.

...ewsclipAgency,Inc.
...92106 • 742-4200
...ion (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331

JUL 30 1966

Nature Helps Set Mood For Music at Tanglewood

By WALTER P. MAYFIELD
Union Staff Writer

LENOX — Late afternoon breezes stirred the pines during twilight hours Friday as music lovers strolled around the grounds at Tanglewood.

The silver maple leaves rustled over the thick, soft tufts of grass in front of the shed.

Couples shared box lunches around stained wood tables and benches while others picnicked on blankets.

Well into its 29th season, the Berkshire Festival is again attracting multitudes of all ages, manners and dress.

Silver-haired old ladies, college boys in Bermuda shorts and heavy knit sweaters or Madras jackets, and beautiful young girls in skirts and sweaters or dungarees or bell-bottom trousers were there.

Clusters of people gathered round the bookshop to buy souvenirs of the occasion during the intermission between the 7 p. m. prelude and the evening concert while some solitary ones knitted quietly or read to themselves.

With the setting of the sun, a chill descended on the grounds and out came scarves and berets, blankets and shawls.

Back and forth the people strolled until at 9 p. m. the concert bell called them to come and listen as Erich Leinsdorf conducted Smetana's overture to "The Bartered Bride."

Under the shed, silhouets of hundreds of backs of heads and shoulders paved the foreground of a view of the Boston Symphony performing under the lights and bat-like acoustical devices that deflect the wonderful musical sounds to an audience of families, groups of friends and couples seated on blankets and folding chairs outside on the grass.

Silence, broken only by latecomers, covered the area during the music. And the stars, along with a large, white moon, filled the deep blue sky overhead.

Peace and tranquility descends on almost everyone, it seems, at Tanglewood where the music of the masters, performed by masters, wafts across the nearby hills and valleys.

How worthwhile seems the effort to make the trip again and again. The Tanglewood experience is one not easily forgotten.

220

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910

JUL 31 1966

Music

Scanty Repertory Handicaps Harpists

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

About one hour before a Boston Symphony concert, one of the musicians begins to work. It takes Bernard Zighera that long to tune his instrument and get ready for action.

He's first harpist with the Boston Symphony. This is his 40th year in that post. He was also the orchestra's pianist for 14 years.

Zighera is still youthful in appearance and vitality. He smiles readily and has an excellent sense of humor.

In a way, he has a rare sense of security. Professional harpists of such caliber are extremely scarce.

Not long ago, another major orchestra needed a second harpist replacement. Zighera was asked to recommend one. There just wasn't anyone available with sufficient competence.

FIRST HARPIST BERNARD ZIGHERA
He's held that post with the Boston Symphony for 40 years.

Took Lessons at 8

Zighera began taking piano lessons in France at the age of eight. His father (a non-musician) thought he should play another instrument, in addition for practical reasons. At 12 Bernard started his harp lessons.

His success was amazing. In fact, Zighera and the eminent Carlos Salzedo are the only two musicians who graduated from the Paris Conservatory, with highest honors, in both harp and piano.

How do both instruments complement each other?

"The piano helps the harp, says Zighera, "but the harp doesn't help much in piano playing. Only eight fingers are used on the harp, and intervals are produced by operating the seven pedals. Therefore piano composers often make bad blunders when they try to write harp music."

An aspiring concert harpist confronts the handicap of a scanty repertory. Baroque composers wrote little for the harp. Handel was the exception. From the classic era there are a few works by Mozart and Beethoven. The romantics were somewhat more productive.

The harp landslide was provided by the French School, especially impressionists Debussy and Ravel. They are Zighera's favorites.

What are a harpist's chances of having a successful concert career?

"Very poor," says Zighera. "If you have enough small jobs it can be made to pay. But concert harpists' fees are petty compared to pianists' and violinists'."

Expenses High

Also the harpist's expenses are high. So is maintenance.

A first caliber concert harp now costs $4,500. Most students rent an instrument while studying and hope eventually to find a bargain. Transportation of the instrument is costly; so are repairs.

Zighera recently sent one of his instruments to Chicago for renovation. The bill was $1,500.

It is quite true that the harp is generally associated with women performers. The majority of harpists are women. The Boston Symphony's second harpist is Olivia Luetcke.

Ironically, the universally best-known harpist of modern times was the late Harpo Marx of the famous Marx Brothers. He was a good friend of Zighera.

Harpo was once brought to Zighera's Boston studio. He wanted to learn to play a piece by the French composer Marcel Tournier, who was Zighera's teacher.

Can Only Read Title

Zighera asked Harpo to read some of it.

"The only part I can read is the title," Harpo exclaimed.

Harpo played the harp by ear, compensated with his irresistible style of tomfoolery.

Zighera has strong opinions about certain practices. For one, he deplores the substitution of piano for harp in an orchestral performance.

He is also amused by the misconception that harp glissandos (running the fingers back and forth across the strings) is the ultimate in technical skill. The real problems are in operating the pedals.

Zighera plays at most Boston Symphony concerts. This summer is exceptional; he is making comparatively few appearances.

TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,737,900

JUL 22 1966

Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony and the most prestigious of U.S. music festivals. Besides the symphonies in Tanglewood's 6,037-seat open-air shed this summer, there will be a week-long Festival of Contemporary American Music, including four world premieres.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

JUL 25 1966

Whitestone

PARTICIPANTS in Saturday's dedication ceremonies for Koussevitzky Studio for Composers in Lenox were, left to right, Mme. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the founder of the Berkshire Music Center; U.S. Representative Silvio O. Conte; Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs; Dr. Merle Montgomery, vice president of the federation's Northeast region; Aaron Copland, vice president of the Koussevitzky Foundation; and Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. New studio is situated on grounds of Koussevitzky estate.

Composers' Studio Opens

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The newly constructed Koussevitzky Studio for composers at Seranak in Lenox, the residence of the late Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was dedicated at its location on a slope overlooking Stockbridge Bowl Saturday afternoon.

Madame Olga Koussevitzky, the widow of the conductor, introduced four speakers, representing various agencies concerned with the project, to an assembly seated on the lawn at the side of the studio's porch.

The house with its adjoining studio is the result of the cooperation of the Koussevitzky Foundation and the National Federation of Music Clubs. The vice president of the latter organization, Mrs. Merle Montgomery, made a short address and disclosed that this was the latest but only one of the club's contributions to American music. Thomas E. Perry, manager of the Boston orchestra, who followed, was quick to point out that the national federation had already granted one generous gift to the Berkshire Music Center — the reproduction of Hawthorne's House of Seven Gables which is used as a classroom and a study hall.

Congressman Silvio O. Conte spoke of the legislator's greater concern with the arts and culture in recent regimes. Aaron Copland, the original director of the Berkshire Music Center, who was selected and appointed by Koussevitzky, recalled the many acts of encouragement Koussevitzky had devoted to him and other American and European composers.

First Meeting

He mentioned his recollection of his first meeting with the celebrated conductor. It was in Copland's apartment in Paris, in 1922, in the days when he was a pupil of Nadia Boulanger. He was asked to play a piano reduction of his then latest composition, "Cortege Macabre." Copland recalled that Prokofieff was there, too. He was a very tall man, and grumbled that the piece had too much "bassi ostinati" (reiterated bass), which Copland was not pleased to learn, but had to admit was right. Copland used the story to illustrate Koussevitzky's involvement "with" and "for" composers. This was but a continuing manifestation of the aim of his life, said Copland, so much of which he was able to accomplish before he died — and which goes on after his death because of his remarkable foresight and sagacious planning.

221

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Dalton-Hinsdale News
DALTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,200
AUG 18 1966

Dalton girls add to Tanglewood beauty

by Marion Manning

Classical music has a chance for survival.

The modern trend to rock and roll has caused some concern among today's parents snd grandparents who are appreciators of serious music. They fear in a few years the only music passed from this generation to the next will be the "Hang on Sloopy Concerto" or the "Rolling Stone Symphony".

Elizabeth Richards, however, has evidence proving all teenage girls are not exclusively Beatle worshippers. There is a big rush for Van Cliburn, too, she says.

How should she know? Miss Richards is supervisor of the program girls at Tanglewood, and whenever Van Cliburn plays there, she is overwhelmed with volunteers. Just about every one of the 135 young ladies under her direction is happy to pass out programs that night.

Since she cannot say "yes" to all, Miss Richards tries to deal out the more popular assignments to those who have demonstrated their dependability or who have worked at Tanglewood the longest.

The planning and scheduling for those assignments begins weeks before Tanglewood opens for the season. High school and college students select the programs at which they can work and return the information to Miss Richards.

Then begins the long, involved process of matching the 141 girls to the 32 performances. About 50 program girls are necessary for an evening concert, and each girl works an average of eight times.

The girls must be at Tanglewood at least an hour before concert time to receive their assignments. Probably the most popular stations are the main gate and the box gate, according to Miss Richards. The attractions at the main entrance seem to be people and fashions, she says.

At the box gate, the girls are presenting programs to some of the world's great celebrities. Mr. Chauncey Smith, a veteran ticket taker there is often at hand to point out the famous (quite subtley, of course).

There is a certain amount of personal glamour in working at Tanglewood, too, for some evening performances are "long gown nights". "My girls love to wear the formal dresses and they all look lovely," says Miss Richards, who tends to each member of her flock with individual attention.

Her association with Tanglewood dates back to 1941 when she was a member of the Berkshire Choral Society which sang there. Long interested in music, she assisted with the programs for several years before taking over the complete responsibility seven years ago. Each year the number of applicants has grown, but so have the crowds attending Tanglewood. The concert season has been lengthened as well so Miss Richards's job has almost tripled. There were just 50 program girls seven years ago.

Besides being able to hear some of the world's best music for nothing, each girl is entitled to a guest ticket for every performance that she works. "I love the music," said one college girl now in her fourth year at Tanglewood, "but I also enjoy being even a small part of something great. It's a priceless opportunity."

"GOOD AFTERNOON--Your program, sir." is the greeting from these Tanglewood program girls from Dalton. Left to right are Carol Ann Kapses, Corinne Aguilar, Betty Anderson (an usherette), Lucinda Sears, Marcia Manning, Elizabeth Richards, director, Linda Ploof, Kathryn Aguilar, Barbara Boraski, Enid Sodergren, Marcia Trager. Not present when the picture was taken were Joanne Rose, Carol Maciejewski, Judith Bartlett, Linda Ossinfort, Margaret Murphy and Susan Rudd.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 11 1966

Whitestone

'FLIGHT SHAFTS' is a sculpture by Richmond artist Homer Gunn. It is on display in the Tanglewood Gardens until the end of the concert season.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
AUG 13 1965

Cabot Award Split Between Two Musicians

The Cabot award to Douglas Bairstow of Dalton at Tanglewood Wednesday night represented half the prize awarded annually by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Players' Committee for outstanding mucisianship among students at the Berkshire Music Center.

Barker Rowe, a violinist from Riverside, N.Y., shared the $250 prize with Mr. Bairstow.

Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,500
AUG 11 1966

Esplanade's Future Affirmed

The Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have issued a statement reassuring the future of the free Esplanade concerts. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the orchestra, sent a letter to Boston newspapers in response to published regret over a shortened season this year.

Mr. Perry explained the reduction (to 11 evening and 2 children's concerts) was "the result of a temporary bind in . . . schedules."

"The Esplanade does indeed offer problems for presenting concerts — expense for one thing, traffic noise for another — but the enchantment of the riverfront surroundings, the tradition of 37 years started by Arthur Fiedler, and the great enjoyment of these concerts by many thousands of people will not permit us to let them languish . . .

"The orchestra also has an increasing problem of more demands upon it for concerts than it can readily cope with, and there has to be some selection within the orchestra's year. Therefore there may have to be some occasional adjustments and alterations in the type and number of concerts and the pattern of the season, but the public may rest assured that the Trustees of the orchestra will continue to see to it that free concerts for the public are given each summer in the Hatch Shell."

Marblehead Reporter
MARBLEHEAD, Mass.
Weekly 047
AUG 11 1966

Four brilliant young conductors who bid fair to mount the great podiums of tomorrow will be the stars of a specially televised concert from Tanglewood of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra on Channel 2, Friday, August 19 at 8 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Dalton-Hinsdale News
DALTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,200
AUG 18 1966

Dalton girls add to Tanglewood beauty

by Marion Manning

"GOOD AFTERNOON--Your program, sir." is the greeting from these Tanglewood program girls from Dalton. Left to right are Carol Ann Kapses, Connie Aguilar, Betty Anderson (an usherette), Lucinda Sears, Marcia Manning, Elizabeth Richards, director, Linda Ploof, Kathryn Aguilar, Barbara Boraski, Enid Sodergren, Marcia Trager. Not present when the picture was taken were Joanne Rose, Carol Maciejewski, Judith Bartlett, Linda Ossinfort, Margaret Murphy and Susan Rudd.

Classical music has a chance for survival.

The modern trend to rock and roll has caused some concern among today's parents snd grandparents who are appreciators of serious music. They fear in a few years the only music passed from this generation to the next will be the "Hang on Sloopy Concerto" or the "Rolling Stone Symphony".

Elizabeth Richards, however, has evidence proving all teenage girls are not exclusively Beatle worshippers. There is a big rush for Van Cliburn, too, she says.

How should she know? Miss Richards is supervisor of the program girls at Tanglewood, and whenever Van Cliburn plays there, she is overwhelmed with volunteers. Just about every one of the 135 young ladies under her direction is happy to pass out programs that night.

Since she cannot say "yes" to all, Miss Richards tries to deal out the more popular assignments to those who have demonstrated their dependability or who have worked at Tanglewood the longest.

The planning and scheduling for those assignments begins weeks before Tanglewood opens for the season. High school and college students, select the programs at which they can work and return the information to Miss Richards.

Then begins the long, involved process of matching the 141 girls to the 32 performances. About 50 program girls are necessary for an evening concert, and each girl works an average of eight times.

The girls must be at Tanglewood at least an hour before concert time to receive their assignments. Probably the most popular stations are the main gate and the box gate, according to Miss Richards. The attractions at the main entrance seem to be people and fashions, she says.

At the box gate, the girls are presenting programs to some of the world's great celebrities. Mr. Chauncey Smith, a veteran ticket taker there is often at hand to point out the famous (quite subtley, of course).

There is a certain amount of personal glamour in working at Tanglewood, too, for some evening performances are "long gown nights". "My girls love to wear the formal dresses and they all look lovely," says Miss Richards, who tends to each member of her flock with individual attention.

Her association with Tanglewood dates back to 1941 when she was a member of the Berkshire Choral Society which sang there. Long interested in music, she assisted with the programs for several years before taking over the complete responsibility seven years ago. Each year the number of applicants has grown, but so have the crowds attending Tanglewood. The concert season has been lengthened as well so Miss Richards's job has almost tripled. There were just 50 program girls seven years ago.

Besides being able to hear some of the world's best music for nothing, each girl is entitled to a guest ticket for every performance that she works. "I love the music," said one college girl now in her fourth year at Tanglewood, "but I also enjoy being even a small part of something great. It's a priceless opportunity."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 11 1966

Whitestone

'FLIGHT SHAFTS' is a sculpture by Richmond artist Homer Gunn. It is on display in the Tanglewood Gardens until the end of the concert season.

Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,500
AUG 11 1966

Esplanade's Future Affirmed

The Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have issued a statement reassuring the future of the free Esplanade concerts. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the orchestra, sent a letter to Boston newspapers in response to published regret over a shortened season this year.

Mr. Perry explained the reduction (to 11 evening and 2 children's concerts) was "the result of a temporary bind in . . . schedules."

"The Esplanade does indeed offer problems for presenting concerts — expense for one thing, traffic noise for another — but the enchantment of the riverfront surroundings, the tradition of 37 years started by Arthur Fiedler, and the great enjoyment of these concerts by many thousands of people will not permit us to let them languish . . .

"The orchestra also has an increasing problem of more demands upon it for concerts than it can readily cope with, and there has to be some selection within the orchestra's year. Therefore there may have to be some occasional adjustments and alterations in the type and number of concerts and the pattern of the season, but the public may rest assured that the Trustees of the orchestra will continue to see to it that free concerts for the public are given each summer in the Hatch Shell."

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
AUG 13 1965

Cabot Award Split Between Two Musicians

The Cabot award to Douglas Bairstow of Dalton at Tanglewood Wednesday night represented half the prize awarded annually by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Players' Committee for outstanding mucisianship among students at the Berkshire Music Center.

Barker Rowe, a violinist from Riverside, N.Y., shared the $250 prize with Mr. Bairstow.

Marblehead Reporter
MARBLEHEAD, Mass.
Weekly 047
AUG 11 1966

Four brilliant young conductors who bid fair to mount the great podiums of tomorrow will be the stars of a specially televised concert from Tanglewood of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra on Channel 2, Friday, August 19 at 8 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
AUG 16 1966

Music: Sound of the 60's

125 at Tanglewood Attend the Opening of Fromm Foundation Concert Series

Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—Following Sunday afternoon's television extravaganza at the shed of the Berkshire Music Festival, which attracted 8,093 people, a considerably smaller audience went to the theater-concert hall—about 125. The occasion of the evening concert was the inauguration of the week-long Festival of Contemporary American Music, a Tanglewood fixture for the last few years. This summer also marks the 10th year of the Fromm Music Foundation's affiliation with the Berkshire center. Paul Fromm of Chicago has been the sponsor from the beginning.

The week will have four Festival of American Music concerts. Two will be devoted to chamber music, one primarily to choral and vocal music, and the final one, on Thursday night, to orchestral music. Four composers have received commissions — Michael Colgrass, Douglas Leedy, Roger Reynolds and Henry Weinberg. In addition, there will be a concert of string quartet music Tuesday night. This concert is the last of this year's seven Tuesday concerts of chamber music at Tanglewood, but the nature of the program, with works by Sessions Babbitt, Weinberg and Ruth Crawford-Seeger, has included it in the modern-music series.

●

Sunday night's was a short concert. Six pieces were on the program, but the audience was on its way out by 9:20. Most avant-garde compositions are short (in objective, if not necessarily in subjective time). Sometimes it takes longer to read the composer's analysis in the program than to hear the work.

The chronological range of the concert extended from Stefan Wolpe (born in 1902) to Harley Seber (born in 1943). But all of the music is of this decade—fresh, newly minted, brimming over with the lovely zeitgeist of the nineteen-sixties. The Geber work, "Fantasy," was for solo flute, and Earl Kim's "Dead Calm" and Mr. Leedy's "Quaderno Rossiniano" used eight musicians. There also were Salvatore Martirano's oddly named "Cocktail Music," for solo piano, Mr. Colgrass's Rhapsody for Violin, Clarinet and Piano and the Wolpe "For Six Instruments in Two Parts."

Mr. Martirano's piece was oddly named, for cocktail music it isn't. It is a dead-serious, party-line example of serial writing for the piano, in which such composers as Boulez and Stockhausen play a major role. It is also rather a bore. The piece that got the biggest acclaim was Mr. Kim's "Dead Calm," a setting of a text by Samuel Becket, for soprano and seven players. In this work, the composer makes great use of silences and delicate pianissimo effects. A strong Schoenbergian feeling was in evidence, and the writing had mood and style.

It is hard to define profile and characteristics in post-Webern serial writing. All of of the music is thoroughly organized, but family relationships are too great, and pieces like the Geber and Colgrass end up featureless. The Wolpe was typical—very serious, complicated, disjunct in line, athematic, perhaps a little less dense in texture than some of his other music.

●

But one work did indeed have profile. It was the Leedy "Quaderno Rossiniano," which the composer has described as a tribute to Rossini. It consists of juxtapositions of Rossinian fragments in unrelated keys. Some tribute!

One of the real pleasures in concerts like this is listening to the deft way young musicians get around the music. The complications, especially rhythmic ones, are enormous, but they lean back, relaxed-like, and the notes and sequences come out glittering. It is all immensely impressive. And, if perchance the attention wanders, there are the program notes, in which the new musical terminology stands in all its glory — pitch-class content, linear orderings, serialized parameters, steady states, harmonic fields, permutational reorderings, nonpitch dimensions, rhythmic trajectories. Not physics, not higher mathematics. The new music.

HAROLD C. SCHONBERG.

Dennis
Yarmouth Register
YARMOUTHPORT,
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,078
AUG 19 1966

Two-thousand seat shell to be built

Raymond Moore Foundation launches plan for top chamber music concerts

A first rank music festival for Cape Cod went from conversation to commitment this week.

The Raymond Moore Foundation of Dennis announced the Cape Cod Center of Performing Arts would open in 1967.

The board voted unanimously to endorse the report of a music committee which recommends construction of a concert shell adjacent to the Cape Playhouse on a tract bordering Chase Garden Creek.

The Center of Performing Arts will be separate from, but sponsored by, the Raymond Moore Foundation, from which it will lease the land.

The glade by Chase Garden Creek

The shell will seat 2,000 under cover, have overflow room for another 1,500 on the grounds and a special parking arrangement whereby concert-goers with small children can listen in their cars.

The enterprise will be supported by subscription ticket sales and tax free giving. Approaches will be made to foundations, business and government.

The music committee which sparked the move is headed by John K. Davenport of West Dennis, who among other things has built a golf course in Yarmouth and spear-headed development of Yarmouth Botanic Trails, the Historical Society's naturalist park.

Charles Mooney, director and producer of the Cape Playhouse, is lending his experience to the enterprise. The project also enlists the efforts of other prominent people. They include Brooks Thayer, new president of the Foundation, and Joshua A. Nickerson, president ever since the death of Raymond Moore and still a director.

In addition to these, the music committee includes Mrs. Caroline Otis St. John, long an effective backer of the Playhouse, which is her neighbor; Richard Aldrich, former producer at the Playhouse recently back from State Department mission to Spain; Mrs. Horatio Rogers, a trustee of the Cape Cod Conservatory of Music and Arts and Bennington graduate in music.

The director is Ronald C. Perera, who graduated from Harvard with a music major, is currently working for his masters in composition.

Mr. Perera, who is building a home in Yarmouth Port, has had two of his works accepted for publication. He has composed the music for an opera which was performed at Harvard. He has conducted, played organ and piano recitals. He has studied at both Tanglewood and Aspen.

James J. Brosnahan, business administrator for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a trustee of the Foundation, has offered to help as a consultant.

Raymond Moore, a painter who was intimate with Eugene O'Neil, Susan Gaspell, William Steele, Charles Hawthorne, Mary Heaton Vorse, and watched the success of the old Provincetown Playhouse, 40 years ago decided to bring New York theatre to the Cape. He bought a 20 acre cornfield in Dennis, moved onto it a building which had been a Quaker meeting house, school, and slaughter house. It is now the Cape Playhouse.

The new enterprise aims to bring first rate solo and chamber music to the Cape next summer, before long be able to sponsor ballet, chamber opera and orchestral music. By 1970 the center will offer periodic arts festivals, including special films and graphic arts. The shell will mean all the facilities will be available in a single complex.

It is the ambition of the music committee and director, endorsed by the foundation, to place the name of Dennis alongside those of Marlboro, Prades, Salzburg, in the pantheon of important music festivals.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
AUG 14 1966

A Tip To Tanglewood

By Paul F. Kneeland

AFTER all these years of music-loving, which date back to listening to my grandfather's favorite 12-inch Columbia record, "Mighty Lak' a Rose," recorded in 1916 by Prince's Band (under the supervision of G. Hepburn Wilson)—and played in waltz time, no less!—it has occurred to me more than once that concert program notes lack... er, something. But to bring the matter up-to-date:

After fighting the traffic to Tanglewood the other day (and then continuing the fight for lodging once I got there) the programs, somehow, still seemed incomplete. Due notice was given, to be sure, that Bach's Violin Concerto in E major would be played, and a tantalizing blow-by-blow account of what Schumann's Andante for Horn and Two Pianos was all about made it sound like the trip would, in the long run, have been worthwhile.

And then it suddenly struck... what was lacking in the programs, that is.

All kinds of space had been devoted to biographies of the composers and the hobbies of the soloists, but not a line about the instruments which made all this beautiful music possible. (To fill in the gaps, then, here are a few suggested program notes that all Tanglewood is, in all probability, not waiting for.)

Let's begin with the stringed instruments....

The most important of these instruments is the violin. The VIOLIN, invented by Ralph K. Violin, consists of a resonant box over which strings are stretched and tuned by pegs.

To produce different notes, the length of the strings is varied by pressing them down on the "neck" with the fingers. This is called "stopping" the violin. (Stopping the violinist can also be accomplished by pressing down on his neck with the fingers. This is called murder.)

The violin's reputation is based mainly on the fact that it is played with a bow. However, when plucked with the fingers, it immediately becomes evident that the violin is a mere novelty and will never replace the tenor banjo.

Violins come in a variety of forms including the family size called the Viola, named after a character in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night." Variations include the violoncello, the violoncello piccolo, and the ever-popular violoncello piccolofigaro.

(Now obsolete is the guitar violoncello. Schubert, trying to be a nice guy, once wrote a sonata for it. That finished the guitar violoncello and, eventually, Schubert.)

Continued

ress, for that ully-moulded are bent into pecifications:

14"
$12\frac{1}{16}$" 35"
24" 36" ming violin ually tuning string. The brations per wind family, aking music of audience

bone is also Sagbut and of the same uman voice, the human e.

-see above—shifts: first, of the more ic sound is

The CONTRA-BASS TROMBONE, formerly little in request in the concert hall, is still little in request in the concert hall. Which is a musicologist's way of saying that the concert-going public does get a break once in a while.

The SAXOPHONE is a modern hybrid musical instrument. It has a mouthpiece like a bass clarinet, is doubled up near the end like a clarinet, and sounds like a bass clarinet—yet everyone insists on calling it a saxophone. There's the power of the press for you.

HOWEVER, according to Berlioz, the saxophone is akin to the 'cello and has an affinity with the harmonium, which makes it all sound pretty sexy now, doesn't it? No wonder back in the 20's there were all those allusions to a "hot sax."

If you play a given note on the saxophone, you can play that same note on a bass clarinet—there's that bass clarinet again—only half as long. For a space-saver, then, you can't beat a bass clarinet.

In the 30's, many saxophone players, often referred to as saxophonists/or, with careless proofreading, it sometimes read saxophonies—were considered susceptible to that rare occupational disease known as saxophobia, fatal in those pre-penicilin days.

Exception: Bespectacled, sax-toting, vagabond-lover Hubert Prior Vallee—no victim he. While his immunity long baffled medical science, the musical world was hep to his secret: Rudy never played the instrument but merely wore it like a watch-fob.

For Vallee, then, a fate worse than saxophobia—sax appeal. Side effect: three wives.

Incidentally, the saxophone is an instrument that if taken up should be put down at once—the life you save may be your own.

Globe
Mass.
2,600
4 1966

Sonia

Tanglewood

On a clear day the violin—or Ursula Andress, for that matter—can be easily distinguished by a fully-moulded back as well as shallow sides, or ribs, which are bent into characteristic curves according to these specifications:

length of body	14″
width across top	6 11/16″
hips	35″
waist	24″
bust	36″

The customary method employed in tuning violin strings is by fifths, with alcoholic violinists usually tuning by quarts.

The strings are tuned from a second, or A string. The G string, with a fundamental note of 924 vibrations per second, has been banned in Boston.

The TROMBONE, a member of the brass wind family, consists of two parallel cylindrical tubes making music without loss of air. Making music without loss of audience isn't so easy.

Among crossword puzzle fans, the trombone is also known as the Shakbusshe, Buskine, Sackbut, Sagbut and Bussina, but any resemblance to the law firm of the same name is entirely coincidental.

Since they have qualities similar to the human voice, trombones are named for various types of the human voice, viz: tenor, alto, loud, shaky and hoarse.

Like the violin which it closely resembles—see above—the trombone is played in five positions or shifts: first, second, third, fourth, and overdrive. (In some of the more expensive models (R.&H. incl.) stereophonic sound is available).

The CONTRA-BASS TROMBONE, formerly little in request in the concert hall, is still little in request in the concert hall. Which is a musicologist's way of saying that the concert-going public does get a break once in a while.

The SAXOPHONE is a modern hybrid musical instrument. It has a mouthpiece like a bass clarinet, is doubled up near the end like a clarinet, and sounds like a bass clarinet—yet everyone insists on calling it a saxophone. There's the power of the press for you.

HOWEVER, according to Berlioz, the saxophone is akin to the 'cello and has an affinity with the harmonium, which makes it all sound pretty sexy now, doesn't it? No wonder back in the 20's there were all those allusions to a "hot sax."

If you play a given note on the saxophone, you can play that same note on a bass clarinet—there's that bass clarinet again—only half as long. For a space-saver, then, you can't beat a bass clarinet.

In the 30's, many saxophone players, often referred to as saxophonists/or, with careless proofreading, it sometimes read saxophonies—were considered susceptible to that rare occupational disease known as saxophobia, fatal in those pre-penicilin days.

Exception: Bespectacled, sax-toting, vagabond-lover Hubert Prior Vallee—no victim he. While his immunity long baffled medical science, the musical world was hep to his secret: Rudy never played the instrument but merely wore it like a watch-fob.

For Vallee, then, a fate worse than saxophobia—sax appeal. Side effect: three wives.

Incidentally, the saxophone is an instrument that if taken up should be put down at once—the life you save may be your own.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
AUG 14 1966

Tanglewood Impressive—Even Detroit's Version

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

ROCHESTER, Mich. — It may be that "Tanglewood" is on the way to becoming a generic term like Kleenex and Coke.

Koussevitzky's vision of the symphony orchestra as an educational institution is making its force and validity felt nationally. One of the newest school-festival combinations is Meadow Brook, the Detroit Symphony's "Tanglewood," administered by Oakland University, an affiliate of Michigan State University, just outside Rochester, a village about 30 miles north of Detroit.

Oakland is only seven years old. Its campus is on the old Dodge estate, now known as Wilson estate after Mrs. Dodge's second husband. In generally flat south-eastern Michigan, it is an unexpected bit of New England-like rolling landscape, and lovely.

Late in 1963, Walter Collins, then chairman of the University's music department and now dean of the Meadow Brook School, suggested the Detroit Symphony be approached about giving concerts at Oakland during the Summer. From then on, things moved with astonishing speed and just over half a year later the concerts began.

The setting for the concerts is remarkable. A hill forms a natural amphitheatre. Christopher Jaffe designed an efficient and good-looking stage-house and shell and an open-sided pavilion with 2247 seats. Another 5500 are accommodated on the grass from the back of the pavilion up to the crest of the hill.

It is smaller than Tanglewood, but partly because of that and partly because of the slope it is musically far better. The acoustics within the pavilion are excellent and even. The remarkable difference, however, is in the grass seating.

Whereas the Tanglewood lawns mainly serve the customers' picnicking and erotic impulses, the Meadow Brook open seats provide a completely viable musical experience. At the extremest distance the sound became a little dry and unresonant, but I could get a clear and usable impression of Bartok's Dance Suite and of its performance, more so, indeed, than in many indoor auditoria in which I have struggled to hear music.

The season is now six weeks with four concerts weekly, and with a $3 top and a four million community to draw on, Meadow Brook has attracted big audiences. Average attendance this summer has been 5700. The low ticket prices mean that $186,000 has to be raised as subsidy.

The concerts began in 1964, and the Meadow Brook School was opened the following year and is now in its second Summer. Sixten Ehrling, conductor of the Detroit Symphony, is its titular head. He quickly found, however, he could do no teaching himself. His concert schedule is taxing, the more so since he makes a point of excluding program duplications from either the preceding or following Winter season, since Meadow Brook draws on the regular Detroit public in a way that Tanglewood does not draw on the Boston Symphony's Winter public.

Meadow Brook has also commissioned orchestral works from Ulysses Kay, Roger Sessions, and Carlos Surinach to be performed in mid-August, and it is expected that the policy of three commissions per Summer will continue. Ehrling characterized the Surinach as a real crowd-pleaser and he expects to take it on tour next season: it is likely then, that Boston will hear it when the Detroit orchestra plays here in October.

About one-fifth of the Meadow Brook students are at college level, the others being about equally divided between high school seniors and post-graduate students. Most come from south-eastern Michigan and Ohio, but there is some representation from a wide area.

Detroit Symphony players form the core of the faculty. Albert Tipton, principal flute, conducts the Meadow Brook Orchestra, which I was able to hear only as they were coping very nicely in a first reading of "Till Eulenspiegel," William Byrd, Tipton's assistant and the competent conductor of the Flint (Mich.) Symphony in charge.

Robert Shaw runs the choral program, and he is preparing the regular chorus for performances of Britten's War Requiem, Bernstein's Chichester Psalms and Walton's Belshazzar's Feast. In addition he has a junior chorus of high school students whom I heard working on Bach's B minor Mass, learning to sing it with clean pitch and with exhilaratingly sharp rhythm and articulation. For most of them, it is the experience of their musical lives.

The opera department, under David DiChiera, was preparing Copland's "The Tender Land," and there were classes in theory and lecture courses in other subjects. John Wustmann gives classes in Lieder and opera, and I found his musicality and crisply articulate competence most impressive.

Some of the eminent soloists who appear at the Detroit Symphony concerts also teach, though with varying results. It does not always work. Van Cliburn, for example, elected to get a haircut on his free day instead of meeting with students and moreover went to Milwaukee to get it, traveling by chartered plane (from Barber Airlines, as a matter of fact).

Isaac Stern, Leonard Rose and Eugene Istomin were brought in for a Piano Trio Institute. There, too, it was discovered that while Rose was a serious and valuable teacher, Istomin was anything but, and Stern fell somewhere between the two as a genial personality, full of energy and enthusiasm and telling the students a great many of the sorts of thing they like to hear.

I heard the Stern-Rose-Istomin trio play a Beethoven-Brahms program in which natural and lively playing strayed rather often into a kind of casual inattention, now into an excessively attentive fussiness. Rose was the soloist at the Detroit Symphony concert I heard, playing Bloch's "Schelomo" superbly, while the Saint-Saens Concerto, the stupid thing, was for all its elegance not so effective as the more extraverted though slapdash performance I heard from Parnas and Skrowaczewski at Tanglewood the next night.

Ehrling produced an energetic performance of Bartok's Dance Suite, but the orchestral part of both solo works was rough and insufficiently rhetorical for "Schelomo," and the Mozart G minor Symphony was drably routine.

The Meadow Brook School is off to an impressive start. Especially its concern with the high school student and its meeting his needs, not in terms of an Interlochen camp atmosphere, but in the spirit of a university. This, from what I saw of the chorus and orchestra and learned from talking with some of the students, is paying off. D. B. Varner, Oakland's chancellor, is an uncommonly energetic man. Dean Collins, who hails from Hartford, Ct., a musicologist who has just published a volume on Tudor church music, is a serious musician and an able administrator.

Music education in America is mostly not much to cheer about, and so the appearance of Meadow Brook and its apparently flourishing start is something to be welcomed.

The Sunday Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, PA
SUN. 717,000
AUG 14 1966

The Music Beat

Presto! Our Orchestra Pulls Off a Musical Miracle

By JAMES FELTON
Bulletin Music Critic

NOW THAT the Philadelphia Orchestra has established a major music festival at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.—and in the short space of one night—it should occur to us that a miracle has taken place. The only festival to compare with it is Tanglewood, which developed over a period of decades.

Of course the miracle at Saratoga was carefully planned. Nelson A. Rockefeller gave the main financial support, not only as a millionaire but as governor of New York. The architect, Vollmer Ostrower, designed an outdoor hall with an uncanny charm that defies description. Paul Veneklasen, the acoustician, devised a sound system that uses the most up-to-date techniques to achieve a quality which at times rivals the Academy of Music.

Coordinating everything, and raising a lot of private money, was Richard P. Leach, executive director of the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts. The credit for this handsome hunk of new real estate at the horse resort belongs largely to him.

Local reaction to the amphitheater might be summed up by one old crusty gambler who grunted: "I've been coming here for 33 years but I've never seen anything like this—it's got atmosphere!"

• • •

IT ISN'T uncommon to see people clad in white tuxedoes and Bermuda shorts mingling casually at the snack bar. One strolls on the spacious lawns with a feeling of relaxation.

So much for atmosphere. It's all very nice and well worth basking in. From this standpoint, Saratoga is even superior to Tanglewood, where the earthen-floored music shed and lawns are cramped by comparison.

What the orchestra plays is something else again. It is offering nothing like the Festival of Contemporary American Music which begins at Tanglewood today and lasts for a week. This "festival within a festival" is a healthy tradition maintained at Tanglewood for at least ten years.

Music by two Philadelphia composers will be played at Tanglewood this week—"Cantus Commemorabilis" by Henry Weinberg, commissioned for the festival, and George Rochberg's "Black Sounds." There will be much more new music heard there, sponsored by the Berkshire Music center and the Fromm Foundation.

• • •

AT A press conference preceding the orchestra's Saratoga bow, an apology for offering tried-and-true fare by the orchestra there was advanced, on the basis that the new festival would have to attract popular favor to justify expenses. Eugene Ormandy made a devastating argument.

"I would like to play one concert of new music for all the critics. Then we would play our regular season with the kind of music that people will pay to come hear," he said.

A devastating argument indeed, coming from one of the few orchestras in the world that can afford to expand its repertoire and prevent the symphony orchestra in general from becoming a 19th century museum of quaint stuffings and antiques.

Two consolations have fallen to this critic, at least. An orchestra official sympathized with the lot of a listener who must find something new to say about overworked chestnuts.

And secondly, the orchestra will play "Central Park in the Dark" by Charles Ives on August 20. A critic's holiday, that one.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
AUG 23 1966

Tanglewood in Box Office Record

LENOX — A new Tanglewood box office record was set this season with receipts of $625,944.50 paid by 236,196 patrons.

The comparable figures for 1965 were $605,718 paid by 242,005 persons.

A weather record for the Festival's 30 years was also established, with eight weekends of clear conditions.

The largest-drawing soloist for the Tanglewood season was pianist VanCliburn, whose performance July 23 drew 14,375 persons. The total for that weekend was 32,291.

Tanglewood's capacity is 6,037 in the Shed.

* * *

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 27 1966

Berkshire Week in Review

Box-Office Smash

WITH THE BERKSHIRE summer season nearing its close, buoyant box-office reports indicate it will go down in the account books as one of the busiest tourist seasons yet, if not a record-breaker all the way down the line.

That bellwether attraction, Tanglewood, set a new box-office record with receipts of $625,994, some $20,000 higher than the 1965 figure though total attendance dropped slightly. Clear weather for eight Berkshire Festival weekends, also a record, was credited with an assist.

The successful Tanglewood season was especially noteworthy this year because the 30-year-old festival had competition in its own league from the new Saratoga Performing Arts Center in Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

In its first season starting July 8, the Center presented 21 ballet performances to more than 90,000 patrons, ending July 31. Then the Philadelphia Orchestra gave 14 concerts ending Aug. 24. On two occasions, the orchestra drew overflow audiences of 12,000. The result was that Saratoga hostelries and service trades got the biggest play since the days of Diamond Jim Brady.

Although the Berkshire Theatre Festival in Stockbridge lost money in its first season, its sponsors voiced satisfaction with progress made. President William Gibson and artistic director George Tabori declared that with strong community support, the theatre would fulfill the high hopes held out for it.

The Williamstown Theatre and Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival will end their runs this evening. The traditional end of the summer tourist season is Labor Day, Sept. 5 this year.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, August 21, 1966

Leinsdorf on Tanglewood: 'Expansion in Terms of Quality'

By JOAN SIMMONS

'. . . In reading who is going to perform and where, I can hardly find a name that has not been connected with the Center.'

"Musical planning always comes first, second and third," decreed Erich Leinsdorf, as he sat bolt upright in his chair and beamed around his office backstage in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

As the Berkshire Music Festival concludes its summer season, thirty years after the first Boston Symphony summer festival in the Berkshires, it finds itself steeped in tradition but far from stifled by it.

"We think of expansion in terms of the level of quality," said Leinsdorf, who, as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of the Berkshire Music Festival, is very much the heart of Tanglewood.

"The Berkshire Music Center of course is one half of our organization here," continued Leinsdorf. "The students there have been divided into two groups. The main group consists of professional performers—all exclusively on fellowship. In fact," he mused, "I don't think they could pay even if they wanted to."

'. . . Musical planning always comes first, second and third. . . . We decide that a work should be played and then we find the right soloist. . . . Or we hear that a certain soloist is available and we plan accordingly. . .'

'No Compromise'

"There is no compromise in the quality of the students," Leinsdorf emphasized.

"We created the Tanglewood Institute for various other people," he said, searching for a definite term. "Teachers or people who just want to spend a summer with music," he said, "we expect people to come in for their own benefit."

Hopping back to the professional students, Leinsdorf noted that "In reading who is going to perform and where, I can hardly find a name that has not been connected with the Center." With his tongue between his teeth and his eyes glinting, Leinsdorf added, "But of course we're not at all proud."

Getting serious again, he added, "We like to think that you can't make a career in music without a summer here. It is an interim eight weeks between the conservatory and the concert stage."

"We are delighted with B. U. joining us here," Leinsdorf said, referring to the recent affiliation between the Berkshire Music Center and Boston University. "Through B. U. we hope to broaden our field to the dramatic. This season we offered a course in dramatic writing," Leinsdorf pointed out. "My son took it and now he wants to write a play," he added, with more than a trace of pride.

"Members of the Stockbridge company came over to address the class, people like Ann Bancroft and Viveca Lindfors," said Leinsdorf, anticipating more "cross fertilization" in seasons to come.

'. . . We think of expansion in terms of quality. . . We are using expanded types of program form. The presentation of the Tchaikowsky Competition winners was an attempt in this direction.'

Not Limited

Expansion in quality" is not limited to the Music Center. "We are using expanded types of program form," said Leinsdorf, pointing out several innovations this season.

"The presentation of the Tchaikowsky Competition winners was an attempt in this direction," he said, "although Moscow didn't give us the cooperation they had promised.

"Opera in concert form," he said, "is another. And the Weekend Preludes."

"The size and quality of response has been more than gratifying," he said, speaking particularly of the Preludes, a new program presented at 7:00 on Friday evening preceeding the regular concert at 9:00 p.m.

"These concerts deepen the audiences' knowledge of the composers," Leinsdorf said, "like the one devoted to the rare works of Schumann. Musicians and audience can cover more ground of the composers."

'. . . We are delighted with B.U. joining us here. Through B.U. we hope to broaden our field to the dramatic. This season we offered a course in dramatic writing. My son took it and now he wants to write a play. . . .'

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
AUG 20 1966

As I Hear It

1936-1966-1996 (?)

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

ORROW afternoon the Symphony Orchestra ave completed 31 sum- in the Berkshires. The ire festivals had started ears before but Henry Had- he founder and first con- , had been in failing and a replacement was . Hadley had used the York Philharmonic Or- a after it had finished its m series. In 1936, the BSO s musical director, the in- ionally eminent conductor Koussevitzky, came to hree concerts in one week- nder a tent on the old nghouse estate on the Len- e road.

* * *

E FOLLOWING year they to the estate of Tangle- overlooking Stockbridge and, still under canvas, d six programs over two ends. The storm which ne- ated canceling a concert ogress and the subsequent atum of Koussevitzky—a anent structure or no con- —is by now generally n history, as is the magic nulation of the necessary and the erection of the in which the 1938 concerts all subsequent festivals held.

e 1936 arrival of the Boston phony and Koussevitzky much more than a purely event. It marked a mile- e in musical history, for it the first time a metropoli- orchestra, and certainly one e BSO's stature, had moved full complement of musi- s and its main musical di- or to a comparatively bucol- etting to play the same type rogram it used on its home nds. All other preceding similar ventures had been a, so to speak, less serious e. The first chair men did participate, or a substitute ductor took over, and the grams were a little on the ular side. But not so with

SYMPHONY HALL
Sunday Afternoon, December 12, 1915, at 3:30

CONCERT IN AID OF THE PENSION FUND
OF THE
Boston
Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

PROGRAMME

TSCHAIKOWSKY . . . Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Op. 64
I. Andante
II. Andante cantabile, con alcuna licenza
III. Valse: Allegro moderato
IV. Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace

STRAUSS . . . . . Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"

LALO . . . . . Suite, "Namouna"
1. Prelude
2. Sérénade
3. Parade de foire
4. Fête foraine

ROSSINI . . . . . Overture, "William Tell"

Tickets, $1, $1.50, $2. At sale at Box Office.

A 1915 BSO program

the Berkshire festivals. Hence Tanglewood, as it is better known now all over the world, became a unique undertaking.

* * *

THE SCHOOL, the Berkshire Music Center, or the academy, as its founder, Koussevitzky, liked to call it, became a feature which magnified and compounded the value and importance of the festival far beyond the mere repetition of the orchestral repertory, as loftily performed as it was. In Europe, Tanglewood is known for its "Academy" rather than its concerts; its fame rests on the students who have come here from all over the world and have returned to their native haunts to infect their colleagues, students and audiences with all they have learned and acquired on our doorstep.

But a significant and even ominous thread appears in the three-decade fabric. A glance at the first programs reveals, overlooking the smaller compositions, that in 1936 the Bostonians played symphonies of Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky. In 1937 appear, in addition to those of 1936, the names of Mozart, Ravel, Wagner, Schubert, Stravinsky, Franck and Haydn—not insignificant composers, by any measurement. Prokofieff and Debussy show up in the next two years.

* * *

BUT LET'S LOOK at the schedule of the year now ending. With the exception of Bruckner and Mahler, 19th century and pre-World War I, respectively, no major composition written since then has been played. No one is finding fault with all the immortals whose music we have heard this summer and all the previous summers. We are not tiring of Shakespeare, but what has become of musical invention, imagination and inspiration in the last half-century?

There is little music written for orchestra currently. The new 12-tone system does not apply well to large ensembles. Furthermore, there is a trend to electronic music and a detour from, if not an abandonment of, the instruments used in today's orchestras in the music now being written. Will audiences of 5,000 to 15,000 come to Tanglewood in 1996 to hear Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky et al? We hazard no opinion.

* * *

THE DISMAYING factor in the matter of programs is to see that the Boston programs of 50 years ago included many of the same composers as are being used today. A Pension Fund concert program of 1915 which happened to come to hand recently showed that the BSO played the Rossini "William Tell" overture exactly as was played at Tanglewood at this season's Pension Fund concert. The remainder of that old program used a Tchaikovsky symphony, "the" Strauss Waltz, (the Blue Danube, of course) and a now forgotten suite of the French composer Lalo, who is now remembered only for one violin concerto.

Symphony Hall in Boston is proud of the list of subscribers it claims, which includes many who have occupied the exact same seats all their lives, in some cases extending to scores of years. This would also mean that they have heard the exact same programs while occupying those same seats. I have heard every concert ever played in the Berkshire Festivals, starting in 1934, with the exception of one evening when I played hookey to go hear Casals at Marlboro. Fortunately, the repertory is played by a succession of conductors. Of course, the personnel of the orchestra changes and we now listen occasionally with blinding lights in our eyes or disturbing airplane drones in our ears, and even, as at the Fromm concert last Tuesday night, evidence of the presence of a mephitic mammal (so-called out of deference to the fastidious Boston ladies) in the area.

* * *

URBAN RENEWAL is the rallying cry nowadays for all who want to sweep out the old and trite. Is music not due for its own "urban renewal"?

Travelers keep going back to Salzburg and Bayreuth for certain definite objectives. Erich Leinsdorf, the incumbent Boston musical director, has added opera in concert form to his Tanglewood repertory, and the possibilities of that tangent are wide and handsome. He has shown a great curiosity in all current music streams and what he may have in mind is not yet apparent; however, it might be amusing to make a memo on your 1996 calendar: "What does Ozawa plan to play for us this year?"

MES UNION
gust 21, 1966

einsdorf: 'Planning Comes First'

Continued from Page G-1

The programming for the preludes as well as for the regular concerts is done with Leinsdorf's maxim about musical planning in mind. Without saying so he inferred that he did not believe in tailoring a program to those works generally considered as sure box office bets. "The popularity of Bach and Mozart with the audience is marvelous," Leinsdorf said referring to two composers, whose work does not generally fall in this category.

"Even this season's theme of the Romantic Concerto is not a compromise," Leinsdorf pointed out. "Many of the works are seldom heard." When planning a program Leinsdorf uses what he calls "cross relation." "We decide that a work should be played and then we find the right soloist," he said. "Or we hear that a certain soloist is available and we plan accordingly."

"I don't know how the box office is doing but it seems to be successful," said Leinsdorf. "That is his business," he said, pointing to the manager. "As long as he keeps smiling like that I assume we're doing well."

The inevitable mention of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center brought an enthusiastic response from the maestro. "It is like the summer festival circuit at Munich and Salzburg," he said. "People who like to go to one festival like to go to the two."

"Anything that brings music to people expands its appeal," said Leinsdorf, moving from Saratoga to broadcast coverage of this season at Tanglewood. All of the concerts of both the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra have been broadcast in the Albany area by WAMC-FM. Several of the concerts were taped for broadcast by National Educational television. And last Sunday's presentation of Tchiakowsky winners was broadcast live by NBC television.

"When is was announced that NBC would cover that concert the tickets sales, which had been average for that concert went way up," he said. "Many programs in the Boston season are broadcast," he pointed out. "And as a result subscriptions always increase."

Moving mack to expansion once more Leinsdorf made it clear tha he was not thinking in terms of expanding the orchestra or the Tanglewood season. "The Symphony already has a 56 week season if you count the weeks when it bre s up into the Pops Orch ra and the Chamber P yers of the Chamber Orchestra," he said. "We just can't do any more."

"The Boston Symphony pioneered the full-employment year for musicians," Leinsdorf recalled. "Our founder realized the necessity of keeping his musicians employed and that is why Pops were instituted."

"Other orchestras are just now following suit," Leinsdorf said.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
AUG 20 1966

As I Hear It

1936-1966-1996 (?)

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

TOMORROW afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have completed 31 summers in the Berkshires. The Berkshire festivals had started two years before but Henry Hadley, the founder and first conductor, had been in failing health and a replacement was sought. Hadley had used the New York Philharmonic Orchestra after it had finished its Stadium series. In 1936, the BSO and its musical director, the internationally eminent conductor Serge Koussevitzky, came to play three concerts in one weekend under a tent on the old Westinghouse estate on the Lenox-Lee road.

* * *

THE FOLLOWING year they came to the estate of Tanglewood overlooking Stockbridge Bowl and, still under canvas, played six programs over two weekends. The storm which necessitated canceling a concert in progress and the subsequent ultimatum of Koussevitzky—a permanent structure or no concerts—is by now generally known history, as is the magic accumulation of the necessary funds and the erection of the Shed, in which the 1938 concerts and all subsequent festivals were held.

The 1936 arrival of the Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky was much more than a purely local event. It marked a milestone in musical history, for it was the first time a metropolitan orchestra, and certainly one of the BSO's stature, had moved its full complement of musicians and its main musical director to a comparatively bucolic setting to play the same type of program it used on its home grounds. All other preceding and similar ventures had been on a, so to speak, less serious plane. The first chair men did not participate, or a substitute conductor took over, and the programs were a little on the popular side. But not so with the Berkshire festivals. Hence Tanglewood, as it is better known now all over the world, became a unique undertaking.

SYMPHONY HALL
Sunday Afternoon, December 12, 1915, at 3.30

CONCERT IN AID OF THE PENSION FUND
OF THE
Boston
Symphony Orchestra
Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor

PROGRAMME

TSCHAIKOWSKY . . . Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Op. 64
I. Andante
II. Andante cantabile, con alcuna licenza
III. Valse: Allegro moderato
IV. Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace

STRAUSS . . . Waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube"

LALO . . . Suite, "Namouna"
1. Prelude
2. Serenade
3. Parade de foire
4. Fête foraine

ROSSINI . . . Overture, "William Tell"

Tickets, $1, $1.50, $2. At sale at Box Office

A 1915 BSO program

* * *

THE SCHOOL, the Berkshire Music Center, or the academy, as its founder, Koussevitzky, liked to call it, became a feature which magnified and compounded the value and importance of the festival far beyond the mere repetition of the orchestral repertory, as loftily performed as it was. In Europe, Tanglewood is known for its "Academy" rather than its concerts; its fame rests on the students who have come here from all over the world and have returned to their native haunts to infect their colleagues, students and audiences with all they have learned and acquired on our doorstep.

But a significant and even ominous thread appears in the three-decade fabric. A glance at the first programs reveals, overlooking the smaller compositions, that in 1936 the Bostonians played symphonies of Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky. In 1937 appear, in addition to those of 1936, the names of Mozart, Ravel, Wagner, Schubert, Stravinsky, Franck and Haydn—not insignificant composers, by any measurement. Prokofieff and Debussy show up in the next two years.

* * *

BUT LET'S LOOK at the schedule of the year now ending. With the exception of Bruckner and Mahler, 19th century and pre-World War I, respectively, no major composition written since then has been played. No one is finding fault with all the immortals whose music we have heard this summer and all the previous summers. We are not tiring of Shakespeare, but what has become of musical invention, imagination and inspiration in the last half-century?

There is little music written for orchestra currently. The new 12-tone system does not apply well to large ensembles. Furthermore, there is a trend to electronic music and a detour from, if not an abandonment of, the instruments used in today's orchestras in the music now being written. Will audiences of 5,000 to 15,000 come to Tanglewood in 1996 to hear Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky et al? We hazard no opinion.

* * *

THE DISMAYING factor in the matter of programs is to see that the Boston programs of 50 years ago included many of the same composers as are being used today. A Pension Fund concert program of 1915 which happened to come to hand recently showed that the BSO played the Rossini "William Tell" overture exactly as was played at Tanglewood at this season's Pension Fund concert. The remainder of that old program used a Tchaikovsky symphony, "the" Strauss Waltz, (the Blue Danube, of course) and a now forgotten suite of the French composer Lalo, who is now remembered only for one violin concerto.

Symphony Hall in Boston is proud of the list of subscribers it claims, which includes many who have occupied the exact same seats all their lives, in some cases extending to scores of years. This would also mean that they have heard the exact same programs while occupying those same seats. I have heard every concert ever played in the Berkshire Festivals, starting in 1934, with the exception of one evening when I played hookey to go hear Casals at Marlboro. Fortunately, the repertory is played by a succession of conductors. Of course, the personnel of the orchestra changes and we now listen occasionally with blinding lights in our eyes or disturbing airplane drones in our ears, and even, as at the Fromm concert last Tuesday night, evidence of the presence of a mephitic mammal (so-called out of deference to the fastidious Boston ladies) in the area.

* * *

URBAN RENEWAL is the rallying cry nowadays for all who want to sweep out the old and trite. Is music not due for its own "urban renewal"?

Travelers keep going back to Salzburg and Bayreuth for certain definite objectives. Erich Leinsdorf, the incumbent Boston musical director, has added opera in concert form to his Tanglewood repertory, and the possibilities of that tangent are wide and handsome. He has shown a great curiosity in all current music streams and what he may have in mind is not yet apparent; however, it might be amusing to make a memo on your 1996 calendar: "What does Ozawa plan to play for us this year?"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
AUG 22 1966

Music: Traditional Tanglewood Finale

Beethoven 9th Restored to Its Climactic Place

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

LEE, Mass., Aug. 21—For some years, it had been the custom to end the Berkshire Music Festival with a Sunday afternoon performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony. Last summer, the custom went by the boards, when Wagner's "Lohengrin" all of it, was spread over the weekend, an act at a time. Today the old custom was restored, bringing sighs of relief to the traditionalists. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony in Beethovens monumental work. The soloists were Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul.

For the most part, the performances of this final weekend were conventional, but each can and have one wonder. If there was a little unusual in this afternoon, it was Verdi's "Te Deum," that short but beautiful, simple and intense choral work of the composer's old age. It was a more fitting accompaniment to the Ninth Symphony than the Beethoven symphony or overture that is nearly always juxtaposed.

•

For the Verdi is a choral work that, like the last movement of the Ninth, breathes humanity and compassion. Tightly organized, not extravagant in its resources, it has no solos, except for two phrases toward the end that come from within the chorus, and it is a long way from the melodramatic splendors of the Verdi Requiem. Verdi himself was a freethinker, but the "Te Deum" has the kind of inner passion and belief that is infinitely bigger than conventional religious mouthings.

It was extremely well sung by the festival chorus, the group of students at the Berkshire Music Center, and was conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf with characteristic clarity and intelligence. The music proceeded in a straight line, without any attempt at expressive devices. This is a score that has no use for romantic frills or the extroversion of Italian opera, and Mr. Leinsdorf wisely avoided both.

Erich Leinsdorf

In a weekend that contained the Bruckner Fourth Symphony, the Brahms Fourth, the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" and the two Liszt piano concertos, there were two works that call for special discussion. Both were Liszt works for piano and orchestra, and both are seldom encountered any more — the Fantasy on Themes from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and the "Totentanz."

The Fantasy caused something of an amused sensation when it was resurrected here two summers ago. Jorge Bolet was the pianist then as he was again Saturday night. That summer, Mr. Leinsdorf programed Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" in its entirety, and he thought it would be interesting to present Liszt's commentary on it for piano and orchestra. It had not been played in public for generations, though oldtimers at least knew it from an old Petri recording.

•

It is Liszt pretty much at his worst, and it is so bad it turns out the highest of high camp — a wonderful chromo that can be listened to with a most satisfactory feeling of superiority. Its old-fashioned bravura rings magnificently false, and when the silly "Turkish March" arrives, all embroidered and dress-up, there are audience grins all over the place. And so it turns out great fun. It is interesting to note that Mr. Leinsdorf did not conduct it in its entirety. The "tempo di marcia" section was cut. Perhaps the serious Mr. Leinsdorf could take just so much and no more.

Miss Darre Is a Soloist in Weekend's Events

But the "Totentanz" is an entirely different kettle of fish. It is a set of variations on the "Dies Irae" and represents Liszt at his most flamboyant, his most daring, his most exciting. This, too, has its old-fashioned moments, but the work has authentic sweep in the hands of a big virtuoso, and some of its harmonies are breathtaking. Liszt was one of the most daring innovators of his age, and in a way even greater as a seminal force than Wagner.

Jeanne-Marie Darré was the pianist on Friday evening, and she also played the Liszt E flat Concerto. She played both works with the particular elan that is hers and hers alone. Her piano playing has immense vitality, propelled by a phenomenal technique. But she is made of blood, bone and brain, like most of us, and she is not a pileddriver. Mr. Leinsdorf used the entire string section of the Boston Symphony, and often seemed to forget that there was a soloist. Nobody could play through the racket, and in the "Totentanz," and somewhat less in the concerto, Miss Darré resorted to desperate pounding.

Liszt did not have this kind of orchestra in mind, and Mr. Leinsdorf should have cut his forces, sending some violinists home for the night. Even the powerful Mr. Bolet, in the second concerto, had his troubles coming through. Otherwise, the accompaniments were perfectly dovetailed with the keyboard, and both pianists turned in superior examples of romantic playing, Miss Darré with typical bounce and ebullience, Mr. Bolet with eloquence and style.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
AUG 20 1966

Quotes

When I prepare for a piece for performance here at Tanglewood I don't let anyone play a note without his knowing why he's playing it, and I want that to become part of the thinking of every performing musician.

—Gunther Schuller, musician and composer, recently named head of the New England Conservatory of Music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910
AUG 21 1966

Music

Hub Musician Recalls Conductors' Approaches

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

For the past 29 years, Harry Shapiro has played French horn with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under three main conductors — Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, and Erich Leinsdorf.

During those years there has been a large number of guest conductors. To name but a few - Stokowski, Boult, Markevich, Erhling, Monteux, Schippers, Ormandy, Oawa, Skrowaczewski and Steinberg.

With each the approach has been different. Also the sound, atmosphere, quality, interpretation, and the players' reactions.

Each time the orchestra faces a new conductor, it soon knows what it's up against.

"You can't fool 105 men," says Shapiro.

What do you look for in any conductor? The most obvious is the least important, according to Shapiro.

"It isn't cues, unless the work is inordinately confusing. We look for inspiration, along with a musical style and beat."

HARRY SHAPIRO, FRENCH HORN PLAYER
With the Boston Symphony 29 years.

Preparation Important

Rumors and theories have always been prolific about Boston Symphony's attitude toward its new "permanent" conductor.

Shapiro played under Koussevitzky for 12 years.

"Preparation was very important to him, as to us," he recalls. He had certain ideas of what the composer intended. He didn't have the scholastic background to make us fully understand him. He had to express himself through his own personality and magnetism. Koussevitzky had a natural flair for conducting, but the music always came out the same."

The picture was vastly different when Munch took over.

"He considered us a 'pro' orchestra and would not treat us like students," Shapiro explains. "He wanted music to speak for itself: Tempos changed from rehearsal to performance, and he tended to play too fast. He so put us on our toes so that we could follow any beat and tempo at any time."

Shapiro played under Munch for 13 years, until Leinsdorf was appointed Boston Symphony conductor in 1962.

"With Leinsdorf, everything must be done perfectly at rehearsal, and he will repeat until it is so. He's very thorough and will stop us for the slighest error. There's very little digression between rehearsal and performance. Leinsdorf times everything, and it comes out within seconds each time."

The French horn is one of the orchestra's most "temperamental" instruments. Shapiro opines that not many conductors are not sympathetic to this.

For example, the horns of the Boston Symphony are frequently placed directly in front of the timpani and other percussion instruments.

"To start with, it's an imperfect instrument," says Shapiro. "The valves create a problem, also the construction and weight. Intonation is the real crux of the difficulty. We are forever adjusting lips and hand in bell."

Furthermore, the horn tone does not reach the conductor directly but by a detour to the rear. So the horn player must anticipate the beat slightly to be with the others.

Shapiro has witnessed amusing and dramatic relationships between famed soloists and conductors.

He identifies Rachmaninoff and Heifetz as two whom most conductors feared.

One former Boston Symphony conductor was "scared stiff" of Rachmaninoff because he knew him as his former professor.

"One time we rehearsed with Rachmaninoff," Shapiro recalls. "It was his Second Piano Concerto. When we'd gone ano Cncerto. When we'd gone through it once, the conductor said to repeat the whole thing."

Rachmaninoff got up from the piano.

"So far as I'm concerned," he said, "the orchestra knows it I know it. I'm going home."

Shapiro first knew Leinsdorf when the latter used to come to Boston, from the Metropolitan Opera, to visit friends. They next met when they both served in the same band training unit of the U.S. Army. Pianist Victor Babin, was in the same outfit.

The Shapiros live in Needham. They have two daughters. Emily is with the Peace Corps in Brazil. Laura is a junior at Radcliffe College.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619

AUG 22 1966

Music: Traditional Tanglewood Finale

Beethoven 9th Restored to Its Climactic Place

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

LEE, Mass., Aug. 21—For some years, it had been the custom to end the Berkshire Music Festival with a Sunday afternoon performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony. Last summer, the custom went by the boards, when Wagner's "Lohengrin," all of it, was spread over the weekend, an act at a time. Today the old custom was restored, bringing sighs of relief to the tradition-minded. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony in Beethovens monumental work. The soloists were Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul.

For the most part, the repertoire on the final weekend was conventional, but each program did have one work that was a little unusual. This afternoon, it was Verdi's "Te Deum," that short but beautiful, simple and intense choral work of the composer's old age. It was a more fitting accompaniment to the Ninth Symphony than the Beethoven symphony or overture that is nearly always juxtaposed.

•

For the Verdi is a choral work that, like the last movement of the Ninth, breathes humanity and compassion. Tightly organized, not extravagant in its resources, it has no solos, except for two phrases toward the end that come from within the chorus, and it is a long way from the melodramatic splendors of the Verdi Requiem. Verdi himself was a freethinker, but the "Te Deum" has the kind of inner passion and belief that is infinitely bigger than conventional religious mouthings.

It was extremely well sung by the festival chorus, the group of students at the Berkshire Music Center, and was conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf with characteristic clarity and intelligence. The music proceeded in a straight line, without any attempt at expressive devices. This is a score that has no use for romantic frills or the extroversion of Italian opera, and Mr. Leinsdorf wisely avoided both.

Erich Leinsdorf

Whitestone

In a weekend that contained the Bruckner Fourth Symphony, the Brahms Fourth, the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" and the two Liszt piano concertos, there were two works that call for special discussion. Both were Liszt works for piano and orchestra, and both are seldom encountered any more — the Fantasy on Themes From Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and the "Totentanz."

The Fantasy caused something of an amused sensation when it was resurrected here two summers ago. Jorge Bolet was the pianist then as he was again Saturday night. That summer, Mr. Leinsdorf programed Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" in its entirety, and he thought it would be interesting to present Liszt's commentary on it for piano and orchestra. It had not been played in public for generations, though old-timers at least knew it from an old Petri recording.

•

It is Liszt pretty much at his worst, and it is so bad it turns out the highest of high camp — a wonderful chromo that can be listened to with a most satisfactory feeling of superiority. Its old-fashioned bravura rings magnificently false, and when the silly "Turkish March" arrives, all embroidered and dress-up, there are audience grins all over the place. And so it turns out great fun. It is interesting to note that Mr. Leinsdorf did not conduct it in its entirety. The "tempo di marcia" section was cut. Perhaps the serious Mr. Leinsdorf could take just so much and no more.

Miss Darre Is a Soloist in Weekend's Events

But the "Totentanz" is an entirely different kettle of fish. It is a set of variations on the "Dies Irae" and represents Liszt at his most flamboyant, his most daring, his most exciting. This, too, has its old-fashioned moments, but the work has authentic sweep in the hands of a big virtuoso, and some of its harmonies are breathtaking. Liszt was one of the most daring innovators of his age, and in a way even greater as a seminal force than Wagner.

Jeanne-Marie Darré was the pianist on Friday evening, and she also played the Liszt E flat Concerto. She played both works with the particular elan that is hers and hers alone. Her piano playing has immense vitality, propelled by a phenomenal technique. But she is made of blood, bone and brain, like most of us, and she is not a pilediver. Mr. Leinsdorf used the entire string section of the Boston Symphony, and often seemed to forget that there was a soloist. Nobody could play through the racket, and in the "Totentanz," and somewhat less in the concerto, Miss Darré resorted to desperate pounding.

Liszt did not have this kind of orchestra in mind, and Mr. Leinsdorf should have cut his forces, sending some violinists home for the night. Even the powerful Mr. Bolet, in the second concerto, had his troubles coming through. Otherwise, the accompaniments were perfectly dovetailed with the keyboard, and both pianists turned in superior examples of romantic playing. Miss Darré with typical bounce and ebullience, Mr. Bolet with eloquence and style.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

AUG 20 1966

Quotes

When I prepare for a piece for performance here at Tanglewood, I don't let anyone play a note without his knowing why he's playing it, and I want that to become part of the thinking of every performing musician.

—Gunther Schuller, musician and composer, recently named head of the New England Conservatory of Music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910

AUG 21 1966

Music

Hub Musician Recalls Conductors' Approaches

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

For the past 29 years, Harry Shapiro has played French horn with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under three main conductors - Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, and Erich Leinsdorf.

During those years there has been a large number of guest conductors. To name but a few - Stokowski, Boult, Markevich, Erhling, Monteux, Schippers, Ormandy, Oawa, Skrowaczewski and Steinberg.

With each the approach has been different. Also the sound, atmosphere, quality, interpretation, and the players' reactions.

Each time the orchestra faces a new conductor, it soon knows what it's up against.

"You can't fool 105 men," says Shapiro.

What do you look for in any conductor? The most obvious is the least important, according to Shapiro.

"It isn't cues, unless the work is inordinately confusing. We look for inspiration, along with a musical style and beat."

HARRY SHAPIRO, FRENCH HORN PLAYER
With the Boston Symphony 29 years.

Preparation Important

Rumors and theories have always been prolific about Boston Symphony's attitude toward its new "permanent" conductor.

Shapiro played under Koussevitzky for 12 years.

"Preparation was very important to him, as to us," he recalls. He had certain ideas of what the composer intended. He didn't have the scholastic background to make us fully understand him. He had to express himself through his own personality and magnetism. Koussevitzky had a natural flair for conducting, but the music always came out the same."

The picture was vastly different when Munch took over.

"He considered us a 'pro' orchestra and would not treat us like students," Shapiro explains. "He wanted music to speak for itself: Tempos changed from rehearsal to performance, and he tended to play too fast. He so put us on our toes so that we could follow any beat and tempo at any time."

Shapiro played under Munch for 13 years, until Leinsdorf was appointed Boston Symphony conductor in 1962.

"With Leinsdorf, everything must be done perfectly at rehearsal, and he will repeat until it is so. He's very thorough and will stop us for the slighest error. There's very little digression between rehearsal and performance. Leinsdorf times everything, and it comes out within seconds each time."

The French horn is one of the orchestra's most "temperamental" instruments. Shapiro opines that not many conductors are not sympathetic to this.

For example, the horns of the Boston Symphony are frequently placed directly in front of the timpani and other percussion instruments.

"To start with, it's an imperfect instrument," says Shapiro. "The valves create a problem, also the construction and weight. Intonation is the real crux of the difficulty. We are forever adjusting lips and hand in bell."

Furthermore, the horn tone does not reach the conductor directly but by a detour to the rear. So the horn player must anticipate the beat slightly to be with the others.

Shapiro has witnessed amusing and dramatic relationships between famed soloists and conductors.

He identifies Rachmaninoff and Heifetz as two whom most conductors feared.

One former Boston Symphony conductor was "scared stiff" of Rachmaninoff because he knew him as his former professor.

"One time we rehearsed with Rachmaninoff," Shapiro recalls. "It was his Second Piano Concerto. When we'd gone ano Cncerto. When we'd gone through it once, the conductor said to repeat the whole thing."

Rachmaninoff got up from the piano.

"So far as I'm concerned," he said, "the orchestra knows it I know it. I'm going home."

Shapiro first knew Leinsdorf when the latter used to come to Boston, from the Metropolitan Opera, to visit friends. They next met when they both served in the same band training unit of the U.S. Army. Pianist Victor Babin, was in the same outfit.

The Shapiros live in Needham. They have two daughters. Emily is with the Peace Corps in Brazil. Laura is a junior at Radcliffe College.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 22 1966

Whitestone

RETIRING MEMBERS of Boston Symphony Orchestra chat with director Erich Leinsdorf, center. Others, left to right, are Rosario Mazzeo, K. Vinal Smith, Henri Girard and Osbourne McConathy. Two other retiring members of the orchestra, Georges Moleux and Richard Burgin, could not be present when this picture was taken.

Six in BSO Honored on Retirement

LENOX — Six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are retiring at the end of the orchestra's 85th season. All of them were honored recently at a traditional retirement luncheon at Tanglewood, at which Erich Leinsdorf, music director, presided with membership of the Orchestra attending.

Mr. Leinsdorf presented four of the musicians with watches and gave a Paul Revere bowl to Rosario Mazzeo, personnel manager. A watch was presented to Richard Burgin, former associate conductor, when he retired at the end of the season.

The retiring players have been members of the Orchestra for a total of 213 years. Georges Moleux, first bass player, has been with the orchestra since 1930. Henri Girard, bass player and Richard Burgin, former associate conductor, both joined the orchestra in 1920. Osbourne McConathy, horn player, joined the orchestra in 1944. K. Vinal Smith, tuba player, joined the orchestra in 1936. Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player and personnel manager, joined in 1933.

Most of these players have performed under the direction of Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch during their tenures as Music Director, and for the past four years have performed under Mr. Leinsdorf.

Jascha Silberstein, cellist, has been released from his contract to assume a new musical post as principal cellist of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404

AUG 30 1966

Letters to the Editor

Tanglewood

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

Tanglewood is made for music; it was given for music; it is music — the lawns, the lake, the trees, the smell of pines and new-mown grass, the kind of quiet that is there between the sounds of the voices and the instruments — almost the best music — then the care in training for best performance and enjoyment of music; the selection of material; the wonderful shell, which permits people to hear music true, without distortion or artificial amplification.

What an experience! It makes me know better what is the definition of music for myself, at least. May we not say it is the visible, audible expression of the beauty, rhythm, vitality of life itself?

To appreciate it as well as to perform it one must ready oneself; one must come to it with open arms and heart and ears and mind with enthusiasm, almost as one awaits a lover.

Tanglewood brings so many of the elements there to encourage such an attitude and we go away blessed.

Mrs. FRED HEIDENSON.
344 West 72nd St.,
New York, N.Y.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 55,425

AUG 27 1966

Tanglewood Attendance Drops 5,809

Over at Tanglewood this year, attendance dropped from the previous year by 5,809 . . . from 242,005 to 236,196. However, ticket receipts rose from $605,718 to $625,944.

The drop in attendance, judging from the report of the music center in Lenox, Mass., was almost entirely in the attendance at the eight open rehearsals.

The major increase in attendance this year was in the 24 Boston Symphony Orchestra programs, with 4,000 more attending in 1966 than in 1965.

The Tanglewood festival this year included some 24 concerts in the Music Shed plus 25 performances by members of the Berkshire Music Center, the school affiliated with Tanglewood.

The final concert on Aug. 21 brought to a close the 85th season of the Boston Symphony and was the 211th performance by the orchestra since their season opened in October 1965.

It was their 30th season at Tanglewood.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099

AUG 28 1966

Symphony To Retire 6 Players

Six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are retiring at the end of the orchestra's 85th season. All of them were honored recently at the traditional retirement luncheon at Tanglewood, at which Erich Leinsdorf, music director, presided with membership of the Orchestra attending.

Mr. Leinsdorf presented four of the musicians with watches and a Paul Revere Bowl to Rosario Mazzeo, personnel manager of the orchestra. A watch was presented to Richard Burgin, former associate conductor, when he retired at the end of the season.

The retiring players have been members of the orchestra for a total of 213 years. Georges Moleux, first bass player, has been with the orchestra since 1930. Henri Girard, bass player, and Richard Burgin both joined the orchestra in 1920. Osbourne McConathy, horn player, joined the orchestra in 1944. K. Vinal Smith, tuba player, joined the orchestra in 1936. Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player and personnel manager, joined in 1933.

Most of these players have performed under the direction of Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, and Charles Munch during their tenures as music director, and for the past four years have performed under Leinsdorf.

Jascha Silberstein, cellist, has been released from his contract to assume a new musical post as principal cellist of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra.

RETIRING MUSICIANS from the Boston Symphony Orchestra were honored recently at Tanglewood, Lenox. From left, Rosario Mazzeo, K. Vinal Smith, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, Henri Girard and Osbourne McConathy. Not present at the time the picture was taken were Georges Moleux and Richard Burgin.

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378

AUG 25 1966

Red Cottage in the Berkshires

Where Hawthorne Told "Tanglewood Tales"

By Joseph Kaye
(The Star's New York Correspondent)

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS—The crowds have gone from this home of a great summer music festival. The gates of Tanglewood are closed; the huge concert shed, and the smaller hall and the various studios are battened down for the winter.

The nearby town of Lenox has resumed its quiet, tree-shaded existence as a suburb of Pittsfield. The New England autumn soon will arrive and give its palette of colors to the forested Berkshire hills in the background.

But there is a survivor in Tanglewood for anyone to become acquainted with in all seasons. This is a little red cottage within the complex of the Berkshire music festival. During the summer it is used as a studio.

But the real purpose of this small building is to remind the world that it is a replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne and his family lived for about a year and a half, and that it was in this house that he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," one of this country's celebrated literary works, as well as "The Wonder Book" for the young. The original house burned, and the replica was built by the National Federation of Music Clubs some 20 years ago.

Wrote a Sequel

In this house, too, Hawthorne outlined his "Tanglewood Tales," a sequel to "The Wonder Book." Concerning this volume there is a story that seems little known.

Close to Tanglewood is an old house, set deep back in a wooded area. It is approached by a long driveway; and if it is late in the day, and the shadows from the tall trees that border the drive are heavy, one is impressed with a spirit of mystery, ideal for the setting of a novel.

This house was built by Samuel Ward, a friend of Emerson and of Hawthorne. In the living room was a large marble fireplace and before it many notables gathered to hear music. It has been said that Fanny Kemble, an actress, sang ballads during these salon performances.

The Wards had moved out of the house before the Hawthornes made the area their home, and it was occupied by the Tappans, also acquaintances of the novelist. It was they who rented him the farmhouse at a small fee. Hawthorne, enchanted with the surroundings, named the estate Tanglewood.

Stories for Children

Hawthorne visited the Tappans and often told youngsters there, sitting in awed silence in front of the marble fireplace, the stories that later became "Tanglewood Tales."

This origin was told to this correspondent some years ago by the then owner of the old Ward house, Mrs. William Bullard, an elderly, aristocratic-appearing woman. She led me through several rooms to show me the fireplace, and to say that it was here in the very long ago, that Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived "Tanglewood Tales." Mrs. Bullard died about five years ago, at the age of 92. The house was bought recently by a New Yorker, John Mason Harding.

The replica of the old Hawthorne house has a neglected look about it; but if you look closely you will see the foundations are those that supported the original house, and to the left, almost hidden by the grass, is the remnant of the pump that supplied the Hawthornes with water. A tablet identifies the cottage.

Liked the View

It was the view from the farmhouse that enraptured Hawthorne, not the little building, which he thought was among the ugliest he had ever seen. He occasionally called it the Red Shanty. But it had an orchard to one side and at the rear. And the view Hawthorne once described thus:

"There is a glen between this house and the lake (nearby) through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument mountain looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl."

Hawthorne was so absorbed by this landscape that he said in a particularly entranced moment, "I cannot write in the presence of that view."

Hawthorne came to Tanglewood with his wife, their daughter, Una, and their son, Julian, who also became a writer of some distinction. In that red farmhouse the Hawthornes' other daughter, Rose, was born.

The entire Berkshire area was at that time a summer resort and some of America's millionaires had palatial homes there. Andrew Carnegie, George Westinghouse and the Vanderbilts were among these. Titled men and women, ambassadors and men prominent in other fields were in the Berkshires. Herman Melville was in Pittsfield for a time, and became friends with Hawthorne. Oliver Wendell Holms visited him and so did other men and women of letters.

Shy With Strangers

Nevertheless Hawthorne was a reserved man. His son, Julian, reported that his father was so shy that one day when he was walking to the post-office "he leaped over a stone wall to avoid meeting some of the villagers."

Though nature was beautiful in the Tanglewood area, the winters were severe, too severe to please the Hawthornes, and they left about 18 months after they had settled there.

Later most of the other literary celebrities and the millionaires and the notables left, too. The mansions one by one were emptied, later to be used as schools or religious institutions.

As Summer Site

But the Berkshires and the Tanglewood estate were destined for a revival. The Boston Symphony established Tanglewood as its summer festival home 30 years ago. Now not merely the relatively few wealthy and literary celebrities come to the Berkshires, but people from all over the United States and other countries, to hear music of the highest order.

Should you, too, visit Berkshires, either summer or winter, pause to take a look at the modest red house, the likeness of the home where an American genius worked at a masterpiece.

This is the replica of the cottage occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne when he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables." The original house was destroyed by fire.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

AUG 21 1966

Composers' Studio Dedication Saturday

The project of constructing a studio for composers at Seranak in Lenox, estate of Serge Koussevitsky, late Boston Symphony conductor and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, has been sponsored jointly by the National Federation of Music Clubs and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation.

The studio, which will provide creative musicians with peaceful and natural surroundings, will provide an opportunity for composers to work closely with the musical resources at nearby Tanglewood.

A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be at the dedication of the studio on Saturday. Aaron Copland will deliver the dedication address on behalf of the Koussevitsky Music Foundation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 432,648

AUG 21 1966

them.

MRS. M. ASHLEY CLARK

Enjoyed Tanglewood

LINCOLN —The most delightful and cultural event I have seen on television was "An Afternoon at Tanglewood" on Sunday telecast live, in color, from the Berkshires.

The lush greenery of the beautiful 210 acre estate as the camera roamed the grounds, the red podium, the musician's white suits, the brilliant blue of violinist Masuko Yushioda's gown as she played the Prokofiev concerto were all lovely to behold.

The guest soloists, Miss Yushioda and Misha Dichter, both talented, winsome people, and winners of the 3d International Competition, International Tschaikovsky Competition, were interviewed during intermission and we learned a bit about their lives and hopes. The interview with Erich Leinsdorf, the conductor, was simply enchanting for here is an utterly charming down-to-earth gentleman. We learned a little about the origin of Tanglewood itself.

MRS. THEODORE GUNARIS

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 335,705 SUN. 392,378

AUG 25 1966

Red Cottage in the Berkshires

Where Hawthorne Told "Tanglewood Tales"

By Joseph Kaye
(The Star's New York Correspondent)

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS—The crowds have gone from this home of a great summer music festival. The gates of Tanglewood are closed; the huge concert shed, and the smaller hall and the various studios are battened down for the winter.

The nearby town of Lenox has resumed its quiet, tree-shaded existence as a suburb of Pittsfield. The New England autumn soon will arrive and give its palette of colors to the forested Berkshire hills in the background.

But there is a survivor in Tanglewood for anyone to become acquainted with in all seasons. This is a little red cottage within the complex of the Berkshire music festival. During the summer it is used as a studio.

But the real purpose of this small building is to remind the world that it is a replica of the house in which Nathaniel Hawthorne and his family lived for about a year and a half, and that it was in this house that he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," one of this country's celebrated literary works, as well as "The Wonder Book" for the young. The original house burned and the replica was built by the National Federation of Music Clubs some 20 years ago.

Wrote a Sequel

In this house, too, Hawthorne outlined his "Tanglewood Tales," a sequel to "The Wonder Book." Concerning this volume there is a story that seems little known.

Close to Tanglewood is an old house, set deep back in a wooded area. It is approached by a long driveway; and if it is late in the day, and the shadows from the tall trees that border the drive are heavy, one is impressed with a spirit of mystery, ideal for the setting of a novel.

This house was built by Samuel Ward, a friend of Emerson and of Hawthorne. In the living room was a large marble fireplace and before it many notables gathered to hear music. It has been said that Fanny Kemble, an actress, sang ballads during these salon performances.

The Wards had moved out of the house before the Hawthornes made the area their home, and it was occupied by the Tappans, also acquaintances of the novelist. It was they who rented him the farmhouse at a small fee. Hawthorne, enchanted with the surroundings, named the estate Tanglewood.

Stories for Children

Hawthorne visited the Tappans and often told youngsters there, sitting in awed silence in front of the marble fireplace, the stories that later became "Tanglewood Tales."

This origin was told to this correspondent some years ago by the then owner of the old Ward house, Mrs. William Bullard, an elderly, aristocratic-appearing woman. She led me through several rooms to show me the fireplace, and to say that it was here in the very long ago, that Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived "Tanglewood Tales." Mrs. Bullard died about five years ago, at the age of 92. The house was bought recently by a New Yorker, John Mason Harding.

The replica of the old Hawthorne house has a newish look about it; but if you look closely you will see the foundations are those that supported the original house, and to the left, almost hidden by the grass, is a remnant of the pump that supplied the Hawthornes with water. A tablet identifies the cottage.

Liked the View

It was the view from the farmhouse that enraptured Hawthorne, not the little building, which he thought was among the ugliest he had ever seen. He occasionally called it the Red Shanty. But it had an orchard to one side and at the rear. And the view Hawthorne once described thus:

"There is a glen between this house and the lake (nearby) through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument mountain looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl."

Hawthorne was so absorbed by this landscape that he said in a particularly entranced moment, "I cannot write in the presence of that view."

Hawthorne came to Tanglewood with his wife, their daughter, Una, and their son, Julian, who also became a writer of some distinction. In that red farmhouse the Hawthornes' other daughter, Rose, was born.

The entire Berkshire area was at that time a summer resort and some of America's millionaires had palatial homes there. Andrew Carnegie, George Westinghouse and the Vanderbilts were among these. Titled men and women, ambassadors and men prominent in other fields were in the Berkshires. Herman Melville was in Pittsfield for a time, and became friends with Hawthorne. Oliver Wendell Holms visited him and so did other men and women of letters.

Shy With Strangers

Nevertheless Hawthorne was a reserved man. His son, Julian, reported that his father was so shy that one day when he was walking to the post-office "he leaped over a stone wall to avoid meeting some of the villagers."

Though nature was beautiful in the Tanglewood area, the winters were severe, too severe to please the Hawthornes, and they left about 18 months after they had settled there.

Later most of the other literary celebrities and the millionaires and the notables left, too. The mansions one by one were emptied, later to be used as schools or religious institutions.

As Summer Site

But the Berkshires and the Tanglewood estate were destined for a revival. The Boston Symphony established Tanglewood as its summer festival home 30 years ago. Now not merely the relatively few wealthy and literary celebrities come to the Berkshires, but people from all over the United States and other countries, to hear music of the highest order.

Should you, too, visit Berkshires; either summer or winter, pause to take a look at the modest red house, the likeness of the home where an American genius worked at a masterpiece.

This is the replica of the cottage occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne when he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables." The original house was destroyed by fire.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508

JUL 21 1966

Composers' Studio Dedication Saturday

The project of constructing a studio for composers at Seranak in Lenox, estate of Serge Koussevitsky, late Boston Symphony conductor and founder of the Berkshire Music Center, has been sponsored jointly by the National Federation of Music Clubs and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation.

The studio, which will provide creative musicians with peaceful and natural surroundings, will provide an opportunity for composers to work closely with the musical resources at nearby Tanglewood.

A representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be at the dedication of the studio on Saturday. Aaron Copland will deliver the dedication address on behalf of the Koussevitsky Music Foundation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 432,648

AUG 21 1966

MRS. M. ASHLEY CLARK

Enjoyed Tanglewood

LINCOLN —The most delightful and cultural event I have seen on television was "An Afternoon at Tanglewood" on Sunday telecast live, in color, from the Berkshires.

The lush greenery of the beautiful 210 acre estate as the camera roamed the grounds, the red podium, the musician's white suits, the brilliant blue of violinist Masuko Yushioda's gown as she played the Prokofiev concerto were all lovely to behold.

The guest soloists, Miss Yushioda and Misha Dichter, both talented, winsome people, and winners of the 3d International Competition, International Tschaikovsky Competition, were interviewed during intermission and we learned a bit about their lives and hopes. The interview with Erich Leinsdorf, the conductor, was simply enchanting for here is an utterly charming down-to-earth gentleman. We learned a little about the origin of Tanglewood itself.

MRS. THEODORE GUNARIS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
SEP 3 1966

As I Hear It

Conductor

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

THERE IS probably no vocation in all the world so overrated as that of an orchestral conductor. An orchestra can function (granted that how well could be a debatable point) with the principal player, the concertmaster, giving directions from his seat among the musicians. A leader who does not actually make music becomes progressively more necessary as the music being performed becomes more contemporary, because of the exceptions from regularity which constitute the prevailing procedure in composition.

* * *

IF I WERE teaching composition, I would tell my pupils to end whatever they proposed to write with about eight or 16 measures of furious pounding on the kettledrums. It is an infallibly incendiary plan. The audience will go wild with enthusiasm, mixed with frenzy, and applaud—whom?—the conductor. He will take bows in any of several manners of humility and ask the players to rise to share the applause with him, practically saying, "Now listen, not all of this is due me."

The post of conductor is not a sinecure, by any means, although such works as the Bach Brandenburg concertos and most of the Haydn and Mozart symphonies and music of that era and before can be played very acceptably and creditably without an individual uniquely swinging a baton. As music gets more involved and counterpoint more labyrinthine, the need for a traffic cop becomes more apparent. But in the main, the responsibilities of a conductor are not justly appraised.

* * *

IT HAS BECOME the custom nowadays for most conductors to direct without the score before them. It is no disgrace, nor sign of more or less familiarity with the music, if a score is used; to conduct the Ninth Symphony and "The Magic Flute" without notes is no mean feat, let's give the devil his due. But I have never seen a Shakespearean actor nor an opera singer come on stage with the script in his hand, nor, I imagine, does a surgeon go into the operating room with an anatomical chart before him. After all, as Heine said on his deathbed of his conviction that the Lord would forgive him even though he was an atheist, "That's his metier."

A conductor's main job is executed in the rehearsal room. The basic items of tempo and such details are established there and imparted to the musicians to dispel any possible unforeseen roadturns. The conductor, therefore, should come to the preconcert preparation with definite ideas of how he wants the piece to sound. (Bruckner, whose fourth symphony was played in the last week at Tanglewood, was such a bad conductor that when he insisted on a triple pianissimo from a chorus he was directing, the singers faced him in silence. His face was abeam; he had been listening to his own inner harmony.)

* * *

A RECENT conductor of the Boston Symphony came to rehearsal with no convictions whatsoever about the details of the music at hand and said, "Let's start and see how it sounds." One can imagine how much respect the musicians had for the man. On the other end of the stick, of course, is the martinet whose discipline is that of a slave-driver.

So much of what an able conductor does is not appreciated. For instance, many a composer colors his music by giving a theme to one instrument and then transferring it to another; and when that operation comes off smoothly, with little or no switch apparent or audible, it is most often the result of the conductor's sense of balance and taste.

Precision, per se, is not an especially commendable factor. Any group of experienced musicians can "come in" together with little effort. An orchestral musician is neither an automaton nor a piece of raw material. To play in a major symphony, a man must have gone through years of training; usually, he knows the repertory as well as the conductor. It has been said that every student at St. Cyr, the French military academy, carries a marshal's baton in his knapsack. Just so does many a man in an orchestra carry a conductor's baton in his instrument case.

* * *

THE CONDUCTOR, therefore, who gives every player or section a cue, even in the most familiar symphonies, is indulging in a bit of redundant exhibitionism. It may impress the audience, but it mildly nauseates and humiliates the musicians. The conductor who points now here, now there, in any of "the" 50 most common items of the orchestral repertory, is doing so for the audience and not for the players. Old Pierre Monteux, in his last years, was the least demonstrative of conductors. He'd cast a sly glance here and there once in a while, but he accorded the players the courtesy and the respect of being confident they knew what was expected of them.

Let's not entirely minimize the duties of a conductor. There are a million details he must decide and realize before a performance. Some conductors come to the podium with a minutely prepared plan; others allow a little flexibility, depending on their mood of the moment and the temperature of their inspiration. Every conductor has his own "beat." It can be vehement, or it can be narrow and restrained. Of course, for our tympanist in those last 16 bars, he usually swings as though he were counting Maxie Baer out. In slow movements, though, the trained orchestral man must sense, rather than see, when is the instant for him to start playing. With Koussevitzky—in slow movements—the Bostonians waited until his baton came down to the second button of his vest.

* * *

AT TANGLEWOOD this season, when the concerts were either being recorded or broadcast, there was often an inexplicable wait at the beginning of a program while the conductor looked to the floor before him. The audience may have thought he was waiting for absolute quiet, but actually there was a signal in front of him indicating when the machinery was ready to "take" the performance. Conductors have different methods of starting. Some wait. Others, such as a more youthful Stokowski, used to turn from his greeting to the audience with a first swing of the baton to the orchestra.

Paradoxically, composers are usually not good conductors of their own music. Stravinsky keeps his nose in the scores on which he worked for months and years. Richard Strauss appeared a bit indifferent. Bruckner was said to have lacked a natural gift for the task. There is a great difference in manual technique between leading an orchestra and conducting a chorus. Most choral conductors completely baffle an orchestra with their wild gestures.

* * *

THERE ARE a million pitfalls and sticky spots in music, and a conductor must smooth them out for the players' edification. The irregular rhythms of today are a special trick for a conductor, and no less so for the musicians. The old-time classic, which stayed in one exact rhythmic pattern for a whole movement, is now a thing of the past. And let's not ignore the matter of interpretation, in which a conductor's judgment is used.

The man who in effect says to the orchestra at concert time, "Let's do as we agreed to at the rehearsal," has been more or less superseded by the one who, by his antics, conveys the spirit of the music—gay, exuberant, possibly ennobled one moment, and pleading, sombre, and sad at another. We watch the conductor to understand the music. To sit in the hall with our eyes closed is no longer enough.

The Huntsville Times
HUNTSVILLE, ALA.
D. 52,605 SUN. 49,384
AUG 2 6 1966

Telephone Hour Changes Format

By DEAN GYSEL
Chicago Daily News Service

After 27 years, the Bell Telephone Hour this season is changing the format for its Sunday night programs.

Despite big name performers, the program never caught on when it switched from radio to television in 1959. It did not adjust to a visual medium. The static proscenium-stage productions made it look like other variety shows.

This year, the Telephone Hour will present 15 "musical documentaries," focusing on festivals, performers, special events and movements and ideas in music. The series is presented on alternate Sundays on NBC.

The premiere show Sept. 25 is "A Man's Dream: The Festival of Two Worlds," a visit to Gian-Carlo Menotti's Spoleto festival near Rome. Performers include pianists Sviatoslav Richter and John Browning, mezzo-soprano Shirley Verrett and conductors Zubin Mehta, Thomas Schippers and Werner Torkanowsky.

Other programs include:

—The Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., featuring Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Jane Marsh, the 24-year-old soprano winner of the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow; Soprano Phyllis Curtin and Composer Aaron Copland.

The International Jazz Festival at Comblain-la-Tour, Belgium, with Benny Goodman, Stan Getz, Chuck Berry, Art Farmer and Anito O'Day.

—A musical profile of San Francisco in which the song, "I Left My Heart in San Francisco" will not be heard. Performing will be pianists Peggy and Milton Salkind, the John Handy quintet, Ballerina Linda Meyer, the San Francisco Ballet, San Francisco Opera and the Rock n' roll group, The Jefferson Airplane.

—An Easter Sunday show emanating from Red Rocks Outdoor Amphitheater west of Denver. Against this thousands-year-old setting, selections from Handel's "Messiah" will be sung by the 325 members of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, Soprano Phyllis Curtin, Contralto Maureen Forrester and Richard Lewis.

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 206,715
SEP 9 1966

Lees, Krenek Taking Posts At Peabody

Benjamin Lees, American composer, will return to the Peabody Conservatory of Music as visiting professor of composition for the semester which begins September 26, Dr. Charles Kent, conservatory director, announced today.

Visiting professor of composition in the second semester will be another contemporary composer, Ernst Krenek.

Born in China and educated in California, Mr. Lees studied with George Anthiel and in 1953, at the age of 29, won a Fromm Foundation Award. This was followed by a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1954, a Copley Foundation Award in 1955, a Fulbright Fellowship in 1956 and a UNESCO Award in 1958.

Mr. Lees studied and composed in Europe for several years, returning to teach at the Peabody from 1962 to 1964. During his Baltimore stay his Violin Concerto was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Henryk Szeryng as soloist, his Interlude for String Orchestra received its first performance by the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra and Gary Graffman gave the premiere performance of Piano Sonato No. 4.

Other works by Mr. Lees have been commissioned and performed by the Louisville Orchestra, the Seattle Symphony, the Kansas City Philharmonic and the Philadelphia Chamber Orchestra.

Abroad, the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, the Vienna Symphony and many chamber groups have performed his works. His compositions to date include two symphonies, two piano concertos, "Songs of the Night" for soprano Breve," Concerto for Orchestra, "Visions of Poets" for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, and an and orchestra, "Concertante opera, "The Gilded Cage," as well as numerous works for chamber ensembles and solo piano.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
SEP 3 1966

As I Hear It

Conductor

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

THERE IS probably no vocation in all the world so overrated as that of an orchestral conductor. An orchestra can function (granted that how well could be a debatable point) with the principal player, the concertmaster, giving directions from his seat among the musicians. A leader who does not actually make music becomes progressively more necessary as the music being performed becomes more contemporary, because of the exceptions from regularity which constitute the prevailing procedure in composition.

* * *

IF I WERE teaching composition, I would tell my pupils to end whatever they proposed to write with about eight or 16 measures of furious pounding on the kettledrums. It is an infallibly incendiary plan. The audience will go wild with enthusiasm, mixed with frenzy, and applaud—whom?—the conductor. He will take bows in any of several manners of humility and ask the players to rise to share the applause with him, practically saying, "Now listen, not all of this is due me."

The post of conductor is not a sinecure, by any means, although such works as the Bach Brandenburg concertos and most of the Haydn and Mozart symphonies and music of that era and before can be played very acceptably and creditably without an individual uniquely swinging a baton. As music gets more involved and counterpoint more labyrinthine, the need for a traffic cop becomes more apparent. But in the main, the responsibilities of a conductor are not justly appraised.

* * *

IT HAS BECOME the custom nowadays for most conductors to direct without the score before them. It is no disgrace, nor sign of more or less familiarity with the music, if a score is used; to conduct the Ninth Symphony and "The Magic Flute" without notes is no mean feat, let's give the devil his due. But I have never seen a Shakespearean actor nor an opera singer come on stage with the script in his hand, nor, I imagine, does a surgeon go into the operating room with an anatomical chart before him. After all, as Heine said on his deathbed of his conviction that the Lord would forgive him even though he was an atheist, "That's his metier."

A conductor's main job is executed in the rehearsal room. The basic items of tempo and such details are established there and imparted to the musicians to dispel any possible unforeseen roadturns. The conductor, therefore, should come to the preconcert preparation with definite ideas of how he wants the piece to sound. (Bruckner, whose fourth symphony was played in the last week at Tanglewood, was such a bad conductor that when he insisted on a triple pianissimo from a chorus he was directing, the singers faced him in silence. His face was abeam; he had been listening to his own inner harmony.)

* * *

A RECENT conductor of the Boston Symphony came to rehearsal with no convictions whatsoever about the details of the music at hand and said, "Let's start and see how it sounds." One can imagine how much respect the musicians had for the man. On the other end of the stick, of course, is the martinet whose discipline is that of a slave-driver.

So much of what an able conductor does is not appreciated. For instance, many a composer colors his music by giving a theme to one instrument and then transferring it to another; and when that operation comes off smoothly, with little or no switch apparent or audible, it is most often the result of the conductor's sense of balance and taste.

Precision, per se, is not an especially commendable factor. Any group of experienced musicians can "come in" together with little effort. An orchestral musician is neither an automaton nor a piece of raw material. To play in a major symphony, a man must have gone through years of training; usually, he knows the repertory as well as the conductor. It has been said that every student at St. Cyr, the French military academy, carries a marshal's baton in his knapsack. Just so does many a man in an orchestra carry a conductor's baton in his instrument case.

* * *

THE CONDUCTOR, therefore, who gives every player or section a cue, even in the most familiar symphonies, is indulging in a bit of redundant exhibitionism. It may impress the audience, but it mildly nauseates and humiliates the musicians. The conductor who points now here, now there, in any of "the" 50 most common items of the orchestral repertory, is doing so for the audience and not for the players. Old Pierre Monteux, in his last years, was the least demonstrative of conductors. He'd cast a sly glance here and there once in a while, but he accorded the players the courtesy and the respect of being confident they knew what was expected of them.

Let's not entirely minimize the duties of a conductor. There are a million details he must decide and realize before a performance. Some conductors come to the podium with a minutely prepared plan; others allow a little flexibility, depending on their mood of the moment and the temperature of their inspiration. Every conductor has his own "beat." It can be vehement, or it can be narrow and restrained. Of course, for our tympanist in those last 16 bars, he usually swings as though he were counting Maxie Baer out. In slow movements, though, the trained orchestral man must sense, rather than see, when is the instant for him to start playing. With Koussevitzky—in slow movements—the Bostonians waited until his baton came down to the second button of his vest.

* * *

AT TANGLEWOOD this season, when the concerts were either being recorded or broadcast, there was often an inexplicable wait at the beginning of a program while the conductor looked to the floor before him. The audience may have thought he was waiting for absolute quiet, but actually there was a signal in front of him indicating when the machinery was ready to "take" the performance. Conductors have different methods of starting. Some wait. Others, such as a more youthful Stokowski, used to turn from his greeting to the audience with a first swing of the baton to the orchestra.

Paradoxically, composers are usually not good conductors of their own music. Stravinsky keeps his nose in the scores on which he worked for months and years. Richard Strauss appeared a bit indifferent. Bruckner was said to have lacked a natural gift for the task. There is a great difference in manual technique between leading an orchestra and conducting a chorus. Most choral conductors completely baffle an orchestra with their wild gestures.

* * *

THERE ARE a million pitfalls and sticky spots in music, and a conductor must smooth them out for the players' edification. The irregular rhythms of today are a special trick for a conductor, and no less so for the musicians. The old-time classic, which stayed in one exact rhythmic pattern for a whole movement, is now a thing of the past. And let's not ignore the matter of interpretation, in which a conductor's judgment is used.

The man who in effect says to the orchestra at concert time, "Let's do as we agreed to at the rehearsal," has been more or less superseded by the one who, by his antics, conveys the spirit of the music—gay, exuberant, possibly ennobled one moment, and pleading, sombre, and sad at another. We watch the conductor to understand the music. To sit in the hall with our eyes closed is no longer enough.

229

The Huntsville Times
HUNTSVILLE, ALA.
D. 52,605 SUN. 49,384
AUG 2 6 1966

Telephone Hour Changes Format

By DEAN GYSEL
Chicago Daily News Service

After 27 years, the Bell Telephone Hour this season is changing the format for its Sunday night programs.

Despite big name performers, the program never caught on when it switched from radio to television in 1959. It did not adjust to a visual medium. The static proscenium- stage productions made it look like other variety shows.

This year, the Telephone Hour will present 15 "musical documentaries," focusing on festivals, performers, special events, and movements and ideas in music. The series is presented on alternate Sundays on NBC.

The premiere show Sept. 25 is "A Man's Dream: The Festival of Two Worlds," a visit to Gian-Carlo Menotti's Spoleto festival near Rome. Performers include pianists Sviatoslav Richter and John Browning, mezzo-soprano Shirley Verrett and conductors Zubin Mehta, Thomas Schippers and Werner Torkanowsky.

Other programs include:

—The Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass., featuring Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Jane Marsh, the 24-year-old soprano winner of the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow; Soprano Phyllis Curtin and Composer Aaron Copland.

The International Jazz Festival at Comblain-la-Tour, Belgium, with Benny Goodman, Stan Getz, Chuck Berry, Art Farmer and Anito O'Day.

—A musical profile of San Francisco in which the song, "I Left My Heart in San Francisco" will not be heard. Performing will be pianists Peggy and Milton Salkind, the John Handy quintet, Ballerina Linda Meyer, the San Francisco Ballet, San Francisco Opera and the Rock 'n' roll group, The Jefferson Airplane.

—An Easter Sunday show emanating from Red Rocks Outdoor Amphitheater west of Denver. Against this thousands-year-old setting, selections from Handel's "Messiah" will be sung by the 325 members of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, Soprano Phyllis Curtin, Contralto Maureen Forrester and Richard Lewis.

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 206,715
SEP 9 1966

Lees, Krenek Taking Posts At Peabody

Benjamin Lees, American composer, will return to the Peabody Conservatory of Music as visiting professor of composition for the semester which begins September 26, Dr. Charles Kent, conservatory director, announced today.

Visiting professor of composition in the second semester will be another contemporary composer, Ernst Krenek.

Born in China and educated in California, Mr. Lees studied with George Anthiel and in 1953, at the age of 29, won a Fromm Foundation Award. This was followed by a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1954, a Copley Foundation Award in 1955, a Fulbright Fellowship in 1956 and a UNESCO Award in 1958.

Mr. Lees studied and composed in Europe for several years, returning to teach at the Peabody from 1962 to 1964. During his Baltimore stay his Violin Concerto was first performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Henryk Szeryng as soloist, his Interlude for String Orchestra received its first performance by the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra and Gary Graffman gave the premiere performance of Piano Sonato No. 4.

Other works by Mr. Lees have been commissioned and performed by the Louisville Orchestra, the Seattle Symphony, the Kansas City Philharmonic and the Philadelphia Chamber Orchestra.

Abroad, the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, the Vienna Symphony and many chamber groups have performed his works. His compositions to date include two symphonies, two piano concertos, "Songs of the Night" for soprano Breve," Concerto for Orchestra, "Visions of Poets" for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, and an and orchestra, "Concertante opera, "The Gilded Cage," as well as numerous works for chamber ensembles and solo piano.

230

ROCKFORD MORNING STAR
ROCKFORD, ILL.
D. 58,197 SUN. 77,470

OCT 21 1966

Orchestra Base Tanglewood Tells Secret of Green Grass

Croquet Enjoys Revival . . .

Croquet, a long-time favorite currently having a revival in popularity, is one of many lawn sports people of all ages enjoy. Lawn experts say any good lawn will "take" the hard wear associated with games. By good they mean one planted with one of the recommended all-perennial variety of grass and one that is kept well-fed with fertilizer applications at regular intervals, such as at Tanglewood in Massachusetts.

Aerifying, fertilizing and watering are the three answers to a question many visitors ask — "How does Tanglewood keep its grass green?"

Tanglewood, summer base for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has [illegible] acres of green lawn, subject to all the ordinary lawn problems.

It has its own extra problems, like the tramp-tramp-tramp of thousands of concert-goers who walk over the lawn and find informal seating on it during the eight weeks of the Berkshire Festival in July and August.

250,000 VISITORS

Each summer those festival concerts draw a total of nearly 250,000 visitors, all trampnig on the lawns at Tanglewood, which is at Lenox, Mass.

James Kiley is superintendent of Tanglewood and director of the planned program of care which keeps the lawns as green and lush in early fall as they were in June.

He said the original problem at Tanglewood was compaction, too much thatch, and lack of sufficient root system on the grass.

To combat compaction, the lawns are aerified several times, spring and fall. During summer months, when foot traffic is at a peak, a slicing machine is used every seven to 10 days.

ROOTS NOURISHED

These processes allow water, fertilizer, and air to reach the grass root system, developing and maintaining it.

Before fertilizing — in spring and fall—an aero-thatch machine is used to remove thatch, or dead grass.

Kiley said early spring application of insecticides and weed killers from a tank sprayer takes care of lawn weeds and insect pests.

None of this would be effective if the lawns didn't get enough water.

They get their regular watering from Tanglewood's own irrigation system, installed during the years when the Northeast's severe drought shut off water from regular sources.

MAN-MADE POND

The system draws water from a spring-fed man-made pond specially built on the property.

Kiley says the Tanglewood methods, sclaed down to home lawn size, can produce gratifying results.

Small-scale aerifying, slicing, and aero-thatch machines suitable for home use are items available for rental from hardware and garden supply stores.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910

SEP 18 1966

Scenic Beauty Offered To Berkshire Travelers

The Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, with unspoiled wooded mountains, clear lakes and streams, and historic, cultural and sports attractions, is a scenic paradise for vacationers and travelers alike.

Although much of the Berkshire charm is found in its many natural wilderness sections, the area's communities, including North Adams, Williamstown, Pittsfield, Lenox, Lee, Stockbridge and Great Barrington, should not be missed.

North Adams, in the northern tip of the Berkshires, is the site of historic Fort Massachusetts and the only city on the Mohawk Trail, the western portion of Hwy. 2. New England's Natural Bridge and Mt. Greylock are also among the city's attractions.

Hairpin Turn

Famed Hairpin Turn on the Mohawk Trail, above North Adams, has an observation tower which provides superb views of the Hoosic Valley and Mt. Greylock.

Mt. Greylock, the state's highest peak — 3,491 feet — is topped by a 90-foot granite tower, the War Memorial Beacon, which affords a five-state panorama. Three roads lead to the summit. The best is Notch Road, off Hwy. 2 between North Adams and Williamstown.

Williamstown, near the New York-Vermont state lines, is the home of Williams College and the Clark Art Institute. The college's Thompson Memorial Chapel has a series of stained glass windows that merits particular attention, especially when viewed from within the chapel.

In the area of Pittsfield, the largest city in the Berkshires, enjoyable stops may be made at the Crane Museum, Hancock Shaker Village, Shaker Museum and Berkshire Museum.

Anglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the world's leading musicians play to thousands at Tanglewood, near Lenox, home of the Berkshire Music Festival. A tour through the beautiful grounds is a must for any visit to the area.

Close by Lenox is Lee, site of the annual Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, and Stockbridge, location of the Berkshire Playhouse and the Berkshire Garden Center.

South of Great Barrington, near the New York state line, is unique Bash-Bish Falls. In certain light, one can reportedly see the "Spirit Profile" of the Indian maiden who, unhappy in love, jumped to her death in the pool from the cliff far above.

Bash-Bish Falls can be reached by a foot path from the New York state side (Copake Falls, off N.Y. 22) or from Copake Falls Road in Mt. Washington. The latter path is very steep and is not recommended for the elderly or infirm.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177
SEP 17 1966

As I Hear It

The Piano

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

COMPETITION between piano manufacturers would probably rate only minor notice on the commercial battlefield, but it has an individual pitch.

Cigarette companies used to use testimonials. Automobile companies have their own ways. One of them once got down to naming names and asked us to compare or do something in regard to "the other two." The piano companies are strictly dignified and proper in their approach to advertising, but they, too, find the testimonial angle effective.

* * *

THEY NOT ONLY tie up with established artists, but make early contact with promising prodigies—much as athletic scouts are reported to pay fabulous bonuses to stars on high school and college sports teams.

Very few of us give any thought to that aspect of the music industry. However, an article in the September issue of High Fidelity magazine discloses that the battle for public attention was joined almost a century ago. Milton Goldin writes of an American tour by the musical giant Anton Rubinstein (no relation of our own Artur, I understand) in 1870, in which he played 200 concerts and was guaranteed $40,000 by the Steinway Piano Co.

It was the custom in those days to give an audience its money's worth. No terse hour and a half and out to the parking lot. The time consumed in early concert days was not measured, but one can make an estimate of how long it would take Rubinstein to play the Schumann A minor concerto, the Beethoven Emperor, his own F major and G major concertos, besides shorter works. In addition, Rubinstein, who was 40 at the time, had brought with him from Europe a younger colleague, Henri Wieniawski, who also appeared on each program playing such popular favorites as his own violin concerto No. 2 and the Legende.

* * *

THE STEINWAY company called their support of Rubinstein a "sponsorship." It appeared, however, that they really had him at the end of a string, like a hurdy-gurdy-man's monkey, and pulled him hither and yon until some society for the prevention of cruelty to musicians should have stepped in.

The Baldwin is the piano of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. I am satisfied that the choice was made on merit, but certain glints which are noticed by some spectators shoot off the pinwheel. Most of the BSO's piano soloists play the instrument the orchestra favors, although not exclusively, be it understood.

* * *

THERE WAS a very advanced young fellow in piano class in my student days. He never realized the promise he showed in school, and now that he is departed, I may tell his name, for it was part of his distinction: Lucius Hare. He was approached, rumor had it, by the Steinway rival but turned them down. "Imagine," he is reported to have explained, "how ridiculous it would be to find a Hare on a Baldwin!"

Goldin tells of the exhibits the American companies Steinway and Chickering made at the 1867 Paris exposition. A biography of Longfellow tells of a visit our poet made to Liszt in Rome in 1868 and there found a Chickering. Longfellow's sister said Liszt told her it was the best piano he had ever played, but she noticed "it had a half-inch of dust on the keyboard."

As a matter of fact, Liszt played the Erard, a French piano, on some of his tours. A plaque over the door of a house on the Rue de Mail in Paris says, in effect, that "Francois (sic) Liszt resided here whenever he came to play concerts in Paris." It happens to be the factory of Erard Freres.

* * *

GOLDIN FOUND that Steinway got an endorsement from Hector Berlioz, and Chickering a testimonial from Liszt in Paris. My records do not reveal whether Liszt got the piano before or after the testimonial.

Europe still makes some fine pianos. The firm which is the agent for the Bechstein in this country advertises that it will import but 35 instruments this year, and hence advises anyone desirous of owning one to act accordingly.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,841
SEP 15 1966

"All Hail To Massachusetts" By Late Arthur J. Marsh Is State Song

On September 2, the General Court of Massachusetts by act of the legislature designated "All Hail To Mssachusetts" as the official state song. Thus, composer Arthur J. Marsh of Wellesley, who died May 26 this year, was honored posthumously and his family has had the satisfaction of seeing his dream realized.

Mr. Marsh began campaigning for an official Bay State song back in the 1940's and over the years some 400 songs had been submitted. By last December, after three years of study by a state song commission, the choice of songs had been narrowed to ten. Commission members included Sen. James A. Kelly of Oxford, chairman of the Committee on State Administration; Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops; Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the Pops; Leo Litwin, pianist at the Pops; Peter Sinagusa, chairman of the Music Department at Boston College; Rep. John Melia of Brighton and Rep. Bartley of Holyoke.

"We went over them carefully," explained Fiedler, "and Marsh's words and music seemed the best. I informed him that we would select his song if he would be willing to make a few minor changes so that the meter, or words, would fit the melody. He was perfectly willing and set to work on the project."

A martial tune, "All Hail to Massachusetts" was first presented without words to Fiedler, who tested it with the Boston Pops Orchestra.

"It was quite a nice march," the famed conductor said.

Marsh loved and studied music. He earned his master's degree at the New England Conservatory of Music in 1933 where he majored in the organ. But he started out, after completing Boston Latin, to be an architect. He received a diploma in drafting from M.I.T. during World War I. The depression changed his goal.

For years he was organist and choirmaster at the Universalist Church on Inman st., Cambridge, and organist at the Exeter St. Theater. He also was state music examiner and taught the band at Norfolk State Prison.

His widow, Mrs. Margaret R. Marsh, 364 Weston rd., Wellesley, has all the score and orchestration.

"He spent years copying out all the orchestral parts for the band as well as writing the notations for piano and voice. He did it all himself," she declared.

It was a labor of love for the state pays no compensation to a composer for writing an official song. Massachusetts is now among 45 pther states who have official tunes.

"All Hail to Massachusetts" is not completely new to the public. It was played and sung as early as 1954 at Nantasket Beach Bandstand and later on Boston Common.

No date has yet been set by the governor's office for the song's official debut — mabe it will be introduced at the inauguration of the Governor in 1967.

Sen. Kelly plans on sending the state song to all schools in the Commonwealth.

"It is a wonderful song, has a lot of character and can be sung and played easily," Mrs. Marsh stated.

Words to State's Official Anthem

by Arthur J. Marsh

All hail to Massachusetts, the land of the free and the brave,
For Bunker Hill and Charlestown, and flag we love to wave,
For Lexington and Concord, and the shot heard 'round the world:
All hail to Massachusetts, we'll keep her flag unfurled.
She stands upright for freedom's light that shines from sea to sea:
All hail to Massachusetts! Our country 'tis of thee!
All hail to grand old Bay State,
the home of the bean and the cod!
Where Pilgrims found a landing and gave their thanks to God.
A land of opportunity in the good old U.S.A.
Where men live longer and prosper, and people come to stay.
Don't sell her short but learn to court her industry and stride:
All hail to grand old Bay State!
The land of pilgrim's pride.
All hail to Massachusetts, renowned in the Hall of Fame!
How proudly wave her banners emblazoned with her name!
In unity and brotherhood, sons and daughters go hand in hand:
All hail to Massachusetts, there is no finer land!
It's MASSACHUSETTS.
All hail to Massachusetts! All hail! All hail! All hail!

832

Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,433

SEP 24 1966

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 10,176

SEP 24 1966

Where But New England

He danced with Jackie at Symphony ball

by Francis W. Hatch

BOXES along the wall cost $1,000, each . . .

A year ago I was in a swivet. I had missed a meeting of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and, as usual, the absentee pays the penalty. I was informed that by unanimous choice I had been appointed "Trustee Chairman" of a money raising gala to be entitled "The Golden Trumpet Ball."

During the spring and summer I had occupied an office with a trio of lady planners any one of whom could step into the shoes of Edward Logue. Any feeble thoughts I had were old hat to them. The result?

After the last bill had been paid there remained a net of better than $160,000 to go toward the Symphony's annual deficit. There have been few charitable enterprises in New England with results more gratifying or substantial.

Year Ago — The big lift for the party, which came off on the evening of Sept. 27, was the presence of Mrs. John F. Kennedy. At the outset she had agreed to be Honorary Chairman yet there could only be hope that she would be able to attend.

Meeting her at the door of Symphony Hall where she arrived on the arm of Henry B. Cabot, President of the Board of Trustees, I was soon aware what the presence of this ethereal lady does to the best laid plans for crowd control.

Energetic men and women broke through the police lines on Massachusetts Avenue and piled into the lobby. Cameramen, radio and TV operators fought frantically for preferred positions until it seemed as though they were hanging from the chandeliers.

Slowly we moved through the packed corridor inside the hall toward the easterly entrance the blinding flicker of flashlights and camera flares made every step a prayer and a problem.

When, finally, we entered the hall, the Honorary Chairman gave a gasp of delight for surely Nat Saltonstall and his coordinating corps had brought to bear light, color, and wildly effective imagination to dress up the old place.

Jackie Whirls — Boston will long remember Mrs. Kennedy's graciousness and the delight of whirling around a sardine-packed dance strip to the rhythm of a Strauss waltz by Arthur Fiedler.

But there were private miseries for the "Trustee Chairman" to endure. The ladies had arranged to have Walter Cronkite fly up to act as master of ceremonies. Just in case anything happened to prevent his coming I was told to be ready to substitute. It seemed remote and unlikely until, halfway through the soup, a weather report indicated LaGuardia enshrouded with fog. Fifteen minute bulletins followed and I fumbled with the card of notes in my pocket. When all seemed lost Cronkite arrived.

Not since the gala ball for Edward, Prince of Wales in 1860 has the Boston press devoted more space to a social event. Nor would I venture that the romantic tempo of 1966 could match what was reported of the 1860 party, and I quote, "During the evening there was a world of flirtation. Hearts were not only touched, affected, stirred into accelerated pulsations, but positively smashed."

Back of His Neck — There had been a long lapse of years between my attendance in boyhood at Mr. Foster's Dancing School. But somehow, with the graceful cooperation of the Lady Chairman we made the run keeping pace with Arthur Fiedler in safety through the barrage of flash bulbs.

The back of my neck received magnificent press coverage, even international. From Athens came a letter from a sojourning friend: "Over my cup of 'espresso' this morning I was startled by a closeup of the back of your head in a Paris newspaper. Couldn't you have managed a better haircut?"

BLANK PAGE

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 116

BSO Pops

1966 - 1967

REDUCTION RATIO

16x

REDUCTION RATIO 16x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

INDEX

I N D E X

Schedule of Concerts..... 1

Pre-Season..... 2

Fri. & Sat. #1, Sept. 23 and Sept. 24..... 8

Tuesday A-1, Sept. 27..... 10

Thursday A-1, Sept. 29..... 10

Fri. & Sat. #2, Sept. 30 and Oct. 1..... 11

Tuesday B-1, Oct. 4..... 13

Thursday B-1, Oct. 6..... 13

Fri. & Sat. #3, Oct. 7 and Oct. 8..... 14

Tuesday - Cambridge #1, Oct. 18..... 16

Fri. & Sat. #4, Oct. 21 and Oct. 22..... 17

Tuesday A-2. Oct. 25..... 19

Thursday A-2, Oct. 27..... 19

Fri. & Sat. #5, Oct. 28 and Oct. 29..... 20

Tuesday B-2, November 1, ... 22

Fri. & Sat. #6, Nov. 4 and Nov. 5..... 23

Tuesday A-3, Nov. 8..... 29

Fri. & Sat. #7, Nov. 11 and Nov. 12..... 30

Tuesday - Cambridge #2, Nov. 22..... 32

Fri. & Sat. #8, Nov. 25 and Nov. 26..... 33

Tuesday A-4, Nov. 29..... 34

Fri. & Sat. #9, Dec. 2 and Dec. 3..... 35

Tuesday A-5, Dec. 6..... 36

Thursday B-2 Dec. 8..... 37

Fri. & Sat. #10, Dec. 9 and Dec. 10..... 38

Tuesday - Cambridge #3, Dec. 13..... 39

Thursday A-3, Dec. 15..... 39

Fri. & Sat. #11, Dec. 16 and Dec. 17..... 40

Tuesday B-3, Dec. 20..... 42

Tuesday A-6, Dec. 27..... 43

Thursday A-4, Dec. 29..... 43

Fri. & Sat. #12, Dec. 30 and Dec. 31..... 44

Tuesday - Cambridge #4, Jan. 3..... 45

Fri. & Sat. #13, Jan. 6 and Jan. 7..... 46

Tuesday B-4 Jan. 10..... 48

INDEX

Fri. & Sat. #14, Jan. 13 and Jan. 14 49
Tuesday A-7, Jan. 17..... 51
Fri. & Sat. #15, Jan. 20 and Jan. 21..... 52
Tuesday - Cambridge #5. Jan. 31..... 54
Fri. & Sat. #16, Feb. 3 and Feb. 4..... 55
Thursday A-5, Feb. 9..... 57
Fri. & Sat. #17, Feb. 10 and Feb. 11..... 58
Tuesday B-5, Feb. 14..... 59
Fri. & Sat. #18, Feb. 17 and Feb. 18..... 60
Tuesday A-8, Mar. 7, cancelled Feb. 7 because of snowstorm..... 61
Tuesday A-9, Feb. 21..... 61
Fri. & Sat. #19, Feb. 24 and Feb. 25..... 62
Thursday B-3, Mar. 9..... 64
Fri. & Sat. #20, Mar. 10 and Mar. 11..... 65
Tuesday B-6, Mar. 14..... 66
Fri. & Sat. #21, Mar. 17 and Mar. 18..... 67
Fri. & Sat. #22, Mar. 24 and Mar. 25..... 68
Tuesday A-10, Mar. 28..... 70
Fri. & Sat. #23, Mar. 31 and Apr. 1..... 71
Tuesday - Cambridge #6, Apr. 18..... 73
Thursday A-6, Apr. 20..... 73
Fri. & Sat. #24, Apr. 21 and Apr. 22..... 74
Friends..... 75
Youth Concerts..... 79
Open Rehearsals..... 84
Organ Concerts..... 85
Pension Fund Concert..... 86
Pre-Tour..... 90
Philharmonic Hall #1, Oct. 12 and Oct. 14..... 92
Brooklyn #1, Oct. 13..... 93
Carnegie Hall #1, Oct. 15..... 94
Providence #1, Nov. 3..... 95
Washington #1, Nov. 15..... 96
Philharmonic Hall #2, Nov. 16 and Nov. 18..... 97
Carnegie Hall #2, Nov. 17..... 99
Carnegie Hall #3, Nov. 19..... 99

INDEX

Providence #2, Jan. 5 100
Providence #3, Jan. 19 100
Hartford Jan. 23 101
New Haven Jan. 24 102
Philharmonic #3, Jan. 25 and Jan. 27 103
Brooklyn #2, Jan. 26 104
Carnegie #4, Jan. 28 105
Providence #4, Feb. 16 106
Washington #2, Feb. 28 107
Philharmonic #4, Mar. 1 and Mar. 3 109
New Brunswick Mar. 2 110
Carnegie #5, Mar. 4 111
Providence #5, Mar. 16 112
Rochester Apr. 3 113
Toledo Apr. 4 115
Bloomington Apr. 5 116
Chicago Apr. 6 and Apr. 7 117
Ann Harbor Apr. 8 120
New London Apr. 10 121
Philadelphia Apr. 11 122
Philharmonic #5, Apr. 12 and Apr. 14 123
Brooklyn #3, Apr. 13 124
Carnegie #6, Apr. 15 126
John Browning 127
Arturo Toscanini 130
William Sydeman 131
Rafael Kubelik 132
Mischa Dichter 133
Radio & TV 134
Recordings 142
Lohengrin 170
Winterfest 186
Chamber Players 192
Orchestra Personnel 202
Erich Leinsdorf 218
Miscellaneous 232

SCHEDULE OF CONCERTS

Boston Symphony Orchestra

ERICH LEINSDORF, Music Director

SCHEDULE OF CONCERTS, 1966–1967

SEPTEMBER

22	Boston	(Rehearsal 1)
23–24	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. I)
27	Boston	(Tuesday A-1)
29	Boston	(Thursday A-1)
30	Boston	(Friday II)

OCTOBER

1	Boston	(Saturday II)
4	Boston	(Tuesday B-1)
6	Boston	(Thursday B-1)
7–8	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. III)
12	New York	(1)
13	Brooklyn	(1)
14	New York	(1)
15	Carnegie Hall	(1)
18	Boston	("Cambridge" 1)
20	Boston	(Rehearsal 2)
21–22	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. IV)
25	Boston	(Tuesday A-2)
27	Boston	(Thursday A-2)
28–29	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. V)

NOVEMBER

1	Boston	(Tuesday B-2)
3	Providence	(1)
4–5	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. VI)
8	Boston	(Tuesday A-3)
10	Boston	(Rehearsal 3)
11–12	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. VII)
15	Washington	(1)
16	New York	(2)
17	Carnegie Hall
18	New York	(2)
19	Carnegie Hall	(2)
22	Boston	("Cambridge" 2)
25–26	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. VIII)
29	Boston	(Tuesday A-4)

DECEMBER

1	Boston	(Rehearsal 4)
2–3	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. IX)
6	Boston	(Tuesday A-5)
8	Boston	(Thursday B-2)
9–10	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. X)
13	Boston	("Cambridge" 3)
15	Boston	(Thursday A-3)
16–17	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XI)
20	Boston	(Tuesday B-3)
27	Boston	(Tuesday A-6)
29	Boston	(Thursday A-4)
30–31	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XII)

JANUARY

3	Boston	("Cambridge" 4)
5	Providence	(2)
6–7	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XIII)
10	Boston	(Tuesday B-4)
12	Boston	(Rehearsal 5)

JANUARY (continued)

13–14	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XIV)
17	Boston	(Tuesday A-7)
19	Providence	(3)
20–21	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XV)
23	Hartford
24	New Haven
25	New York	(3)
26	Brooklyn	(2)
27	New York	(3)
28	Carnegie Hall
31	Boston	("Cambridge" 5)

FEBRUARY

3–4	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XVI)
7	Boston	(Tuesday A-8)
9	Boston	(Thursday A-5)
10–11	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XVII)
14	Boston	(Tuesday B-5)
16	Providence	(4)
17–18	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XVIII)
21	Boston	(Tuesday A-9)
23	Boston	(Winterfest)
24–25	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XIX)
28	Washington	(2)

MARCH

1	New York	(4)
2	New Brunswick
3	New York	(4)
4	Carnegie Hall	(3)
9	Boston	(Thursday B-3)
10–11	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XX)
14	Boston	(Tuesday B-6)
16	Providence	(5)
17–18	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XXI)
23	Boston	(Rehearsal 6)
24–25	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XXII)
28	Boston	(Tuesday A-10)
30	Boston	(Rehearsal 7)
31	Boston	(Friday XXIII)

APRIL

1	Boston	(Saturday XXIII)
3	Rochester
4	Toledo
5	Bloomington
6	Chicago
7	Chicago
8	Ann Arbor
10	New London
11	Philadelphia
12	New York	(5)
13	Brooklyn	(3)
14	New York	(5)
15	Carnegie Hall	(4)
18	Boston	("Cambridge" 6)
20	Boston	(Thursday A-6)
21–22	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XXIV)

Boston Symphony Orchestra

ERICH LEINSDORF, Music Director

CHARLES WILSON, Assistant Conductor

First Violins

Joseph Silverstein
Concertmaster
Alfred Krips
George Zazofsky
Rolland Tapley
Roger Shermont
Max Winder
Harry Dickson
Gottfried Wilfinger
Fredy Ostrovsky
Leo Panasevich
Noah Bielski
Herman Silberman
Stanley Benson
Sheldon Rotenberg
Alfred Schneider
Julius Schulman
Gerald Gelbloom
Raymond Sird

Second Violins

Clarence Knudson
William Marshall
Michel Sasson
Samuel Diamond
Leonard Moss
William Waterhouse
Giora Bernstein
Ayrton Pinto
Amnon Levy
Laszlo Nagy
Michael Vitale
Victor Manusevitch
Minot Beale
Ronald Knudsen
Max Hobart
John Korman

Violas

Burton Fine
Reuben Green
Eugen Lehner
Albert Bernard
George Humphrey
Jerome Lipson
Jean Cauhapé
Konosuke Ono*
Vincent Mauricci
Earl Hedberg
Bernard Kadinoff
Joseph Pietropaolo

Cellos

Jules Eskin
Martin Hoherman
Mischa Nieland
Karl Zeise
Robert Ripley
Soichi Katsuta*
John Sant Ambrogio
Luis Leguia
Stephen Geber
Carol Procter
Richard Sher

Basses

Henry Freeman
Henry Portnoi
Irving Frankel
John Barwicki
Leslie Martin
Bela Wurtzler
Joseph Hearne
William Rhein
John Salkowski

Flutes

Doriot Anthony Dwyer
James Pappoutsakis
Phillip Kaplan

Piccolo

Lois Schaefer

Oboes

Ralph Gomberg
John Holmes
Hugh Matheny

English Horn

Laurence Thorstenberg

Clarinets

Gino Cioffi
Pasquale Cardillo
Peter Hadcock
E♭ Clarinet

Bass Clarinet

Felix Viscuglia

Bassoons

Sherman Walt
Ernst Panenka
Matthew Ruggiero

Contra Bassoon

Richard Plaster

Horns

James Stagliano
Charles Yancich
Harry Shapiro
Thomas Newell
Paul Keaney
Ralph Pottle

Trumpets

Armando Ghitalla
Roger Voisin
André Come
Gerard Goguen

Trombones

William Gibson
Josef Orosz
Kauko Kahila

Tuba

Chester Schmitz

Timpani

Everett Firth

Percussion

Charles Smith
Harold Thompson
Arthur Press, Ass't Timpanist
Thomas Gauger

Harps

Bernard Zighera
Olivia Luetcke

Librarians

Victor Alpert
William Shisler

Stage Manager

Alfred Robison

WILLIAM MOYER, Personnel Manager

*members of the Japan Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra participating in a one season exchange with Messrs. Robert Karol and Richard Kapuscinski

PRE - SEASON

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 16 1966

Concert Warning For Latecomers

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
SEP 16 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
SEP 18 1966

Concert Warning For Latecomers

Symphony Hall has announced that latecomers to the first concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Friday at 2:00 p.m., Sept. 23, will not be seated after the beginning of the first movement of Gustav Mahler's 3rd Symphony which will open the program. The movement runs 30 minutes.

The warning will apply to all future performances of the Mahler work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 155,060
SEP 19 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
SEP 18 1966

Boston Symphony to Begin 86th Performance Season

Erich Leinsdorf Starts His Fifth Season

Symphony To Hold Its First Concert

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

The official social season gets underway this week when Symphony holds its first concert Friday at 2 p.m. 247

Erich Leinsdorf starts his fifth season as music director of the famed orchestra conducting the 86th season with Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony. Proper Bostonian ladies will attend the Friday afternoon concerts and the same program will be repeated for Proper Bostonian couples who prefer Saturday evening.

Symphony, as Proper Bostonians refer to their orchestra, will give a series of Open Rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence, R.I.

Of course, Boston will lose its symphony several times during the season. The orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, N.Y., on five Wednesdays and five Fridays. In addition it will play in Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London and Philadelphia.

Socially Speaking

In the spring the orchestra will make a 6-concert tour to the Middle West, its first extended tour in that area for several years. The concerts will be in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago and Ann Arbor.

Many Friday subscribers will be saddened to learn that thus far no pre-Symphony luncheons are scheduled. For several years Symphony-goers have been edified by the series at the Midtown Motor Inn and fashion wised by the Women's City Club series at such locales as the Ritz and the Statler-Hilton Hotels.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 22 1966

Symphony Luncheons Canceled

For those who like their Friday Symphony straight, unembellished by fashions or forensics, the cancellation of the pre-symphony luncheons (for lack of adequate room in which to hold the popular series) leaves them right where they have always been.

But many others will miss the wise and witty preludes with the B.S.O.'s best raconteur, Harry Ellis Dickson, and Mrs. Anthony Kutten's international, music-minded luncheon audiences.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Telegram
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 105,712
AUG 21 1966

Busy BSO Gives Itself A Breather

By JOHN THORNTON

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY orchestra, now completing another season at Tanglewood which has attracted nearly a quarter million music lovers, will take a few weeks off before commencing its new winter season at Symphony Hall in Boston on Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23 and 24.

During its 86th season, the BSO will present in its familiar home on Massachusetts Avenue 24 pairs of concerts for the Friday-Saturday series; 16 Tuesday concerts, of which six will be in Series "B"; and 15 Thursday concerts, six of them "Cambridge" events and the remaining nine split into two other series.

In addition, there will be the regular "open rehearsal" concerts for the orchestra pension fund, and five concerts in Providence.

It will engage in several tour concerts, 10 at Philharmonic Hall in New York, others in Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London and Philadelphia.

Next spring the orchestra visits the Middle West, its first extended tour of that region in many years.

Altogether, the Boston orchestra is still the busiest of all the major symphony organizations in the United States. Its musicians face a staggering schedule, taking into consideration the winter season, the Pops spring season, eight weeks at "Tanglewood," special benefit performances, chamber music concerts and tours.

Erich Leinsdorf has engaged six guest conductors to appear with the orchestra, including retired music director Charles Munch, and Richard Burgin, former concert master and associate conductor of the BSO who left the ensemble recently after an association that began in 1920.

Colin Davis, conductor of the London Symphony, who has made such an impact in England and Europe and is now leading his orchestra in a new festival at Daytona Beach, Fla., will guest direct the BSO for the first time in February, when he conducts four concerts.

Rafael Kubelik, former conductor of the Chicago Symphony, will be a guest director in mid-January.

Three World Premieres

THREE WORLD PREMIERES feature the 1966-67 season: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moev's "Et in Occidentem" with the orchestra and Rutgers University Choir, and finally William Syndeman's new score in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

An unusual set of concerts will be presented on March 24 and 25, when Leinsdorf will bring to concert Bach's "Passion According to St. John," dedicating the presentation to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867.

Outside of some standard Beethoven and Brahms repertoire specials will include Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ," Schoenberg's "Pellias et Melisande" and Haydn's great masterpiece, "The Creation."

As an experiment this summer at Lenox, Leinsdorf originated a "Prelude" chamber series preceding the formal concerts of the BSO.

Crowds of visitors throng the large grounds of the orchestra's summer home and picnic under the trees, so he concluded they would be interested in a concert to go with their sandwiches.

Delighted with the inovation, thousands of picnickers attended each affair. Instead of beginning the regular concert at 8:15, it was delayed on Fridays to 9 o'clock, with the "Prelude" starting at 7 p.m. Musicians had about an hour to rest before going on to the late concert.

The large shed, which sounds magnificent since it was acoustically reinforced several seasons back, now holds just over 2,000, but thousands more gather on the spacious lawns outside the building where they listen under the stars.

These "unfortunates" may not be able to get full acoustical advantage of the BSO tone, but they enjoy themselves immensely, sprawled on blankets.

Two of the big events at Tanglewood this summer drew an avalanche of music lovers. One was the concert-performance of Mozart's "Magic Flute," which attracted over 10,000.

But the largest crowd of the season went to hear Van Cliburn play the Rachmaninov Third Piano Concerto.

The tall Texan, years after he made his sensational debut before enchanted audiences in Moscow, continues to be a great magnet, and 14,000 overflowed the grounds for his guest appearance.

Van Cliburn, who once waited on tables between recitals in order to help pay his bills, is a phenomona of the prize-competition method of finding outstanding talent.

Since that Moscovite affair, young pianists now flock to all sorts of competitions, knowing a first prize may launch them on brilliant following careers.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
SEPT 1966

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, begins its 86th season at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) on Friday, September 23 at 2 p.m., with the companion Saturday evening concert the following day at 8:30. An open rehearsal is scheduled for Thursday, September 22 at 7:30 p.m. Other BSO concerts this month: Tuesday, September 27 and Thursday, September 29 at 8:30 p.m.; a Friday afternoon-Saturday evening pair on September 30-October 1.

New York Philharmonic, with Leonard Bernstein conducting, plays at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) on Sunday, September 25 at 3 p.m. Friends of Deaconess Hospital have taken a number of seats for this concert.

Isaiah Jenkins, tenor, appears in recital on Sunday, September 25, 3 p.m., at Jordan Hall, 30 Gainsboro Street (KE 6-2412).

Obernkirchen Children's Choir comes from Germany to sing again at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) on Sunday, October 2 at 3 p.m. B.U. Celebrity Series.

Gardner Museum Concerts, featuring vocal and instrumental artists from the area, are open free of charge to visitors at Mrs. Gardner's Venetian palace at 280 The Fenway. Tuesday, Saturday and Sunday (beginning September 11) concerts at 3 p.m., with Thursday evening concerts at 8:45 on September 15, 22, and 29.

Looking Ahead

October will find the concert season in full swing. The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives twelve concerts during the month, and the B.U. Celebrity Series will present flamenco guitarist Carlos Montoya on Saturday evening, October 8 at Jordan Hall; the Istomin-Stern-Rose Trio on Sunday afternoon, October 9, and the Moscow Chamber Orchestra, Sunday afternoon, October 16, both at Symphony Hall; Pianist Rosalyn Tureck on Friday evening, October 21, Jordan Hall; Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Sunday afternoon, October 23 at Symphony Hall; Music from Marlboro, Sunday afternoon, October 30 at Jordan Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
SEP 18 1966

The Symphony's 86th . . .

Erich Leinsdorf, starting his fifth season as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the orchestra will begin its 86th season with performances of Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony at the opening concerts of each of its seven Boston series. The first two concerts will be given in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2 p.m. and Saturday night at 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
SEP 17 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
AUG 11 1966

Symphony opening 86th year

Erich Leinsdorf, who is starting his fifth season as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the orchestra will begin its 86th season with performances of Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony at the opening concerts of each of its seven Boston series. The first two concerts will take place in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon (Sept. 23) at 2:00 p.m. and Saturday evening (Sept. 24) at 8:30.

The first movement of the Mahler Third lasts 30 minutes; and since each of the Boston Symphony's seven series will be opening with this movement, subscribers are urged to be in their seats at concert time. Late comers will not be seated during the first movement of the Mahler, which means that they will not be seated during the first half hour of the concert.

Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will be soloist in the Mahler performances. It will be her second engagement with the orchestra, her first appearance having been in the Brahms Alto Rhapsody and Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky" in March, 1965. The New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, will also take part in the performances.

The first Open Rehearsal of the season will take place in Symphony Hall Thursday evening (Sept. 22) at 7:30. As in the past, the series of seven Open Rehearsals will benefit the orchestra's pension fund and will consist of the final preparation for the weekend program which is to follow.

A limited number of season subscriptions are available for two of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's shorter series: the "Tuesday B" series with six concerts at 7:30 p.m. and the "Thursday B" series with three concerts at 8:30 p.m. Further information may be obtained from the subscription office, Symphony Hall, CO 6-1492.

BSO series on sale

Season subscriptions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tuesday and Thursday concerts are now available from the Subscription Office, Symphony Hall, Boston.

The orchestra's new season, its 87th, will open Sept. 23 with a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3, under Erich Leinsdorf.

Of the two Tuesday series, Series A will consist of 10 concerts beginning Sept. 27 (guest conductors Burgin, Davis, Kubelik, Munch, Schuller); Series B, six concerts beginning Oct. 4 (guest conductors Schippers and Schuller).

The six-concert Thursday Series A will open Sept. 29 (guest conductors Burgin, Davis, Munch). The three Thursday Series B concerts will begin Oct. 6 (conductors Leinsdorf, Munch, Schippers).

PRE - SEASON

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 16 1966

Concert Warning For Latecomers

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
SEP 16 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
SEP 18 1966

Concert Warning For Latecomers

Symphony Hall has announced that latecomers to the first concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Friday at 2:00 p.m., Sept. 23, will not be seated after the beginning of the first movement of Gustav Mahler's 3rd Symphony which will open the program. The movement runs 30 minutes.

The warning will apply to all future performances of the Mahler work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 155,060
SEP 19 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
SEP 18 1966

Boston Symphony to Begin 86th Performance Season

Erich Leinsdorf Starts His Fifth Season

Symphony To Hold Its First Concert

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

The official social season gets under way this week when Symphony holds its first concert Friday at 2 p.m. 247

Erich Leinsdorf starts his fifth season as music director of the famed orchestra conducting the 86th season with Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony. Proper Bostonian ladies will attend the Friday afternoon concerts and the same program will be repeated for Proper Bostonian couples who prefer Saturday evening.

Symphony, as Proper Bostonians refer to their orchestra, will give a series of Open Rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence, R.I.

Of course, Boston will lose its symphony several times during the season. The orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, N.Y., on five Wednesdays and five Fridays. In addition it will play in Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London and Philadelphia.

Socially Speaking

In the spring the orchestra will make a 6-concert tour to the Middle West, its first extended tour in that area for several years. The concerts will be in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago and Ann Arbor.

Many Friday subscribers will be saddened to learn that thus far no pre-Symphony luncheons are scheduled. For several years Symphony-goers have been edified by the series at the Midtown Motor Inn and fashion wised by the Women's City Club series at such locales as the Ritz and the Statler-Hilton Hotels.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
SEP 18 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 22 1966

Symphony Luncheons Canceled

For those who like their Friday Symphony straight, unembellished by fashions or forensics, the cancellation of the pre-symphony luncheons (for lack of adequate room in which to hold the popular series) leaves them right where they have always been.

But many others will miss the wise and witty preludes with the B.S.O.'s best raconteur, Harry Ellis Dickson, and Mrs. Anthony Kutten's international, music-minded luncheon audiences.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
SEPT 1966

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, begins its 86th season at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) on Friday, September 23 at 2 p.m., with the companion Saturday evening concert the following day at 8:30. An open rehearsal is scheduled for Thursday, September 22 at 7:30 p.m. Other BSO concerts this month: Tuesday, September 27 and Thursday, September 29 at 8:30 p.m.; a Friday afternoon-Saturday evening pair on September 30-October 1.

New York Philharmonic, with Leonard Bernstein conducting, plays at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) on Sunday, September 25 at 3 p.m. Friends of Deaconess Hospital have taken a number of seats for this concert.

Isaiah Jenkins, tenor, appears in recital on Sunday, September 25, 3 p.m., at Jordan Hall, 30 Gainsboro Street (KE 6-2412).

Obernkirchen Children's Choir comes from Germany to sing again at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) on Sunday, October 2 at 3 p.m. B.U. Celebrity Series.

Gardner Museum Concerts, featuring vocal and instrumental artists from the area, are open free of charge to visitors at Mrs. Gardner's Venetian palace at 280 The Fenway. Tuesday, Saturday and Sunday (beginning September 11) concerts at 3 p.m., with Thursday evening concerts at 8:45 on September 15, 22, and 29.

Looking Ahead

October will find the concert season in full swing. The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives twelve concerts during the month, and the B.U. Celebrity Series will present flamenco guitarist Carlos Montoya on Saturday evening, October 8 at Jordan Hall; the Istomin-Stern-Rose Trio on Sunday afternoon, October 9, and the Moscow Chamber Orchestra, Sunday afternoon, October 16, both at Symphony Hall; Pianist Rosalyn Tureck on Friday evening, October 21, Jordan Hall; Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Sunday afternoon, October 23 at Symphony Hall; Music from Marlboro, Sunday afternoon, October 30 at Jordan Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
AUG 11 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
SEP 17 1966

The Symphony's 86th . . .

Erich Leinsdorf, starting his fifth season as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the orchestra will begin its 86th season with performances of Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony at the opening concerts of each of its seven Boston series. The first two concerts will be given in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2 p.m. and Saturday night at 8:30.

Symphony opening 86th year

Erich Leinsdorf, who is starting his fifth season as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the orchestra will begin its 86th season with performances of Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony at the opening concerts of each of its seven Boston series. The first two concerts will take place in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon (Sept. 23) at 2:00 p.m. and Saturday evening (Sept. 24) at 8:30.

The first movement of the Mahler Third lasts 30 minutes; and since each of the Boston Symphony's seven series will be opening with this movement, subscribers are urged to be in their seats at concert time. Late comers will not be seated during the first movement of the Mahler, which means that they will not be seated during the first half hour of the concert.

Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will be soloist in the Mahler performances. It will be her second engagement with the orchestra, her first appearance having been in the Brahms Alto Rhapsody and Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky" in March, 1965. The New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, will also take part in the performances.

The first Open Rehearsal of the season will take place in Symphony Hall Thursday evening (Sept. 22) at 7:30. As in the past, the series of seven Open Rehearsals will benefit the orchestra's pension fund and will consist of the final preparation for the weekend program which is to follow.

A limited number of season subscriptions are available for two of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's shorter series: the "Tuesday B" series with six concerts at 7:30 p.m. and the "Thursday B" series with three concerts at 8:30 p.m. Further information may be obtained from the subscription office, Symphony Hall, CO 6-1492.

BSO series on sale

Season subscriptions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tuesday and Thursday concerts are now available from the Subscription Office, Symphony Hall, Boston.

The orchestra's new season, its 87th, will open Sept. 23 with a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3, under Erich Leinsdorf.

Of the two Tuesday series, Series A will consist of 10 concerts beginning Sept. 27 (guest conductors Burgin, Davis, Kubelik, Munch, Schuller); Series B, six concerts beginning Oct. 4 (guest conductors Schippers and Schuller).

The six-concert Thursday Series A will open Sept. 29 (guest conductors Burgin, Davis, Munch). The three Thursday Series B concerts will begin Oct. 6 (conductors Leinsdorf, Munch, Schippers).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Telegram
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 105,712
AUG 21 1966

Busy BSO Gives Itself A Breather

By JOHN THORNTON

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY orchestra, now completing another successful season at Tanglewood which has attracted nearly a quarter million music lovers, will take a few weeks off before commencing its new winter season at Symphony Hall in Boston on Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23 and 24.

During its 86th season, the BSO will present in its familiar home on Massachusetts Avenue 24 pairs of concerts for the Friday-Saturday series; 16 Tuesday concerts, of which six will be in Series "B"; and 15 Thursday concerts, six of them "Cambridge" events and the remaining nine split into two other series.

In addition, there will be the regular "open rehearsal" concerts for the orchestra pension fund, and five concerts in Providence.

It will engage in several tour concerts, 10 at Philharmonic Hall in New York, others in Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London and Philadelphia.

Next spring the orchestra visits the Middle West, its first extended tour of that region in many years.

Altogether, the Boston orchestra is still the busiest of all the major symphony organizations in the United States. Its musicians face a staggering schedule, taking into consideration the winter season, the Pops spring season, eight weeks at "Tanglewood," special benefit performances, chamber music concerts and tours.

Erich Leinsdorf has engaged six guest conductors to appear with the orchestra, including retired music director Charles Munch, and Richard Burgin, former concert master and associate conductor of the BSO who left the ensemble recently after an association that began in 1920.

Colin Davis, conductor of the London Symphony, who has made such an impact in England and Europe and is now leading his orchestra in a new festival at Daytona Beach, Fla., will guest direct the BSO for the first time in February, when he conducts four concerts.

Rafael Kubelik, former conductor of the Chicago Symphony, will be a guest director in mid-January.

Three World Premieres

THREE WORLD PREMIERES feature the 1966-67 season: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moev's "Et in Occidentem" with the orchestra and Rutgers University Choir, and finally William Syndeman's new score in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

An unusual set of concerts will be presented on March 24 and 25, when Leinsdorf will bring to concert Bach's "Passion According to St. John," dedicating the presentation to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867.

Outside of some standard Beethoven and Brahms repertoire, specials will include Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ," Schoenberg's "Pellias et Melisande" and Haydn's great masterpiece, "The Creation."

As an experiment this summer at Lenox, Leinsdorf originated a "Prelude" chamber series preceding the formal concerts of the BSO.

Crowds of visitors throng the large grounds of the orchestra's summer home and picnic under the trees, so he concluded they would be interested in a concert to go with their sandwiches.

Delighted with the inovation, thousands of picnickers attended each affair. Instead of beginning the regular concert at 8:15, it was delayed on Fridays to 9 o'clock, with the "Prelude" starting at 7 p.m. Musicians had about an hour to rest before going on to the late concert.

The large shed, which sounds magnificent since it was acoustically reinforced several seasons back, now holds just over 2,000, but thousands more gather on the spacious lawns outside the building where they listen under the stars.

These "unfortunates" may not be able to get full acoustical advantage of the BSO tone, but they enjoy themselves immensely, sprawled on blankets.

Two of the big events at Tanglewood this summer drew an avalanche of music lovers. One was the concert-performance of Mozart's "Magic Flute," which attracted over 10,000.

But the largest crowd of the season went to hear Van Cliburn play the Rachmaninov Third Piano Concerto.

The tall Texan, years after he made his sensational debut before enchanted audiences in Moscow, continues to be a great magnet, and 14,000 overflowed the grounds for his guest appearance.

Van Cliburn, who once waited on tables between recitals in order to help pay his bills, is a phenomona of the prize-competition method of finding outstanding talent.

Since that Moscovite affair, young pianists now flock to all sorts of competitions, knowing a first prize may launch them on brilliant following careers.

3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
AUG 14 1966

Symphony Sets 86th Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall on Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23 and 24. Several months ago Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year as music director, announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. Mr. Leinsdorf has now listed the major works to be played next winter as well as the soloists who will be appearing with the orchestra.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 and Saturday evenings at 8:30, the orchestra will present five other series of concerts. These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A, at 8:30 p.m.; 6 Tuesdays, Series B, at 7:30 p.m.; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge," at 8:30; 6 Thursdays, Series A, and 3 Thursdays, Series B, both at 8:30 p.m. The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York, on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia). In the spring the orchestra will make a six-concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this tour will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

NEXT SEASON six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired music director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin, who will retire as associate conductor at the conclusion of the 1966 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch will conduct the orchestra for two weeks in December and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27. Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each make their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be in Boston in mid-January and for the orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

The world premieres to be conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf next season include: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' "Et in Occidentem," which the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In the spring Mr. Leinsdorf announced that he would dedicate the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25, 1967 to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. The St. John Passion by Bach will be performed at these concerts.

THE MORNING CALL
PATERSON, N. J.
D. 20,932
AUG 9 1966

Symphony's 86th Season Starts Sept. 23

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-Transcript
MILTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,600
AUG 12 1966

Symphony Will Open Sept. 23

The Record
HACKENSACK, N. J.
D. 137,868
AUG 8 1966

BOSTON AWAITS MUSIC SEASON

Symphony Orchestra To Open In Sept.

Boston — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 86th season in Symphony Hall here on September 23 and 24. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the orchestra, previously announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. Leinsdorf has now listed the major works to be played next winter as well as the soloists who will be appearing with the Orchestra.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2:00 and Saturday evenings at 8:30, the orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York, on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other East Coast cities. In the spring the orchestra will make a 6-concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, Colin Davis, and Rafael Kubelik.

The world premieres to be conducted by Leinsdorf next season include Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, Robert Moevs' Et in Occidenten which the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir, and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In the spring Leindorf announced that he would dedicate the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25, 1967 to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. The St. John Passion by Bach will be performed at these concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
AUG 21 1966

Symphony Lists Programs, Artists

The Boston Symphony has issued a partial list of the music to be performed during the orchestra's 86th season. Concerts resume in Symphony Hall Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23-24, when Erich Leinsdorf will begin his fifth year as music director.

Six guest conductors will appear with the orchestra. Charles Munch, music director emeritus, will return for two weeks in December. One of his programs will be devoted to Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ." Soloists will be Florence Kopleff, Donald Gramm, Theodore Uppman and John McCollum, and the chorus will come from Harvard and Radcliffe.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's former concertmaster and associate conductor, will lead the concerts of Oct. 21, 22, 25 and 27. Rafael Kubelik and Colin Davis will be appearing with the Boston Symphony for the first time. Kubelik will be here in mid-January and then take the orchestra on its New York tour at the end of the month. Davis's dates are Feb. 3, 4, 7 and 9.

Gunther Schuller, newly appointed president of the New England Conservatory, will conduct the first Boston performance of Ives' Symphony No. 4. The Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus will participate.

Three world premieres will be conducted by Leinsdorf. The Elliott Carter Piano Concerto will have Jacob Lateiner as soloist. The Rutgers University Choir will be heard in Robert Moevs' "Et in Occidentem." And William Sydeman's new work in memory of President Kennedy will be heard.

The centennial of Arturo Toscanini's birth (March 25) will be observed by performances March 24-25 of Bach's St. John Passion.

Other music to be heard during the 1966-67 season includes:

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claude Frank), "Leonore" Overture No. 2, Symphonies Nos. 4, 5, 7. BERG: "Lulu" Suite. BLOCH: "Scholemo" (Jules Eskin, cello). BRAHMS: Violin Concerto (Joseph Silverstein). BRUCKNER: Symphony No. 5. DVORAK: Violin Concerto (Shmuel Ashkenasi). FRANCK: Symphony in D minor.

HANDEL: Concerto for Two Wind Orchestras and Strings in F. HAYDN: Symphonies Nos. 94 and 102, "The Creation" (Beverly Sills, Beverly Wolff, Placido Domingo, Norman Treigle, Rutgers Choir). HINDEMITH: "Mathis der Maler," "Schwanendreher" (Burton Fine, viola), Symphonic Metamorphosis.

MAHLER: Symphonies Nos. 9 and 3 (Shirley Verrett, New England Conservatory Chorus). MARTINU: Double Concerto. MENDELSSOHN: Symphony No. 2. MOZART: "Haffner" Serenade, Piano Concerto, K. 488, Symphonies Nos. 39, 40.

NIELSEN: Flute Concerto (Doriot Anthony Dwyer). PROKOFIEV: Romeo and Juliet" Suite, "Scythian" Suite. RACHMANINOFF: Piano Concerto No. 2 (Gina Bachauer). RAVEL: "Alborada del Gracioso."

SCHOENBERG: "Pelleas et Melisande." SCHUMANN: Symphony No. 1. STRAUSS: "Tod und Verklarung," "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and excerpts from "Der Rosenkavalier" (Beverly Sills, Beverly Wolff). WAGNER: "Faust" Overture. WEBER: Passacaglia No. 1.

Staten Island Advance
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
D. 57,734 SUN. 45,423
SEPT 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
SEP 4 1966

New Conductors

Two new conductors will join the Boston Symphony "family" as guest conductors of the orchestra during the forthcoming season. The first is Rafael Kubelik, music director of the Chicago Symphony in the early Fifties, who will make his Symphony Hall debut in January and also conduct the orchestra on tour.

He will be followed by Colin Davis, outstanding among younger English conductors, who will have a week in February. Other guests will include Charles Munch, who was the orchestra's music director prior to Erich Leinsdorf, and Richard Burgin, who recently retired as Associate Conductor after an association that began in 1920.

I. K.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
SEP 22 1966

Where To Go And What To Do

FRIDAY, SEPT. 23

Fall officially arrives Friday at 6:43 a.m. But for Bostonians it's at 2 p.m. when the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 86th season in Symphony Hall.

The new season will include three premieres as well as five new series of concerts in Boston. In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall—2 p.m. on Fridays and 8:30 p.m. on Saturdays—the new series offers Tuesday and Thursday evening performances.

Beginning his fifth year as music director, Erich Leinsdorf will welcome six guest conductors during the concert year.

Friday's concert at 2 p.m. is Mahler's Third Symphony; Shirley Verrett is guest soloist with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

The Symphony's program and box offices are open for series information; phone CO 6-1492.

Friday events:

CHILDREN'S STORY HOUR—Begins at 3 p.m., Mt. Pleasant Branch Library; at 3:30 p.m., South Boston Branch.

CAMPION CLUB OF BOSTON—"September Song" dance; 9 p.m.-midnight; Harvard Club, 374 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

GUILD OF ST. RADEGONDE—Board meeting; 8 p.m., Old B.C. High School, James St., Boston.

NORTHEASTERN UNIVERSITY—"Paintings, 1966," by Ronald W. Hayes; 9 a.m.-6 p.m., Ell Student Union.

Send items for daily listing in the Traveler — one week in advance to Barbara Burns, Boston Traveler, 300 Harrison Ave., Boston 02106.

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100
SEPT 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA: Erich Leinsdorf, conductor; Charles Wilson, assistant conductor. September 23—April 22: seventy-nine subscription concerts. Guest conductors will include Colin Davis, Rafael Kubelik, Charles Munch, Thomas Schippers, Gunther Schuller. Guest artists will include pianists Claude Frank (Beethoven Concerto No. 1), Gina Bachauer (Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 2); violinist Shmuel Ashkenasi (Dvorák Concerto); flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer (Nielsen Concerto). The Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus will join the orchestra in a performance of the Ives Fourth Symphony, and two new works will be given premieres: a piano concerto by Elliott Carter (with Jacob Lateiner), and a piece by William Sydeman, tentatively entitled In Memoriam JFK.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 9 1966

McLAREN HARRIS, Music Critic

Musical Premieres --Who's on First?

As we cross the threshold of another music season we can cast an eye over the prospects of the next seven months and pick out events of special interest in the Boston Opera season, major composers and recent compositions in the Boston Symphony schedule, newcomers and welcome old-timers in the Boston University Celebrity Series, and a host of serious efforts by the other organizations, professional, amateur and academic.

However, one thing about programs which writers look upon with increasing distrust and disfavor is the phrase "first Boston performance," or words to that effect, frequently attached to contemporary works, occasionally to obscure works of the 19th century and once in a while to compositions hundreds of years old.

THE INITIAL reaction upon seeing the phrase is to question, "Is it?" And in the great majority of cases there is no way of establishing the fact beyond doubt.

Early in the century there was a multitude of symphonic organizations, choruses and chamber groups connected with the city of Boston; if one considers suburban contributions when accounting for the present, the number is undoubtedly much higher.

Complete program schedules for many organizations which have passed into oblivion over the years probably long since ceased to exist; and in any case there is no central clearing house to undertake the monumental task of untangling, compiling, documenting and cross-indexing Greater Boston's entire musical activity for even a single year out of the past eighty.

THE FILES are full of letters from concert-goers protesting the designation "first Boston peformance" of a work they remember hearing many years before; inevitably we come to the conclusion that the best testimony concerning first performances comes from experienced listeners with prodigious memories, not from record books. After being himself nailed a few times, John Burk, long-time program annotator for the Boston Symphony whose retirement was recently announced, avoided making such declarations as far as possible—and wisely.

Then the argument grows larger: does "first Boston performance" exclude any which may have taken place in Cambridge, or by the Arlington Philharmonic or the Wellesley Symphony? And if the phrase is entended to say "Boston area" where does that leave Framingham? Lowell? Brockton? And on and on.

IN MOST instances this question of "first" is purely, basically academic. Except in cases of actual world premieres, or when the performance requires major, combined efforts, or when undeserved neglect is implied, the designation has little worth. It may even have an adverse meaning. If a work lies fallow for a long period there is usually a good reason: lack of esthetic value.

Furthermore, the fact that a composition is receiving its first area performance does not mean that it has not been heard before, thanks to radio and the phonograph record.

Our inevitable finding is that some officers consider that promulgation of a "first Boston performance" a feather in their organization's cap. But being first for the sake of being first is not particularly commendable; finer feathers are gained by varied and imaginative programming, whether wholly original or not, and with high standards of execution.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Visitors Guidepost
BOSTON, Mass.
Bi-Weekly
SEP 16 1966

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 86th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23 and 24. Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year as music director of the orchestra, has announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. They will be Elliott Carter's piano concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' Et in Occidentem, which the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
AUG 14 1966

Symphony Sets 86th Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall on Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23 and 24. Several months ago Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year as music director, announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. Mr. Leinsdorf has now listed the major works to be played next winter as well as the soloists who will be appearing with the orchestra.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 and Saturday evenings at 8:30, the orchestra will present five other series of concerts. These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A, at 8:30 p.m.; 6 Tuesdays, Series B, at 7:30 p.m.; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge," at 8:30; 6 Thursdays, Series A, and 3 Thursdays, Series B, both at 8:30 p.m. The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York, on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia). In the spring the orchestra will make a six-concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this tour will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

NEXT SEASON six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired music director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin, who will retire as associate conductor at the conclusion of the 1966 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch will conduct the orchestra for two weeks in December and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27. Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each make their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be in Boston in mid-January and for the orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

The world premieres to be conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf next season include: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' "Et in Occidentem," which the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In the spring Mr. Leinsdorf announced that he would dedicate the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25, 1967 to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. The St. John Passion by Bach will be performed at these concerts.

THE MORNING CALL
PATERSON, N. J.
D. 20,932
AUG 9 1966

Symphony's 86th Season Starts Sept. 23

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-Transcript
MILTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,600
AUG 12 1966

Symphony Will Open Sept. 23

The Record
HACKENSACK, N. J.
D. 137,868
AUG 8 1966

BOSTON AWAITS MUSIC SEASON

Symphony Orchestra To Open In Sept.

Boston — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 86th season in Symphony Hall here on September 23 and 24. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the orchestra, previously announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. Leinsdorf has now listed the major works to be played next winter as well as the soloists who will be appearing with the Orchestra.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2:00 and Saturday evenings at 8:30, the orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York, on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other East Coast cities. In the spring the orchestra will make a 6-concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, Colin Davis, and Rafael Kubelik.

The world premieres to be conducted by Leinsdorf next season include Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, Robert Moevs' Et in Occidenten which the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir, and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In the spring Leindorf announced that he would dedicate the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25, 1967 to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. The St. John Passion by Bach will be performed at these concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
AUG 21 1966

Symphony Lists Programs, Artists

The Boston Symphony has issued a partial list of the music to be performed during the orchestra's 86th season. Concerts resume in Symphony Hall Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23-24, when Erich Leinsdorf will begin his fifth year as music director.

Six guest conductors will appear with the orchestra. Charles Munch, music director emeritus, will return for two weeks in December. One of his programs will be devoted to Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ." Soloists will be Florence Kopleff, Donald Gramm, Theodore Uppman and John McCollum, and the chorus will come from Harvard and Radcliffe.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's former concertmaster and associate conductor, will lead the concerts of Oct. 21, 22, 25 and 27. Rafael Kubelik and Colin Davis will be appearing with the Boston Symphony for the first time, Kubelik will be here in mid-January and then take the orchestra on its New York tour at the end of the month. Davis's dates are Feb. 3, 4, 7 and 9.

Gunther Schuller, newly appointed president of the New England Conservatory, will conduct the first Boston performance of Ives' Symphony No. 4. The Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus will participate.

Three world premieres will be conducted by Leinsdorf. The Elliott Carter Piano Concerto will have Jacob Lateiner as soloist. The Rutgers University Choir will be heard in Robert Moevs' "Et in Occidentem." And William Sydeman's new work in memory of President Kennedy will be heard.

The centennial of Arturo Toscanini's birth (March 25) will be observed by performances March 24-25 of Bach's St. John Passion.

Other music to be heard during the 1966-67 season includes:

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claude Frank), "Leonore" Overture No. 2, Symphonies Nos. 4, 5, 7. BERG: "Lulu" Suite. BLOCH: "Scholemo" (Jules Eskin, cello). BRAHMS: Violin Concerto (Joseph Silverstein). BRUCKNER: Symphony No. 5. DVORAK: Violin Concerto (Shmuel Ashkenasi). FRANCK: Symphony in D minor.

HANDEL: Concerto for Two Wind Orchestras and Strings in F. HAYDN: Symphonies Nos. 94 and 102, "The Creation" (Beverly Sills, Beverly Wolff, Placido Domingo, Norman Treigle, Rutgers Choir). HINDEMITH: "Mathis der Maler," "Schwanendreher" (Burton Fine, viola), Symphonic Metamorphosis.

MAHLER: Symphonies Nos. 9 and 3 (Shirley Verrett, New England Conservatory Chorus). MARTINU: Double Concerto. MENDELSSOHN: Symphony No. 2. MOZART: "Haffner" Serenade, Piano Concerto, K. 488, Symphonies Nos. 39, 40.

NIELSEN: Flute Concerto (Doriot Anthony Dwyer). PROKOFIEV: Romeo and Juliet" Suite, "Scythian" Suite. RACHMANINOFF: Piano Concerto No. 2 (Gina Bachauer). RAVEL: "Alborada del Gracioso."

SCHOENBERG: "Pelleas et Melisande." SCHUMANN: Symphony No. 1. STRAUSS: "Tod und Verklarung," "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and excerpts from "Der Rosenkavalier" (Beverly Sills, Beverly Wolff). WAGNER: "Faust" Overture. WEBER: Passacaglia No. 1.

Staten Island Advance
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
D. 57,734 SUN. 45,423
SEPT 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
SEP 4 1966

New Conductors

Two new conductors will join the Boston Symphony "family" as guest conductors of the orchestra during the forthcoming season. The first is Rafael Kubelik, music director of the Chicago Symphony in the early Fifties, who will make his Symphony Hall debut in January and also conduct the orchestra on tour.

He will be followed by Colin Davis, outstanding among younger English conductors, who will have a week in February. Other guests will include Charles Munch, who was the orchestra's music director prior to Erich Leinsdorf, and Richard Burgin, who recently retired as Associate Conductor after an association that began in 1920.

I. K.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
SEP 22 1966

Where To Go And What To Do

FRIDAY, SEPT. 23

Fall officially arrives Friday at 6:43 a.m. But for Bostonians it's at 2 p.m. when the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 86th season in Symphony Hall.

The new season will include three premieres as well as five new series of concerts in Boston. In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall—2 p.m. on Fridays and 3:30 p.m. on Saturdays—the new series offers Tuesday and Thursday evening performances.

Beginning his fifth year as music director, Erich Leinsdorf will welcome six guest conductors during the concert year.

Friday's concert at 2 p.m. is Mahler's Third Symphony; Shirley Verrett is guest soloist with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

The Symphony's program and box offices are open for series information; phone CO 6-1492.

Friday events:

CHILDREN'S STORY HOUR—Begins at 3 p.m., Mt. Pleasant Branch Library; at 3:30 p.m., South Boston Branch.

CAMPION CLUB OF BOSTON—"September Song" dance; 9 p.m.-midnight; Harvard Club, 374 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.

GUILD OF ST. RADEGONDE—Board meeting; 8 p.m., Old B.C. High School, James St., Boston.

NORTHEASTERN UNIVERSITY—"Paintings, 1966," by Ronald W. Hayes; 9 a.m.-6 p.m., Ell Student Union.

Send items for daily listing in the Traveler — one week in advance to Barbara Burns, Boston Traveler, 300 Harrison Ave., Boston 02106.

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100
SEPT 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA: Erich Leinsdorf, conductor; Charles Wilson, assistant conductor. September 23—April 22: seventy-nine subscription concerts. Guest conductors will include Colin Davis, Rafael Kubelik, Charles Munch, Thomas Schippers, Gunther Schuller. Guest artists will include pianists Claude Frank (Beethoven Concerto No. 1), Gina Bachauer (Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 2); violinist Shmuel Ashkenasi (Dvorák Concerto); flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer (Nielsen Concerto). The Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus will join the orchestra in a performance of the Ives Fourth Symphony, and two new works will be given premieres: a piano concerto by Elliott Carter (with Jacob Lateiner), and a piece by William Sydeman, tentatively entitled In Memoriam JFK.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 9 1966

McLAREN HARRIS, Music Critic

Musical Premieres --Who's on First?

As we cross the threshold of another music season we can cast an eye over the prospects of the next seven months and pick out events of special interest in the Boston Opera season, major composers and recent compositions in the Boston Symphony schedule, newcomers and welcome old-timers in the Boston University Celebrity Series, and a host of serious efforts by the other organizations, professional, amateur and academic.

However, one thing about programs which writers look upon with increasing distrust and disfavor is the phrase "first Boston performance," or words to that effect, frequently attached to contemporary works, occasionally to obscure works of the 19th century and once in a while to compositions hundreds of years old.

THE INITIAL reaction upon seeing the phrase is to question, "Is it?" And in the great majority of cases there is no way of establishing the fact beyond doubt.

Early in the century there was a multitude of symphonic organizations, choruses and chamber groups connected with the city of Boston; if one considers suburban contributions when accounting for the present, the number is undoubtedly much higher.

Complete program schedules for many organizations which have passed into oblivion over the years probably long since ceased to exist; and in any case there is no central clearing house to undertake the monumental task of untangling, compiling, documenting and cross-indexing Greater Boston's entire musical activity for even a single year out of the past eighty.

THE FILES are full of letters from concert-goers protesting the designation "first Boston peformance" of a work they remember hearing many years before; inevitably we come to the conclusion that the best testimony concerning first performances comes from experienced listeners with prodigious memories, not from record books. After being himself nailed a few times, John Burk, long-time program annotator for the Boston Symphony whose retirement was recently announced, avoided making such declarations as far as possible—and wisely.

Then the argument grows larger: does "first Boston performance" exclude any which may have taken place in Cambridge, or by the Arlington Philharmonic or the Wellesley Symphony? And if the phrase is entended to say "Boston area" where does that leave Framingham? Lowell? Brockton? And on and on.

IN MOST instances this question of "first" is purely, basically academic. Except in cases of actual world premieres, or when the performance requires major, combined efforts, or when undeserved neglect is implied, the designation has little worth. It may even have an adverse meaning. If a work lies fallow for a long period there is usually a good reason: lack of esthetic value.

Furthermore, the fact that a composition is receiving its first area performance does not mean that it has not been heard before, thanks to radio and the phonograph record.

Our inevitable finding is that some officers consider that promulgation of a "first Boston performance" a feather in their organization's cap. But being first for the sake of being first is not particularly commendable; finer feathers are gained by varied and imaginative programming, whether wholly original or not, and with high standards of execution.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Visitors Guidepost
BOSTON, Mass.
Bi-Weekly
SEP 16 1966

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 86th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23 and 24. Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year as music director of the orchestra, has announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. They will be Elliott Carter's piano concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' Et in Occidentem, which the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

[3a]

ew England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966

AUG 14 1966

Boston Orchestra to Play Three World Premieres

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday and Saturday Sept. 23, 24.

Begins Fifth Season

Several months ago Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year as music director of the orchestra, announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. Mr. Leinsdorf has now listed the major works to be played next winter as well as the soloists who will be appearing with the orchestra.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 p. m. and Saturday evenings at 8.30 p. m., the orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston.

These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A at 8.30 p. m.; 6 Tuesdays, Series B at 7.30 p. m.; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge" at 8.30 p. m.; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B both at 8.30 p. m.

Open Rehearsals

The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia).

Middle West Tour

In the spring the orchestra will make a six-concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this sixth tour of the eighty-sixth season will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired Music Director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin, who retired as associate conductor at the conclusion of the 1966 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Began in 1920

Mr. Burgin's retirement brings to a conclusion an association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which began in 1920 when he became the orchestra's concertmaster. Dr. Munch will conduct the orchestra for two weeks in December, and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27.

Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each be making their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be with the orchestra in Boston in mid-January and for the orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

World Premieres

The world premieres to be conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf next season include: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' Et in Occidentem with the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In the spring Mr. Leinsdorf announced that he would dedicate the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25, 1967 to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. The St. John Passion by Bach will be performed at these concerts.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

OCT. 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Eighty-Sixth Season Opened Sept. 23

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its Eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall, Boston on Sept. 23-24. Erich Leinsdorf began his fifth year as Music Director of the Orchestra. The Orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season.

In addition to the twenty-four pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, the Orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A; 6 Tuesdays, Series B; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge,"; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York, on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia). In the spring the Orchestra will make a six concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this sixth tour of the Eighty-sixth season will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired Music Director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin. Dr. Munch will conduct the Orchestra for two weeks in December, and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27. Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each be making their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be with the Orchestra in Boston in mid-January and for the Orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

[3a]

ew England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966

AUG 14 1966

Boston Orchestra to Play Three World Premieres

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday and Saturday Sept. 23, 24.

Begins Fifth Season

Several months ago Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year as music director of the orchestra, announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. Mr. Leinsdorf has now listed the major works to be played next winter as well as the soloists who will be appearing with the orchestra.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 p. m. and Saturday evenings at 8.30 p. m., the orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston.

These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A at 8.30 p. m.; 6 Tuesdays, Series B at 7.30 p. m.; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge" at 8.30 p. m.; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B both at 8.30 p. m.

Open Rehearsals

The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia).

Middle West Tour

In the spring the orchestra will make a six-concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this sixth tour of the eighty-sixth season will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired Music Director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin, who retired as associate conductor at the conclusion of the 1966 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Began in 1920

Mr. Burgin's retirement brings to a conclusion an association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which began in 1920 when he became the orchestra's concertmaster. Dr. Munch will conduct the orchestra for two weeks in December, and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27.

Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each be making their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be with the orchestra in Boston in mid-January and for the orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

World Premieres

The world premieres to be conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf next season include: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' Et in Occidentem with the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In the spring Mr. Leinsdorf announced that he would dedicate the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25, 1967 to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. The St. John Passion by Bach will be performed at these concerts.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

OCT 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Eighty-Sixth Season Opened Sept. 23

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its Eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall, Boston on Sept. 23-24. Erich Leinsdorf began his fifth year as Music Director of the Orchestra. The Orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season.

In addition to the twenty-four pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, the Orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A; 6 Tuesdays, Series B; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge,"; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York, on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia). In the spring the Orchestra will make a six concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this sixth tour of the Eighty-sixth season will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired Music Director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin. Dr. Munch will conduct the Orchestra for two weeks in December, and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27. Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each be making their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be with the Orchestra in Boston in mid-January and for the Orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

[3a]

ew England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966

SEP 4 1966

Boston Orchestra to Play Three World Premieres

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday and Saturday Sept. 23, 24.

Begins Fifth Season

Several months ago Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year as music director of the orchestra, announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. Mr. Leinsdorf has now listed the major works to be played next winter as well as the soloists who will be appearing with the orchestra.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 p. m. and Saturday evenings at 8.30 p. m., the orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston.

These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A at 8.30 p. m.; 6 Tuesdays, Series B at 7.30 p. m.; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge" at 8.30 p. m.; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B both at 8.30 p. m.

Open Rehearsals

The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia).

Middle West Tour

In the spring the orchestra will make a six-concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this sixth tour of the eighty-sixth season will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired Music Director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin, who retired as associate conductor at the conclusion of the 1966 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Began in 1920

Mr. Burgin's retirement brings to a conclusion an association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which began in 1920 when he became the orchestra's concertmaster. Dr. Munch will conduct the orchestra for two weeks in December, and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27.

Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each be making their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be with the orchestra in Boston in mid-January and for the orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

World Premieres

The world premieres to be conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf next season include: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' Et in Occidentem with the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In the spring Mr. Leinsdorf announced that he would dedicate the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25, 1967 to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. The St. John Passion by Bach will be performed at these concerts.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

OCT. 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Eighty-Sixth Season Opened Sept. 23

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its Eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall, Boston on Sept. 23-24. Erich Leinsdorf began his fifth year as Music Director of the Orchestra. The Orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season.

In addition to the twenty-four pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, the Orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A; 6 Tuesdays, Series B; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge,"; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York, on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia). In the spring the Orchestra will make a six concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this sixth tour of the Eighty-sixth season will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired Music Director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin. Dr. Munch will conduct the Orchestra for two weeks in December, and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27. Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each be making their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be with the Orchestra in Boston in mid-January and for the Orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

[3a]

ew England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966

AUG 14 1966

Boston Orchestra to Play Three World Premieres

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday and Saturday Sept. 23, 24.

Begins Fifth Season

Several months ago Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year as music director of the orchestra, announced the orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season. Mr. Leinsdorf has now listed the major works to be played next winter as well as the soloists who will be appearing with the orchestra.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 p. m. and Saturday evenings at 8.30 p. m., the orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston.

These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A at 8.30 p. m.; 6 Tuesdays, Series B at 7.30 p. m.; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge" at 8.30 p. m.; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B both at 8.30 p. m.

Open Rehearsals

The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia).

Middle West Tour

In the spring the orchestra will make a six-concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this sixth tour of the eighty-sixth season will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired Music Director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin, who retired as associate conductor at the conclusion of the 1966 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Began in 1920

Mr. Burgin's retirement brings to a conclusion an association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which began in 1920 when he became the orchestra's concertmaster. Dr. Munch will conduct the orchestra for two weeks in December, and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27.

Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each be making their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be with the orchestra in Boston in mid-January and for the orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

World Premieres

The world premieres to be conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf next season include: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' Et in Occidentem with the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In the spring Mr. Leinsdorf announced that he would dedicate the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25, 1967 to Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. The St. John Passion by Bach will be performed at these concerts.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

OCT 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Eighty-Sixth Season Opened Sept. 23

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its Eighty-sixth season in Symphony Hall, Boston on Sept. 23-24. Erich Leinsdorf began his fifth year as Music Director of the Orchestra. The Orchestra will perform three world premieres during the new season.

In addition to the twenty-four pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, the Orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A; 6 Tuesdays, Series B; 6 Tuesdays, "Cambridge,"; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B.

On tour the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Philharmonic Hall, New York, on five Wednesdays and five Fridays under its own auspices and play in several other east coast cities (Brooklyn, Washington, Hartford, New Haven, New London, Philadelphia). In the spring the Orchestra will make a six concert tour into the Middle West, its first extended visit in that area in several years. Concerts on this sixth tour of the Eighty-sixth season will be given in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago (two concerts), and Ann Arbor.

Next season six guest conductors will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra including retired Music Director Charles Munch and Richard Burgin. Dr. Munch will conduct the Orchestra for two weeks in December, and Mr. Burgin will conduct four concerts on Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 27. Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik will each be making their first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Davis will conduct on Feb. 3, 4, 7, and 9, and Mr. Kubelik will be with the Orchestra in Boston in mid-January and for the Orchestra's tour at the end of that month.

[3b]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099

JAN 8 1967

Boston Symphony

3 Guests to Fill In For Erich Leinsdorf

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has departed for a mid-winter leave of absence, during which he will be guest conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra in The Hague on Jan. 14, and in Amsterdam Jan. 15, 18 and 19.

His first program after his return will be the concert of Friday, Feb. 10.

Meanwhile, he has invited Gunther Schuller, Rafael Kubelik and Colin Davis to be guest conductors in his absence. Mr. Schuller will conduct the orchestra for the fourth time this season on Tuesday evening. Mr. Kubelik will lead the Orchestra for two weeks in Boston and one week on tour, from Jan. 13-31. Mr. Davis will conduct from Feb. 3-9.

The concert this Tuesday at 7:30 will be one of nine Orchestra concerts this season which are being televised and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and WGBH-FM. Mr. Schuller will conduct Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," the Schubert Symphony No. 8 and Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4, assisted by the New England Conservatory Chorus.

RAFAEL KUBELIK will conduct the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, and the fifth open rehearsal of the season on Thursday evening.

RAFAEL KUBELIK

His program will begin with Haydn's Symphony No. 102, in B-flat major, followed by the first performance at these concerts of the Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, by Bohuslav Martinu, composed in 1939.

Charles Wilson, the newly-appointed assistant conductor of the orchestra, will perform the solo piano part. After intermission Mr. Kubelik will conclude with the Franck Symphony in D minor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
AUG 19 1966

3 World Premieres

BOSTON (AP)—William Sydeman's new score in memory of President John F. Kennedy is among three world premieres scheduled for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th season, opening Sept. 23.

Music director Erich Leinsdorf announced the premieres along with a schedule of 24 programs to be given Friday and

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
AUG 9 1966

SMART SET By

Pre-Show Parties

★ ★ ★

BEGINNING HIS 5TH year as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf will open the 86th season of the orchestra Sept. 23 and 24 in Symphony Hall. It will perform three world premieres during the new season. In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 o'clock and Saturday evenings at 8:30 p. m., the orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A at 8:30 p. m.; six Tuesdays, Series B at 7:30 p. m.; six Tuesdays, "Cambridge" at 8:30; six Thursdays, Series A and three Thursdays, Series B, both at 8:30 p. m.

The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

★ ★ ★

Morning News
WILMINGTON, DEL.
D. 40,885
AUG 18 1966

. . . Boston date: Sept. 23-24, opening of Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th season . . . Mrs. Henry C. Lautenklos of 407 Birmingham Ave., Woodcrest, recently attended a Women's Seminar, sponsored by Valparaiso University, at the Pocono Crest Hotels in Pocono Pines, Pa. Also present at the event were Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Meyer of 510 Lennox Road.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 432,648
AUG 14 1966

Symphony Will Open Sept. 23

A performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3 will open the 86th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sept. 23 in Symphony Hall. It will be repeated at the opening concert of each of the seven subscription series. Season subscriptions are available for Tuesday and Thursday concerts.

The two Tuesday series, A and B, each have a number of subscriptions available. Series A, consisting of 10 concerts at 8:30 p. m. will begin Sept. 27. Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has invited Richard Burgin, Colin Davis, Rafael Kubelik, Charles Munch, and Gunther Schuller to be guest conductors at these concerts.

For the six concerts of Tuesday Series B, which will begin at 7:30 p. m. on Oct. 4, Thomas Schippers and Mr. Schuller have been invited as guest conductors. Two Thurs- ...s also will

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
SEP 18 1966

FIVE VISITING SYMPHONY orchestras will give concerts in Symphony Hall this season under the auspices of the Boston University Celebrity Series. The New York Philharmonic conducted by Leonard Bernstein, lower left, will appear in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon; Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, upper left, will conduct the Minneapolis Symphony on Feb. 19; Jean Martinon, center, will lead the Chicago Symphony on Nov. 13; Sixten Ehrling, upper right, will conduct the Detroit Symphony on Oct. 23, and George Szell will be on the podium when the Cleveland Orchestra plays on Feb. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 5 1966

BSO To Perform Musical Tribute To J. F. Kennedy

BOSTON (AP) — William Sydeman's new score in memory of President John F. Kennedy is among three world premieres scheduled for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th season, opening Sept. 23.

Music Director Erich Leinsdorf announced the premieres along with a schedule of 24 programs to be given Friday and Saturday evenings at Symphony Hall. Five other series of concerts on Tuesdays and Thursdays are planned.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
AUG 13 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
AUG 13 1966

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515
AUG 28 1966

Tickets Now Available For Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces that season subscriptions are available for the Tuesday and Thursday concerts in Symphony Hall. The new season, the 86th, will open Friday afternoon, Sept. 23 with a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3, which will be repeated at the opening concert of each of the seven subscription series.

The two Tuesday series, Series A and B, each have subscriptions available. Series A, consisting of 10 concerts at 8:30 p.m., will begin on Tuesday, Sept. 27. Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has invited Richard Burgin, Colin Davis, Rafael Kubelik, Charles Munch and Gunther Schuller to be guest conductors at the concerts.

Soloists will be Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, principal cellist Jules Eskin and pianist Evelyn Crochet as soloists.

For the six concerts of the Tuesday Series B, which begin at 7:30 p.m. Oct. 4, Thomas Schippers and Schuller have been invited as guest conductors. Soloists include Gina Bachauer and Claude Frank.

Two Thursday series of concerts will also begin at 8:30 p.m. Series A, six concerts, will open Sept. 29, with Burgin, Davis and Munch invited to conduct, and Silverstein and Eskin invited as soloists.

The Thursday Series B. concerts will begin Oct. 6. This three-concert series will be conducted by Leinsdorf, Munch and Schippers. Full information may be obtained from the subscription office, Symphony Hall.

Music Notes

In news of orchestras elsewhere, the Boston Symphony orchestra is preparing for its 86th season, opening Sept. 23-24. Erich Leinsdorf will share the podium with six guests, including the orchestra's past music director, Charles Munch, and past associate conductor, Richard Burgin. Others will be Rafael Kubelik, Colin Davis, with two yet to be announced. Soloists will include the pianists Claude Frank and Gina Bachauer; Shmuel Ashkenasi, violinist; and vocalists Florence Kopleff, Beverly Wolff, and Donald Gramm. World premieres of works by Elliott Carter, Robert Moevs, and William Sydeman, Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ," Haydn's "The Creation," Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," and symphonies of Ives, Bruckner, and Mahler are among the major programming.

Friday, Saturday Concerts

Mahler Third Opens Symphony Season

Erich Leinsdorf, who is starting his fifth season as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the orchestra will begin its eighty-sixth season with performances of Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony at the opening concerts of each of its seven Boston series. The first two concerts will take place in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2:00 p.m. and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Audiences are urged to arrive on time for these concerts, as the first movement of the Mahler symphony lasts 30 minutes.

Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, has been invited by Mr. Leinsdorf to be soloist in the Mahler performances. It will be her second engagement with the orchestra; her first appearance having been in the Brahms Alto Rhapsody and Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky" in March, 1965. The New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, will also take part in the performances.

THE FIRST open rehearsal of the season will take place in Symphony Hall Thursday evening at 7:30. As in the past, the series of seven open rehearsals will benefit the orchestra's pension fund and will be the final preparation for the weekend program which is to follow.

A limited number of season subscriptions are available for two of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's shorter series: the "Tuesday B" series with six concerts at 7:30 p.m. and the "Thursday B" series with three concerts at 8:30 p.m. Further information may be obtained from the Subscription Office, Symphony Hall, CO 6-1492.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206
AUG 14 1966

Boston Symphony Sets 86th season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play at the Academy of Music Tuesday, April 11, will open its 86th home season Sept. 23. Erich Leinsdorf begins his fifth year as music director. The orchestra plays 24 Friday afternoon-Saturday evening pairs as well as other Boston series, 10 New York concerts, and programs in many Eastern and Midwest cities.

Guest conductors will include Charles Munch, former Boston music director; Richard Burgin, retiring this month after being concertmaster since 1920; Rafael Kubelik and Colin Davis.

World premiers will be those of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' "Et in Occidentem," with the Rutgers University Choir, and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President Kennedy.

The performances of Bach's "St. John Passion" March 24-25 will be dedicated to the memory of Arturo Toscanini, born March 25, 1867.

Other soloists include Shmuel Ashkenasi, in the Dvorak Violin Concerto, and Jules Eskin, in Bloch's "Schelomo." Both artists studied at Curtis Institute.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
SEPT 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Orchestra's 86th season, the fifth of Erich Leinsdorf's tenure as Music Director, will open at Symphony Hall, Boston, on Sept. 23. Guest conductors listed for the season include Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik. The latter two will be making their first appearances with the Bostonians. Three world premieres are slated: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto, Robert Moev's Et in Occidentem and William Sydeman's new work in memory of John F. Kennedy. Mr. Leinsdorf has also announced that he would dedicate the March 24-25 concerts to the memory of Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. They will feature the Bach St. John Passion.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
AUG 26 1966

Boston Symphony plans

The 86th season of Boston Symphony will open on Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23 and 24, in Symphony Hall. During the season there will be 24 pairs of weekend concerts, and five other series. They are: 10 Tuesdays, Series A, at 8:30; six Tuesdays, Series B, at 7:30; six Tuesdays, "Cambridge," at 8:30; six Thursdays, Series A, and three Thursdays, Series B, both at 8:30.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will include three world premieres of works during the winter, and has invited six guest conductors to take over directing the orchestra at intervals. Four of them are: Charles Munch, retired; Richard Burgin, who retired as associate conductor at the end of this year's Tanglewood concerts; Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik who are both making first appearances with the orchestra.

The two Boston Symphony concerts on March 24, and 25, will be dedicated to Arturo Toscanini, born March 25, 1867.

Pre

4

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
AUG 19 1966

3 World Premieres

BOSTON (AP)—William Sydeman's new score in memory of President John F. Kennedy is among three world premieres scheduled for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th season, opening Sept. 23.

Music director Erich Leinsdorf announced the premieres along with a schedule of 24 programs to be given Friday and

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
AUG 9 1966

SMART SET By

Pre-Show Parties

★ ★ ★

BEGINNING HIS 5TH year as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf will open the 86th season of the orchestra Sept. 23 and 24 in Symphony Hall. It will perform three world premieres during the new season. In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 o'clock and Saturday evenings at 8:30 p. m., the orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. These include 10 Tuesdays, Series A at 8:30 p. m.; six Tuesdays, Series B at 7:30 p. m.; six Tuesdays, "Cambridge" at 8:30; six Thursdays, Series A and three Thursdays, Series B, both at 8:30 p. m.

The orchestra will also give a series of open rehearsals for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund and a series of five concerts in Providence.

★ ★ ★

Morning News
WILMINGTON, DEL.
D. 40,885
AUG 18 1966

. . . Boston date: Sept. 23-24, opening of Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th season . . . Mrs. Henry C. Lautenklos of 407 Birmingham Ave., Woodcrest, recently attended a Women's Seminar, sponsored by Valparaiso University, at the Pocono Crest Hotels in Pocono Pines, Pa. Also present at the event were Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Meyer of 510 Lennox Road.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 432,648
AUG 14 1966

Symphony Will Open Sept. 23

A performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3 will open the 86th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sept. 23 in Symphony Hall. It will be repeated at the opening concert of each of the seven subscription series. Season subscriptions are available for Tuesday and Thursday concerts.

The two Tuesday series, A and B, each have a number of subscriptions available. Series A, consisting of 10 concerts at 8:30 p. m. will begin Sept. 27. Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has invited Richard Burgin, Colin Davis, Rafael Kubelik, Charles Munch, and Gunther Schuller to be guest conductors at these concerts.

For the six concerts of Tuesday Series B, which will begin at 7:30 p. m. on Oct. 4, Thomas Schippers and Mr. Schuller have been invited as guest conductors. Two Thurs- s also will

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
SEP 18 1966

FIVE VISITING SYMPHONY orchestras will give concerts in Symphony Hall this season under the auspices of the Boston University Celebrity Series. The New York Philharmonic conducted by Leonard Bernstein, lower left, will appear in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon; Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, upper left, will conduct the Minneapolis Symphony on Feb. 19; Jean Martinon, center, will lead the Chicago Symphony on Nov. 13; Sixten Ehrling, upper right, will conduct the Detroit Symphony on Oct. 23, and George Szell will be on the podium when the Cleveland Orchestra plays on Feb. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
AUG 5 1966

BSO To Perform Musical Tribute To J. F. Kennedy

BOSTON (AP) — William Sydeman's new score in memory of President John F. Kennedy is among three world premieres scheduled for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th season, opening Sept. 23.

Music Director Erich Leinsdorf announced the premieres along with a schedule of 24 programs to be given Friday and Saturday evenings at Symphony Hall. Five other series of concerts on Tuesdays and Thursdays are plannd.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
AUG 13 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
AUG 13 1966

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515
AUG 28 1966

Tickets Now Available For Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces that season subscriptions are available for the Tuesday and Thursday concerts in Symphony Hall. The new season, the 86th, will open Friday afternoon, Sept. 23 with a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3, which will be repeated at the opening concert of each of the seven subscription series.

The two Tuesday series, Series A and B, each have subscriptions available. Series A, consisting of 10 concerts at 8:30 p.m., will begin on Tuesday, Sept. 27. Music Director Erich Leinsdorf has invited Richard Burgin, Colin Davis, Rafael Kubelik, Charles Munch and Gunther Schuller to be guest conductors at the concerts.

Soloists will be Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, principal cellist Jules Eskin and pianist Evelyn Crochet as soloists.

For the six concerts of the Tuesday Series B, which begin at 7:30 p.m. Oct. 4, Thomas Schippers and Schuller have been invited as guest conductors. Soloists include Gina Bachauer and Claude Frank.

Two Thursday series of concerts will also begin at 8:30 p.m. Series A, six concerts, will open Sept. 29, with Burgin, Davis and Munch invited to conduct, and Silverstein and Eskin invited as soloists.

The Thursday Series B. concerts will begin Oct. 6. This three-concert series will be conducted by Leinsdorf, Munch and Schippers. Full information may be obtained from the subscription office, Symphony Hall.

Music Notes

In news of orchestras elsewhere, the Boston Symphony orchestra is preparing for its 86th season, opening Sept. 23-24. Erich Leinsdorf will share the podium with six guests, including the orchestra's past music director, Charles Munch, and past associate conductor, Richard Burgin. Others will be Rafael Kubelik, Colin Davis, with two yet to be announced. Soloists will include the pianists Claude Frank and Gina Bachauer; Shmuel Ashkenasi, violinist; and vocalists Florence Kopleff, Beverly Wolff, and Donald Gramm. World premieres of works by Elliott Carter, Robert Moevs, and William Sydeman, Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ," Haydn's "The Creation," Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," and symphonies of Ives, Bruckner, and Mahler are among the major programming.

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206
AUG 14 1966

Boston Symphony Sets 86th season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play at the Academy of Music Tuesday, April 11, will open its 86th home season Sept. 23. Erich Leinsdorf begins his fifth year as music director. The orchestra plays 24 Friday afternoon-Saturday evening pairs as well as other Boston series, 10 New York concerts, and programs in many Eastern and Midwest cities.

Guest conductors will include Charles Munch, former Boston music director; Richard Burgin, retiring this month after being concertmaster since 1920; Rafael Kubelik and Colin Davis.

World premiers will be those of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moevs' "Et in Occidentem," with the Rutgers University Choir, and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President Kennedy.

The performances of Bach's "St. John Passion" March 24-25 will be dedicated to the memory of Arturo Toscanini, born March 25, 1867.

Other soloists include Shmuel Ashkenasi, in the Dvorak Violin Concerto, and Jules Eskin, in Bloch's "Schelomo." Both artists studied at Curtis Institute.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
SEPT 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Orchestra's 86th season, the fifth of Erich Leinsdorf's tenure as Music Director, will open at Symphony Hall, Boston, on Sept. 23. Guest conductors listed for the season include Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik. The latter two will be making their first appearances with the Bostonians. Three world premieres are slated: Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto, Robert Moev's Et in Occidentem and William Sydeman's new work in memory of John F. Kennedy. Mr. Leinsdorf has also announced that he would dedicate the March 24-25 concerts to the memory of Arturo Toscanini who was born March 25, 1867. They will feature the Bach St. John Passion.

Friday, Saturday Concerts

Mahler Third Opens Symphony Season

Erich Leinsdorf, who is starting his fifth season as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the orchestra will begin its eighty-sixth season with performances of Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony at the opening concerts of each of its seven Boston series. The first two concerts will take place in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2:00 p.m. and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Audiences are urged to arrive on time for these concerts, as the first movement of the Mahler symphony lasts 30 minutes.

Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, has been invited by Mr. Leinsdorf to be soloist in the Mahler performances. It will be her second engagement with the orchestra; her first appearance having been in the Brahms Alto Rhapsody and Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky" in March, 1965. The New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, will also take part in the performances.

THE FIRST open rehearsal of the season will take place in Symphony Hall Thursday evening at 7:30. As in the past, the series of seven open rehearsals will benefit the orchestra's pension fund and will be the final preparation for the weekend program which is to follow.

A limited number of season subscriptions are available for two of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's shorter series: the "Tuesday B" series with six concerts at 7:30 p.m. and the "Thursday B" series with three concerts at 8:30 p.m. Further information may be obtained from the Subscription Office, Symphony Hall, CO 6-1492.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
AUG 26 1966

Boston Symphony plans

The 86th season of Boston Symphony will open on Friday and Saturday, Sept. 23 and 24, in Symphony Hall. During the season there will be 24 pairs of weekend concerts, and five other series. They are: 10 Tuesdays, Series A, at 8:30; six Tuesdays, Series B, at 7:30; six Tuesdays, "Cambridge," at 8:30; six Thursdays, Series A, and three Thursdays, Series B, both at 8:30.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will include three world premières of works during the winter, and has invited six guest conductors to take over directing the orchestra at intervals. Four of them are: Charles Munch, retired; Richard Burgin, who retired as associate conductor at the end of this year's Tanglewood concerts; Colin Davis and Rafael Kubelik who are both making first appearances with the orchestra.

The two Boston Symphony concerts on March 24, and 25, will be dedicated to Arturo Toscanini, born March 25, 1867.

5 Re

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUN 22 1966

Boston Symphony Taking Its Home Audience for Granted?

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

If you want to know what the Boston Symphony will be up to next season, read the New York papers. Symphony Hall reveals almost none of its plans in advance to the Boston public. The only announcements made about the Boston Symphony in 1966-67 have been about new works by Elliott Carter, Robert Moevs and William Sydeman that will be given premieres, and about a performance of Bach's St. John Passion to be given during Holy Week as a Toscanini centenary memorial.

For its Carnegie Hall series, however, the Boston Symphony advertises its programs in full for all four concerts. This includes Mahler's Third Symphony, which will open all series in Boston as the Beethoven Ninth did last year; Mozart's G minor Symphony, K.550, and A major Piano Concerto, K.488; the suite from Alban Berg's opera, "Lulu;" Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 in C; Haydn's "Creation" Mass; excerpts from Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier," and Bruckner's Symphony No. 5 in B flat.

Soloists include Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, for the Mahler, in which the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, director, will participate; the pianist Evelyne Crochet in the Mozart concerto and the pianist Claude Frank in the Beethoven concerto; and vocal soloists Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, mezzo-soprano, Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass, in the Haydn-Strauss program which also will include the new work by Moevs, "Et Occidentem Illustra." The Rutgers University Choir will participate in that program.

Besides its own Carnegie Hall series of four concerts, the Boston Symphony will play twice in the hall's International Festival of Visiting Orchestras. From that announcement it can be learned that one of the season's guest conductors is Rafael Kubelik, for he will lead the orchestra in New York in January. Jacob Lateiner, the pianist for whom Elliott Carter's concerto was commissioned by the Ford Foundation, will be the soloist at the November concert.

At the time of Richard Burgin's retirement as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony in April, it was announced that he would be a guest conductor with the orchestra in Boston during the coming season. It has also been learned that Charles Munch and Gunther Schuller will be among the guest conductors.

The Boston Symphony has no difficulty selling tickets in Boston, and it is true, therefore, that it is under no commercial pressure to keep its subscribers or any other part of the public informed of its plans. Not all who go to Symphony, however, regard doing so as a mere social grace or obligation, and it would be an enlightened move as well as a welcome courtesy were the orchestra to make some of its plans known to the musically interested public here. It is not appropriate, and it ought to be unnecessary, for Bostonians to depend on out-of-town newspapers for information about their own orchestra.

The ARTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
AUG 12 1966

Some Available For Tuesday And Thursday Concerts

Season Subscriptions For Symphony

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Bostonians who aren't fortunate enough to hold subscription tickets to Friday afternoon or Saturday evening Symphony concerts take note:

Season subscriptions are available for the Orchestra's Tuesday and Thursday concerts in Symphony Hall. The 86th season opens Sept. 23 with a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3. This work will be repeated at the opening concert of each of the seven subscription series.

The Tuesday series, A and B, each have a number of subscriptions available. Series A of 10 concerts at 8:30 p.m. will begin Sept. 27. Series B of six concerts at 7:30 begin Oct. 4.

There will be six concerts at 8:30 in the Thursday series A beginning Sept. 29. The Thursday Series B, beginning Oct. 6, will have three concerts. Information on the guest conductor and subscription prices may be obtained from Symphony Hall.

ROCKFORD MORNING STAR
ROCKFORD, ILL.
D. 58,197 SUN. 77,470
AUG 21 1966

BOX OF

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, un Leinsdorf, will open its 86th season in 23.

* * * * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
AUG 21 1966

Boston Symphony Lists Plans for 86th Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its 86th season on Friday, Sept. 23. In addition to the 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts, the orchestra will present five other series—10 Tuesdays, Series A at 8:30 p.m.; 6 Tuesdays, Series B at 7:30 p.m.; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B at 8:30 p.m., and the Tuesday Cambridge Series (6) at 8:30 p.m.

Erich Leinsdorf, beginning his fifth year as music director, has announced that six guest conductors will appear during the season—Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, Clin Davis, Rafael Kubelik among them.

Moreover, the orchestra will present three world premieres during the season—Elliott Carter's "Piano Concerto," with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moev's "Et in Occidentem," which will be performed with the Rutgers University Choir, and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-Transcript
MILTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,600
AUG 19 1966

Symphony Has Some Openings

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces that season subscriptions are available for its Tuesday and Thursday concerts in Symphony Hall.

The Orchestra's new season, the 86th, will open on September 23 with a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3, which will be repeated at the opening concert of each of the seven subscription series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 21,500
AUG 26 1966

TV . . . J. M. NORTHROP
IT'S THAT TIME AGAIN

Like it or not, fall is already drying out the leaves and will whistle thru the boob tube in just a few weeks. Fall is when all show biz gets going again; pre-B'way plays come to town, concerts begin, the nightclubs are once again in full swing, new movies, and the Boston Symphony comes back to town along with the two theatre groups and the ballet and opera companies. So, too, does television try to begin again, always a fresh start, year after year after year.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
OCT 2 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Feature Famed Violinist

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will be heard in four concerts in Symphony Hall this week: the third pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening programs (Oct. 7, 2 p. m.; Oct. 8, 8.30 p. m.) and the opening concerts of the Tuesday "B" series at 7 p. m. (Oct. 4) and the Thursday "B" series at 8.30 p. m. (Oct. 6).

Mahler's Third

Mr. Leinsdorf is continuing with his plan to open each of the Orchestra's seven series this season with a performance of Mahler's Third Symphony. Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will continue as soloist at the Tuesday and Thursday programs, joined by the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, and the Boston Boychoir, John Oliver, director.

Subscribers are reminded that the first movement of the Mahler is 30 minutes long, during which time no latecomers can be seated.

Shmuel Ashkenasi, the 25-year old Israeli violinist, will make his first Boston appearance with the Orchestra at the Friday-Saturday concerts. He will perform the Dvorak Violin Concerto. Mr. Leinsdorf will open the program with the Sibelius Symphony No. 5 and conclude with the "Scythian Suite," Op. 20 by Prokofiev.

Curtis Institute

Mr. Ashkenasi graduated in 1963 from the Curtis Institute, where he had been the pupil of Efrem Zimbalist. During his years at Curtis he won the Merriwether Post First Prize in Washington and was a finalist in the 1959 Queen Elisabeth Competition in Brussels.

In 1962 he won Second Prize in the Second International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow and has since toured in the Soviet Union, Israel, Europe and the United States.

The complete programs:

Tuesday, Oct. 4, 7.30 p. m.; Thursday, Oct. 6, 8.30 p. m.; Symphony Hall, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting:

MAHLER Symphony No. 3, in D minor, SHIRLEY VERRETT, Mezzo-soprano, soloist; New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, Conductor; Boston Boychoir, John Oliver, Director.

Friday, Oct. 7, 2 p. m.; Sat., Oct. 8, 8.30 p. m.; Erich Leinsdorf, conducting: SIBELIUS Symphony No. 5, in E-flat major, Op. 82 DVORAK Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 53 SHMUEL ASHKENASI, Soloist; PROKOFIEV Scythian Suite, Op. 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JUN 22 1966

Boston Symphony Taking Its Home Audience for Granted?

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

If you want to know what the Boston Symphony will be up to next season, read the New York papers. Symphony Hall reveals almost none of its plans in advance to the Boston public. The only announcements made about the Boston Symphony in 1966-67 have been about new works by Elliott Carter, Robert Moevs and William Sydeman that will be given premieres, and about a performance of Bach's St. John Passion to be given during Holy Week as a Toscanini centenary memorial.

For its Carnegie Hall series, however, the Boston Symphony advertises its programs in full for all four concerts. This includes Mahler's Third Symphony, which will open all series in Boston as the Beethoven Ninth did last year; Mozart's G minor Symphony, K.550, and A major Piano Concerto, K.488; the suite from Alban Berg's opera, "Lulu;" Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 in C; Haydn's "Creation" Mass; excerpts from Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier," and Bruckner's Symphony No. 5 in B flat.

Soloists include Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, for the Mahler, in which the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, director, will participate; the pianist Evelyne Crochet in the Mozart concerto and the pianist Claude Frank in the Beethoven concerto; and vocal soloists Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, mezzo-soprano, Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass, in the Haydn-Strauss program which also will include the new work by Moevs, "Et Occidentem Illustra." The Rutgers University Choir will participate in that program.

Besides its own Carnegie Hall series of four concerts, the Boston Symphony will play twice in the hall's International Festival of Visiting Orchestras. From that announcement it can be learned that one of the season's guest conductors is Rafael Kubelik, for he will lead the orchestra in New York in January. Jacob Lateiner, the pianist for whom Elliott Carter's concerto was commissioned by the Ford Foundation, will be the soloist at the November concert.

At the time of Richard Burgin's retirement as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony in April, it was announced that he would be a guest conductor with the orchestra in Boston during the coming season. It has also been learned that Charles Munch and Gunther Schuller will be among the guest conductors.

The Boston Symphony has no difficulty selling tickets in Boston, and it is true, therefore, that it is under no commercial pressure to keep its subscribers or any other part of the public informed of its plans. Not all who go to Symphony, however, regard doing so as a mere social grace or obligation, and it would be an enlightened move as well as a welcome courtesy were the orchestra to make some of its plans known to the musically interested public here. It is not appropriate, and it ought to be unnecessary, for Bostonians to depend on out-of-town newspapers for information about their own orchestra.

The ARTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
AUG 12 1966

Some Available For Tuesday And Thursday Concerts

Season Subscriptions For Symphony

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Bostonians who aren't fortunate enough to hold subscription tickets to Friday afternoon or Saturday evening Symphony concerts take note:

Season subscriptions are available for the Orchestra's Tuesday and Thursday concerts in Symphony Hall. The 86th season opens Sept. 23 with a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3. This work will be repeated at the opening concert of each of the seven subscription series.

The Tuesday series, A and B, each have a number of subscriptions available. Series A of 10 concerts at 8:30 p.m. will begin Sept. 27. Series B of six concerts at 7:30 begin Oct. 4.

There will be six concerts at 8:30 in the Thursday series A beginning Sept. 29. The Thursday Series B, beginning Oct. 6, will have three concerts. Information on the guest conductor and subscription prices may be obtained from Symphony Hall.

ROCKFORD MORNING STAR
AUG 21 1966

BOX OF

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, un Leinsdorf, will open its 86th season in 23.

* * * * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
AUG 21 1966

Boston Symphony Lists Plans for 86th Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its 86th season on Friday, Sept. 23. In addition to the 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts, the orchestra will present five other series—10 Tuesdays, Series A at 8:30 p.m.; 6 Tuesdays, Series B at 7:30 p.m.; 6 Thursdays, Series A and 3 Thursdays, Series B at 8:30 p.m., and the Tuesday Cambridge Series (6) at 8:30 p.m.

Erich Leinsdorf, beginning his fifth year as music director, has announced that six guest conductors will appear during the season—Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, Clin Davis, Rafael Kubelik among them.

Moreover, the orchestra will present three world premieres during the season—Elliott Carter's "Piano Concerto," with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moev's "Et in Occidentem," which will be performed with the Rutgers University Choir, and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-Transcript
MILTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,600
AUG 19 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 21,500
AUG 26 1966

Symphony Has Some Openings

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces that season subscriptions are available for its Tuesday and Thursday concerts in Symphony Hall.

The Orchestra's new season, the 86th, will open on September 23 with a performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3, which will be repeated at the opening concert of each of the seven subscription series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
OCT 2 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Feature Famed Violinist

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will be heard in four concerts in Symphony Hall this week: the third pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening programs (Oct. 7, 2 p. m.; Oct. 8, 8.30 p. m.) and the opening concerts of the Tuesday "B" series at 7 p. m. (Oct. 4) and the Thursday "B" series at 8.30 p. m. (Oct. 6).

Mahler's Third

Mr. Leinsdorf is continuing with his plan to open each of the Orchestra's seven series this season with a performance of Mahler's Third Symphony. Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will continue as soloist at the Tuesday and Thursday programs, joined by the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, and the Boston Boychoir, John Oliver, director.

Subscribers are reminded that the first movement of the Mahler is 30 minutes long; during which time no latecomers can be seated.

Shmuel Ashkenasi, the 25-year old Israeli violinist, will make his first Boston appearance with the Orchestra at the Friday-Saturday concerts. He will perform the Dvorak Violin Concerto. Mr. Leinsdorf will open the program with the Sibelius Symphony No. 5 and conclude with the "Scythian Suite," Op. 20 by Prokofiev.

Curtis Institute

Mr. Ashkenasi graduated in 1963 from the Curtis Institute, where he had been the pupil of Efrem Zimbalist. During his years at Curtis he won the Merriwether Post First Prize in Washington and was a finalist in the 1959 Queen Elisabeth Competition in Brussels.

In 1962 he won Second Prize in the Second International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow and has since toured in the Soviet Union, Israel, Europe and the United States.

The complete programs:

Tuesday, Oct. 4, 7.30 p. m.; Thursday, Oct. 6, 8.30 p. m.; Symphony Hall, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting:

MAHLER Symphony No. 3, in D minor, SHIRLEY VERRETT, Mezzo-soprano, soloist; New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, Conductor; Boston Boychoir, John Oliver, Director.

Friday, Oct. 7, 2 p. m.; Sat., Oct. 8, 8.30 p. m.; Erich Leinsdorf, conducting: SIBELIUS Symphony No. 5, in E-flat major, Op. 82 DVORAK Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 53 SHMUEL ASHKENASI, Soloist; PROKOFIEV Scythian Suite, Op. 20.

TV . . . J. M. NORTHROP
IT'S THAT TIME AGAIN

Like it or not, fall is already drying out the leaves and will whistle thru the boob tube in just a few weeks. Fall is when all show biz gets going again: pre-B'way plays come to town, concerts begin, the nightclubs are once again in full swing, new movies, and the Boston Symphony comes back to town along with the two theatre groups and the ballet and opera companies. So, too, does television try to begin again, always a fresh start, year after year after year.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
SEP 24 1966

Leinsdorf opens 86th year

Mahler's Third at Symphony

By Harold Rogers

Erich Leinsdorf launched the Boston Symphony's 86th season—as well as his own fifth year as the orchestra's music director — with a vibrant performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3. With six movements and an hour and 40 minutes of music, it stood alone on the program.

Yet there was no need of patience on the part of the listeners at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon. Mahler has long since come into his popular phase—his time came, as he himself predicted. It came so completely that we are now hearing the second full performance of the Third in four years by the Boston Symphony (Richard Burgin conducted the first one in 1962). Leonard Bernstein, who is an old-timer on the Mahler bandwagon, will offer the Symphony No. 1 when he brings his New York Philharmonic to Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon.

Music lovers now revel in Mahler; and the longer he spins out a symphony, the more enduring the pleasure. One was even a little sad when the Third reached its final double bar. Even so, the over-riding joy engendered in the listeners spilled over into prolonged applause and bravos for Mr. Leinsdorf and his massive forces. There were Shirley Verrett, who provided the sumptuous contralto solos; the New England Conservatory Chorus, trained to eloquence, as usual, by Lorna Cooke de Varon; and the fresh voices of the Boston Boychoir, of which John Oliver is director.

But Mahler was the star. He was the kind of genius who could select disparate ideas and assemble them with an alchemy that makes everything seem right and proper. Who but he would ever think of opening and closing a movement dedicated to the "Awakening of Pan" with a funeral march? And yet why not? What's so immortal about Pan?

No impressionism

And does Pan awaken with the flutter of Debussyesque flutes and watery strings playing tremolo? Not at all. He opens his eyes to blaring trumpets, to marches stiff as starch, to nursery tunes that dance grotesquely in his ears. And these, in turn, are laced with moods of mystery — haunting the listener with echoes from worlds not yet known.

From Pan Mahler turns to "What the flowers tell me," to quote from his own program notes (not published on the printed score). The flowers have their say in a minuet, as flowers may be expected to express themselves with lyrical grace.

These, in quick succession, are followed by "What the animals in the forest tell me," and of course the score is adroitly scherzando. Yet the most amazing thing in this movement is the rapturous trumpet solo, soaring in the off-stage wilderness. As expertly spun by Armando Ghitalla, it took on a strange fragility, as if coming from a story-book land.

At this point Miss Verrett came on stage with her retinue of choristers, and the final three movements proceeded almost as if joined together in one. Miss Verrett's intense and warmly modulated contralto elucidated "What man tells me"; then she was joined by the singers to give us "What the angels tell me," after which the orchestra sings and soars alone while spelling out "What love tells me."

This, of course, brings us to the inner core of Mahler; for in Mahler, as in anyone, we find the man at his best when he expresses the quality of love. There is hardly a bar in Mahler's music that doesn't express it one way or another.

Certain passages have been criticized as vulgar; others as filled with a late-romantic decadence. All this becomes inconsequential when Mahler's love of humanity prevails. This, too, is why his music endures.

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
SEP 28 1966

Meandering Mahler

By Peter Knapp

Triumphal openings being the norm nowadays, Erich Leinsdorf has launched the 86th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3 in d minor.

It is a bold undertaking. While none of Mahler's symphonic exercises are puny in size, the Third is of extraordinary size and scale. The first movement alone stretches on for some 45 minutes — and after that there's five more to go.

Then, this symphony requires an immense orchestra; in the neighborhood of six-score musicians, enough to cram every chink of the Symphony Hall stage. The brass section alone has eight horns and post horn, four trumpets, four trombones and a tuba. There are also a contralto soloist, a women's chorus and a boys' choir. Joining the Symphony for these parts were contralto Shirley Verrett, girls from the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boychoir.

Rambling Utterances

Length and mass by themselves, of course, are merely part of the dimensions within which musical values operate. The test is whether the symphonic content is enough to carry it all, and whether it can be sustained through a performance. Last night's concert was not entirely convincing on either count.

Mahler, of course, was a magnificent orchestra, imaginative in the use of his abrupt and often fanciful surprises, and resourceful in handling his overflowing assortment of material. Yet his musical utterances, like a speech by Everett Dirksen, ramble on far past what they have to say. Concision was not one of his virtues.

The performance, too, was not one to take up the slack of this musical oratory. The Third is a nature symphony, best approached, perhaps, in the philosophical sense of the term, but pointedly realistic in some passages. And like nature, it unfolds itself slowly in the first movement, by bits and pieces until the whole stage whirrs and chirps and flaps with the arrival of summer. There is a succession of bright marches which raised the irreverent thought, with the profusion of brass sonority, of an Austrian version of "76 Trombones."

No Breath Of Life

But although Leinsdorf tended things carefully, and built the movement up to an exuberant climax, we were more aware of a succession of episodes than of a cohesively-wrought whole.

There is a lot of good music in this symphony, and the conductor shaped it well and most eloquently in the lovely last movement and in the scherzo with its off-stage post horn solo. Nevertheless, what was missing was a spark of inspiration, of passion, to make it compelling. Sunday's performance of Mahler's First by Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic went to the extreme of exuberance without the discipline to temper it; Leinsdorf's Third had control and restraint without the fire.

Miss Verrett's contribution, in the fourth movement and briefly in the fifth, was glowing in tone and exact in diction, though the mysterious quality of the stanzas from Nietzsche's "Zarathustra" seemed to be replaced by a mood of world-weariness. The young voices of the choirs were refreshing enough, though without any notable precision. And the BSO's brass section deserves a bow for the quality of their playing.

Making their first appearances in this round of concerts with the BSO are violinist Konosuke Ono and cellist Soichi Katsuta. They are members of the Japan Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra taking part in a one-year exchange in which BSO musicians Robert Karol and Richard Kapuscinski are with the Japanese orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
SEP 29 1966

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

MAHLER'S THIRD OPENS BSO SEASON

Opening symphony programs tend toward the traditional. If the place of the works of Gustav Mahler in the symphonic repetory continues to grow, the time is still far off when a Mahler symphony can rightly be designated as traditional. To devote the entire first concert to one of the least known of the symphonies borders almost on the audacious, though if so, the audacity last week was well taken.

The piece in question was, of course, the gigantic Third Symphony. Its only other full performance here was in January 1962, when Richard Burgin conducted it along with Stravinsky's Zoezdoliki Cantata. Moreover, the work is as rare a phenomenon elsewhere in this country as here.

Its continuing obscurity is a little puzzling. The length obviously imposes problems. Yet Bruckner's Eighth Symphony, relatively often performed, is not so much shorter, and many of the acts of Wagner's operas are even longer. Nor is it a question of the abstruseness that characterizes a large part of all of the Mahler symphonies from the Sixth on; indeed, the Third is as readily accessible as any symphony Mahler ever wrote, wholly without the wastelands of frenzies of sound. From the first bar of the beginning movement it builds up enormous tension from the simple combination of military marches and incredible trombone perorations, tensions really relieved only with the commencement of the vast and elegaic adagio which comprises the final movement. In between these large slabs of music are four other movements: a minuetto, a scherzando, a contralto treatment of the "Night Wanderer Song" from Nietzche's Thus Spake Zarathustra and some medieval folk poems from the collection "Youth's Magic Horn" sung by a combination of female and boys' choir.

In a work of such length and diversity it is indispensable that one feel a sense of continuity. Mr. Leinsdorf's special quality in conducting Mahler is the tautness with which he guides his forces and his listeners, and by and large that sense was eminently present in this performance. He who conducts the Third has his task cut out for him, for the score is repetitious and the cliches abound like potholes, for all the lyrical tenderness, enchanting sounds and ideas, and occasional pulsating stabs. That Mr. Leinsdorf succeeded in adducing a performance whose over-all effect was a powerful one, even a profoundly moving one, bespeaks reams for his affinity for Mahler. But this is getting to be an old story here.

The orchestra's sound, notwithstanding an undue number of blurps from the greatly augmented horn section, was simply superb—here crisp, there massive, always beautifully controlled and garnished with some magnificent efforts by the first-desk players. The chorus of women and boys sounded particularly fresh and sweet. In the soloist, Shirley Verrett, we had a contralto with astonishingly beautiful vocal equipment who sang with great polish and suavity. For the affecting restraint that her role suggested here, however, simple musical charm would perhaps been more in order.

Thus it is inevitable that both the score and the performance of such a work as Mahler's Third must be taken on balance. So considered, I think it is safe to say that last week's concert has lent considerable impetus to the new season.

Next week's program includes music by Janacek, Schumann and Beethoven. Jules Eskin will be the cello soloist in the Schumann concerto and Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
SEP 24 1966

Leinsdorf opens 86th year

Mahler's Third at Symphony

By Harold Rogers

Erich Leinsdorf launched the Boston Symphony's 86th season—as well as his own fifth year as the orchestra's music director — with a vibrant performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3. With six movements and an hour and 40 minutes of music, it stood alone on the program.

Yet there was no need of patience on the part of the listeners at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon. Mahler has long since come into his popular phase—his time came, as he himself predicted. It came so completely that we are now hearing the second full performance of the Third in four years by the Boston Symphony (Richard Burgin conducted the first one in 1962). Leonard Bernstein, who is an old-timer on the Mahler bandwagon, will offer the Symphony No. 1 when he brings his New York Philharmonic to Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon.

Music lovers now revel in Mahler; and the longer he spins out a symphony, the more enduring the pleasure. One was even a little sad when the Third reached its final double bar. Even so, the over-riding joy engendered in the listeners spilled over into prolonged applause and bravos for Mr. Leinsdorf and his massive forces. There were Shirley Verrett, who provided the sumptuous contralto solos; the New England Conservatory Chorus, trained to eloquence, as usual, by Lorna Cooke de Varon; and the fresh voices of the Boston Boychoir, of which John Oliver is director.

But Mahler was the star. He was the kind of genius who could select disparate ideas and assemble them with an alchemy that makes everything seem right and proper. Who but he would ever think of opening and closing a movement dedicated to the "Awakening of Pan" with a funeral march? And yet why not? What's so immortal about Pan?

No impressionism

And does Pan awaken with the flutter of Debussyesque flutes and watery strings playing tremolo? Not at all. He opens his eyes to blaring trumpets, to marches stiff as starch, to nursery tunes that dance grotesquely in his ears. And these, in turn, are laced with moods of mystery — haunting the listener with echoes from worlds not yet known.

From Pan Mahler turns to "What the flowers tell me," to quote from his own program notes (not published on the printed score). The flowers have their say in a minuet, as flowers may be expected to express themselves with lyrical grace.

These, in quick succession, are followed by "What the animals in the forest tell me," and of course the score is adroitly scherzando. Yet the most amazing thing in this movement is the rapturous trumpet solo, soaring in the off-stage wilderness. As expertly spun by Armando Ghitalla, it took on a strange fragility, as if coming from a story-book land.

At this point Miss Verrett came on stage with her retinue of choristers, and the final three movements proceeded almost as if joined together in one. Miss Verrett's intense and warmly modulated contralto elucidated "What man tells me"; then she was joined by the singers to give us "What the angels tell me," after which the orchestra sings and soars alone while spelling out "What love tells me."

This, of course, brings us to the inner core of Mahler; for in Mahler, as in anyone, we find the man at his best when he expresses the quality of love. There is hardly a bar in Mahler's music that doesn't express it one way or another.

Certain passages have been criticized as vulgar; others as filled with a late-romantic decadence. All this becomes inconsequential when Mahler's love of humanity prevails. This, too, is why his music endures.

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
SEP 28 1966

Meandering Mahler

By Peter Knapp

Triumphal openings being the norm nowadays, Erich Leinsdorf has launched the 86th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3 in d minor.

It is a bold undertaking. While none of Mahler's symphonic exercises are puny in size, the Third is of extraordinary size and scale. The first movement alone stretches on for some 45 minutes — and after that there's five more to go.

Then, this symphony requires an immense orchestra; in the neighborhood of six-score musicians, enough to cram every chink of the Symphony Hall stage. The brass section alone has eight horns and post horn, four trumpets, four trombones and a tuba. There are also a contralto soloist, a women's chorus and a boys' choir. Joining the Symphony for these parts were contralto Shirley Verrett, girls from the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boychoir.

Rambling Utterances

Length and mass by themselves, of course, are merely part of the dimensions within which musical values operate. The test is whether the symphonic content is enough to carry it all, and whether it can be sustained through a performance. Last night's concert was not entirely convincing on either count.

Mahler, of course, was a magnificent orchestra, imaginative in the use of his abrupt and often fanciful surprises, and resourceful in handling his overflowing assortment of material. Yet his musical utterances, like a speech by Everett Dirksen, ramble on far past what they have to say. Concision was not one of his virtues.

The performance, too, was not one to take up the slack of this musical oratory. The Third is a nature symphony, best approached, perhaps, in the philosophical sense of the term, but pointedly realistic in some passages. And like nature, it unfolds itself slowly in the first movement, by bits and pieces until the whole stage whirrs and chirps and flaps with the arrival of summer. There is a succession of bright marches which raised the irreverent thought, with the profusion of brass sonority, of an Austrian version of "76 Trombones."

No Breath Of Life

But although Leinsdorf tended things carefully, and built the movement up to an exuberant climax, we were more aware of a succession of episodes than of a cohesively-wrought whole.

There is a lot of good music in this symphony, and the conductor shaped it well and most eloquently in the lovely last movement and in the scherzo with its off-stage post horn solo. Nevertheless, what was missing was a spark of inspiration, of passion, to make it compelling. Sunday's performance of Mahler's First by Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic went to the extreme of exuberance without the discipline to temper it; Leinsdorf's Third had control and restraint without the fire.

Miss Verrett's contribution, in the fourth movement and briefly in the fifth, was glowing in tone and exact in diction, though the mysterious quality of the stanzas from Nietzsche's "Zarathustra" seemed to be replaced by a mood of world-weariness. The young voices of the choirs were refreshing enough, though without any notable precision. And the BSO's brass section deserves a bow for the quality of their playing.

Making their first appearances in this round of concerts with the BSO are violinist Konosuke Ono and cellist Soichi Katsuta. They are members of the Japan Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra taking part in a one-year exchange in which BSO musicians Robert Karol and Richard Kapuscinski are with the Japanese orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
SEP 29 1966

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

MAHLER'S THIRD OPENS BSO SEASON

Opening symphony programs tend toward the traditional. If the place of the works of Gustav Mahler in the symphonic repetory continues to grow, the time is still far off when a Mahler symphony can rightly be designated as traditional. To devote the entire first concert to one of the least known of the symphonies borders almost on the audacious, though if so, the audacity last week was well taken.

The piece in question was, of course, the gigantic Third Symphony. Its only other full performance here was in January 1962, when Richard Burgin conducted it along with Stravinsky's Zoezdoliki Cantata. Moreover, the work is as rare a phenomenon elsewhere in this country as here.

Its continuing obscurity is a little puzzling. The length obviously imposes problems. Yet Bruckner's Eighth Symphony, relatively often performed, is not so much shorter, and many of the acts of Wagner's operas are even longer. Nor is it a question of the abstruseness that characterizes a large part of all of the Mahler symphonies from the Sixth on; indeed, the Third is as readily accessible as any symphony Mahler ever wrote, wholly without the wastelands of frenzies of sound. From the first bar of the beginning movement it builds up enormous tension from the simple combination of military marches and incredible trombone perorations, tensions really relieved only with the commencement of the vast and elegaic adagio which comprises the final movement. In between these large slabs of music are four other movements: a minuetto, a scherzando, a contralto treatment of the "Night Wanderer Song" from Nietzche's Thus Spake Zarathustra and some medieval folk poems from the collection "Youth's Magic Horn" sung by a combination of female and boys' choir.

In a work of such length and diversity it is indispensable that one feel a sense of continuity. Mr. Leinsdorf's special quality in conducting Mahler is the tautness with which he guides his forces and his listeners, and by and large that sense was eminently present in this performance. He who conducts the Third has his task cut out for him, for the score is repetitious and the cliches abound like potholes, for all the lyrical tenderness, enchanting sounds and ideas, and occasional pulsating stabs. That Mr. Leinsdorf succeeded in adducing a performance whose over-all effect was a powerful one, even a profoundly moving one, bespeaks reams for his affinity for Mahler. But this is getting to be an old story here.

The orchestra's sound, notwithstanding an undue number of blurps from the greatly augmented horn section, was simply superb—here crisp, there massive, always beautifully controlled and garnished with some magnificent efforts by the first-desk players. The chorus of women and boys sounded particularly fresh and sweet. In the soloist, Shirley Verrett, we had a contralto with astonishingly beautiful vocal equipment who sang with great polish and suavity. For the affecting restraint that her role suggested here, however, simple musical charm would perhaps been more in order.

Thus it is inevitable that both the score and the performance of such a work as Mahler's Third must be taken on balance. So considered, I think it is safe to say that last week's concert has lent considerable impetus to the new season.

Next week's program includes music by Janacek, Schumann and Beethoven. Jules Eskin will be the cello soloist in the Schumann concerto and Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct.

7

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
SEP 24 1966

Symphony

Mahler Celebration Goes On As His 'Third' Opens Season

By McLAREN HARRIS

As the Symphony begins its 86th season, six years have passed since the centennial of Gustav Mahler's birth. A veritable twinkling of an eye, it would appear—or is it that the celebrations have not yet ceased?

Contrarily, the celebrations may have just begun, not in recognition of a milestone, a century-mark since the aritst's emergence, but the celebrations of rediscovery. Though the Mahler comeback has been felt for at least the past decade, its contrast to the attitudes of preceding years still strikes one as remarkable.

Serge Koussevitsky, for example, was reportedly a confirmed anti-Mahlerite; it is said he quashed the prospects of a number of Mahler performances during his reign, as well as those of Bruckner. Mahler's Symphony No. 3, which Erich Leinsdorf has scheduled as the entire substance of this week's concerts, was not heard at Symphony Hall until 1943, when Richard Burgin conducted the first movement only. Mr. Burgin also conducted the first complete Boston performances of the symphony in 1962.

There is a theory concerning an apparent cycle in Mahler's symphonies in line with the composer's preoccupation with life, death and eternity. The First Symphony begins like a voice of spring, then turns solemn with the introduction of a funeral march; the Second Symphony resurrects the nameless personality; the Symphony No. 3 moves him closer to his heavenly vision; and he achieves his goal through a childlike dream in the Fourth Symphony. With the Symphony No. 5 the cycle supposedly begins again.

This theory seems worth hardly more than others which purport programmatic analyses of Mahler's works, though it is harmless if not taken note-literally; eternity and mortality are debated to some degree in all of his symphonies, even becoming articulate to a point in the Symphony No. 3.

Throughout six movements (the original plan was for seven) the symphony treads lightness and depth, noble and tragic colors set against the playful almost naive moods of the Minuet and Scherzo and later against the choral movement's simple devotion. The 30-minute first movement, alternates a stern, foreboding mood with joyful strains in resolute march tempo; its triumphal climax is dissolved before a delicate, airy Minuet, and only in the fourth movement with contralto (marked "misterioso") does anything approaching a somber feeling again appear. The Scherzo dances, jokes, pauses for the echo of a posthorn and bounds on; the choral movement is full of lilting, felicitous innocence; and the finale concludes with an ennobling, peaceful expression.

Mr. Leinsdorf preserved Mahler's changing textures and juxtapositions of major and minor in a dynamic scope, leaving nothing to whim; volume was amassed and hushed by natural course of the orchestration, when any superimposition of false dynamics would have proved disastrous with such a large orchestra. The contrast between first and second movements, which might have been overwhelming, was avoided by an intermission. Beauty, awesome or disarming, was the earmark; only in the Scherzo was there any uncharacteristic ponderousness. Banalities of fanfare were fleeting.

Shirley Verrett, contralto, sang Nietzsche's verses in the fourth movement and the "Knaben Wunderhorn" text in the fifth with women's voices of the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boychoir. All performed clearly and securely; if their work was not great oratory, neither was their material.

Thus the Symphony's 86th season began, as last year, with a symphonic giant. A large step and an auspicious one. Next week Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled Janacek's suite from "The Cunning Little Vixen", Schumann's Cello Concerto with Jules Eskin, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the first concert of the 86th season Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall. The program consisted of Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3 in D minor, with Shirley Verrett, contralto, women of the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boychoir.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 24 1966

Program: Mahler's Third

BSO Opens 86th Season

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The ARTS

The opening concert of the Boston Symphony's 86th season took place in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon. Erich Leinsdorf conducted, beginning his own fifth season here, and there was just one work on the program, the Symphony No. 3 by Gustav Mahler. It involved the participation also of the contralto Shirley Verrett, the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, and the Boston Boychoir, John Oliver, director.

The Mahler Third is full of problems for listener and interpreter. It begins with a sonata-allegro movement so gigantic it frightened Mahler himself. To balance its 35-minute length, there follows a series of character pieces: a minuet; a wry-to-rambunctious scherzo with contrasting sentimental trio; an excerpt from Neitzsche's "Zarathustra" for solo contralto; a song from the "Youth's Magic Horn" folk collection, set for women's and boys' chorus, and a finale in the tradition of the exalted Beethoven-Bruckner Adagio.

The performance was now and again very good. The marches moved with snap, the minuet was delicate, the Nietzsche movement was excellently done, and the choral one was good, too.

The fault in general of the performance was lack of breadth and of rhetorical expansiveness. In spite of Mahler's countless detailed directions for accelerations and retardations in the first first movement's declamatory passages, Leinsdorf ramrodded his way through them rigidly. The last pages of the finale had none of the breadth and grandeur Mahler repeatedly asks for, and could not possibly have had at the casual andante Leinsdorf chose for it.

Though not technically distinguished in the brass, the orchestral playing was good. Some of the solos went beautifully, for example Joseph Silverstein's on the violin and Ralph Gomberg's on the oboe. Others missed the mark: the shallow and quavery tone of the solo trombone is as wrong as can be for its first movement recitatives; thetrumpet solos were made unsuitably jaunty, often by the persistent tendency to turn triplets into dotted rhythms, and the third movement's off-stage posthorn solo was too tricky to catch the blend of sentimentality with naivete that the New York Philharmonic's John Ware feels and plays so perfectly in the Bernstein recording.

The Nietzsche song went so well, with intensity and with such finely felt and powerfully realized rhythmic flexibility as to make it the more surprising and distressing that Leinsdorf conducted most of the things in the symphony that demand expressive and rhetorical commitment like a man afraid of and inhibited by the score.

Doubtless the relaxation that repeated performances will bring will improve some of this. It may be, too, that a more sympathetic audience would help, though that is a complex question. To be sure the Friday afternoon women were on their worst behavior, but I must admit there was little of the sort of intensity in the performance that would effectively counter their infinitesmally low boredom thresholds and keep them in their seats.

★

Six new players appeared with the orchestra for the start of the 86th season. They are Felix Viscuglia, bass clarinet; Ralph Pottle, horn; Chester B. Schmitz, bass tuba; Dichard Sher, cello and Willian Rhein and John Salkowski, contrabass. In addition, the orchestra was joined for one season by two Japanese exchange players, Soichi Katsuta, cello, and Konosuke Ono, viola, sitting in the places of Richard Kapuscinski and Robert Karol who are playing in Japan for a season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
SEP 20 1966

Mahler's 3d BSO Opener

Gustav Mahler's grandiose third symphony is to open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th season Friday at 2 p. m., with Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Keyed in D minor, this programmatic symphony, originally subtitled "Summer Morning's Dream," was completed in 1895, but not performed in its 100-minute entirety until seven years later.

Its first movement requires half an hour in performance, so late-comers cannot be seated until the ensuing intermission, whereafter the five succeeding movements will be presented. Shirley Verrett, mezzo soprano, will join the orchestra as soloist for the score's vocal portions.

There will be an open rehearsal of this concert Thursday at 7:30 p. m. and the Mahler symphony will be repeated Saturday at 8:30 p. m. and also has been programmed as the opener for all other BSO presentations in the local series.

Friday afternoon's program is to be broadcast by WGBH-FM, while the Saturday evening concert may be heard either from WGBH or WCRB, the latter being available for listening on either AM or FM channels.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
SEP 13 1966

Mahler Work Opens 86th BSO Season

Erich Leinsdorf, who is starting his fifth season as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the orchestra will begin its 86th season with performances of Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony at the opening concerts of each of its seven Boston series. The first two concerts will take place in Symphony Hall Friday, Sept. 23 at 2 p.m. and Saturday, Sept. 24, at 8:30.

Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, has been invited by Leinsdorf to be soloist in the Mahler performances. It will be her second engagement with the orchestra, her first appearance having been in the Brahms Alto Rhapsody and Prokofieff's "Alexander Nevsky" in March 1965. The New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, will also take part in the performances.

The first open rehearsal will take place in Symphony Hall Thursday, Sept. 22, at 7:30 p.m. As in the past, the series of seven open rehearsals will benefit the orchestra's Pension Fund and will consist of the final preparations for the weekend program which is to follow.

A limited number of season subscriptions are available for two of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's shorter series: the "Tuesday B" series with six concerts at 7:30 p.m. and the "Thursday B" series with three concerts at 8:30 p.m. Further information may be obtained from the Subscription Office, Symphony Hall, CO 6-1492.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
SEP 24 1966

Mahler's 3d Symphony Opens 84th BSO Year

(By ROLFE BOSWELL) — Gustav Mahler's kaleidoscopic and intense third symphony served, in its 100-minute entirety, to open the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th concert season. Erich Leinsdorf oversaw the impassioned proceedings with obvious enthusiasm and clarified conviction in a virtuoso performance blending sentiment with grandeur.

MAHLER ON THE PODIUM

This early Mahler symphony variously keped as in D minor and F major, originally bore the explanatory subtitle "Summer Morning's Dream," but the nature-loving composer's reverie on a rare day in June did not seem at all out of place on the first day of Autumn. In seeking to enlarge the symphonic format without departing from it, Mahler constructed his third symphony as if it were an ancient Babylonia zikkurat.

"My work forms a music poem that embraces every stage of development in a step-by-step graduation. It begins with inanimate nature and increases until it reaches love," the composer wrote in a letter describing his handiwork. However, by inserting vocal writing into two of the six movements of this particular opus, Mahler leaves the impression of diffusion rather than logical structural growth.

FLORA AND FAUNA

His third symphony opens with fascinating tonal pictures of flora and fauna, wherein the gifted composer portrays the road from rigid primordial matter to flowers, animals and ascending man. In this first movement the sense of underlying tension and struggle was well-conveyed, helped by orchestral virtuosity.

The ensuing minuet was invested with charm, though a more expansive style would not have come amiss. In the third segment, marked commodo; scherzando, the posthorn interludes were simulated very successfully by a solo trumpet.

Shirley Verrett's warmly mellow contralto was ideally suited to Nietzsche's Song of the Night Wanderer, "O Mensch! O Mensch!" This she sang with all the spiritual fervor and vocal richness this listener immediately associated with Marian Anderson in Mahler's "Kindertotenlieder" and Carol Brice in his "Song of a Wayfarer."

The same alto soloist appeared to sing a little more heavily in the fifth movement, but made vital contrast with the women's voices of the New England Conservatory Chorus and Boston Boychoir.

BYGONE SONG-HIT

In the purely orchestral finale, Heaven is depicted in a gigantic tableau-shining, perpetually gay, light-pervaded, with clanging bells, chanting angels and the inevitable trumpeting clarion. The final adagio was played exceedingly well, though the orchestra failed slightly in sustaining the the necessary tension to bring off a movement of such involuted length and richness of emotive expression.

However, the closing pages attained a rare pitch of excitement. For sheer "silver-gray melancholy," nothing in any Brahms symphony quite surpasses the beautiful finale of Mahler's Third, with the concluding transfiguration music forming a more expansive counterpart to the former composer's "Feldeinsamkeit."

Perceptive listeners familiar with bygone song-hits may have noted that the main theme of this concluding movement of Mahler's third symphony bears an astounding resemblance to the first bars of "I'll Be Seeing You," which Frank Sinatra used to croon with Tommy Do[illegible] ten symphonies are full of likely tunes which might be rearranged in Tin Pan Alley.

LIVE BROADCAST

However, it is not ephemeral popular music which owes an unpayable debt to the great Viennese composer-conductor, but the host of contemporary craftsmen of so-called modern music. Mahler greatly enriched the palette of orchestral color, simultaneously making the symphony orchestra a far more sensitive and subtle instrument.

Thus he extended music's harmonic vocabulary, though differently than did Debussy and Stravinsky, becoming more or less the precursor of Arnold Schoenberg and his twelve-tone school. Though Mahler excelled as a song-writer, he was unable to dovetail song into symphony without leaving scars and blotches which become evident to the least-tutored concert goer who is prepared to use the ears and remember what had gone before.

Mixing solo and choral voices with a mammoth orchestra too greatly resembles pouring mixed fruits into gelatine which perversely won't set.

Mahler's third symphony will be repeated tonight at 8:30 and broadcast live from Symphony Hall by WGBH-FM and by WCRB, both AM and FM.

FRI. + SAT. #1 SEPT 23 + 24

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
South Shore Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,300
SEP 29 1966

Around the South Shore with Kay

With the opening of the regular Boston Symphony series this past Friday afternoon, the winter musical season is underway. It was the first day of autumn, a bright and sunny day, and everyone was in a gala mood. Having the same seats for years, it's always a warm and friendly occasion on opening day as we renew our Symphony acquaintances. The orchestra, under conductor Erich Leinsdorf, was superb, with the entire program devoted to the performance of Mahler's 3rd Symphony, and it was something to be remembered. We are fortunate in having the finest symphony orchestra in the world, right here in Boston, and if you don't have a ticket, there is always a block of rush seats on Friday afternoons.

* * * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
SEP 22 1966

Shirley Verrett

. . . will be soprano soloist in Mahler's Third Symphony at the opening concerts of the new Boston Symphony season at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday night. She will also appear at the open rehearsal tonight at 7:30 and again on Tuesday and Thursday nights, Sept. 27 and 29.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

First Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 23, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 24, at 8:30 o'clock

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)
III. Comodo; scherzando
IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)
V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)
VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Conductor

BOSTON BOYCHOIR
JOHN OLIVER, Director

Contralto Solo: SHIRLEY VERRETT

THESE PERFORMANCES ARE DEDICATED
TO THE MEMORY OF
RICHARD C. PAINE

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
SEP 23 1966

SHIRLEY VERRETT will be mezzo-soloist with Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New England Conservatory Chorus in Mahler's Third Symphony in all opening concerts of the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
SEP 24 1966

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Friday Symphony Concerts Open Here In 86th Renewal

THE WINTER SOCIAL SEASON in Boston opened yesterday, although it was only the first day of autumn. The 86th season of Symphony concerts began, and from now until spring, Friday afternoons will be reserved for Symphony. Luncheon will be early and tea late, and Bostonians will spend the afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Tickets for Friday Symphony are treasured like jewels and are handed down from mother to daughter along with the family portraits and silver. Several generations have occupied the same seats in the great hall.

If anyone should be late—which seldom happens—no usher would be needed to show her to her seat, as her mother, grandmother and probably great-grandmother sat there and she would know where to go.

This is the fifth year with Erich Leinsdorf as music director. Since 1880 when Henry Lee Higginson founded the orchestra, it has traveled all over the world and its fame has spread. But the Friday afternoon concerts remain unchanged.

Strongholds of the Old Boston, they are society's own, and when today's debutantes become tomorrow's dowagers, the Friday Symphony will be the same, as it has become a time-honored Boston tradition.

The first concert of the season is like a home-coming with friends greeting each other after the long summer. Mrs. Edwin S. Webster was an early arrival. In from the north shore were Mrs. Francis P. Sears, Mrs. Katharine L. Burrage, and Mrs. Charles G. Rice. Up from Duxbury were Mrs. Frank Christian, Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow Jr., Mrs. Robert Seymour and Mrs. Herbert W. Kelley.

Mrs. Harold H. Blanchard slid under the rope to get in before the concert began, and also entering the hall at the last moment was Mrs. Malcolm Peabody, who had been greeting friends in the lobby as they arrived.

To help with the traffic problem, a busload of women arrived from the Chilton Club. Among others in the throng were Mrs. Augustus Thorndike, Mrs. F. Murray Forbes, Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray, Mrs. Harris Fannestock, Mrs. George A. Parson, Mrs. Joseph W. Lund, Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. Otis T. Russell.

Also, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. Hamilton Edwards, Mrs. Edward B. Simmons, Mrs. Isabella Grandin, Mrs. Ward Thoron, Mrs. Charles P. Howard, Mrs. Harold R. Keller, Mrs. L. Reynolds Fuller, Mrs. Charles B. Rugg, Mrs. Robert C. Bray and Mr. and Mrs. Augustus W. Soule.

* * *

FRI. + SAT. #1 SEPT 23 + 24

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
South Shore Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,300
SEP 29 1966

Around the South Shore with Kay

With the opening of the regular Boston Symphony series this past Friday afternoon, the winter musical season is underway. It was the first day of autumn, a bright and sunny day, and everyone was in a gala mood. Having the same seats for years, it's always a warm and friendly occasion on opening day as we renew our Symphony acquaintances. The orchestra, under conductor Erich Leinsdorf, was superb, with the entire program devoted to the performance of Mahler's 3rd Symphony, and it was something to be remembered. We are fortunate in having the finest symphony orchestra in the world, right here in Boston, and if you don't have a ticket, there is always a block of rush seats on Friday afternoons.

* * * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
SEP 22 1966

Shirley Verrett

. . . will be soprano soloist in Mahler's Third Symphony at the opening concerts of the new Boston Symphony season at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday night. She will also appear at the open rehearsal tonight at 7:30 and again on Tuesday and Thursday nights, Sept. 27 and 29.

First Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 23, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 24, at 8:30 o'clock

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)
III. Comodo; scherzando
IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)
V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)
VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Conductor

BOSTON BOYCHOIR
JOHN OLIVER, Director

Contralto Solo: SHIRLEY VERRETT

THESE PERFORMANCES ARE DEDICATED
TO THE MEMORY OF
RICHARD C. PAINE

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
SEP 23 1966

SHIRLEY VERRETT will be mezzo-soloist with Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New England Conservatory Chorus in Mahlers Third Symphony in all opening concerts of the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
SEP 24 1966

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Friday Symphony Concerts Open Here In 86th Renewal

THE WINTER SOCIAL SEASON in Boston opened yesterday, although it was only the first day of autumn. The 86th season of Symphony concerts began, and from now until spring, Friday afternoons will be reserved for Symphony. Luncheon will be early and tea late, and Bostonians will spend the afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Tickets for Friday Symphony are treasured like jewels and are handed down from mother to daughter along with the family portraits and silver. Several generations have occupied the same seats in the great hall.

If anyone should be late—which seldom happens—no usher would be needed to show her to her seat, as her mother, grandmother and probably great-grandmother sat there and she would know where to go.

This is the fifth year with Erich Leinsdorf as music director. Since 1880 when Henry Lee Higginson founded the orchestra, it has traveled all over the world and its fame has spread. But the Friday afternoon concerts remain unchanged.

Strongholds of the Old Boston, they are society's own, and when today's debutantes become tomorrow's dowagers, the Friday Symphony will be the same, as it has become a time-honored Boston tradition.

The first concert of the season is like a home-coming with friends greeting each other after the long summer. Mrs. Edwin S. Webster was an early arrival. In from the north shore were Mrs. Francis P. Sears, Mrs. Katharine L. Burrage, and Mrs. Charles G. Rice. Up from Duxbury were Mrs. Frank Christian, Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow Jr., Mrs. Robert Seymour and Mrs. Herbert W. Kelley.

Mrs. Harold H. Blanchard slid under the rope to get in before the concert began, and also entering the hall at the last moment was Mrs. Malcolm Peabody, who had been greeting friends in the lobby as they arrived.

To help with the traffic problem, a busload of women arrived from the Chilton Club. Among others in the throng were Mrs. Augustus Thorndike, Mrs. F. Murray Forbes, Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray, Mrs. Harris Fannestock, Mrs. George A. Parson, Mrs. Joseph W. Lund, Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. Otis T. Russell.

Also, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. Hamilton Edwards, Mrs. Edward B. Simmons, Mrs. Isabella Grandin, Mrs. Ward Thoron, Mrs. Charles P. Howard, Mrs. Harold R. Keller, Mrs. L. Reynolds Fuller, Mrs. Charles B. Rugg, Mrs. Robert C. Bray and Mr. and Mrs. Augustus W. Soule.

* * *

9

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 24 1966

Symphony Starts 86th Season

An Opening to Make a Higginson Happy

By MARJORIE SHERMAN
Globe Society Editor

A man named Higginson would have had quite an afternoon.

People by the hundreds streaming up the very steps he and architects McKim, Mead and White re-designed at the turn of the century when the first classical Greek theatre blueprint for the "new Boston Music Hall" had to be discarded in 1899.

Three generations of Bostonians packed shoulder to shoulder with music lovers from half a world away, in the handsome hall which Henry Lee Higginson dedicated on Oct. 15, 1900.

And the great symphony orchestra to which he gave his lifetime and every penny he had (once he had to hear it called "a band from Kalamazoo" by a spiteful critic) applauded to the chandeliered ceiling modeled after the Leipzig Gewandhaus.

Passionately interested in every detail of the symphony concerts, Mr. Higginson would have found himself akin to many things yesterday afternoon as the Symphony he founded in 1881 began its 86th season. There were even beards not unlike his own. And symphony president Henry B. Cabot and the man who twice came close to bankruptcy in supporting the orchestra he had founded, could have talked dollars—and a good deal of sense—for hours on end.

He would have watched with keen eyes the faces of students from many countries—he made insured music "for all who wished to hear."

The man who placed upon the tablet in Soldiers Field the names of his best friends who gave their lives in the Civil War felt that he must in some way "accomplish something that the two Lowell boys, Robert Shaw, and those others might have done if their lives had been spared." He put his life into a community enterprise he felt strongly could "bring some comfort and happiness to many," and through bitter criticism and financial disaster, he always managed to find the way to "one more year."

SYMPHONY ATTENDANCE HONORS, as well as many other cultural distinctions, belong to Boston's distinguished Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, arriving at Symphony Hall. (Paul Connell Photo)

OUTSIDE SYMPHONY HALL, chauffeurs await the end of the first Friday afternoon performance. From left, George Mitchell, Chestnut Hill; Buster Fleming, Reading; Gordon Larson and Bob Halligan, both of Brookline; and Patrick Brady, West Roxbury. (Philip Preston Photo)

Major Higginson would have found time yesterday to talk with a professor from Bangkok hearing the Boston Symphony for the first time, as well as to reminisce with the greatest delight with music's distinguished Mrs. Edwin S. Webster who has been a patron of Symphony for more than 60 of her 94 years. He would have wanted to know the name and music history of each man in the orchestra, as he did throughout his lifetime, and to talk with Erich Leinsdorf of Munich and Leipsig and of conductors Henschel, Gericke, Dr. Muck and many others.

But his lively, vigorous face would have been kindled with joy long before the Mahler was even begun, as the big, familiar audience, so obviously part and parcel of the Symphony scene, made its happy way into the hall—Mrs. Allan Forbes and her daughter, Mrs. Tudor Leland, Mrs. F. Murray Forbes, Mrs. Malcolm Peabody, Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, Mrs. Charles Howard, Mrs. Francis Sears and a grandchild, Mrs. Charles Mason, Mrs. Edward Mitton, Mrs. Paul Clark, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock and Mrs. Edward Francis arriving together, Mrs. Norman Cahners and Mrs. Louis Cabot, co-chairmen of the Women's Council of Symphony—the Ralph Bradleys, the Edward Tafts, the Russell Codmans, Mrs. Richard Thompson, Mrs. Stanford Calderwood, Mrs. Richard Lee, Mrs. Byron Elliott, Mrs. Robert F. Daley, Mrs. George Bottomley, on from luncheon at the Ritz to sit in the seat so long enjoyed by her mother, the late Mrs. Alvan Fuller, whose gracious presence, like that of the late Mrs. Franklin Hobbs, her longtime friends, still is missed at Symphony Hall—Mrs. Reynolds Fuller and her lovely daughter, Mrs. Alfred Donovan, Mrs. Lyman Gutterson, Mrs. William Straub, busy with plans for the Symphony Hall Strauss concert Nov. 6th which will aid the Diabetes Foundation, and honor the 100th anniversary of the Blue Danube Waltz, the Samuel H. Wolcotts and their daughter, Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk, the Thatcher Luquers, and so many, many more—

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
SEP 26 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

There were quite a few frustrated ladies at the opening of the 86th series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon. The traffic was even worse than usual, and the tales of nowhere to park were heard on all sides.

As a result there were many late arrivals who were forced to wait in large numbers outside the doors to the concert hall for 35 minutes until the intermission. It would seem a pity that Mr. Leinsdorf couldn't schedule a short piece with which to open the concert so that these late arrivals, many of whom had been driving around for half an hour trying to find somewhere to leave their car, could slip in. After all no-one would dare to be deliberately late for this most sacred of Boston society's sacred rituals.

Two late arrivals, one of whom just squeezed in before the doors closed, and the other who didn't, were Mrs. Malcolm Peabody of Cambridge, mother of the former governor. She literally ran up the steps from Massachusetts Avenue and into the hall at the very last moment. Mrs. Harold Ross of Cohasset wasn't so lucky and spent the first half of the concert patiently sitting on the marble stairway.

Despite these irritations for many, the opening concert was typical Friday afternoon Symphony at its best. The Mahler symphony was superb and the audience gave Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra a great welcome back.

Among this audience were Cabots, Saltonstalls, Lowells, and Adams, as well as every other well known Boston name, as there have been for generations. As always at the opening concert there was much visiting back and forth between seats as friends greeted each other after the long summer away.

Suits were the uniform of the day, and the first fall hats were seen. The unwritten law at Symphony, with a few exceptions of course, seems to be that the older ladies wear hats and the younger ones don't.

During the intermission Mrs. Charles Bartlett of Dedham was talking to friends in the Gallery, a black satin bow hat with her bright green suit. Green, also, was the choice of Mrs. John Barry of Cohasset for her suit, while her daughter, Mrs. Joseph Roper of Marblehead, wore a suit of soft blue. Mrs. C. Chauncey Grey of Cambridge wore a navy suit, and Mrs. Richard Partridge of Hingham a brown one, while a stunning orange dress and jacket was worn by dark haired Mrs. Joseph Watkins of Hingham.

Many of the audience were disappointed that there are no pre-symphony lunches this year, and hope was expressed that they would be revived as they are sadly missed.

Among others seen at this unofficial opening of the winter social season were Mrs. Benjamin Blake of Cohasset, Mrs. Walter Powers of Beacon Hill, a black quill on her beige pillbox hat; Mrs. J. Holland Cotter of Weston and her Harvard freshman son; Mrs. Frank Christian of Duxbury and many more.

TUES. A #1 SEPT. 27 THURS. A #1 SEPT. 29

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 27, at 8:30 o'clock

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)
III. Comodo; scherzando
IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)
V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)
VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Conductor

BOSTON BOYCHOIR
JOHN OLIVER, Director

Contralto Solo: SHIRLEY VERRETT

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

First Program

THURSDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)
III. Comodo; scherzando
IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)
V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)
VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Conductor

BOSTON BOYCHOIR
JOHN OLIVER, Director

Contralto Solo: SHIRLEY VERRETT

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

FRI. + SAT. #2 SEPT. 30 + OCT. 1

BMI
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 16.000

DEC 1966

◆ An orchestral suite derived from Leos Janácek's opera The Cunning Little Vixen received its first American performance, September 30, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented it at Boston's Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf conducted.

"The prelude, various interludes and orchestral background of this delightfully unique operatic work, offering parallels between human and animal life, were arranged by Vaclav Talich, noted late Czech conductor. . . . Talich's orchestral transcription illustrated the offbeat allure of Janácek's native musical diction," Rolfe Boswell reported, writing in the Boston Record American.

McLaren Harris, The Boston Herald reviewer, noted that the music "is romantic in idiom, even lush at times, composed of short, engagingly lyric themes and orchestrated in opulent sonorities." Commenting on the composer, Harris added: ". . . 38 years after his death he has barely begun to assume rightful importance as a 20th-century spokesman."

The suite from The Cunning Little Vixen is published by Universal Editions/Presser.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 30, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 1, at 8:30 o'clock

JANÁČEK . . . . . Suite from "The Cunning Little Vixen"
(First performance in America)

SCHUMANN . . . . . Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 129
Nicht zu schnell — Langsam — Sehr lebhaft

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92
I. Poco sostenuto; Vivace
II. Allegretto
III. Presto; Assai meno presto; Tempo primo
IV. Allegro con brio

SOLOIST
JULES ESKIN

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[73]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
SEP 30 1966

Jules Eskin
. . . will be the cello soloist in Schumann's Concerto in A minor at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts this weekend.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
SEP 25 1966

Cellist at Symphony

The Boston Symphony's principal cellist and two American premieres will be featured at the orchestra's concert this Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The concerts will open with "Passacaille" by the contemporary Swiss composer Frank Martin. Cellist Jules Ekin will then be soloist in the Schumann Cello Concerto. This will be followed by the Suite from "The Cunning Little Vixen," an opera by the Czech composer Leos Janacek. Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will follow intermission.

The works by Martin and Janacek will both be performed for the first time in America at these concerts.

The opening concerts of the Tuesday "A" and Thursday "A" series will take place this week, each beginning at 8:30. Each will consist of a performance of Mahler's Third Symphony. Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will be soloist, and the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, also will participate. Subscribers are reminded that the first movement of the Mahler Symphony is 36 minutes long, during which time no latecomers can be seated.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
SEP 25 1966

Jules Eskin Will Solo With Boston Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the program for the second pair of week end concerts of the 86th season, which will take place in Symphony Hall Friday at 2 p. m. and Saturday at 8.30 p. m.

Cello Concerto

The concerts will open with "Passacaille" by the contemporary Swiss composer Frank Martin. Jules Eskin, principal cello, will then join Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra as soloist in a performance of the Cello Concerto by Schumann. This will be followed by the suite from "The Cunning Little Vixen," an opera by the Czech composer Leos Janacek. After an intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will conclude the program by conducting Beethoven's Symphony No. 7.

The works by Martin and Janacek will both be performed for the first time in America at these concerts.

The opening concerts of the Tuesday "A" and Thursday "A" series will take place this week, each beginning at 8.30 in Symphony Hall on its respective evening (Sept. 27 and 29). Each concert will consist of a performance of Mahler's Third Symphony.

Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will be soloist; the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, will also participate. Subscribers are reminded that the first movement of the Mahler Symphony is 30 minutes long, during which time no latecomers can be seated.

11

FRI. + SAT. #2 SEPT. 30 + OCT. 1

BMI
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 16,000

DEC 1966

◆ An orchestral suite derived from Leos' Janácek's opera The Cunning Little Vixen received its first American performance, September 30, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented it at Boston's Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf conducted.

"The prelude, various interludes and orchestral background of this delightfully unique operatic work, offering parallels between human and animal life, were arranged by Vaclav Talich, noted late Czech conductor. . . . Talich's orchestral transcription illustrated the offbeat allure of Janácek's native musical diction," Rolfe Boswell reported, writing in the Boston Record American.

McLaren Harris, The Boston Herald reviewer, noted that the music "is romantic in idiom, even lush at times, composed of short, engagingly lyric themes and orchestrated in opulent sonorities." Commenting on the composer, Harris added: ". . . 38 years after his death he has barely begun to assume rightful importance as a 20th-century spokesman."

The suite from The Cunning Little Vixen is published by Universal Editions/Presser.

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 30, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 1, at 8:30 o'clock

JANÁČEK . . . . . Suite from "The Cunning Little Vixen"
(First performance in America)

SCHUMANN . . . . . Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 129
Nicht zu schnell — Langsam — Sehr lebhaft

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92
I. Poco sostenuto; Vivace
II. Allegretto
III. Presto; Assai meno presto; Tempo primo
IV. Allegro con brio

SOLOIST
JULES ESKIN

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
SEP 30 1966

Jules Eskin

. . . will be the cello soloist in Schumann's Concerto in A minor at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts this weekend.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
SEP 25 1966

Cellist at Symphony

The Boston Symphony's principal cellist and two American premieres will be featured at the orchestra's concert this Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The concerts will open with "Passacaille" by the contemporary Swiss composer Frank Martin. Cellist Jules Ekin will then be soloist in the Schumann Cello Concerto. This will be followed by the Suite from "The Cunning Little Vixen," an opera by the Czech composer Leos Janacek. Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 will follow intermission.

The works by Martin and Janacek will both be performed for the first time in America at these concerts.

The opening concerts of the Tuesday "A" and Thursday "A" series will take place this week, each beginning at 8:30. Each will consist of a performance of Mahler's Third Symphony. Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will be soloist, and the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, also will participate. Subscribers are reminded that the first movement of the Mahler Symphony is 36 minutes long, during which time no latecomers can be seated.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
SEP 25 1966

Jules Eskin Will Solo With Boston Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the program for the second pair of week end concerts of the 86th season, which will take place in Symphony Hall Friday at 2 p. m. and Saturday at 8.30 p. m.

Cello Concerto

The concerts will open with "Passacaille" by the contemporary Swiss composer Frank Martin. Jules Eskin, principal cello, will then join Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra as soloist in a performance of the Cello Concerto by Schumann. This will be followed by the suite from "The Cunning Little Vixen," an opera by the Czech composer Leos Janacek. After an intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will conclude the program by conducting Beethoven's Symphony No. 7.

The works by Martin and Janacek will both be performed for the first time in America at these concerts.

The opening concerts of the Tuesday "A" and Thursday "A" series will take place this week, each beginning at 8.30 in Symphony Hall on its respective evening (Sept. 27 and 29). Each concert will consist of a performance of Mahler's Third Symphony.

Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will be soloist; the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, will also participate. Subscribers are reminded that the first movement of the Mahler Symphony is 30 minutes long, during which time no latecomers can be seated.

Tues B.G.

THURS

12

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
OCT 1 1966

Hub Symphony Premiere of 'Little Vixen'

By ROLFE BOSWELL

An orchestral suite derived from Leos Janacek's "Cunning Little Vixen" opera (1924) received its first American performance in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when it was presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

The prelude, various interludes and orchestral background of this delightfully unique operatic work, offering parallels between human and animal life, were arranged by Vaclav Talich, noted late Czech conductor. They elicit a veritable anthology in purely instrumental music for Janacek's deeply-felt evocation of communicative sounds which he described as "the eternally-young rhytim of nature."

He told a gay story, streamlined from a latter-day Bohemian Aesop, with a bitter-sweet ending; contrasting animals' love of freedom with human conflict and confusion. Talich's orchestral transcription illustrated the offbeat allure of Janacek's native musical diction.

It is good enough to attract some contemporary composer, preferably English or American, to George Orwell's "Animal Farm" for similar zoological treatment. No atonalists need apply, for as Constant Lambert wrote in "Music Ho!" (1934): "An atonal comic opera is a chimercial thought."

Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein's violin solos, impersonating the cunning little vixen's siren song, were of the same piece as George Gershwin's melody personating the cunning little siren's vixenish song in "An American in Paris."

Though Robert Schumann's cello concerto (Op. 129, in A minor) is reputedly among his weaker works and held to be thickly orchestrated, an introspective performance, with reduced instrumentation, can do much for it. Jules Eskin, the principal BSO cellist, brought to this concerto vitality and technical control, with tasteful phrasing and change of pace, though his was not a very compelling interpretation.

His collaboration with his conductor and colleagues was a happy one, that is, competent in the best first-chair manner, but without virtuoso flair. Gregor Piatigorsky's cadenza toward the close lacked credence.

Beethoven's inimitable seventh symphony (Op. 92, in A) concluded the season's second concert in which Dr. Leinsdorf offered a propulsive performance, balancing strength with lyricism. His reading was heady and kinetic, urgent, yet graceful, subtly phrased and impressively played.

Though bygone conductors were wont to treas the second movement (allegretto) as a funeral march, it received a mock-funeral ("Is Great Pan Dead?") treatment yesterday, with the honorary pallbearers hastening in quickstep, lest they cast a gloom over the proceedings.

The finale (allegro con brio) went off with amazing vigor and verve, its driving energy running far ahead of the allegretto's quickstep in hitting the hurdles Beethoven, in Olympian humor, had strewn in the path of future conductors.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
OCT 1 1966

weekend at Symphony

Eskin in foreground

By Clifford Barnes

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Audience and fellow members of the Boston Symphony were enthusiastic over the performance of principal cellist Jules Eskin Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall. Music director and conductor Erich Leinsdorf's policy of featuring first-chair men provided the occasion for a fresh interpretation of the Schumann Cello Concerto.

Mr. Eskin produced a warm, full-bodied tone throughout the entire range and notably spun soft high notes that still sang. Schumann's melodic lines flowed with meaningful grace, and there was a special tenderness to some passages in the second movement.

The three movements are played without pause, and Mr. Eskin saved enough fire to build an exciting climax after the cadenza, which is a showpiece in its own right. Mr. Leinsdorf was sensitive to the thematic byplay between the orchestra and soloist, and graciously gave all the bows to Mr. Eskin at the conclusion of the concerto.

Exuberance matched

Schumann's youthful exuberance is matched in much of Beethoven, and the choice of the latter's Seventh Symphony was a happy one for this occasion. With this vehicle, Mr. Leinsdorf easily vied for the high point of the afternoon.

The slow introduction to the first movement was paced steadily and logically to lead into the first presentation of the themes. The second movement is always an audience favorite, and Mr. Leinsdorf achieved an effective contrast by keeping the fugal section at a very low dynamic level.

There is a persistent rhythmic idea which controls each movement, and the rugged gaiety of the third builds toward the effervescence of the finale. Mr. Leinsdorf held the reins very securely during the first statements of the theme. Succeeding repetitions were speeded up with seeming abandon until the final resounding chord brought the motion to an abrupt stop.

Concert opener

The concert opened more calmly with the first American performance of the suite from Janáček's opera, "The Cunning Little Vixen." This is the first time a work by this Czech composer has been on a Boston Symphony program, and the selection gave us excerpts from one of his most popular operas.

The arrangement of the suite, by Václav Talich, calls for a large orchestra, and the instruments have some colorful programmatic effects. There was an engaging waltz in the first part, and several short solo sections for the first-chair string players.

The lush romantic harmonies would hardly betray the fact that this music was composed between 1921 and 1923. It was a pleasant opener, but not in the same class as what followed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
OCT 1 1966

BSO Excels With Beethoven's 7th

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The novelty on Friday afternoon's Boston Symphony program under Erich Leinsdorf was a suite not previously heard in America. "The Cunning Little Vixen" was arranged by Vaclav Talich from Leos Janacek's opera.

Though the occasion for some exceptionally lovely playing by the orchestra, it proved to be a pretty thin cup of broth — some pleasing sounds-of-nature atmosphere, some quirky humor, and many repetitions of short bits of nothing much.

Jules Eskin, the Boston Symphony's principal cellist, played Schumann's Concerto, a problem piece if ever there was. Its first two movements have beautiful melodies, but the finale, except for one episode, is painfully empty rumtum. The emergence, like a sudden unveiling, of the second movement from the first, is a fine inspiration. In general it is a colorless, unfocused piece, though I wonder if some of its monotony could be dispelled by taking Schumann's direction for the first movement, "not too fast," to mean something other than the really quite slow tempo which is traditional.

It is not a work to make a cellist sound brilliant; indeed, it takes a formidable technique in order to sound even reasonably professional, so clumsily is some of it written. Eskin played it quite as well as I have heard it done, with a flexible line tastefully drawn with unfailing coherency, reliable intonation, and agreeable tone. The orchestral support was carefully gauged to the soloist's intimate sound and style, and it was in every way good.

Leinsdorf ended the program with Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, one of his best performances. I have reservations about the second movement in which the pairs of staccato quarters were hard and choppy rather than springy. Otherwise, from the handsomely spacious introduction to the whirling recessional—pardon, I mean finale —Leinsdorf conducting was superb, and it produced a strong and exciting performance, clear in every detail of line and textures. The orchestra's play[illegible] was brilliant.

Leinsdorf, incidentally, takes all the repeats in the Seventh, and he is entirely right. Each has rhetorical and structural significance, and the repeat of the first movement exposition and that of the scherzo's second edition embody two of Beethoven's most glorious strokes of the humor which most conductors, who ignore the repeats, just don't want us to know about.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 1 1966

Symphony • Beethoven's Seventh Fills • Otherwise Slender Program

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

There is no denying the worth of the old masters when it comes to filling out a program which would otherwise lack substance. Friday at Symphony was Beethoven's turn, as it often is, to give direction to an offering of works by Janacek and Schumann with the Symphony No. 7.

The foregoing is not meant to disparage either Janacek, whose suite from the opera, "The Cunning Little Vixen," opened the program and whose works in general are all too little heard; or Jules Eskin's fine solo performance of Schumann's Cello Concerto. But these works are of small scope in the former case and of limited imagination in the latter, so the Seventh drew the focus, the interest, the plaudits.

Exuberant Energy

Beethoven's Seventh, in a word, rings—with exuberant energy, propulsive rhythm and brilliant orchestration. Throughout three of its four movements it sustains a drive whose strength and steadfastness is not equalled in any other of his symphonies. Once begun, the first movement's dotted rhythm continues relentlessly with no more than a moment's hesitation shortly before the conclusion; it characterizes lilting woodwind themes, assumes a rolling gait with full orchestra, growls in expectant quiet before rising to hammer out the triumphant final bars.

The Scherzo's arpeggios and scale passages leap with an easy agility, vanish during the Trio's reflective pause, then reappear with undiminished fervor. The finale is a veritable dervish of activity, whose sustained fortes and block phrasing threaten to become strained with repetition, virtually challenging the listener to keep up.

The second movement is the very antithesis of these, a period of tranquility within a work of almost manic determination—tragic, poignant exquisitely etched with interweaving melodies.

Such was the outline, in the main, which Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra gave the Seventh on Friday. The players held together admirably, eliminating raggedness and rushing of the beat, which is an almost irresistible temptation in the opening bars. The dotted rhythm was lightly staccato, except when the brass stepped in to cover it. Mr. Leinsdorf admires the horns, which are a strong point of Beethoven's orchestration, and lent them full rein at the first movement's climax; the effect was glorious, but it stole some impact from the final strokes.

The following Allegretto seemed hurriedly paced, becoming narrative rather than reflective; and though the end calls for no retard, one would be appropriate, allowing the movement to expire instead of being extinguished.

First for Janacek

The remainder went according to plan, though the finale's continuous rush appeared to infect Mr. Leinsdorf's direction, which became a simple matter of arm-swinging; but all ended well.

The remarkable fact about Janacek's piece was not that this was its first American performance, but that this was Janacek's first appearance on a Boston Symphony program; 38 years after his death he has barely begun to assume rightful importance as a 20th-century spokesman. His orchestral output, however, is quite small in relation to the overall, though there are three cantatas, church music, a ballet and some fragmentary works which would be admissible to the concert realm.

The Symphony:

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the second program in its 85th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Jules Eskin was cello soloist for the Schumann concerto.

Suite from "The Conning Little Vixen" — Janacek
(first American ptrformance)
Cello Concerto in A minor, Op. 129 — Schumann
Symphony No. 7 in A major, Op. 92 — Beethoven

The "Cunning Little Vixen" suite comes from an opera principally about animals, with humans purely secondary. Aside from a few clucks and chirps the music has little pictorial outline; it is romantic in idiom, even lush at times, composed o fshort, engagingly lyric themes and orchestrated in opulent sonorities. Though of small consequence in itself, the suite whets one's appetite for the operatic whole.

Jules Eskin proved his mettle, which includes a resonant tone and expert technique, in Schumann's Cello Concerto, a work of somewhat flagging genius. Mr. Eskin made the most of the first and second movements' eloquent solo passages, then worked his way stolidly through the thankless passage-work of the finale. It was no fault of Mr. Leinsdorf or his musicians that the concerto remained largely undramatic and, near the end, rather tedious; the Piatigorsky cadenza, which the cellist whipped off with assurance, got its technical points across but little else.

13 TUES. B #1 OCT. 4

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 4, at 7:30 o'clock

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)

III. Comodo; scherzando

IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)

V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)

VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Conductor

BOSTON BOYCHOIR
JOHN OLIVER, Director

Contralto Solo: SHIRLEY VERRETT

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

THURS. B #1 OCT. 6

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

First Program

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 6, at 8:30 o'clock

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)

III. Comodo; scherzando

IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)

V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)

VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Conductor

BOSTON BOYCHOIR
JOHN OLIVER, Director

Contralto Solo: SHIRLEY VERRETT

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
OCT 9 1966

A Note on the Boston Symphony and Mahler

It seems as if every time I turned around last week I was in Boston, but my peripatetic activities were worthwhile, for I was able to be in Symphony Hall for the first program of the Boston Symphony's Tuesday "B" series.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, who is engaged in the laudable task of recording all of Mahler's symphonies for RCA-Victor, devoted the entire concert to Mahler's monumental, 90-minute work, "Symphony No. 3 in D Minor," which boasts six movements and demands, besides a large orchestra, a contralto soloist, a chorus of women and a boys' choir.

Although I viewed the project with some misgivings, I came away from the concert exhilarated and impressed. The Mahler work gives numerous opportunities to the orchestra to display its virtuoso qualities—in section solo work, in passages that soar into the realm of magnificent sound, in sequences that are bright and lively, in others that are somber, in some that rise to great moments of musical exaltation.

Shirley Verrett, the contralto soloist; the New England Conservatory Chorus, and the Boston Boys' Choir combined their talents with those of the orchestra to give us an absorbing reading of a lengthy but frequently glorious work.

HERE AND THERE: Elizabeth Taylor and Richard

13 TUES. B #1 OCT. 4

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 4, at 7:30 o'clock

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)

III. Comodo; scherzando

IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)

V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)

VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Conductor

BOSTON BOYCHOIR
JOHN OLIVER, Director

Contralto Solo: SHIRLEY VERRETT

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

THURS. B #1 OCT. 6

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

First Program

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 6, at 8:30 o'clock

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)

III. Comodo; scherzando

IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)

V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)

VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Conductor

BOSTON BOYCHOIR
JOHN OLIVER, Director

Contralto Solo: SHIRLEY VERRETT

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
OCT 9 1966

A Note on the Boston Symphony and Mahler

It seems as if every time I turned around last week I was in Boston, but my peripatetic activities were worthwhile, for I was able to be in Symphony Hall for the first program of the Boston Symphony's Tuesday "B" series.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, who is engaged in the laudable task of recording all of Mahler's symphonies for RCA-Victor, devoted the entire concert to Mahler's monumental, 90-minute work, "Symphony No. 3 in D Minor," which boasts six movements and demands, besides a large orchestra, a contralto soloist, a chorus of women and a boys' choir.

Although I viewed the project with some misgivings, I came away from the concert exhilarated and impressed. The Mahler work gives numerous opportunities to the orchestra to display its virtuoso qualities—in section solo work, in passages that soar into the realm of magnificent sound, in sequences that are bright and lively, in others that are somber, in some that rise to great moments of musical exaltation.

Shirley Verrett, the contralto soloist; the New England Conservatory Chorus, and the Boston Boys' Choir combined their talents with those of the orchestra to give us an absorbing reading of a lengthy but frequently glorious work.

HERE AND THERE: Elizabeth Taylor and Richard

FRI + SAT #3 OCT. 7+8

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
OCT 8 1966

Israeli Violinist Stars In Dvorak With BSO

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Shmuel Ashkenasi, 25, prize-winning violinist from Israel, made his local debut in Symphony Hall yesterday with a vibrant and muscular performance, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, of the Dvorak violin concerto (Op. 53, in A minor).

The tall, personable, curly-haired young disciple of Efrem Zimbalist can be listed now as among the coming great virtuosi of his generation.

Ashkenasi, his bow rock-steady, draws an opulent, almost Elmanesque, tone when requisite and equally valid, finely spun pianissimi. His fingerboard technique is formidable indeed.

Though Dvorak's folksy, malt-and-hops violin concerto cannot be ranked among the dozen magisterial concerti composed since 1800, it is easy listening, chock-full of pleasant and ingratiating tunes. A strongly infectious Bohemian flavor permeates all three movements.

It opens with an allegro, dominated by two rhythmic, animated themes and is extremely free and rhapsodic. There are several other melodic ideas during the course of the movement, but they were quickly submerged in the elaborate virtuosity of the soloist.

The slow movement follows without pause, manifesting a fevent melody, played by the solo violin with a simplicity making it resemble a folksong. This minor-keyed segment is a poetic duet between violin soloist and French horn.

Dazzling virtuosity running wild in the finale perhaps is even more effective. This enchanting, syncopated Bohemian theme is introduced by the soloist, with a delicate accompaniment in the orchestral violins and the piece ends in vigorous high spirits, speaking in a tonal tongue akin to the composer's own Slavonic dialect. Conductorial insight and orchestral collaboration throughout was sympathetic.

Yesterday's concert was opened by a searching and powerful performance of Sibelius' fifth symphony (Op. 82, in E flat), perhaps most popular at present of the Finnish master's seven such works. It is, over-all, a sunny opus, with a strong Brhmsian admixture, having a pastoral beginning and a triumphant conclusion.

A the end, the music slows down, builds up in a big, largeamente climax, then, abruptly, six separated, hacked chords for full orchestra and the symphony savagely on notes of massive power. Dr. Leinsdorf's reading, less mannered than Serge Koussevitzky's, was set forth with miraculous clarity nd customary brilliance by the BSO.

Concluding the concert was Sergei Prokoviett's Scythian Suite, Op. 20, abstracted from his abortive "Ala and Lolli" ballet. Therein the singularly self-tortured young Russian composer set out deliberately to outdo Igor Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring" in calculated dissonances, blaring orchestral color, primitave drumbeats and, for contrast, the stippled harmonies and muted strings of Debussy. This game gambit also was essayed by Bela Bartok in his "Wonderful Mandarin" ballet, seldom danced but often perfomed in concet halls, as it was in Symphony Hall not long ago by the BBC Ochesta. Indeed, the Stavinsky mastepiece, too, isn't danced vey often, but has become a symphonic staple.

"Why, in the name of reason, should the accompaniment to a dance be played in public without the dance itself, any more than the accompaniment to a song?" George Bernard Shaw wrote as long ago as Aug. 12, 1889, though he conceded that "there are a few dance tunes that are worth listening to for their own sakes."

Unfortunately, the Scythian Suite, even when so well projected, isn't one of those tunes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 15 1966

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston.

Tues. at 7:30:
The BSO again offers Mahler's Symphony No. 3 in D minor, with mezzo-soprano Shirley Verrett, the New England Conservatory Chorus, and the Boston Boy-choir. Repeat performance Thursday at 8:30.

Fri. at 2:
Erich Leinsdorf conducts the BSO in Sibelius' Symphony No. 5 in E flat major, Op. 82; Dvorak's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 53, and Prokofiev's Scythian Suite, Op. 20. Violinist Shmuel Ashkenasi is soloist in the Dvorak work. Encore performance Sat. at 8:30.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 7, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 8, at 8:30 o'clock

SIBELIUS ..... Symphony No. 5 in E-flat major, Op. 82
- I. Tempo molto moderato
- II. Allegro moderato, ma poco a poco stretto
- III. Andante mosso, quasi allegretto
- IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK ..... Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 53
- I. Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Adagio ma non troppo
- III. Finale: Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo

PROKOFIEV ..... Scythian Suite, Op. 20
- I. The Adoration of Veles and Ala
- II. The Enemy God and the Dance of the Black Spirits
- III. Night
- IV. The Glorious Departure of Lolli and the Procession of the Sun

SOLOIST
SHMUEL ASHKENASI

These concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 8 1966

THE SYMPHONY

Sibelius, Dvorak ---And Prokofiev

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

The Symphony did a little exploring on Friday of romantic musical trends with compositions by Sibelius and Dvorak, then concluded its expedition with a work of Prokofiev—a diametric opposite. site.

Creations of the former pair are welcome on symphonic programs often for reasons other than their own intrinsic merit. Occasionally they come as a relief, a respite from the mainstream of German and French romanticism which dominates our 19th-century tastes; and so we reflect upon the peculiar genius which set Sibelius and Dvorak apart from their respective generations.

I'm sure to encounter argument from some when speaking of Sibelius as a genius (the French, for example, seem always to have had it in for him); there are claims that his symphonies are formless, his orchestrations clouded and undistinguished, his harmonies nebulous and his melodic gift fleeting. These are not my own feelings; but in any case what is just as remarkable as Sibelius' and Dvorak's idioms per se is the fact that they were able to survive as individuals at all.

Technical Complexity

The problem was to approach the Beethoven-Schubert-Schumann-Brahms tradition and reap its benefits, yet avoid being swallowed up in the process. The solution for Sibelius was simplicity itself; after a point he kept himself apart, probing inward for the language of the Symphony No. 5, which opened Friday's program (he was helped in this by the geography and politics of early 20th-century Europe). The result was a sort of renunciation. His melodies, ranging from the fanfare-like motives of opening movement to the extended, sustained lines of the finale, are given mostly to the woodwinds; strings are retained largely for unison support or coloristic effect, their light tremolo figures creating a mysterious anticipation for more full-blown passages.

The expression of the four movements (or three, considering the first and second as a unified structure) under Erich Leinsdorf's direction was lush, even sensual in its song of nature, from the first movement's twitterings to the finale's deep sonorities wrought by the quartet of horns and the trombones. The Symphony No. 5 has a cumulative majesty, broken Friday only when the brass and tympani were allowed to obliterate the strings and when the second-movement conclusion became a headlong chase.

Dvorak's Violin Concerto, Op. 53, is perhaps a more endearing work. It has virtuosic show, lyric tenderness, plenty of harmonic color and familiar formal structures, all of which make it in a sense more comfortable. Friday it also had Shmuel Ashkenasi, whose technique, endurance and tonal opulence brought out Dvorak's best.

The first movement, as in the Brahms (both concerti were dedicated to Joseph Joachim), keeps the violin always at the fore, and Ashkenasi did not let the composer down, his rich tone and sense of phrase injecting Dvorak's lyric bent into the most demanding of figures, emphasizing the major-minor melodic characteristics which often strike us as melancholy. The violinist appeared to have a fine affinity for this folk idiom which preserved the composer's singular musical expression; Ashkenasi was able to reconcile bravura and gentleness almost everywhere and tell one from the other when he could not. His tone faltered only occasionally on the low strings; all else was pure eloquence. Leinsdorf and the Symphony sustained their reputation as fine accompanists.

Though Prokofiev did not eschew lyricism entirely it is but an infrequent visitor in his compositions. By contrast with Sibelius' and Dvorak's romantic flow, the Scythian Suite, Op. 20, is terse, incisive, muscular and from time to time, percussive. The suite was originally intended as material for a ballet concerning pre-historic, pagan legend and ritual; its rhythms are elemental, the pace often heavy and the orchestration jagged. Even the concluding sunrise has not the enveloping grandeur of Strauss but a feeling of mystery and fear before an awesome deity. The orchestra accorded Prokofiev his dynamic due, with plenty of rein given to brass and percussion; even the conductor added his voice to the sound.

Next week the orchestra is on tour; on Oct. 21 and 22 Richard Burgin will be guest conductor Concerto in A minor, Hinde- and soloist in Bach's Violin mith's Symphonia Serena and the Shostakovich Symphony No. 5.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the third program of the 86th season Friday in Symphony Hall. Shmuel Ashkensasi was violin soloist in the Dvorak concerto.

Symphony No. 5 in E flat, Op. 82 — Sibelius
Violin Concerto in A minor, Op. 53 — Dvorak
Scythian Suite, Op. 20 — Prokofiev

FRI + SAT #3 OCT. 7+8

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
OCT 8 1966

Israeli Violinist Stars In Dvorak With BSO

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Shmuel Ashkenasi, 25, prize-winning violinist from Israel, made his local debut in Symphony Hall yesterday with a vibrant and muscular performance, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, of the Dvorak violin concerto (Op. 53, in A minor).

The tall, personable, curly-haired young disciple of Efrem Zimbalist can be listed now as among the coming great virtuosi of his generation.

Ashkenasi, his bow rock-steady, draws an opulent, almost Elmanesque, tone when requisite and equally valid, finely spun pianissimi. His fingerboard technique is formidable indeed.

Though Dvorak's folksy, malt-and-hops violin concerto cannot be ranked among the dozen magisterial concerti composed since 1800, it is easy listening, chock-full of pleasant and ingratiating tunes. A strongly infectious Bohemian flavor permeates all three movements.

It opens with an allegro, dominated by two rhythmic, animated themes and is extremely free and rhapsodic. There are several other melodic ideas during the course of the movement, but they were quickly submerged in the elaborate virtuosity of the soloist.

The slow movement follows without pause, manifesting a fevent melody, played by the solo violin with a simplicity making it resemble a folksong. This minor-keyed segment is a poetic duet between violin soloist and French horn.

Dazzling virtuosity running wild in the finale perhaps is even more effective. This enchanting, syncopated Bohemian theme is introduced by the soloist, with a delicate accompaniment in the orchestral violins and the piece ends in vigorous high spirits, speaking in a tonal tongue akin to the composer's own Slavonic dialect. Conductorial insight and orchestral collaboration throughout was sympathetic.

Yesterday's concert was opened by a searching and powerful performance of Sibelius' fifth symphony (Op. 82, in E flat), perhaps most popular at present of the Finnish master's seven such works. It is, over-all, a sunny opus, with a strong Brhmsian admixture, having a pastoral beginning and a triumphant conclusion.

A the end, the music slows down, builds up in a big, largeamente climax, then, abruptly, six separated, hacked chords for full orchestra and the symphony savagely on notes of massive power. Dr. Leinsdorf's reading, less mannered than Serge Koussevitzky's, was set forth with miraculous clarity nd customary brilliance by the BSO.

Concluding the concert was Sergei Prokovieff's Scythian Suite, Op. 20, abstracted from his abortive "Ala and Lolli" ballet. Therein the singularly self-tortured young Russian composer set out deliberately to outdo Igor Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring" in calculated dissonances, blaring orchestral color, primitave drumbeats and, for contrast, the stippled harmonies and muted strings of Debussy. This game gambit also was essayed by Bela Bartok in his "Wonderful Mandarin" ballet, seldom danced but often perfomed in concet halls, as it was in Symphony Hall not long ago by the BBC Ochesta. Indeed, the Stavinsky mastepiece, too, isn't danced vey often, but has become a symphonic staple.

"Why, in the name of reason, should the accompaniment to a dance be played in public without the dance itself, any more than the accompaniment to a song?" George Bernard Shaw wrote as long ago as Aug. 12, 1889, though he conceded that "there are a few dance tunes that are worth listening to for their own sakes."

Unfortunately, the Scythian Suite, even when so well projected, isn't one of those tunes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 15 1966

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston

Tues. at 7:30:
The BSO again offers Mahler's Symphony No. 3 in D minor, with mezzo-soprano Shirley Verrett, the New England Conservatory Chorus, and the Boston Boychoir. Repeat performance Thursday at 8:30.

Fri. at 2:
Erich Leinsdorf conducts the BSO in Sibelius' Symphony No. 5 in E flat major, Op. 82; Dvorak's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 53, and Prokofiev's Scythian Suite, Op. 20. Violinist Shmuel Ashkenasi is soloist in the Dvorak work. Encore performance Sat. at 8:30.

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, October 7, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, October 8, at 8:30 o'clock

SIBELIUS ..... Symphony No. 5 in E-flat major, Op. 82
- I. Tempo molto moderato
- II. Allegro moderato, ma poco a poco stretto
- III. Andante mosso, quasi allegretto
- IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK ..... Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in A minor, Op. 53
- I. Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Adagio ma non troppo
- III. Finale: Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo

PROKOFIEV ..... Scythian Suite, Op. 20
- I. The Adoration of Veles and Ala
- II. The Enemy God and the Dance of the Black Spirits
- III. Night
- IV. The Glorious Departure of Lolli and the Procession of the Sun

SOLOIST
SHMUEL ASHKENASI

These concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 8 1966

THE SYMPHONY

Sibelius, Dvorak ---And Prokofiev

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

The Symphony did a little exploring on Friday of romantic musical trends with compositions by Sibelius and Dvorak, then concluded its expedition with a work of Prokofiev—a diametric opposite. site.

Creations of the former pair are welcome on symphonic programs often for reasons other than their own intrinsic merit. Occasionally they come as a relief, a respite from the mainstream of German and French romanticism which dominates our 19th-century tastes; and so we reflect upon the peculiar genius which set Sibelius and Dvorak apart from their respective generations.

I'm sure to encounter argument from some when speaking of Sibelius as a genius (the French, for example, seem always to have had it in for him); there are claims that his symphonies are formless, his orchestrations clouded and undistinguished, his harmonies nebulous and his melodic gift fleeting. These are not my own feelings; but in any case what is just as remarkable as Sibelius' and Dvorak's idioms per se is the fact that they were able to survive as individuals at all.

Technical Complexity

The problem was to approach the Beethoven-Schubert-Schumann-Brahms tradition and reap its benefits, yet avoid being swallowed up in the process. The solution for Sibelius was simplicity itself; after a point he kept himself apart, probing inward for the language of the Symphony No. 5, which opened Friday's program (he was helped in this by the geography and politics of early 20th-century Europe). The result was a sort of renunciation. His melodies, ranging from the fanfare-like motives of opening movement to the extended, sustained lines of the finale, are given mostly to the woodwinds; strings are retained largely for unison support or coloristic effect, their light tremolo figures creating a mysterious anticipation for more full-blown passages.

The expression of the four movements (or three, considering the first and second as a unified structure) under Erich Leinsdorf's direction was lush, even sensual in its song of nature, from the first movement's twitterings to the finale's deep sonorities wrought by the quartet of horns and the trombones. The Symphony No. 5 has a cumulative majesty, broken Friday only when the brass and tympani were allowed to obliterate the strings and when the second-movement conclusion became a headlong chase.

Dvorak's Violin Concerto, Op. 53, is perhaps a more endearing work. It has virtuosic show, lyric tenderness, plenty of harmonic color and familiar formal structures, all of which make it in a sense more comfortable. Friday it also had Shmuel Ashkenasi, whose technique, endurance and tonal opulence brought out Dvorak's best.

The first movement, as in the Brahms (both concerti were dedicated to Joseph Joachim), keeps the violin always at the fore, and Ashkenasi did not let the composer down, his rich tone and sense of phrase injecting Dvorak's lyric bent into the most demanding of figures, emphasizing the major-minor melodic characteristics which often strike us as melancholy. The violinist appeared to have a fine affinity for this folk idiom which preserved the composer's singular musical expression; Ashkenasi was able to reconcile bravura and gentleness almost everywhere and tell one from the other when he could not. His tone faltered only occasionally on the low strings; all else was pure eloquence. Leinsdorf and the Symphony sustained their reputation as fine accompanists.

Though Prokofiev did not eschew lyricism entirely it is but an infrequent visitor in his compositions. By contrast with Sibelius' and Dvorak's romantic flow, the Scythian Suite, Op. 20, is terse, incisive, muscular and from time to time, percussive. The suite was originally intended as material for a ballet concerning pre-historic, pagan legend and ritual; its rhythms are elemental, the pace often heavy and the orchestration jagged. Even the concluding sunrise has not the enveloping grandeur of Strauss but a feeling of mystery and fear before an awesome deity. The orchestra accorded Prokofiev his dynamic due, with plenty of rein given to brass and percussion; even the conductor added his voice to the sound.

Next week the orchestra is on tour; on Oct. 21 and 22 Richard Burgin will be guest conductor Concerto in A minor, Hinde- and soloist in Bach's Violin mith's Symphonia Serena and the Shostakovich Symphony No. 5.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the third program of the 86th season Friday in Symphony Hall. Shmuel Ashkensasi was violin soloist in the Dvorak concerto.

Symphony No. 5 in E flat, Op. 82 — Sibelius
Violin Concerto in A minor, Op. 53 — Dvorak
Scythian Suite, Op. 20 — Prokofiev

15

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 2 1966

Show Guide | MUSIC

Orchestra's Guest Is Israeli Violinist

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will present four concerts in Symphony Hall this week: the third pair of Friday-Saturday programs and the opening concerts of the Tuesday "B" series at 7:30 and the Thursday "B" series at 8:30.

Leinsdorf is continuing with his plan to open each of the orchestra's seven series this season with a performance of Mahler's Third Symphony. Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will continue as soloist at the Tuesday and Thursday program, joined by the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, and the Boston Boychoir, John Oliver, director. Subscribers are reminded that the first movement of the Mahler is thirty minutes long, during which time no latecomers can be seated.

Shmuel Ashkenasi, 25-year-old Isreali violinist, will make his first Boston appearance with the orchestra at the Friday concerts. He will perform the Dvorak Violin Concerto. Mr. Leinsdorf will open the program with the Sibelius Symphony No. 5 and conclude with the "Scythian Suite," Op. 20, by Prokofiev.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
OCT 8 1966

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Weekend at Symphony

How times change

By Clifford Barnes

The oft-repeated gibe that distance lends enchantment to unappreciated contemporary art was brought forcibly to mind Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall. During intermission at the Boston Symphony concert, some of the audience were inspecting the paintings displayed in the foyer, and commenting on the merits and general demerits of the most advanced canvases.

A parallel can be seen in the response to Prokofiev's Scythian Suite, with which conductor Erich Leinsdorf concluded the program. At its première in 1916, critics and audience alike were shocked by the "cacophony" of the score. By contrast, the frenetic dance of the second movement caused the Friday afternoon audience to chuckle, after the pseudo-dramatic climax.

Originally intended as music for a ballet commissioned by Diaghilev, this suite for large orchestra is as tame as much movie music today. Its appeal lies in an earthy, barbaric quality, and a stark, rhythmic pulsation. A battery of percussion players were kept busy throughout the work. Some of the effective moments of the first movement were due to the woodwind solos.

Sibelius symphony

The Scythian Suite dates from the same years as Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony. Jan Sibelius also composed his Symphony No. 5 at this time, and "classical" would be a very apt title for it. Compelled by a strong urge to write this new symphony, Sibelius was consciously turning away from program music.

The cold and rather forbidding thematic material of the first two movements (played without pause) suddenly gives way to warm, flowing melodies in the slow third movement. The busy opening of the finale leads to the brass intoning the well-known ostinato theme that pervades the rest of the movement. And the brass ensemble sound was a joy to the ear.

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Mr. Leinsdorf showed his orchestra to be an extremely flexible group, capable of every sudden inflection that he asked for. However, on the final chords of the symphony it seemed as though he had some of the players guessing. There was no anticipation, but the full resonance that we are used to hearing was not always there.

The concert soloist was the 25-year-old Israeli violinist Shmuel Ashkenasi. Appearing for the first time on these concerts, he played Dvořák's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra.

His strongest quality is a convincing singing tone. For that reason, he seemed to relax during the slow movement, where Dvořák provided a very legato, Czech melody for the violin to play over a woodwind background.

The virtuosic display of the first movement was marred by occasional imprecise intonation. However, by the time he reached the finale, its gay, rollicking mood lent him confidence. He attacked the tricky passages with gusto.

The orchestra gave him a standing ovation, led by the concertmaster.

SHMUEL ASHKENASI

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
OCT 8 1966

The ARTS

Boston Symphony Concert

Violinist Ashkenasi Swift and Sure

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Shmuel Ashkenasi was the soloist at Friday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert, playing the Dvorak Violin Concerto. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Symphony No. 5 by Sibelius and Prokofiev's Scythian Suite.

Ashkenasi, an Israeli of 25 who took a second in the 1962 Moscow Competition, is an impressive player. His technique is swift and sure, and he plays with taste and intelligence. His sound, which is much like Joseph Silverstein's, is delicate yet quite intense, and with a rapid vibrato. He is an elegant player more than a fiery or rhetorical one, and he and the Dvorak are not quite mutually suited. The piece, which except for its delightful finale is really rather feeble, wants a willingness to turn on a certain unbuttoned violinistic vulgarity, something Ashkenasi disdains altogether or of which, at best, he occasionally can provide a synthetic imitation. For me, at any rate, the performance did not quite get off the ground until late. Ashkenasi, admirably accompanied by Leinsdorf and the orchestra, was warmly applauded.

While I cannot imagine liking the Sibelius Fifth, I found it, on rehearing, a piece full of interesting ideas. Sibelius' sonata movements with their terse expositions are effective. The scherzo is rhythmically most interesting, as for that matter is the composer's whole technique of placing notes all around, rather than squarely on, the main beat. While the andante's interminable "Do you like toothpicks? Yes, I like toothpicks" dialogue gets to be absund at such length, its actual sounds are intriguing. Sibelius has an altogether individual idea of orchestral sound with its effective contrast of thick, low bunchings against chilly octaves and nicely placed fourths.

The music is mannered and its attitudes are sometimes pompous, but it is the work of a man with a real idea of composition and with ability. Part of this generally favorable reaction to the piece—a reaction that surprised me—is to be ascribed to the stunning performance. Leinsdorf is not thought of as a Sibelius man generally, but on the basis of this performance of the Fifth, I should say that I know of no conductor who does this music better. The large dimensions were clearly shaped and the detail was vividly clear. His concept of this music is anti-lush, and it is both a relief and a clarification to hear a performance where the conductor is not leaning all the way into the music all the time as though parodying Ormandy's Tchaikovsky.

The Scythian Suite is the work of a staggeringly gifted 23-year-old. It tries hard to be another savage "Sacre du printemps," and Prokofiev did produce a score bursting with physical vigor and incredibly brilliant sound. Prokofiev is, however, attached to four-bar phrases, and their monotony dulls the effect a bit. This, too, had a first-rate performance, effectively led and virtuosically played. One detail: It is a pleasure to have really good tuba playing in the orchestra, with firm tone and in tune. Chester Schmitz is a welcome addition to the Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
OCT 13 1966

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

ASHKENASI DEBUT AT BSO

His name sounds like something out of a Malamud novel and this was his first appearance in Boston. But it says here that from now on in the violin realm Shmuel Ashkenasi is a figure to conjure with.

The vehicle that the twenty-five-year-old Israeli native employed for his Boston entree was the redoubtable Dvorak Concerto in A minor, which had not been performed at these concerts since Ruth Posselt did it a quarter of a century mack. Mr. Ashkenasi quickly revealed himself to be the complete violinist. His tone was purity itself, his technique made everything sound so unlabored and elegance of style permeated every bar. Great volumes of sound would be instantly followed by the tiniest pianissimo. Delicate filigreed meditations stood in sharp contrast with savage bites into the strings. If there was a flaw at all, it was a slight tendency to sharpness in the first movement, undoubtedly attributable to nervousness, but that quickly subsided. The thrust of a concerto can be misleading, of course, but on the initial evidence this young man — a finalist in the Brussels and a Second in the Moscow Competitions — is destined to take a place among the select.

Mr. Leinsdorf's accompaniment was superb. The A minor is one of those few concertos which are truly symphonic in scope. It is vintage Dvorak: rugged in structure, noble in proportion, fresh and robust, melodically inspired, vividly colored, bursting with invention. Mr. Leinsdorf has always done nobly by this composer and he was very much in the vein here. The collaboration was received with consideraable enthusiasm.

The solo piece was bracketed by a couple of works forever consigned, one might have thought, to that especial Valhalla reserved for certain favorites of Dr. Koussevitsky. They were Sibelius' Symphony No. 5 in E-flat major and Prokofiev's Scythian Suite.

There was a time when the Fifth was recokoned a true pillar of the symphony literature; as late as 1949, for instance, Olin Downes discovered the concluding fortissimo of the last theme of the finale to be "savage and grand as the sunrise." Today the here brutally abrupt and cursory, the there trivial and simplistic thematic treatment, all intermixed with long passage of mawkish sentimentality that would embarrass even Tchaikowsky, puts most people off. In the end the Fifth is saved by the sheer ruggedness of the Sibelius personality. It is abundantly endowed with his faults and his virtues. For those listeners not satisfied to be put off by its many moments that sound almost like a parody of himself there can be many rewards. Thus the seeming triviality of its Scherzo can have the effect of a passacaglia, and the obstinacy and heaviness of the horn and trumpet figure at the end contain a certain powerful exorability. Of how many symphonies can so much be said? Mr. Leinsdorf's reading may not have invested the symphony with the kind of grandeur that characterized Dr. Koussevitsky's interpretations of it in his heyday, but for sheer strength of line and illumination of detail the performance was more than good, it was memorable.

The Scythian Suite is the embodiment of a musical cubism that has had its moment of glory. Rhythms that must have had quite a bracing and exhilarating effect upon 1916 audiences now sound slightly wearisome in their unflagging and rather monotonous vehemence. Harmonic and orchestral combinations that had an undoubted shock effect in those times have lost the effect without leaving much substance in its place. Yet the work is scarcely something for amateurs to play, and a virtuoso conductor and orchestra can still manage to extract considerable excitement out of it. As has been the case all season, the orchestra sounded in peak form and one could leave the hall with the feeling that no better symphony playing was to be heard anywhere.

This week the orchestra is on its first tour. Next week Richard Burgin will take over not only as guest conductor but as soloist in the Bach A minor Violin Concerto. Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony and Hindemith's Simphonia Serena complete the program.

TUES. - CAMBRIDGE #1 OCT. 18

16

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 18, at 8:30 o'clock

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)

III. Comodo; scherzando

IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)

V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)

VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Conductor

BOSTON BOYCHOIR
JOHN OLIVER, Director

Contralto Solo: SHIRLEY VERRETT

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

17. FRI. + SAT. #4 OCT. 21 + 22

Fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 21, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor and Soloist

BACH ..... Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor
- I. Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Andante
- III. Allegro assai

HINDEMITH ..... Symphonia Serena
- Moderately fast
- Geschwindmarsch by Beethoven, Paraphrase
- Colloquy
  - Solo violins: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, ALFRED KRIPS
  - Solo violas: BURTON FINE, REUBEN GREEN
- Finale: gay

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47
- I. Moderato
- II. Allegretto
- III. Largo
- IV. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 26 1966

The Sound of Music

Richard Burgin Finds Old Musical Friends

By Peter Knapp

Richard Burgin last summer ended his long formal association with the Boston Symphony when he retired as associate conductor. But the orchestra always manages to keep up with its old friendships, and so Burgin has returned as guest conductor.

At last night's concert in Symphony Hall, he was among old musical friends in more than one way. Two of the works on his program were introduced to Bostonians by Burgin: Hindemith's Symphonia Serena in October, 1947, a short time after its premier, and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5 in January, 1939. This in itself is a measure of the position he holds in the city's musical history.

Besides these two works, Burgin also was the soloist in Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1 in a minor. So it was a full evening for him.

Back to Bach

Now in his 70s, the longtime former concertmaster of the Boston Symphony is past his best days as a violinist. The Bach concerto had spirit, but no real subtlety; Burgin's intonation, especially after the first movement, was erratic. He had trouble sustaining an even tone in the slow section. The bright accompaniment was ably managed by Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein from his center stage position.

The two symphonies, though, gave Burgin more satisfaction. The orchestra was in excellent form for both of these large-scale works, and Burgin guided his musicians astutely. He is neither a graceful nor a spectacularly exciting conductor, but he is an honest and a solid musician.

The Hindemith score rings with marvellous aural effects. There are the superb brass scoring, round and mellow, at which the composer was so skilled, scintillating writing for piccolo and flute, and the customary special string effects. The first movement is a fine example of Hindemith's capability of producing contrapuntal interest while maintaining clarity — there's a lot of motion, but nothing is cluttered.

Witty March

But the inner movements are the cream of the Symphonia Serena — the "paraphrase" of a brisk march tune by Beethoven that serves as the scherzo, for winds only, with brass sonority and racing woodwind figures that are lots of fun; and the "colloquy" for strings alone in the third movement, in which the solo violins and violas carry on a distant discourse. The soloists here were Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips, violinists, and Burton Fine and Reuben Green, violists.

The Shostakovitch symphony is an old favorite, spicy, clean, colorful. Here, it was the long, slow lines of the third movement, executed with considerable tension, that evoked the greatest effect.

For Burgin, it must have made the trip from Florida, where he is now professor of music at Florida State University, worthwhile.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
OCT 22 1966

DOUBLE GUEST

Burgin Leads BSO Concert

Paul Hindemith

By ROLFE BOSWELL

RICHARD BURGIN, formerly concertmaster and associate conductor, led his Boston Symphony Orchesrta colleagues yesterday afternoon as both soloist and guest on the podium. With an appropriately sized string ensemble, plus a hirsute harpsichordist, he led off with a dutiful, if not beautiful, relaxed and easy performance of a Bach violin concerto (S. 1041, in A minor).

hough Bach is stressed nowadays a composer of keyboard music-organ and clavier, often transcribed for the pianoforte—he was notably proficient also as a violinist and violist, as were so many of the great masters of music. He wrote perhaps a dozen violin concerti, though only four have survived the roaring centuries.

There were not written for virtuosi of the post-Paganini period, lie easily for the soprano of the stringed family, with its solo part woven in closely, obbligato-style, into the instrumental score. There is little opportunity for making musical poetry there though some violinists are wont to elicit more gracious delineaments in the lovely andante. While the soloist's technique was impeccable, a warmer tone would have been more appreciated.

In sum, one might apply Charles De Brosses' comments long ago on Francesco Veracini's playing—it was "accurate, noble, scholarly and precise, but somewhat lacking in spirit."

Tis was followed by the concert's stellar presentation, so far as this listener is concerned — the late, great Paul Hindemith's appropriately named Symphonia Serena, commissioned in 1946 by Antal Dorati, the Dallas Symphony's conductor. This symphony, the former Yale Prof. Hindemith's second numerically, is a broadly brushed pastoral landscape, but, unlike Beethoben's "Pastorale," dealing with a more contemporary scene than the Austrian countryside, with its rambunctious peasantry.

A serene symphony, it bulges with infectious ideas, dealt with creatively and sagaciously. Its moderately fast opening movement is filled with what Hindemith's Yale students called his "Motorik," textural and instrumental variants on the over-all propulsive format, both as modern as a 20th century symphony and as classical as a concerto grosso.

Its second segment, for wind instruments only, is based upon quick-step theme by Beethoven and is handled as livelily as Hindemith's celebrated "Kammermusik" for a woodwind quintet with the added impetuosity from the scored celesta and percussion battery.

A "Colloquy" for double string orchestra alone follows. There is a significant freshness as themes are stated separately, then combined, with further interpolations occurring as solo violin or viola (Hindemith, too, was a proficient violist) play on stage or offstage. The finale gay and fascinating, summarizes the whole as of its parts, adding a vivid page to the prepared obit of contemporary composers who claim that "The Symphony Is Dead."

After the interval came Dmitri hostakovich's well-touted and equally tawdry fifth symphony (Op. 47) which yesterday's guest conductor introduced here with the BSO on Jan. 20, 1939. Though it has been heard here and elsewhere many times since, it still has no more attractiveness than a cast-off Red Army greatcoat, retailored to Tchaikovsky, Stalin & Marx specifications for the retail trade.

Only recently Shostakovich's devious musical career was capped on his 60th birthday when he was honored as "A Hero of Socialist Labor," an award normally restricted to commisars of the Soviet Establishment. His fifth symphony embodied his first demarcation of the Communist party line and attained his forst breakthrough to world fame (in 1937). It had been composed soon after a Kremlin ukase turned him away forcibly from the so-called "formalistic" trend of his earlier works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
OCT 22 1966

Richard Burgin Deserved Applause of Audience

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

At the end of Richard Burgin's concert with the Boston Symphony on Friday afternoon there were bravos from the audience and warm applause and foot stamping from orchestra. Quite right, too, for the performance just finished of the Shostakovich Fifth Symphony had been in every way splendid.

The colors, which are interesting, especially in the passages deliberately bleak were realized accurately. The form was clear and the rhetoric just, rather than exaggerated. The vitality of the whole thing was electric, namely because the rhythm was always so good.

Burgin's interpertation makes the best possible case for a symphony that is generally overrated and which is also too easily dismissed as claptrap. True, lots of it is cheap, and there is much too much in praise of tractors and Moscow subway and muscle bound optimism about the stories of the new social system.

But along with the trashy noises from the newsreels, there is some fine lyric writing, especially in the first movement until that silly piano entrance, and again at the end of the movement. The largo is an impressive movement as well, and the tour de force of delivering great power without brass instruments comes off.

Because he is apt to become embroiled in ridiculous extra-musical issues and because he probably has no taste anyway, Shostakovich is always an uneven composer. Just the same, he is often fascinating and ingenious, and he is one of the few living composers to demand the breadth of a real symphony.

Might we not hear one of the other symphonies as a change?

The Fifth is over played. Since it was introduced here by Burgin, it has been in 11 out of 20 seasons, and surely that indicates a lack of proportion from Burgin and Koussevitsky who between them programmed it 11 out of the 13 times. Friday's program also included Hindmith's "Symphonya Serena" written in 1946 and introduced here by Burgin the following year.

It is, or rather it gets to be, a highly engaging piece. At first, though unfailing agreeable, it is a bit dry. But in the third movement, called Colloquy, Hindmith delightfully uses Sullivan's favorite choral device of presenting in succession quite disparate paces and then combining them. The sections are joined by dialogue in recitative, the solo vielin and later the solo viola, off stage in each instance.

It is an arresting stroke, though the effect is weakened because Hindmith could not quite find the right music for it. What comes out is a bit close to Grofe's "On The Trail."

Both in this third movement and the richly inventive finale, the sonority is especially attractive and shows an imagination Hindmith too often allowed to be buried under all that earnest note-pushing.

Here, too, Burgin's conducting was splendid, and the orchestra's response was to provide playing that was brilliant and delicately adjusted as well. Joseph Silverstein and Burton Fine played their violin and viola solos excellently, though one could wish them partners in Colloquy with more dependable intonation. Also, would the effect not be more telling if Burgin were to follow Hindmith's suggestion of putting the other two string soloists all the way off stage instead of just at the rear?

The program began with Bach's A Minor Violin Concerto in which Burgin himself was the soloist. It had appealing vitality in the first movement, although it was a little too slow in the last and in the undante seemed to lack a real rapport with the world of Baroque recitatife.

Burgin's playing was honest, free of tricks, with compact and clean tone, and a good bow arm many a flashier colleague could learn from. There was very good playing from the small group of supporting orchestra members, though on the basis of what I heard and failed to hear, I would say the Boston Symphony's search for someone really competent to play harpsichord must go on.

Richard Burgin joined the Boston Symphony as concert master in 1920, first conducted it in 1924, became assistant conductor in 1935, and associate conductor in 1943. He retired last Summer. Though this was his first appearance here as guest conductor, we hope this is but the first of many visits to the orchestra that was his home for so long and which he honored and bettered by his presence.

The ARTS

17. FRI. + SAT. #4 OCT. 21 + 22

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 21, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor and Soloist

BACH ..... Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor
- I. Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Andante
- III. Allegro assai

HINDEMITH ..... Symphonia Serena
- Moderately fast
- Geschwindmarsch by Beethoven, Paraphrase
- Colloquy
  - Solo violins: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, ALFRED KRIPS
  - Solo violas: BURTON FINE, REUBEN GREEN
- Finale: gay

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47
- I. Moderato
- II. Allegretto
- III. Largo
- IV. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[201]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 26 1966

The Sound of Music

Richard Burgin Finds Old Musical Friends

By Peter Knapp

Richard Burgin last summer ended his long formal association with the Boston Symphony when he retired as associate conductor. But the orchestra always manages to keep up with its old friendships, and so Burgin has returned as guest conductor.

At last night's concert in Symphony Hall, he was among old musical friends in more than one way. Two of the works on his program were introduced to Bostonians by Burgin: Hindemith's Symphonia Serena in October, 1947, a short time after its premier, and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5 in January, 1939. This in itself is a measure of the position he holds in the city's musical history.

Besides these two works, Burgin also was the soloist in Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1 in a minor. So it was a full evening for him.

Back to Bach

Now in his 70s, the longtime former concertmaster of the Boston Symphony is past his best days as a violinist. The Bach concerto had spirit, but no real subtlety; Burgin's intonation, especially after the first movement, was erratic. He had trouble sustaining an even tone in the slow section. The bright accompaniment was ably managed by Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein from his center stage position.

The two symphonies, though, gave Burgin more satisfaction. The orchestra was in excellent form for both of these large-scale works, and Burgin guided his musicians astutely. He is neither a graceful nor a spectacularly exciting conductor, but he is an honest and a solid musician.

The Hindemith score rings with marvellous aural effects. There are the superb brass scoring, round and mellow, at which the composer was so skilled, scintillating writing for piccolo and flute, and the customary special string effects. The first movement is a fine example of Hindemith's capability of producing contrapuntal interest while maintaining clarity — there's a lot of motion, but nothing is cluttered.

Witty March

But the inner movements are the cream of the Symphonia Serena — the "paraphrase" of a brisk march tune by Beethoven that serves as the scherzo, for winds only, with brass sonority and racing woodwind figures that are lots of fun; and the "colloquy" for strings alone in the third movement, in which the solo violins and violas carry on a distant discourse. The soloists here were Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips, violinists, and Burton Fine and Reuben Green, violists.

The Shostakovitch symphony is an old favorite, spicy, clean, colorful. Here, it was the long, slow lines of the third movement, executed with considerable tension, that evoked the greatest effect.

For Burgin, it must have made the trip from Florida, where he is now professor of music at Florida State University, worthwhile.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
OCT 22 1966

Paul Hindemith

DOUBLE GUEST

Burgin Leads BSO Concert

By ROLFE BOSWELL

RICHARD BURGIN, formerly concertmaster and associate conductor, led his Boston Symphony Orchesrta colleagues yesterday afternoon as both soloist and guest on the podium. With an appropriately sized string ensemble, plus a hirsute harpsichordist, he led off with a dutiful, if not beautiful, relaxed and easy performance of a Bach vioin concerto (S. 1041, in A minor).

hough Bach is stressed nowadays a composer of keyboard music-organ and clavier, often transcribed for the pianoforte—he was notably proficient also as a violinist and violist, as were so many of the great masters of music. He wrote perhaps a dozen violin concerti, though only four have survived the roaring centuries.

There were not written for virtuosi of the post-Paganini period, lie easily for the soprano of the stringed family, with its solo part woven in closely, obbligato-style, into the instrumental score. There is little opportunity for making musical poetry there though some violinists are wont to elicit more gracious delineaments in the lovely andante. While the soloist's technique was impeccable, a warmer tone would have been more appreciated.

In sum, one might apply Charles De Brosses' comments long ago on Francesco Veracini's playing—it was "accurate, noble, scholarly and precise, but somewhat lacking in spirit."

Tis was followed by the concert's stellar presentation, so far as this listener is concerned — the late, great Paul Hindemith's appropriately named Symphonia Serena, commissioned in 1946 by Antal Dorati, the Dallas Symphony's conductor. This symphony, the former Yale Prof. Hindemith's second numerically, is a broadly brushed pastoral landscape, but, unlike Beethoben's "Pastorale," dealing with a more contemporary scene than the Austrian countryside, with its rambunctious peasantry.

A serene symphony, it bulges with infectious ideas, dealt with creatively and sagaciously. Its moderately fast opening movement is filled with what Hindemith's Yale students called his "Motorik," textural and instrumental variants on the over-all propulsive format, both as modern as a 20th century symphony and as classical as a concerto grosso.

Its second segment, for wind instruments only, is based upon quick-step theme by Beethoven and is handled as livelily as Hindemith's celebrated "Kammermusik" for a woodwind quintet with the added impetuosity from the scored celesta and percussion battery.

A "Colloquy" for double string orchestra alone follows. There is a significant freshness as themes are stated separately, then combined, with further interpolations occurring as solo violin or viola (Hindemith, too, was a proficient violist) play on stage or offstage. The fnale gay and fascinating, summarizes the whole as of its parts, adding a vivid page to the prepared obit of contemporary composers who claim that "The Symphony Is Dead."

After the interval came Dmitri hostakovich's well-touted and equally tawdry fifth symphony (Op. 47) which yesterday's guest conductor introduced here with the BSO on Jan. 20, 1939. Though it has been heard here and elsewhere many times since, it still has no more attractiveness than a cast-off Red Army greatcoat, retailored to Tchaikovsky, Stalin & Marx specifications for the retail trade.

Only recently Shostakovich's devious musical career was capped on his 60th birthday when he was honored as "A Hero of Socialist Labor," an award normally restricted to commisars of the Soviet Establishment. His fifth symphony embodied his first demarcation of the Communist party line and attained his forst breakthrough to world fame (in 1937). It had been composed soon after a Kremlin ukase turned him away forcibly from the so-called "formalistic" trend of his earlier works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
OCT 22 1966

Richard Burgin Deserved Applause of Audience

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

At the end of Richard Burgin's concert with the Boston Symphony on Friday afternoon there were bravos from the audience and warm applause and foot stamping from orchestra. Quite right, too, for the performance just finished of the Shostakovich Fifth Symphony had been in every way splendid.

The colors, which are interesting, especially in the passages deliberately bleak, were realized accurately. The form was clear and the rhetoric just, rather than exaggerated. The vitality of the whole thing was electric, namely because the rhythm was always so good.

Burgin's interpertation makes the best possible case for a symphony that is generally overrated and which is also too easily dismissed as claptrap. True, lots of it is cheap, and there is much too much in praise of tractors and Moscow subway and muscle bound optimism about the stories of the new social system.

But along with the trashy noises from the newsreels, there is some fine lyric writing, especially in the first movement until that silly piano entrance, and again at the end of the movement. The largo is an impressive movement as well, and the tour de force of delivering great power without brass instruments comes off.

Because he is apt to become embroiled in ridiculous extra-musical issues and because he probably has no taste anyway, Shostakovich is always an uneven composer. Just the same, he is often fascinating and ingenious, and he is one of the few living composers to demand the breadth of a real symphony.

Might we not hear one of the other symphonies as a change?

The Fifth is over played. Since it was introduced here by Burgin, it has been in 11 out of 20 seasons, and surely that indicates a lack of proportion from Burgin and Koussevitsky who between them programmed it 11 out of the 13 times. Friday's program also included Hindmith's "Symphonya Serena" written in 1946 and introduced here by Burgin the following year.

It is, or rather it gets to be, a highly engaging piece. At first, though unfailing agreeable, it is a bit dry. But in the third movement, called Colloquy, Hindmith delightfully uses Sullivan's favorite choral device of presenting in succession quite disparate paces and then combining them. The sections are joined by dialogue in recitative, the solo violin and later the solo viola, off stage in each instance.

It is an arresting stroke, though the effect is weakened because Hindmith could not quite find the right music for it. What comes out is a bit close to Grofe's "On The Trail."

Both in this third movement and the richly inventive finale, the sonority is especially attractive and shows an imagination Hindmith too often allowed to be buried under all that earnest notepushing.

Here, too, Burgin's conducting was splendid, and the orchestra's response was to provide playing that was brilliant and delicately adjusted as well. Joseph Silverstein and Burton Fine played their violin and viola solos excellently, though one could wish them partners in Colloquy with more dependable intonation. Also, would the effect not be more telling if Burgin were to follow Hindmith's suggestion of putting the other two string soloists all the way off stage instead of just at the rear?

The program began with Bach's A Minor Violin Concerto in which Burgin himself was the soloist. It had appealing vitality in the first movement, although it was a little too slow in the last and in the undante seemed to lack a real rapport with the world of Baroque recitatife.

Burgin's playing was honest, free of tricks, with compact and clean tone, and a good bow arm many a flashier colleague could learn from. There was very good playing from the small group of supporting orchestra members, though on the basis of what I heard and failed to hear, I would say the Boston Symphony's search for someone really competent to play harpsichord must go on.

Richard Burgin joined the Boston Symphony as concert master in 1920, first conducted it in 1924, became assistant conductor in 1935, and associate conductor in 1943. He retired last Summer. Though this was his first appearance here as guest conductor, we hope this is but the first of many visits to the orchestra that was his home for so long and which he honored and bettered by his presence.

The ARTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 22 1966

SYMPHONY

Burgin Presents Sovereign Art

By McLAREN HARRIS

One needed only to be told the list of composers on Friday's Symphony program (Bach, Hindemith, Shostakovich) to realize that Richard Burgin was returning to the podium—for the first time as a guest conductor since his retirement as associate conductor in August.

We are inclined to connect certain composers with him—Mahler and Schoenberg included—not to imply that Mr. Burgin's tastes are knotted entirely to their particular styles, but because had he not chosen to conduct them periodically during his long tenure with the Symphony, they would probably have been heard very little or not at all.

Yet it is partly a matter of taste, too; in many ways Mr. Burgin is an absolutist who believes that music is a self-sufficient, sovereign art, who searches out elements which give a work its purely intrinsic beauties without extraneous pressures of program. Thus his choices have most often reflected melody, line, counterpoint, form and orchestration as exalting principles of composition.

As a conductor and as a violinist his technique exhibits scant mannerism. That is left to the requirements of the situation. For him tempo and meter serve definite functions, never subject to personal whim. They move, lead, direct and support, never sag or falter; Tthey provide a context for phrase and accent, for moments of action and resolution. Bach's Violin Concerto in A minor, in which Mr. Burgin served as soloist, was not a torch of excitement in flashing velocity or stinging contrasts, but cast its appeal through the natural expertise of Bach's lines. The rendition was fluent, informal and humanly sensitive, as Mr. Burgin turned his attention to his solo part, allowing the orchestra to progress on its own he had told us earlier that it would be a very casual affair).

The manner of his violin-playing was a welcome, familiar attribute: flawless intonation, the technique which sustains pure tone to the ends of the bow, where reverses of direction are felt only as slight marks of punctuation or not at all.

With Hindemith's Symphonia Serena the basis of compositional craft and linear orientation are the same, but Bach's artistic whole has no match here. Ingenuity of construction, both in formal outline and internal development are obvious throughout the four movements: the first a rather strict, yet in many ways gracefully thematic, sonata form;; the "Scherzo" a paraphrase of a Beethoven march with a scrappy, thrusting orchestration for winds alone; the third in sections for divided string groups, one playing a relaxed, tender theme and the other playing pizzicato, with recitatives for solo violins and violas in between; and the finale a complex, twisting and energetic conclusion.

Mr. Burgin concluded with the Shostakovich Symphony No. 5, still looked upon by many as the most valid, important symphonic statement out of the 13 Shostakovich wrote. It is a many-colored work, here gentle and lyric, there stern and threatening, over there artfully organized and elsewhere given to some buffoonery. It is also an easy prey to vulgarity if one chooses to abuse the heavy dynamics, fast tempos and salient orchestral effects.

But in Shostakovich as in all else, everything has a context with Richard Burgin, and he preserved it, keeping tempos at a reasonable steadiness, withholding needless encouragement at peaks of volume and stressing thematic continuity where such was to be found; Shifting meters avvoided jagged exposure. The orchestra, as it had all afternoon, performed securely and without strain.

Next week Erich Leinsdorf returns to conduct Mozart's G minor Symphony No. 41, K, 550;; the Suite from Berg's "Lulu," with Phyllis Bryn-Julson, soprano; ;and Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. in C major, with Claude Frank, soloist.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, presented the fourth program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall.

Violin Concerto No. 1 in A minor . . Bach
(Mr. Burgin, soloist)
Symphonia Serena . . . . . Hindemith
Symphony No. 5, Op. 47 . Shostakovich

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
OCT 22 1966

Guest at Symphony

Burgin's two roles

By Clifford Barnes

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Today it is a rare thing to find a conductor who also chooses to appear as soloist at the same concert. Put Richard Burgin, former concertmaster and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, in front of his fellow musicians, and the results were predictable for Friday afternoon's concert at Symphony Hall.

When Mr. Burgin was in his role as soloist, the rapport developed over many years with the orchestra left him free of conducting duties. He admitted at a press conference Thursday that he found appearing as conductor and soloist cumbersome and not conducive to best results.

Any actual conducting of Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1 in A minor was done by the present concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein. Sitting in the center of the orchestra, he conveyed the necessary signals through strong down-bows, nodding the head, and facial expression.

Colorless traversal

The Bach concerto is not by nature a virtuoso piece. If it was pale in Mr. Burgin's performance, he yet brought to it the good, solid playing of a man who devoted his career to music. The interpretation stayed in the middle ground, seeking neither profound expression nor sparkle.

As a conductor, Mr. Burgin chose works that call for more verve and energy. Though not the taskmaster that Mr. Leinsdorf can be, his more flowing style worked well with the Hindemith Symphonia Serena and the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony.

Both compositions received their first performance in Boston under Mr. Burgin's direction; he has revived them at subsequent concerts. Even so, he preferred to conduct them from a score. He believes it much safer than trying to do everything from memory.

Hindemith's symphony wears well over the years. Perhaps this is because it has not been performed nearly so often as the Shostakovitch. More than that, Hindemith can write rousing music without becoming commonplace.

Brilliant writing

The title Symphonia Serena is descriptive of the general mood of the piece. Even the finale, marked "Gay," is for the most part contemplative. The composer has filled the score with unusual orchestral effects.

The second movement, "Geschwindmarsch," paraphrased from Beethoven, is a brilliant piece of writing for wind and percussion instruments. The "Colloquy," which follows, is played by the strings only. Throughout this movement two solo violins and two solo violas engage in a discussion, seated at different parts of the orchestra.

There is nothing too subtle in the Shostakovitch Fifth. It is broadly drawn, and Mr. Burgin let marching and waltzing tunes have full sway. Only in the mournful soliloquy of the Largo were tensions increased.

This is the 13th time the work has been played at these concerts, and it has a long life ahead of it. Shostakovitch has written music that is immediately appealing and sure to please.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
OCT 25 1966

Burgin Returns As BSO Soloist

RICHARD BURGIN
. . . reminisces

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

Is conducting teachable? "Not really," said Richard Burgin, conductor and teacher. "You can exchange intelligent experiences. The student should already know what effect a conductor has on a player. The conductor is there to help. He should know the orchestra, he should himself be an orchestra player."

Burgin, 74, is back this week with his old orchestra. The Boston Symphony's former concertmaster is soloist tonight and Thursday in the Bach A minor. The orchestra's former associate conductor will also lead performances of Hindemith's Symphonia Serena and the Shostakovich Fifth Symphony.

Meeting the press last week at a box lunch picnic, Burgin was full of reminiscences, gentle judgments and music. He was pink-cheeked from the morning rehearsal but not as tan as one would expect from a resident of Tallahassee. Eminent professor of music now at Florida State, Burgin is also in charge of the university's annual conducting symposium. But the press lunch took him back through the years. As violinist but more often as concertmaster, he has worked under all the great names.

On composers as conductors: Richard Strauss was first rate. "He did Mozart and Wagner but mostly his own works. He loved to do 'Til Eulenspiegel' and parts of the 'Domestica' but otherwise he just beat time. Schoenberg was not helpful to the player, but he was very, very interesting. Prokofiev was good. Strevinsky was wonderful in rehearsal—in a concert anything could happen."

Burgin suggested that composers who do their own works can be objectivity itself at rehearsals. "In concert they are too personally involved." Burgin told of Debussy lingering over a passage in "A l'apres-midi d'un faun": "C'est si beau"—then the music went on. And, some composers, of course, have no conducting competence. "Ravel managed to do 'La Valse' in four," said Burgin trying out the mangled waltz accents.

Conducting without a score, which Burgin won't do, "puts to much concentration on memory." The only good argument for it, he says, laughing, is Markevitch's "I hate this turning of pages." But Burgin saluted exceptional memorizers in Leinsdorf, Cantelli and Markevitch. Memory is not reproduction, though. He once asked Marketvitch it he could write out exactly a page of a well-known score. The conductor thought he couldn't.

"In my early youth," said Burgin, "it was considered bad taste to perform from memory. (I think more new music would be played if soloists would use music.) Bad taste, especially in sonata programs. If the violinist played without music, and the pianist did, it implied the pianist didn't know his business. Ysaye and Pugno did the Franck Sonata; it was dedicated to Ysaye. Pugno once had a bad memory slip, so he always used music. But Ysaye, he used to stand far, far away from his stand and when he had to turn a page he would walk forward 20 feet!"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
OCT 27 1966

Conductor and Soloist

Richard Burgin With the BSO

By ALAN SLY

The Boston Symphony's fourth program turned out to be a retrospective occasion for Richard Burgin — Boston's own since 1920. He played the solo part of the Bach A-minor Violin Concerto warmly, impeccably, evocatively; and the elite of the BSO strings assisted. A very interesting observation from Parry was quoted in the program bulletin, in which the subjectivity of Bach's concertos was stressed, and this insight, coming from the 1890's, I found quite startling. It goes to show how persuasive Bach's utterances have been to listeners at all times. Mr. Burgin's own style also reaches back to Auer and even Joachim, so that for a delightful quarter of an hour we were living out of ourselves and were freed from today's intellectual clutter, sensing life steadily and whole, like Homer. It would have been so easy for the Bach to sound perfunctory, but it was nothing of the kind, thanks to Mr. Burgin and his associates' musical integrity.

Next followed Hindemith's Symphonia Serena and Shostakovitch's Fifth, from 1946 and 1937 respectively. Both works has been introduced here by Mr. Burgin and his great gifts as a performer were again in evidence. He displays Hindemith's Germanic logic and the Russian's lyricism, naivete, drama and pathos with equal clarity and aplomb. Watching him, one sees every detail flowing through him, as it were, anticipated, projected and confirmed. The orchestra glowed with response, so who could carp at a minor smudge here or there?

All the big Hindemith works are good to hear and must be fun to play. His ingenious musical resources seem inexhaustible and new sounds abound. Interesting deployment of personnel resources are also undertaken, as when solo violin and viola players respond from up- (or backstage), or when whole sections of the orchestra take turn and turn about. But these devices serve always a logical musical purpose and the discourse is easily related to music's central exchange or main vocabulary. One never has to doubt one's own ability to understand — Hindemith never tries to score "one up" on us. And as with Bach, there is an inner serenity, a sense of balance, a joyous affirmation of rightness, even when the thought passes into the shadows of regret or sorrow.

If this is the music of Apollo, then Shostakovitch's muse is Dionysian. The human condition is wracked with tumult and struggle, heroism that prevails over frustration but must suffer to live and endure to the end. The fifth symphony has strong formal lines and articulates a big orchestral apparatus with great skill. It claims the audience's attention and holds it enthralled. At the soft ending of the third movement one could sense the listeners' involvement. One had to hold one's breath. And at the end of the final movement, if Mr. Firth's tympani survived his onslaught then the floor beneath must still bear the marks. That is typical of the emotional stridency of this work, of its tremendous impact on a typical concert audience.

Naturally one recalled the great days of Koussevitzky and the Shostakovitch even seemed to be recording stages of the human drama that by now are well behind us. Even the Hindemith's tidy self-assurance seemed of only partial relevance to our present concerns. But for a vivid reliving of some very great former achievements, we are enormously in Mr. Burgin's debt. He always charts a good course for us and after a well-ordered cruise we land back in harbor all the better for the time spent in his company.

19. TUES. A #2 OCT. 25

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 25, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor and Soloist

BACH ..... Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor
- I. Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Andante
- III. Allegro assai

HINDEMITH ..... Symphonia Serena
- Moderately fast
- Geschwindmarsch by Beethoven, Paraphrase
- Colloquy
  - Solo violins: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, ALFRED KRIPS
  - Solo violas: BURTON FINE, REUBEN GREEN
- Finale: gay

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47
- I. Moderato
- II. Allegretto
- III. Largo
- IV. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

THURS. A #2 OCT. 27

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Second Program

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 27, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor and Soloist

BACH ..... Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor
- I. Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Andante
- III. Allegro assai

HINDEMITH ..... Symphonia Serena
- Moderately fast
- Geschwindmarsch by Beethoven, Paraphrase
- Colloquy
  - Solo violins: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, ALFRED KRIPS
  - Solo violas: BURTON FINE, REUBEN GREEN
- Finale: gay

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47
- I. Moderato
- II. Allegretto
- III. Largo
- IV. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
OCT 26 1966

Burgin Leads BSO Concert

Richard Burgin will conculde his present engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the second concert of the Thursday "A" series, Oct. 27, at 8:30 p. m. in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Burgin, who retired in 1962 after 42 years as concertmaster of the Orchestra and 21 years as associate conductor, will conduct the program. He will also be soloist in the opening work, Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor. This will be followed by Hindesmith's Symphonia Serena, in which Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Alfred Krips will be violin soloists and Burton Fine, principal viola, and Reuben Green will be viola soloists.

After an intermission Mr. Burgin will conclude his program with the Symphony No. 5 by Schosttakovitch.

41 RECORD AMER

TODAY AT 2:00 & 8:30 P.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 16 1966

Symphony This Week

Richard Burgin Guest Conductor

RICHARD BURGIN

Richard Burgin will return as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week, making his first concert appearance Friday afternoon. He will also conduct the open rehearsal this Thursday evening at 7:30 and the concerts of Saturday evening the second Tuesday "A" program on Oct. 25 and the second Thursday "A" concert on Oct. 27.

Mr. Burgin will also be soloist in the opening work of the program, the Bach Violin Concerto No. 1 in A minor. This will be followed by Hindemith's Symphonia Serena, in which Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Alfred Krips will be violin soloists and Burton Fine, principal viola, and Reuben Green will be viola soloists. Mr. Burgin will conclude with the Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch.

ERICH LEINSDORF will conduct the first "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall this Tuesday evening at 8:30. It will also be broadcast simultaneously as usual by WGBH-TV, Channel 2 and WGBH-FM. The program will consist of a complete performance of Mahler's Third Symphony. Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will be soloist, joined by the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boychoir. Subscribers to the series are reminded that the first movement of the Mahler is thirty minutes long, during which time no latecomers can be seated.

Richard Burgin retired in 1962 from the Boston Symphony Orchestra after 42 seasons as concertmaster and 21 seasons as associate conductor. He is now eminent professor of music at the Florida State University at Tallahassee. He teaches violin and is a member of the Florida State University String Quartet-in-residence, of which his wife Ruth Posselt is also a member.

19. TUES. A #2 OCT. 25

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 25, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor and Soloist

BACH ..... Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor
- I. Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Andante
- III. Allegro assai

HINDEMITH ..... Symphonia Serena
- Moderately fast
- Geschwindmarsch by Beethoven, Paraphrase
- Colloquy
  - Solo violins: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, ALFRED KRIPS
  - Solo violas: BURTON FINE, REUBEN GREEN
- Finale: gay

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47
- I. Moderato
- II. Allegretto
- III. Largo
- IV. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

THURS. A #2 OCT. 27

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Second Program

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 27, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor and Soloist

BACH ..... Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor
- I. Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Andante
- III. Allegro assai

HINDEMITH ..... Symphonia Serena
- Moderately fast
- Geschwindmarsch by Beethoven, Paraphrase
- Colloquy
  - Solo violins: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, ALFRED KRIPS
  - Solo violas: BURTON FINE, REUBEN GREEN
- Finale: gay

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47
- I. Moderato
- II. Allegretto
- III. Largo
- IV. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
OCT 26 1966

Burgin Leads BSO Concert

41 RECORD AMER

Richard Burgin will conclude his present engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the second concert of the Thursday "A" series, Oct. 27, at 8:30 p. m. in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Burgin, who retired in 1962 after 42 years as concertmaster of the Orchestra and 21 years as associate conductor, will conduct the program. He will also be soloist in the opening work, Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1, in A minor. This will be followed by Hindesmith's Symphonia Serena, in which Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Alfred Krips will be violin soloists and Burton Fine, principal viola, and Reuben Green will be viola soloists.

After an intermission Mr. Burgin will conclude his program with the Symphony No. 5 by Schosttakovitch.

TODAY AT 2:00 & 8:30 P.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 16 1966

Symphony This Week

Richard Burgin Guest Conductor

RICHARD BURGIN

Richard Burgin will return as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week, making his first concert appearance Friday afternoon. He will also conduct the open rehearsal this Thursday evening at 7:30 and the concerts of Saturday evening the second Tuesday "A" program on Oct. 25 and the second Thursday "A" concert on Oct. 27.

Mr. Burgin will also be soloist in the opening work of the program, the Bach Violin Concerto No. 1 in A minor. This will be followed by Hindemith's Symphonia Serena, in which Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Alfred Krips will be violin soloists and Burton Fine, principal viola, and Reuben Green will be viola soloists. Mr. Burgin will conclude with the Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch.

ERICH LEINSDORF will conduct the first "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall this Tuesday evening at 8:30. It will also be broadcast simultaneously as usual by WGBH-TV, Channel 2 and WGBH-FM. The program will consist of a complete performance of Mahler's Third Symphony. Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will be soloist, joined by the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boychoir. Subscribers to the series are reminded that the first movement of the Mahler is thirty minutes long, during which time no latecomers can be seated.

Richard Burgin retired in 1962 from the Boston Symphony Orchestra after 42 seasons as concertmaster and 21 seasons as associate conductor. He is now eminent professor of music at the Florida State University at Tallahassee. He teaches violin and is a member of the Florida State University String Quartet-in-residence, of which his wife Ruth Posselt is also a member.

FRI. + SAT. #5 OCT. 28 + 29

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
NOV 3 1966

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

LEINSDORF RETURNS TO BSO

Mr. Leinsdorf returned from a brief vacation with a felicitously rendered program which focused on Anton Berg's Suite from "Lulu" and Beethoven's First Piano Concerto in C major, with Claude Frank as the soloist. Preceding these offerings was Mozart's G minor symphony.

To drum up interest in his two operas, "Wozzeck" and "Lulu," Berg astutely took the precaution of composing orchestral Suites from their materials and publishing them even before the completion of the operas. (In the case of "Lulu" the Suite was the only portion of the opera that the composer ever heard, for he died of blood poisoning a few days after the Suite's first performance, leaving the orchestration of the operatic score uncompleted.)

The "Lulu" Suite consists of one song from the end of Act II and the orchestral interludes between the two scenes of Act III plus the closing scene. This music turns out to be surprisingly powerful and moving. I say "surprisingly," because the music of "Lulu" as projected in the opera's revival by the Boston Opera Company a few years back struck me at that time as relentlessly unpleasant — formless, monotonous and wholly lacking in that personal poignancy that runs through "Wozzeck" and the Violin Concerto. But the opera, as always, was performed without the third act, whence so much of the Suite derives, and it may be that the new materials are sufficient to account for the difference in my reaction. More likely, though, the difference can be attributed to performance: the reproduction of approximately correct sounds versus giving spirit and meaning to the score.

The soprano soloist, Phyllis Bryn-Julson, is a senior at Syracuse University. She possesses a large and lovely voice, perfect intonation and immense poise, which she combines with a rare capacity for integrating her role with the orchestra as though it were a part of the instrumental array. Here is an artist of the modern genre who appears destined to enjoy a long and distinguished career.

The appearance of Claude Frank is always a pleasing event. Mr. Frank has now become something in the nature of the Boston orchestra's anointed piano soloist, although for some reason he does not enjoy the same success-d'estime elsewhere that his prodigious talents would suggest. Beethoven's C Major Concerto is the quintessence of mellifluousness, sparkle and amiability. It abounds in such high points as the giant cadenza in the first movement—surely one of the great moments of its kind in the Concerto literature—the dialogue between the solo instrument and the clarinet in the slow movement, and the chamber-like interplay between soloist and orchestra in the rondo.

Mr. Frank, as expected, came through with a thoroughly musical and highly individualized performance. And what hands! At times his demonstration of how to do scales and arpeggios bordered on the awesome. The integration between soloist and orchestra, however, could have taken a cue from the performance of the Berg Suite. It is not that the collaboration lacked capability, it was only that it sounded as if it might have been a little unrehearsed. The resultant slight raggedness was, no doubt, eradicated in the subsequent performances.

Raggedness was not the order of the day with the G minor Symphony, for Mr. Leinsdorf's performance was as finely chiseled as music can be played. Just why he played it is another question, though. Some seasons back he had indicated that he would lay aside oft repeated masterpieces for a deserved rest, lest their magnificence be staled by repetition. If such be the policy, it is not being adhered to, as witness the reapparance of the Beethoven Seventh and the G minor already this season within three years of their last previous reading. What saves the situation is the obvious amount of care and commitment that appears to go into these revivals, making the masterpieces sound as though they are just that. In this instance the interpretation was leisurely and meditative yet thoroughly probing and full of tensile strength. As is the current fashion of modern conductors with Mozart every repeat was taken, but this did not leave the listener in a mood of supererogation — au contraire.

This week Mr. Leinsdorf's program features the first performance of Sydeman's "In Memoriam J. F. Kennedy" with E. G. Marshall, narrator. The concert opens with Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major and closes with Schumann's "Spring" Symphony, in B-flat major.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fifth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 28, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Symphony in G minor, K. 550

I. Molto allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Allegro assai

BERG ..... Suite from "Lulu," Opera in Three Acts (after FRANK WEDEKIND)

I. Ostinato
II. Lied der Lulu
III. Variationen
IV. Adagio

Soprano soloist: PHYLLIS BRYN-JULSON

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... Piano Concerto No. 1, in C major, Op. 15

I. Allegro con brio
II. Largo
III. Rondo: Allegro

SOLOIST
CLAUDE FRANK
Mr. FRANK plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[265]

THE POST-STANDARD
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 99,877 SUN. 246,935
OCT 19 1966

Boston Symphony Invites SU Senior for Appearances

Phyllis Bryn-Julson, a 21-year-old Syracuse University senior, will make five major soprano soloist appearances this fall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Her invitation to appear with the orchestra followed an audition before Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the orchestra, in the summer of 1964 in Tanglewood, Mass.

Leinsdorf, impressed with the quality of the young student's voice, persuaded her to transfer her music studies from her hometown in Minnesota nearer to the music centers of the East. She came to Syracuse where she is enrolled in the School of Music and is a pupil of Mrs. Helen Boatwright, widely known soprano.

Miss Bryn-Julson, who has a three-octave range voice and perfect pitch, will sing the "Lulu Suite" by Alban Berg with the Boston Symphony. She will appear Oct. 28 and 29 in Boston, Nov. 1 on WGBH-TV in Boston, Nov. 3 in Providence and Nov. 9.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
OCT 29 1966

Slow, Opaque Concert At Symphony Friday

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Friday's Boston Symphony Concert began with Mozart's symphony No. 40 in G. minor, interpreted by Erich Leinsdorf according to the currently fashionable approach wherein allegro means slow and allegro molto means very slow and sentimental. One also had the impression that the conductor was much too busy being serene to have anything left over for keeping the orchestra together.

Next came four sections from the symphonic suit from Alban Berg's opera "Lulu," not all of it quite convincing out cortex, some of it, like the Adagio, very beauitful. The performance was opaque. Phyllis Bryn-Julson, the soprano solist, has a pleasant if still immature voice, and she rings difficult music accurately, advantages offset by an yet rudimentary feeling for line and by too placid a temperament.

After the intermssion, Claude Frank was soloist in Beethoven's piano concerto No. 1 in C. His playing had its usual high intelligence and vitality. It seemed, though, that the performance had been reduced in scale since the extraordinary one he gave at Tanglewood in 1965, and that in the translation from boldness to delicacy it had lost some of its effectiveness.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
OCT 23 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SYRACUSE POST STANDARD
Wednesday, October 19, 1966

Boston Symphony Invites SU Senior for Appearances

Phyllis Bryn-Julson, a 21-year-old Syracuse University senior, will make five major soprano soloist appearances this fall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Her invitation to appear with the orchestra followed an audition before Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the orchestra, in the summer of 1964 in Tanglewood, Mass.

Leinsdorf, impressed with the quality of the young student's voice, persuaded her to transfer her music studies from her hometown in Minnesota nearer to the music centers of the East. She came to Syracuse where she is enrolled in the School of Music and is a pupil of Mrs. Helen Boatwright, widely known soprano.

Miss Bryn-Julson, who has a three-octave range voice and perfect pitch, will sing the "Lulu Suite" by Alban Berg with the Boston Symphony. She will appear Oct. 28 and 29 in Boston, Nov. 1 on WGBH-TV in Boston, Nov. 3 in Providence and Nov. 9.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 23 1966

Claude Frank In Weston Series

Claude Frank, pianist who will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at next weekend's concerts, will be heard in recital later this season in the Weston Country Evening Concert Series. Other artists scheduled for the Weston Series include Metropolitan Opera soprano Regine Crespin and the Beaux Arts Trio, a string ensemble whose concert will open the series on Jan. 27.

This Week at Symphony

The Boston Symphony will give four concerts this week. At the Friday-Saturday pair of concerts Claude Frank will be soloist in the Beethoven First Piano Concerto and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson will be heard in the Suite from Berg's "Lulu." The program, to be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will begin with Mozart's Symphony No. 40.

Miss Bryn-Julson, a senior at Syracuse University, will be making her first appearance with the orchestra. She is noted for her performance of contemporary music. A student the last three Summers at the Berkshire Music Center, she has received a Fromm Fellowship for contemporary performance, the Composition Performance Award and the High Fidelity Award. Frank, who is often guest pianist with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, will be making his eighth appearance with the orchestra.

The concerts Tuesday and Thursday evenings will be conducted by Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor emeritus of the orchestra. His program, a repeat of music he conducted last week, will open with the Bach A minor Violin Concerto, with Burgin as soloist. Hindemith's Symphonia Serena and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5 follow.

FRI. + SAT. #5 OCT. 28 + 29

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

NOV 3 1966

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BEELIN

LEINSDORF RETURNS TO BSO

Mr. Leinsdorf returned from a brief vacation with a felicitously rendered program which focused on Anton Berg's Suite from "Lulu" and Beethoven's First Piano Concerto in C major, with Claude Frank as the soloist. Preceding these offerings was Mozart's G minor symphony.

To drum up interest in his two operas, "Wozzeck" and "Lulu," Berg astutely took the precaution of composing orchestral Suites from their materials and publishing them even before the completion of the operas. (In the case of "Lulu" the Suite was the only portion of the opera that the composer ever heard, for he died of blood poisoning a few days after the Suite's first performance, leaving the orchestration of the operatic score uncompleted.)

The "Lulu" Suite consists of one song from the end of Act II and the orchestral interludes between the two scenes of Act III plus the closing scene. This music turns out to be surprisingly powerful and moving. I say "surprisingly," because the music of "Lulu" as projected in the opera's revival by the Boston Opera Company a few years back struck me at that time as relentlessly unpleasant — formless, monotonous and wholly lacking in that personal poignancy that runs through "Wozzeck" and the Violin Concerto. But the opera, as always, was performed without the third act, whence so much of the Suite derives, and it may be that the new materials are sufficient to account for the difference in my reaction. More likely, though, the difference can be attributed to performance: the reproduction of approximately correct sounds versus giving spirit and meaning to the score.

The soprano soloist, Phyllis Bryn-Julson, is a senior at Syracuse University. She possesses a large and lovely voice, perfect intonation and immense poise, which she combines with a rare capacity for integrating her role with the orchestra as though it were a part of the instrumental array. Here is an artist of the modern genre who appears destined to enjoy a long and distinguished career.

The appearance of Claude Frank is always a pleasing event. Mr. Frank has now become something in the nature of the Boston orchestra's anointed piano soloist, although for some reason he does not enjoy the same success-d'estime elsewhere that his prodigious talents would suggest. Beethoven's C Major Concerto is the quintessence of mellifluousness, sparkle and amiability. It abounds in such high points as the giant cadenza in the first movement—surely one of the great moments of its kind in the Concerto literature—the dialogue between the solo instrument and the clarinet in the slow movement, and the chamber-like interplay between soloist and orchestra in the rondo.

Mr. Frank, as expected, came through with a thoroughly musical and highly individualized performance. And what hands! At times his demonstration of how to do scales and arpeggios bordered on the awesome. The integration between soloist and orchestra, however, could have taken a cue from the performance of the Berg Suite. It is not that the collaboration lacked capability, it was only that it sounded as if it might have been a little unrehearsed. The resultant slight raggedness was, no doubt, eradicated in the subsequent performances.

Raggedness was not the order of the day with the G minor Symphony, for Mr. Leinsdorf's performance was as finely chiseled as music can be played. Just why he played it is another question, though. Some seasons back he had indicated that he would lay aside oft repeated masterpieces for a deserved rest, lest their magnificence be staled by repetition. If such be the policy, it is not being adhered to, as witness the reapparance of the Beethoven Seventh and the G minor already this season within three years of their last previous reading. What saves the situation is the obvious amount of care and commitment that appears to go into these revivals, making the masterpieces sound as though they are just that. In this instance the interpretation was leisurely and meditative yet thoroughly probing and full of tensile strength. As is the current fashion of modern conductors with Mozart every repeat was taken, but this did not leave the listener in a mood of supererogation — au contraire.

This week Mr. Leinsdorf's program features the first performance of Sydeman's "In Memoriam J. F. Kennedy" with E. G. Marshall, narrator. The concert opens with Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major and closes with Schumann's "Spring" Symphony, in B-flat major.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fifth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 28, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Symphony in G minor, K. 550
- I. Molto allegro
- II. Andante
- III. Menuetto: Allegretto
- IV. Allegro assai

BERG ..... Suite from "Lulu," Opera in Three Acts (after FRANK WEDEKIND)
- I. Ostinato
- II. Lied der Lulu
- III. Variationen
- IV. Adagio

Soprano soloist: PHYLLIS BRYN-JULSON

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... Piano Concerto No. 1, in C major, Op. 15
- I. Allegro con brio
- II. Largo
- III. Rondo: Allegro

SOLOIST
CLAUDE FRANK
Mr. FRANK plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[265]

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE POST STANDARD
Wednesday, October 19, 1966

Boston Symphony Invites SU Senior for Appearances

Phyllis Bryn-Julson, a 21-year-old Syracuse University senior, will make five major soprano soloist appearances this fall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Her invitation to appear with the orchestra followed an audition before Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the orchestra, in the summer of 1964 in Tanglewood, Mass.

Leinsdorf, impressed with the quality of the young student's voice. persuaded her to transfer her music studies from her hometown in Minnesota nearer to the music centers of the East. She came to Syracuse where she is enrolled in the School of Music and is a pupil of Mrs. Helen Boatwright, widely known soprano.

Miss Bryn-Julson, who has a three-octave range voice and perfect pitch, will sing the "Lulu Suite" by Alban Berg with the Boston Symphony. She will appear Oct. 28 and 29 in Boston, Nov. 1 on WGBH-TV in Boston, Nov. 3 in Providence and Nov. 9.

THE POST-STANDARD
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 99,877 SUN. 246,935

OCT 19 1966

Boston Symphony Invites SU Senior for Appearances

Phyllis Bryn-Julson, a 21-year-old Syracuse University senior, will make five major soprano soloist appearances this fall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Her invitation to appear with the orchestra followed an audition before Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the orchestra, in the summer of 1964 in Tanglewood, Mass.

Leinsdorf, impressed with the quality of the young student's voice. persuaded her to transfer her music studies from her hometown in Minnesota nearer to the music centers of the East. She came to Syracuse where she is enrolled in the School of Music and is a pupil of Mrs. Helen Boatwright, widely known soprano.

Miss Bryn-Julson, who has a three-octave range voice and perfect pitch, will sing the "Lulu Suite" by Alban Berg with the Boston Symphony. She will appear Oct. 28 and 29 in Boston, Nov. 1 on WGBH-TV in Boston, Nov. 3 in Providence and Nov. 9.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

OCT 29 1966

Slow, Opaque Concert At Symphony Friday

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Friday's Boston Symphony Concert began with Mozart's symphony No. 40 in G. minor, interpreted by Erich Leinsdorf according to the currently fashionable approach wherein allegro means slow and allegro molto means very slow and sentimental. One also had the impression that the conductor was much too busy being serene to have anything left over for keeping the orchestra together.

Next came four sections from the symphonic suit from Alban Berg's opera "Lulu," not all of it quite convincing out cortex, some of it, like the Adagio, very beauitful. The performance was opaque. Phyllis Bryn-Julson, the soprano solist, has a pleasant if still immature voice, and she rings difficult music accurately, advantages offset by an yet rudimentary feeling for line and by too placid a temperament.

After the intermssion, Claude Frank was soloist in Beethoven's piano concerto No. 1 in C. His playing had its usual high intelligence and vitality. It seemed, though, that the performance had been reduced in scale since the extraordinary one he gave at Tanglewood in 1965, and that in the translation from boldness to delicacy it had lost some of its effectiveness.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099

OCT 23 1966

Claude Frank In Weston Series

Claude Frank, pianist who will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at next weekend's concerts, will be heard in recital later this season in the Weston Country Evening Concert Series. Other artists scheduled for the Weston Series include Metropolitan Opera soprano Regine Crespin and the Beaux Arts Trio, a string ensemble whose concert will open the series on Jan. 27.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

OCT 23 1966

This Week at Symphony

The Boston Symphony will give four concerts this week. At the Friday-Saturday pair of concerts Claude Frank will be soloist in the Beethoven First Piano Concerto and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson will be heard in the Suite from Berg's "Lulu." The program, to be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will begin with Mozart's Symphony No. 40.

Miss Bryn-Julson, a senior at Syracuse University, will be making her first appearance with the orchestra. She is noted for her performance of contemporary music. A student the last three Summers at the Berkshire Music Center, she has received a Fromm Fellowship for contemporary performance, the Composition Performance Award and the High Fidelity Award. Frank, who is often guest pianist with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, will be making his eighth appearance with the orchestra.

The concerts Tuesday and Thursday evenings will be conducted by Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor emeritus of the orchestra. His program, a repeat of music he conducted last week, will open with the Bach A minor Violin Concerto, with Burgin as soloist. Hindemith's Symphonia Serena and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5 follow.

21.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
OCT 29 1966

Two soloists at Symphony

Berg and Beethoven

By Warren Storey Smith

Resuming the helm, briefly yielded to Richard Burgin, Erich Leinsdorf proffered at yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert a highly pleasurable and, in the main, untaxing program. This list, in some respects curiously composed, presented both engaging similarities and striking contrasts.

The similarities making the two extremes of the list were to be found in the late Mozart of the G minor Symphony and the early Beethoven of the First Piano Concerto, with Claude Frank as soloist. The contrast to these 18th-century items was offered by the central number, excerpts from Berg's opera "Lulu," in which some phrases for the heroine were sung by Phyllis Bryn-Julson — if sung is the proper word for the blend of song and speech cultivated both by Schoenberg and his pupil Berg, humorously characterized by Sibelius as Schoenberg's "greatest work."

Berg's two operas, "Wozzeck" and "Lulu," have had a curious fate in this city. "Lulu," in the form of what was described as a symphonic suite, made its way to the Symphony concerts in 1935 with Koussevitzky as conductor and Olga Averino as the singer.

Not for years did excerpts from "Wozzeck" reach Symphony Hall. In the case of "Lulu," the opera itself received a performance here two seasons ago at the hands of Sarah Caldwell's Opera Company of Boston.

In the matter of texts, Berg had a fondness for the unagreeable; but whereas "Wozzeck" has both picturesqueness and poignancy, the Strindberg play on which "Lulu" is based comes close to being just plain unpleasant.

The heroine's obsession, and the indirect cause of her tragic end, was a lust for living.

Berg's music undoubtedly loses in being removed from its proper surroundings, but it has drive and passion. Yesterday it was elegantly set forth. Mr. Leinsdorf has a penchant for concert performances of operatic excerpts.

Curiously enough, the C-major Concerto of Beethoven—actually not his first but his second essay in the form—is a comparative stranger to the Symphony concerts. It is easy to see why pianists display a preference for the Fourth and Fifth, with their respective poetry and power, and even the Third, a more substantial work, perhaps, than this No. 1.

But the latter has the typical appeal of early Beethoven, with its traces both of Mozart and Haydn, from which it was derived, and the late Beethoven which it here and there foreshadows.

Anyway, it was a joy to hear it yesterday, a joy enhanced by the wholly felicitous performance. Mr. Frank's task was not technically formidable, but he had a chance to display his digital powers in the lengthy cadenza to the first movement.

To return to the Mozart symphony, which Mr. Leinsdorf had not previously given us, it afforded him opportunity to display the taste and tact, the finement and restraint that characterize his performance of the classics. He lets the composer speak for himself, never imposing upon the music his own personality.

There have been those who did not resist the temptation to turn Mozart's Andante into an Adagio espressivo, but to do so would be to take it out of its proper frame. We should be thankful that we have in our midst a conductor who respects the composer's individuality.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
OCT 29 1966

BSO Performs All-Viennese Concert

By ROLFE BOSWELL

The soloists appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in yesterday afternoon's all-Viennese program, led by Vienna-born Erich Leisdorf. There was a Mozart symphony and Beethoven piano concerto, both classic in form with romantic undertones, and a 12-tone symphonic suite with vocalist 20th century music with neurotic overtones.

Mozart's 40th symphony (KV-550, in G minor) is filled with painful melancholy emotions, but this emotional world is so rich, the melodic lines of such surpassing beauty and the format of such perfection that it must be crowned as most wonderful of the final trilogy. There is a consistency of mood in all four movements seldom to be encountered even in Mozart.

A note of suffering, struck in the first bars, is sustained throughout. Dr. Leinsdorf carried through with tautness and tensile fixity, managing to be precise without sounding rigidly metronomic. He was meticulous in observance of every Mozartistic nicety in the score, with musicianly determination of pace and accent.

Thereafter was presented most of the symphonic suite Alban Berg excerpted from his unfinished three-act opera "Lulu," a lurid melodrama of sexual sludge based upon two playlets by Frank Wedekind. A few lines from the prologue serve to apostrophize the anti-heroine.

She was created to instigate harm,
To lure, to seduce, to poison;
To murder without anyone's noticing.

Thus Lulu is a latter-day reincarnation of the apocryphal Lilith, whose palindromic motto was "Lewd I did live & evil did I dwel." It will be noticed that the foregoing reads identically forwards or backwards. Berg's music, too, might well sound much the same, his inversions characterizing perversions, but hardly for concert-goers' diversion,

Phyllis Bryn-Julson gave an accomplish reading of the Lulu and Countess Geschwitz passages in a clear and sweet, though smallish, voice. Dr. Leinsdorf's sense of voice balance anr inner coloration was sensitive and clear.

After the interval, Claude Frank was piano soloist in Beethoven's so-called first concerto (Op. 15, in C), a charming and early work wherein influences of Mozart and Haydn still are strong. There was indubitable authority in the guest artist's musical approach and fastidious pianistic control with balanced orchestral background

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
NOV 2 1966

Boston Symphony Gives Widely Varied Program

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

For the second program of the Tuesday "B" series in Symphony Hall last night, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, performed three works. These were Mozart's "Symphony No. 40 in G Minor, K. 550," Alban Berg's orchestral suite based on excerpts from his opera, "Lulu," with Phyllis Bryn-Julson as soprano soloist, and Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 1," with Claude Frank at the keyboard.

The Mozart is a work that has evoked almost as many varied critical responses as "Hamlet." In Mozart's own time it was regarded as highly emotional and melancholy in color. Yet, although it does seem at times to be touched with an ineffable sadness, the symphony often displays a sprightly quality, notably in portions of the Andante and in the waywardness and whimsicality of certain measures of the Finale. In any event, the work has variety, a commendably clear form, workmanship of unusual finesse, and admirable moments of grace, delicacy, and melody.

Mr. Leinsdorf chose to perform the work at a less rapid tempo than is usually customary in the concert hall, but this approach is defensible inasmuch as it emphasizes the inherent tenderness and nostalgia of the music.

As for Berg, this prize pupil of Schoenbergz, like his master, experimented with the 12-tone scale and with unusual harmonic combinations. The title heroine of his opera, "Lulu," is not exactly the kind of girl one takes home to introduce to mother, inasmuch as Lulu goes from amateur promiscuity to professional prostitution and is killed, appropriately enough at the end of the opera, by no less a person than Jack the Ripper.

The suite from "Lulu," is difficult to play, and its vocal portions are equally difficult to sing. Soprano Bryn-Julson did remarkably well in the Berg vocal idiom, which varies between straight speaking and a wide musical range that makes considerable demand on the singer's pitch and vocal prowess. Miss Bryn-Julson proved to have a well-controlled voice, not powerful but well-placed, and the orchestral accompaniment was of virtuoso quality.

Unquestionably, the highlight of the program, however, was Mr. Frank's performance of the Beethoven concerto. This "Piano Concerto No. 1" is heard less frequently than the Third or the Fifth, but it has its own special pleasures. First of all, in its style it is close to Mozart and Haydn—a fact that makes it requisite for the pianist to play with lucid and fluent articulation.

These qualities Mr. Frank has in abundance; his opening allegro was briskly performed and crisply phrased, his largo was sensitive and lovely, his closing rondo-allegro, with its rapid passage work and cadenzas, was accomplished with digital skill and with enough passion to make it memorable.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra were also in excellent form in the Beethoven, making this Frank-Boston Symphony combination a joy to hear.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 29 1966

SYMPHONY

An Afternoon for the Classics: Mozart, Berg and Beethoven

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

Friday at Symphony was an afternoon for the classics — Mozart's celebrated G minor Symphony; Berg's Suite from the opera, "Lulu," which had its American premiere almost 30 years ago under Serge Koussevitsky; and Beethoven's surprisingly seldom-heard Piano Concerto No. 1, with Calude Frank as soloist.

Referring to Alban Berg as a classic composer stretches the term, I suppose, perhaps not so much because of his differing tonal concepts, but because he drew upon the resources of the romantic era at least as much as the classic. Though the tone row is the essential basis of the suite's movements (the Symphony played only four, omitting the beginning Rondo), they are organized in formal structure as well: the Ostinato (a baroque device), constructed in two sections, the second a reverse of the first (a crab, another baroque device); an aria, the Song of Lulu, for soprano solo; a variation movement, based on a street ballad; and the finale in three parts, progressively slower.

Yet in these pieces the formal appeal is not what strikes the listener but the thematic flow, the orchestral color, the emotional bearing of a sort of romantic tragedy. Though "Lulu" forsakes conventional tonality, it has harmonic awareness, as if its key centers existed but were too elusive to identify conclusively; pointillism is absent and harsh dissonances are often placed for effect, such as at Lulu's death in the fading finale.

True, there is little excitement in the Ostinato, which is placed as the opera's keystone, accompanying a film sequence in Act II, but the Song of Lulu is an eloquent character-piece for the title role with a dramatic sweep in its occasionally angular, florid, yet strangely lyric vocal line.

The Beethoven First Piano Concerto is an infrequent visitor on local programs, and not understandably so. Actually the second in order of composition, the C major Concerto is a model of classic form and melody, with all the proprieties of solo and tutti; it is almost a Mozartian creation, though the pianism tends to more flamboyance.

Mr. Leinsdorf's intentions seemed good for Mozart's Symphony No. 40, which opened the program, but the orchestra appeared to approach it with an almost uncaring casualness. The string responses were often mushy, woodwind phrases rather flat, and the horns off guard. I hope the prevailing attitude is not to treat familiar works like this as easy marks, for it will show up every time in performance, as it did Friday, as a general decline in precision and half-wrought contrasts.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's Suite No. 3 for orchestra, the world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," and Schumann's Symphony No. 1.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the fifth program of the 86th Season Friday at Symphony Hall. Phyllis Bryn-Julson was soprano soloist in the Berg work, and Claude Frank was soloist in the Beethoven.

Symphony in G minor, K. 550 . . . Mozart
Suite from the opera, "Lulu" . . . Berg
Piano Concerto No. 1 in C major, Op. 15 . . . . . Beethoven

21.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
OCT 29 1966

Two soloists at Symphony

Berg and Beethoven

By Warren Storey Smith

Resuming the helm, briefly yielded to Richard Burgin, Erich Leinsdorf proffered at yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert a highly pleasurable and, in the main, untaxing program. This list, in some respects curiously composed, presented both engaging similarities and striking contrasts.

The similarities making the two extremes of the list were to be found in the late Mozart of the G minor Symphony and the early Beethoven of the First Piano Concerto, with Claude Frank as soloist. The contrast to these 18th-century items was offered by the central number, excerpts from Berg's opera "Lulu," in which some phrases for the heroine were sung by Phyllis Bryn-Julson — if sung is the proper word for the blend of song and speech cultivated both by Schoenberg and his pupil Berg, humorously characterized by Sibelius as Schoenberg's "greatest work."

Berg's two operas, "Wozzeck" and "Lulu," have had a curious fate in this city. "Lulu," in the form of what was described as a symphonic suite, made its way to the Symphony concerts in 1935 with Koussevitzky as conductor and Olga Averino as the singer.

Not for years did excerpts from "Wozzeck" reach Symphony Hall. In the case of "Lulu," the opera itself received a performance here two seasons ago at the hands of Sarah Caldwell's Opera Company of Boston.

In the matter of texts, Berg had a fondness for the unagreeable; but whereas "Wozzeck" has both picturesqueness and poignancy, the Strindberg play on which "Lulu" is based comes close to being just plain unpleasant.

The heroine's obsession, and the indirect cause of her tragic end, was a lust for living.

Berg's music undoubtedly loses in being removed from its proper surroundings, but it has drive and passion. Yesterday it was elegantly set forth. Mr. Leinsdorf has a penchant for concert performances of operatic excerpts.

Curiously enough, the C-major Concerto of Beethoven—actually not his first but his second essay in the form—is a comparative stranger to the Symphony concerts. It is easy to see why pianists display a preference for the Fourth and Fifth, with their respective poetry and power, and even the Third, a more substantial work, perhaps, than this No. 1.

But the latter has the typical appeal of early Beethoven, with its traces both of Mozart and Haydn, from which it was derived, and the late Beethoven which it here and there foreshadows.

Anyway, it was a joy to hear it yesterday, a joy enhanced by the wholly felicitous performance. Mr. Frank's task was not technically formidable, but he had a chance to display his digital powers in the lengthy cadenza to the first movement.

To return to the Mozart symphony, which Mr. Leinsdorf had not previously given us, it afforded him opportunity to display the taste and tact, the finement and restraint that characterize his performance of the classics. He lets the composer speak for himself, never imposing upon the music his own personality.

There have been those who did not resist the temptation to turn Mozart's Andante into an Adagio espressivo, but to do so would be to take it out of its proper frame. We should be thankful that we have in our midst a conductor who respects the composer's individuality.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
OCT 29 1966

BSO Performs All-Viennese Concert

By ROLFE BOSWELL

The soloists appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in yesterday afternoon's all-Viennese program, led by Vienna-born Erich Leisdorf. There was a Mozart symphony and Beethoven piano concerto, both classic in form with romantic undertones, and a 12-tone symphonic suite with vocalist 20th century music with neurotic overtones.

Mozart's 40th symphony (KV-550, in G minor) is filled with painful melancholy emotions, but this emotional world is so rich, the melodic lines of such surpassing beauty and the format of such perfection that it must be crowned as most wonderful of the final trilogy. There is a consistency of mood in all four movements seldom to be encountered even in Mozart.

A note of suffering, struck in the first bars, is sustained throughout. Dr. Leinsdorf carried through with tautness and tensile fixity, managing to be precise without sounding rigidly metronomic. He was meticulous in observance of every Mozartistic nicety in the score, with musicianly determination of pace and accent.

Thereafter was presented most of the symphonic suite Alban Berg excerpted from his unfinished three-act opera "Lulu," a lurid melodrama of sexual sludge based upon two playlets by Frank Wedekind. A few lines from the prologue serve to apostrophize the anti-heroine.

She was created to instigate harm,
To lure, to seduce, to poison;
To murder without anyone's noticing.

Thus Lulu is a latter-day reincarnation of the apocryphal Lilith, whose palindromic motto was "Lewd I did live & evil did I dwel." It will be noticed that the foregoing reads identically forwards or backwards. Berg's music, too, might well sound much the same, his inversions characterizing perversions, but hardly for concert-goers' diversion.

Phyllis Bryn-Julson gave an accomplish reading of the Lulu and Countess Geschwitz passages in a clear and sweet, though smallish, voice. Dr. Leinsdorf's sense of voice balance anr inner coloration was sensitive and clear.

After the interval, Claude Frank was piano soloist in Beethoven's so-called first concerto (Op. 15, in C), a charming and early work wherein influences of Mozart and Haydn still are strong. There was indubitable authority in the guest artist's musical approach and fastidious pianistic control with baalnced orchestral background

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
NOV 2 1966

Boston Symphony Gives Widely Varied Program

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

For the second program of the Tuesday "B" series in Symphony Hall last night, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, performed three works. These were Mozart's "Symphony No. 40 in G Minor, K. 550," Alban Berg's orchestral suite based on excerpts from his opera, "Lulu," with Phyllis Bryn-Julson as soprano soloist, and Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 1," with Claude Frank at the keyboard.

The Mozart is a work that has evoked almost as many varied critical responses as "Hamlet." In Mozart's own time it was regarded as highly emotional and melancholy in color. Yet, although it does seem at times to be touched with an ineffable sadness, the symphony often displays a sprightly quality, notably in portions of the Andante and in the waywardness and whimsicality of certain measures of the Finale. In any event, the work has variety, a commendably clear form, workmanship of unusual finesse, and admirable moments of grace, delicacy, and melody.

Mr. Leinsdorf chose to perform the work at a less rapid tempo than is usually customary in the concert hall, but this approach is defensible inasmuch as it emphasizes the inherent tenderness and nostalgia of the music.

As for Berg, this prize pupil of Schoenbergz, like his master, experimented with the 12-tone scale and with unusual harmonic combinations. The title heroine of his opera, "Lulu," is not exactly the kind of girl one takes home to introduce to mother, inasmuch as Lulu goes from amateur promiscuity to professional prostitution and is killed, appropriately enough at the end of the opera, by no less a person than Jack the Ripper.

The suite from "Lulu," is difficult to play, and its vocal portions are equally difficult to sing. Soprano Bryn-Julson did remarkably well in the Berg vocal idiom, which varies between straight speaking and a wide musical range that makes considerable demand on the singer's pitch and vocal prowess. Miss Bryn-Julson proved to have a well-controlled voice, not powerful but well-placed, and the orchestral accompaniment was of virtuoso quality.

Unquestionably, the highlight of the program, however, was Mr. Frank's performance of the Beethoven concerto. This "Piano Concerto No. 1" is heard less frequently than the Third or the Fifth, but it has its own special pleasures. First of all, in its style it is close to Mozart and Haydn—a fact that makes it requisite for the pianist to play with lucid and fluent articulation.

These qualities Mr. Frank has in abundance; his opening allegro was briskly performed and crisply phrased, his largo was sensitive and lovely, his closing rondo-allegro, with its rapid passage work and cadenzas, was accomplished with digital skill and with enough passion to make it memorable.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra were also in excellent form in the Beethoven, making this Frank-Boston Symphony combination a joy to hear.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 29 1966

SYMPHONY

An Afternoon for the Classics: Mozart, Berg and Beethoven

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

Friday at Symphony was an afternoon for the classics — Mozart's celebrated G minor Symphony; Berg's Suite from the opera, "Lulu," which had its American premiere almost 30 years ago under Serge Koussevitsky; and Beethoven's surprisingly seldom-heard Piano Concerto No. 1, with Calude Frank as soloist.

Referring to Alban Berg as a classic composer stretches the term, I suppose, perhaps not so much because of his differing tonal concepts, but because he drew upon the resources of the romantic era at least as much as the classic. Though the tone row is the essential basis of the suite's movements (the Symphony played only four, omitting the beginning Rondo), they are organized in formal structure as well: the Ostinato (a baroque device), constructed in two sections, the second a reverse of the first (a crab, another baroque device); an aria, the Song of Lulu, for soprano solo; a variation movement, based on a street ballad; and the finale in three parts, progressively slower.

Yet in these pieces the formal appeal is not what strikes the listener but the thematic flow, the orchestral color, the emotional bearing of a sort of romantic tragedy. Though "Lulu" forsakes conventional tonality, it has harmonic awareness, as if its key centers existed but were too elusive to identify conclusively; pointillism is absent and harsh dissonances are often placed for effect, such as at Lulu's death in the fading finale.

True, there is little excitement in the Ostinato, which is placed as the opera's keystone, accompanying a film sequence in Act II, but the Song of Lulu is an eloquent character-piece for the title role with a dramatic sweep in its occasionally angular, florid, yet strangely lyric vocal line.

The Beethoven First Piano Concerto is an infrequent visitor on local programs, and not understandably so. Actually the second in order of composition, the C major Concerto is a model of classic form and melody, with all the proprieties of solo and tutti; it is almost a Mozartian creation, though the pianism tends to more flamboyance.

Mr. Leinsdorf's intentions seemed good for Mozart's Symphony No. 40, which opened the program, but the orchestra appeared to approach it with an almost uncaring casualness. The string responses were often mushy, woodwind phrases rather flat, and the horns off guard. I hope the prevailing attitude is not to treat familiar works like this as easy marks, for it will show up every time in performance, as it did Friday, as a general decline in precision and half-wrought contrasts.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Bach's Suite No. 3 for orchestra, the world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," and Schumann's Symphony No. 1.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the fifth program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Phyllis Bryn-Julson was soprano soloist in the Berg work, and Claude Frank was soloist in the Beethoven.

Symphony in G minor, K. 550 . . Mozart
Suite from the opera, "Lulu" . . Berg
Piano Concerto No. 1 in C major, Op. 15 . . . . . Beethoven

TUES. B #2 NOV. 1

22

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 1, at 7:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Symphony in G minor, K. 550

I. Molto allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Allegro assai

BERG ..... Suite from "Lulu," Opera in Three Acts (after FRANK WEDEKIND)

I. Ostinato
II. Lied der Lulu
III. Variationen
IV. Adagio

Soprano soloist: PHYLLIS BRYN-JULSON

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... Piano Concerto No. 1, in C major, Op. 15

I. Allegro con brio
II. Largo
III. Rondo: Allegro

SOLOIST
CLAUDE FRANK
Mr. FRANK plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

23

FRI. + SAT. #6 NOV. 4 + 5

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,258
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,836
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Circ. 32,048
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 14,186
NOV 5 1966

'In Memoriam JFK' Has World Premiere

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with actor E. G. Marshall, played the world premiere of William Sydeman's elegy "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" Friday.

McLaren Harris, music critic of the Boston Herald, called it a "fragmentary, elusive-expressioned and unexciting work in which the music takes second place to the phrases it encloses."

Rolff Boswell in the Record American said the elegy "is a lean, angular and pungently gripping score."

Michael Steinberg, Boston Globe, commented, "It was not a moving occasion, but something more like a ceremony attended with attention and respect for its honesty, but lacking that which would command heartfelt involvement."

Harris said composer Sydeman's purpose in writing the elegy was to express the sudden void created by the assassination.

The work is in two sections. The first section, with slow music, contains spoken passages from Alan Nevin's introduction to Volume 2 of Kennedy's speeches, from the Book of Ecclesiastes, from the Kennedy portraits by Arthur Schlesinger and Theodore Sorensen, and the Stephen Spencer poem, "I think continually on those who are great."

The second section has a theme and variations in quicker tempo with excerpts from Kennedy's famous speeches.

Harris commented that "speeches are not written for musical setting; thus, they usually lack a poetic flow of sound, imagery and balance of phase . . .

"The music was also up against the voice of E. G. Marshall, whose excellent speaking commanded our attention all the more. Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra played the unfamiliar score creditably."

In a left-hand aisle seat a dozen rows from the stage, Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, mother of the late President, heard the concert alone.

She said, "My family will hear it in Washington and in New York on the symphony tour this month."

Mrs. Kennedy later went backstage to tell composer Sydeman and conductor Leinsdorf that the tribute to her son was "truly inspired."

Performances are scheduled for Constitution Hall in Washington Nov. 15 and Philharmonic Hall in New York Nov. 16 and 18.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, November 4, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, November 5, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH . . . . . Suite No. 3 in D major, for Orchestra

I. Overture
II. Air
III. Gavottes 1 and 2
IV. Bourrée
V. Gigue

SYDEMAN . . . . . In Memoriam John F. Kennedy†

I. Adagio lamentoso
II. Allegro; Theme and variations

E. G. MARSHALL, Narrator

(First performance)

INTERMISSION

SCHUMANN . . . . . Symphony No. 1, in B-flat major, Op. 38

I. Andante un poco maestoso; Allegro molto vivace
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace; Trio: Molto più vivace; Trio II
IV. Allegro animato e grazioso

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

† The text of the narration will be found on page 348.

[329]

ELMSFORD, N. Y.
GREENBURGH INDEPENDENT
W. 500
NOV 3 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,785
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Circ. 12,963
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,619
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,183
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-Americ (e)
BOSTON,
Circ. 41
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-420
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN
Me.
Circ. 13,792
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,202
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
NOV 5 1966

BMI
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 16,000
JAN 1967

CONCERT MUSIC continued

PREPARE JFK MEMORIAM—Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, right, of Boston Symphony Orchestra, discusses score of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" with narrator E. G. Marshall, and composer Willliam Sydeman, left, during rehearsal at Boston Symphony Hall. The composition premieres today at Symphony Hall.
AP Wirephoto

News of the Muses

"In Memoriam - John F. Kennedy", a work for narrator and orchestra by William Sydeman of Hastings-on-Hudson, a member of the composition faculty of The Mannes College of Music, is scheduled for its world premiere on Nov. 4 in Symphony Hall, Boston. The work will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its Music Director, Erich Leinsdorf, with E.G. Marshall as narrator. It will be repeated in Washington, D.C. on Nov. 15, at Philharmonic Hall in New York on Nov. 16 and 18, and again in Boston at a special memorial concert on Nov. 22, the anniversary of the assassination.

The work was commissioned by Mrs. Ruth Kaufman of New York City, and the commission was awarded to William Sydeman by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The text for the work is drawn largely from President Kennedy's speeches. Additional sources of text are the books about President Kennedy by Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. and Theodore Sorensen, an introduction to the second volume of Kennedy speeches by Allan Nevins, and a poem by Stephen Spender.

Mr. Sydeman has recently returned from a cultural exchange tour of Eastern Europe, where his "Study No. II" for orchestra was performed at the Prague Spring Festival. He is a recipient of the National Institute of Arts and Letters Award, the Boston Symphony Merit Award, and, most recently, a grant from the Koussevitzky Foundation in recognition of his "contribution to the music literature of our time".

If you are lucky enough to have seats at Symphony Hall this afternoon you will hear the well-known "Emmy" winner, E. G. Marshall of TV, screen and stage, in the world premiere of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," as composed and written by William Sydeman. This collection of Kennedy memorabilia will be narrated by Marshall, who has been called "the actors' actor."

Marshall is also one of the two principal actors in the star-studded film "The Poppy Is Also a Flower," which deals with UNICEF's activities to trace and prevent the flow of heroin and opium throughout the world. The picture is showing at the Paramount Theater.

So important a picture did many stars, visiting in Europe, believe "Poppy" to be that most of them worked at minimum salary. They were persuaded by director Terence Young to play even the smallest roles and their names were listed alphabetically instead of according to box-office appeal as is customary.

Although the actor is Michigan-born he can lay claim to being one of the most popular men in Stratton, Vt. He not only built a house there, but he also built a road. And then he turned it over to the Ethan Allen Camp of Boy Scouts in Rutland, Vt., to use for vacations and overnight shelter. It is situated close to Mt. Stratton, a favorite place for mountain climbing among the scouts.

New England names are much admired by the actor who is also a Bible scholar. His 2-month-old son has been named Jedediah. "The original Jedediah was the second son of David and Bathsheba; the name means Beloved of the Lord," said E. G.

One of Marshall's daughters is Mrs. Ralph Pred of Nahant, which indicates he has still another strong New England tie.

Marshall's presentation with the Boston Symphony is to be repeated in Washington, D.C., and New York. He will return to Boston on Nov. 22 to do the narration when the composition is recorded on Educational TV.

23

FRI. + SAT. #6 NOV. 4 + 5

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,258
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,836
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Circ. 32,048
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 14,186
NOV 5 1966

'In Memoriam JFK' Has World Premiere

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with actor E. G. Marshall, played the world premiere of William Sydeman's elegy "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" Friday.

McLaren Harris, music critic of the Boston Herald, called it a "fragmentary, elusive-expressioned and unexciting work in which the music takes second place to the phrases it encloses."

Rolff Boswell in the Record American said the elegy "is a lean, angular and pungently gripping score."

Michael Steinberg, Boston Globe, commented, "It was not a moving occasion, but something more like a ceremony attended with attention and respect for its honesty, but lacking that which would command heartfelt involvement."

Harris said composer Sydeman's purpose in writing the elegy was to express the sudden void created by the assassination.

The work is in two sections. The first section, with slow music, contains spoken passages from Alan Nevin's introduction to Volume 2 of Kennedy's speeches, from the Book of Ecclesiastes, from the Kennedy portraits by Arthur Schlesinger and Theodore Sorensen, and the Stephen Spencer poem, "I think continually on those who are great."

The second section has a theme and variations in quicker tempo with excerpts from Kennedy's famous speeches.

Harris commented that "speeches are not written for musical setting; thus, they usually lack a poetic flow of sound, imagery and balance of phase . . .

"The music was also up against the voice of E. G. Marshall, whose excellent speaking commanded our attention all the more. Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra played the unfamiliar score creditably."

In a left-hand aisle seat a dozen rows from the stage, Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, mother of the late President, heard the concert alone.

She said, "My family will hear it in Washington and in New York on the symphony tour this month."

Mrs. Kennedy later went backstage to tell composer Sydeman and conductor Leinsdorf that the tribute to her son was "truly inspired."

Performances are scheduled for Constitution Hall in Washington Nov. 15 and Philharmonic Hall in New York Nov. 16 and 18.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 4, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 5, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Suite No. 3 in D major, for Orchestra

I. Overture
II. Air
III. Gavottes 1 and 2
IV. Bourrée
V. Gigue

SYDEMAN ..... In Memoriam John F. Kennedy†

I. Adagio lamentoso
II. Allegro; Theme and variations

E. G. MARSHALL, Narrator

(First performance)

INTERMISSION

SCHUMANN ..... Symphony No. 1, in B-flat major, Op. 38

I. Andante un poco maestoso; Allegro molto vivace
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace; Trio: Molto più vivace; Trio II
IV. Allegro animato e grazioso

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

† The text of the narration will be found on page 348.

[329]

ELMSFORD, N. Y.
GREENBURGH INDEPENDENT
W. 500
NOV 3 1966

News of the Muses

"In Memoriam - John F. Kennedy", a work for narrator and orchestra by William Sydeman of Hastings-on-Hudson, a member of the composition faculty of The Mannes College of Music, is scheduled for its world premiere on Nov. 4 in Symphony Hall, Boston. The work will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its Music Director, Erich Leinsdorf, with E.G. Marshall as narrator. It will be repeated in Washington, D.C. on Nov. 15, at Philharmonic Hall in New York on Nov. 16 and 18, and again in Boston at a special memorial concert on Nov. 22, the anniversary of the assassination.

The work was commissioned by Mrs. Ruth Kaufman of New York City, and the commission was awarded to William Sydeman by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The text for the work is drawn largely from President Kennedy's speeches. Additional sources of text are the books about President Kennedy by Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. and Theodore Sorensen, an introduction to the second volume of Kennedy speeches by Allan Nevins, and a poem by Stephen Spender.

Mr. Sydeman has recently returned from a cultural exchange tour of Eastern Europe, where his "Study No. II" for orchestra was performed at the Prague Spring Festival. He is a recipient of the National Institute of Arts and Letters Award, the Boston Symphony Merit Award, and, most recently, a grant from the Koussevitzky Foundation in recognition of his "contribution to the music literature of our time".

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,785
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Circ. 12,963
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-42
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,619
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,183
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-Americ n) (e)
BOSTON,
Circ. 411
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-420
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN
Me.
Circ. 13,792
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,202
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
NOV 5 1966

BMI
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 16,000
JAN 1967

CONCERT MUSIC continued

PREPARE JFK MEMORIAM—Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, right, of Boston Symphony Orchestra, discusses score of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" with narrator E. G. Marshall, and composer Willliam Sydeman, left, during rehearsal at Boston Symphony Hall. The composition premieres today at Symphony Hall.
AP Wirephoto

If you are lucky enough to have seats at Symphony Hall this afternoon you will hear the well-known "Emmy" winner, E. G. Marshall of TV, screen and stage, in the world premiere of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," as composed and written by William Sydeman. This collection of Kennedy memorabilia will be narrated by Marshall, who has been called "the actors' actor."

Marshall is also one of the two principal actors in the star-studded film "The Poppy Is Also a Flower," which deals with UNICEF's activities to trace and prevent the flow of heroin and opium throughout the world. The picture is showing at the Paramount Theater.

So important a picture did many stars, visiting in Europe, believe "Poppy" to be that most of them worked at minimum salary. They were persuaded by director Terence Young to play even the smallest roles and their names were listed alphabetically instead of according to box-office appeal as is customary.

Although the actor is Michigan-born he can lay claim to being one of the most popular men in Stratton, Vt. He not only built a house there, but he also built a road. And then he turned it over to the Ethan Allen Camp of Boy Scouts in Rutland, Vt., to use for vacations and overnight shelter. It is situated close to Mt. Stratton, a favorite place for mountain climbing among the scouts.

New England names are much admired by the actor who is also a Bible scholar. His 2-month-old son has been named Jedediah. "The original Jedediah was the second son of David and Bathsheba; the name means Beloved of the Lord," said E. G.

One of Marshall's daughters is Mrs. Ralph Pred of Nahant, which indicates he has still another strong New England tie.

Marshall's presentation with the Boston Symphony is to be repeated in Washington, D.C., and New York. He will return to Boston on Nov. 22 to do the narration when the composition is recorded on Educational TV.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 6 1966

In Memoriam John F. Kennedy

"In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, commissioned by Ruth Kaufman for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given its first performances ~~at Friday's and~~ Saturday's Syymphony concerts. It is to be repeated Tuesday night. Sydeman was in Symphony Hall on Nov. 22, 1963, and the premiere of his Study No. 2 for Orchestra had just been completed when Erich Leinsdorf announced the President's death.

The text of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," assembled by the composer and read at these performances by E. G. Marshall, follows:

TEXT OF THE NARRATION

To tens of millions the skies seemed suddenly darkened at midday. A sense of spaciousness was taken out of American lives; a feeling that the nation's future was shot through with imagination and hope disappeared, and an exhilarating absorption in the adventures before us was lost. One gallant personality had cast its radiance into a multitude of lives from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It seemed incredible that this radiance was so swiftly quenched. . . .

Allan Nevins, Introduction to Volume II of Kennedy Speeches

To everything, there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven. A time to be born and a time to die, a time to laugh, a time to weep, a time to mourn, a time to speak. . . .

ECCLESIASTES

I think continually of those who were truly great.
Who, from the womb, remembered the soul's history
Through corridors of light where hours are suns,
Endless and singing. Whose lovely ambition
Was that their lips, still touched with fire,
Should tell of the spirit clothed from head to foot in song.
And who hoarded from the spring branches
The desires falling across their bodies like blossoms.
What is precious is never to forget
The delight of the blood drawn from ageless springs
Breaking through rocks in worlds before our earth;
Never to deny its pleasure in the simple morning light,
Nor its grave evening demand for love;
Never to allow gradually the traffic to smother
With noise and fog the flowering of the spirit.
Near the snow, near the sun, in the highest fields
See how these names are feted by the waving grass,
And by the streamers of white cloud,
And whispers of wind in the listening sky;
The names of those who in their lives fought for life,
Who wore at their hearts the fire's center.
Born of the sun they travelled a short while towards the sun,
And left the vivid air signed with their honor.

Stephen Spender

It was all gone now, the life affirming, life enhancing zest, the brillance, the wit, the cool commitment, the steady purpose. He had had so little time. . . . Yet he had accomplished so much. Lifting us beyond our capacities he gave the country back to its best self, wiping away the impression of an old nation of old men . . . weary, played out, fearful of ideas, change, and the future; he taught mankind that the process of rediscovering America was not over.

ARTHUR SCHLESINGER,
A Thousand Days

He re-established the republic as our first generation saw it; young, brave, civilized, rational, gay, tough, questing, exultant in the excitement and potentiality of history. He transformed the American spirit.

For he was an extraordinary man, an extraordinary politician, an extraordinary president. A mind so free of fear and myth and predudice, so opposed to cant and cliche, so unwilling to feign or be fooled, to accept or reflect mediocrity, is indeed rare in our world.

THEODORE SORENSEN
Kennedy

"There is," he said, "no comfort for us in evasion, no solution in abdication, no relief in irresponsibility."

"I am certain," he said, "that after the dust of centuries has passed over our cities, we, too, will be rememebered not for our victories or defeats in battle or politics, but for our contribution to the human spirit."

"The problems of the world," he said, "cannot be solved by skeptics or cynics whose horizons are limited by the realities of yesteryear." ". . . a man does what he must, in spite of personal consequences, in spite of dangers . . . and that," he said, "is the basis of all human morality."

"We are Americans," he said. "That is a proud boast. That is a great privilege, to be a citizen of the United States, and we must meet our responsibilities."

"We live now," he said, "in a different world, with a billion more people crowding our globe . . . and every American can hear the rumbling of a distant drum. . . . The white race," he said, "is in the minority, the free enterprise system is in the minority, and the majority is looking at us longer and harder than they ever looked before."

"Our responsibilities," he said, "are not discharged by the announcement of virtuous ends. . . . The messages of the rising din of voices in Africa, Asia and Latin America, these messages are all the same," he said. "The complacent, the self-indulgent, the soft societies are about to be swept away with the debris of history."

"It is the fate of this generation," he said, "to live with a struggle we did not start in a world we did not make. But the pressures of life are not always distributed by choice. And while no nation has ever faced such a challenge, no nation has ever been so ready to seize the burden and the glory of freedom."

"Let the word go forth from this time and place, to friend and foe alike," he said, "that the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans, born in this century, tempered by war, disciplined by a hard and bitter peace, proud of our ancient heritage and unwilling to witness or permit the slow undoing of those human rights to which this nation has always been committed, and to which we are committed today at home and around the world.

"Let every nation know, whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and the success of liberty.

"All this will not be finished in the first hundred days, nor will it be finished in the first thousand days. But let us begin.

"In the long history of the world, only a few generations have been granted the role of defending freedom in its hour of maximum danger. I do not shrink from this responsibility, I welcome it. I do not believe that any of us would exchange places with any other people or any other generation. The energy, faith, the devotion which we bring to this endeavor will light our country and all who serve it, and the glow from that fire can truly light the world.

"And so, my fellow Americans, ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country.

"My fellow citizens of the world, ask not what America can do for you, but what together we can do for the freedom of man.

". . . With good conscience our only sure reward, with history the final judge of our deeds, let us go forth to lead the land we love, asking His blessing and His help, but knowing that here on earth God's work must truly be our own."

Excerpts from speeches by John F. Kennedy;
THEODORE SORENSEN, Kennedy

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 5 1966

Ovation Greets Premiere

By MARJORIE SHERMAN
Globe Society Editor

"It seems almost like clapping in church" said one Bostonian as the first performance of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" ended Friday in an ovation for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the slender bearded composer, and narrator E. G. Marshall.

In a left side aisle seat a dozen rows from the stage, Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy listened, her white-gloved hands pressed together in her lap. She was alone.

"My family will hear it in Washington and in New York on the Symphony tour this month," she said.

She went backstage with Forrest Gates to tell composer Sydeman and conductor Erich Leinsdorf that the tribute to her son was "truly inspired."

Mr. Sydeman was in Symphony Hall on that November Friday three years ago when Henry Cabot told a stunned audience the terrible news. The funeral march from the "Eroica" was played in place of the rest of the program on that day.

Composer Sydeman, who had just before the tragic announcement heard the premiere of his first major work in performance, finds it "impossible to think of the tragedy without recalling this movement of the Eroica," and he has therefore" incorporated and developed fragments of its theme" in his effective Memoriam.

In their accustomed places Friday, recalling with Mr. Cabot, the orchestra, and composer Sydeman the 22d of November, 1963, were many sombre-faced Bostonians.

There were the Edward Tafts, Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, the Paul Clarks and their daughter, Jean Boas, Mrs. Stephen Wheatland, Mrs. James L. Gamble, Mrs. F. Murray Forbes Jr., Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray and Mrs. Russell Burrage.

Also, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Lawson, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hodgkinson, Mrs. Alfred Donovan, Mrs. John F. Enders, whose husband is the distinguished Nobel prize winner, Mrs. Trygye Gundersen, Mrs. Franc Ingraham and Mrs. Lyman Holt.

Also there were Mrs. Seymour Gray, Mrs. Lewis Cabot, Mrs. David Bird, Mrs. Anthony Kutten, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Montgomery, Mrs. Kenneth Galbraith, and so many more Codmans and Crockers, Saltonstalls and Putnams, Wolcotts and Cutlers and Hallowells.

They made their way quietly out of the hall and into Friday's sunset light, taking with them the final phrases of this unforgettable Memoriam, John F. Kennedy's words:

"Let the word go forth from this time and place, to friend and foe alike, that the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans, born in this country, tempered by war, disciplined by a hard and bitter peace, proud of our unique heritage and unwilling to witness or permit the slow undoing of those human rights to which this nation has always been committed, and to which we are committed today at home and around the world."

"IT WAS INSPIRED"—Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy said of performance of Sydeman's "In Memoriam of John F. Kennedy," introduced Friday at Symphony Hall.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

GREENBURGH INDEPENDENT
Thursday, January 12, 1967

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.
SENTINEL
W. 1,500

JAN 1 2 1967

Composer to Discuss His Tribute to JFK

"In Memoriam--John F. Kennedy" is an unusual work for orchestra and narrator, composed by a Hastings resident. It was premiered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last fall and next week, William Sydeman, its composer, will bring to local audiences the story of the development of this composition and its premiere at a special program arranged by the Hastings Friends of the Library Association. The event program will be held Thursday at 8:15 p.m. in the Orr Room of the new Hastings Library.

Mr. Sydeman will describe the integration of music and text passages, which have been taken from several sources, including many of President Kennedy's speeches. He will also play the tapes of the premiere performance, in which the Boston Symphony was conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, with narration by actor E. G. Marshall.

Mr. Leinsdorf selected Mr. Sydeman to compose the work, which was commissioned by Mrs. Ruth Kaufman of New York. She wanted to express her admiration for Kennedy and her gratitude for the refuge she and her late husband found in the United States when they were forced to flee Berlin in 1938.

This work is only one of many that Mr. Sydeman has written at the special request of performers or sponsors of musical events. He has composed about 80 works, mainly for chamber groups. His works have been played by such leading orchestras as the Boston and the Louisville symphonies and by chamber groups such as the Aeolian Quartet and the New York Camerata.

WILLIAM SYDEMAN
(Photo by Potosh)

He has received numerous awards for composition, including ones from the National Institute of Arts and Letters, the Pacifica Foundation Chamber Music Award, the Boston Symphony Merit Award and most recently, the Koussevitsky Foundation award, granted through the Library of Congress.

In May, 1966, one of his orchestral works was performed at the Prague Spring Festival. Under the auspices of the State Department, Mr. Sydeman attended the performance and then toured Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Rumania, lecturing on American music.

Mr. Sydeman also teaches composition at the Mannes College of Music in New York. He, his wife and three children live on Old Broadway.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
NOV 3 1966

Sydeman Work Is At Symphony Tomorrow

Kennedy Composition Premiere Set

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Symphony-goers who have been waiting for the world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" will have their day tomorrow.

E. G. Marshall, well-known to television viewers of "The Defenders" series, will be narrator for Erich Leinsdorf and the Orchestra's seven performances of the work this month. The first three are in Boston — tomorrow afternoon, Saturday evening and again Tuesday evening, Nov. 8, at the Tuesday "A" series.

Marshall's text includes excerpts from Allan Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem, "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great"; Ted Sorensen's "Kennedy"; and from Kennedy's own speeches.

Director Leinsdorf awarded Sydeman the Ruth Kaufmann Commission for a composition for narrator and orchestra last year. The funds were given by Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann of New York City.

Other performances are scheduled for Washington on Nov. 15, New York on Nov. 16 and 18, and for the second "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall Nov. 22, to be televised by WGBH.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 3 1966

Two World Premieres
will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, during November. "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman, will receive its first performance in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, November 4. The text of the narration will include excerpts from Allan Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great"; the book of Ecclesiastes; Schlesinger's "A Thousand Days," and Sorenson's "Kennedy"; as well as from the late President's speeches. Subsequent performances in Boston will be November 5 and 22; plus concerts in Washington and New York during the month. Elliott Carter's first Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, will premiere on Friday, November 11.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

NOV 1966

Orchestras

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will present two world premieres during November, with Mr. Leinsdorf conducting. At the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts of November 4 and 5, the orchestra will play William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy; at the concerts of November 11 and 12, Jacob Lateiner will be soloist in Elliot Carter, Jr.'s First Piano Concerto. Gunther Schuller, conductor and composer, will conduct the concerts of November 25 and 26. Other BSO concerts scheduled at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492): Tuesday, November 1 at 7:30 p.m.; Tuesdays, November 8, 22 and 29 at 8:30 p.m. An open rehearsal, at 7:30, will be held on Thursday, November 10.

ACTOR TO READ WITH BSO

E. G. Marshall Here for JFK Concert

By PEGGY DOYLE

That was no look-alike—that really was E. G. Marshall of television's "The Defenders" you glimpsed in Boston the other day. He was here to rehearse with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for the first of seven performances at the Friday and Saturday concerts.

Marshall will read a text including excerpts from Allen Nevins' introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem, "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great"; Theodore Sorenson's "Kennedy" and from the President's speeches.

He found time to dine with his eldest child, 24-year-old Jill, Mrs. Ralph Pred of Nahant, "who looks like Ingrid Bergman," to speak of his latest motion picture production, "The Poppy Is Also a Flower," which is playing its New England premiere engagement at the downtown Paramount Theater this week.

Defending criminals in "The Defenders," he pursues them in the new Ian Fleming-Terence Young espionage thriller in which he plays an international narcotics agent on the track of a band of smugglers.

Marshall was one of 22 international stars in "Poppy," which was filmed over a six-month period in Nice, Marseilles, Monte Carlo, Naples, Rome, Teheran and the Iranian Desert.

"In Iran the native breakfast is fresh Iranian caviar and vodka, and the oysters, of which there are eight different varieties, have no equal anywhere."

In one sequence in the film he is required to run up and catch a moving train, then fight with Harold Sakata, the wrestler turned actor, who played Oddjob in the James Bond movie. Does he train for this sort of thing?

"Don't confuse me with the cerebral type. I'm always in training. I used to bicycle to and from work. I walk the dogs, an airedale and a poodle, every morning at seven."

An actor since he was 16 "when I played a 70-year-old man," Marshall at one time thought of entering the ministry. Born of Norwegian parents in the small Minnesota town of Owatonna, he was educated at Carleton College and the University of Minnesota.

After working in radio, he joined a Shakespeare company in the South and Southwest in 1933, then moved with it to Chicago where the group became the nucleus of the classical wing of the Federal Theater. John Huston, who was a writer in Hollywood, got his first acting job there, Marshall remembers.

From there he headed for Broadway, appearing in Eugene O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh," first as the alcoholic law student, then in the leading role of Hickey. His other theatrical credits include Thornton Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth", "Jacobowski and the Colonel", "Waiting for Godot", "Hope Is a Thing Called Feathers", "The Gambler" and Arthur Miller's "The Crucible".

Moviegoers will remember him in "The Caine Mutiny", "Twelve Angry Men", "The House of 92nd Street", "The Mountain", "Compulsion", "Call Northside 777", "The Journey" and "Town Without Pity". In television, name any major drama series since the medium's inception and he's been in it.

As to his private life, this father of five cites as his proudest production, his two-month-old son, Jedidiah, "named for the second son of David and Bathsheba who was never mentioned again in the Bible."

He lives in New York, not far from Gracie Square, and is president of the 77th Street Association as a conseqeunce of his "Defenders" role. Often consulted on legal niceties and in demand as a speaker at bar association dinners, this non-practicing "lawyer" admits that "I obey the laws better than I used to before 'The Defenders.'"

25.

CAPITOL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

GREENWICH INDEPENDENT
Thursday, January 12, 1967

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.
SENTINEL
W. 1,500

JAN 1 2 1967

Composer to Discuss His Tribute to JFK

" In Memoriam--John F. Kennedy" is an unusual work for orchestra and narrator, composed by a Hastings resident. It was premiered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last fall and next week, William Sydeman, its composer, will bring to local audiences the story of the development of this composition and its premiere at a special program arranged by the Hastings Friends of the Library Association. The event program will be held Thursday at 8:15 p.m. in the Orr Room of the new Hastings Library.

Mr. Sydeman will describe the integration of music and text passages, which have been taken from several sources, including many of President Kennedy's speeches. He will also play the tapes of the premiere performance, in which the Boston Symphony was conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, with narration by actor E. G. Marshall.

Mr. Leinsdorf selected Mr. Sydeman to compose the work, which was commissioned by Mrs. Ruth Kaufman of New York. She wanted to express her admiration for Kennedy and her gratitude for the refuge she and her late husband found in the United States when they were forced to flee Berlin in 1938.

This work is only one of many that Mr. Sydeman has written at the special request of performers or sponsors of musical events. He has composed about 80 works, mainly for chamber groups. His works have been played by such leading orchestras as the Boston and the Louisville symphonies and by chamber groups such as the Aeolian Quartet and the New York Camerata.

WILLIAM SYDEMAN
(Photo by Potash)

He has received numerous awards for composition, including ones from the National Institute of Arts and Letters, the Pacifica Foundation Chamber Music Award, the Boston Symphony Merit Award and most recently, the Koussevitsky Foundation award, granted through the Library of Congress.

In May, 1966, one of his orchestral works was performed at the Prague Spring Festival. Under the auspices of the State Department, Mr. Sydeman attended the performance and then toured Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Rumania, lecturing on American music.

Mr. Sydeman also teaches composition at the Mannes College of Music in New York. He, his wife and three children live on Old Broadway.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
NOV 3 1966

Sydeman Work Is At Symphony Tomorrow

Kennedy Composition Premiere Set

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Symphony-goers who have been waiting for the world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" will have their day tomorrow.

E. G. Marshall, well-known to television viewers of "The Defenders" series, will be narrator for Erich Leinsdorf and the Orchestra's seven performances of the work this month. The first three are in Boston — tomorrow afternoon, Saturday evening and again Tuesday evening, Nov. 8, at the Tuesday "A" series.

Marshall's ttext includes excerpts from Allan Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem, "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great"; Ted Sorensen's "Kennedy"; and from Kennedy's own speeches.

Director Leinsdorf awarded Sydeman the Ruth Kaufmann Commission for a composition for narrator and orchestra last year. The funds were given by Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann of New York City.

Other performances are scheduled for Washington on Nov. 15, New York on Nov. 16 and 18, and for the second "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall Nov. 22, to be televised by WGBH.

Two World Premieres
will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, during November. "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman, will receive its first performance in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, November 4. The text of the narration will include excerpts from Allan Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great"; the book of Ecclesiastes; Schlesinger's "A Thousand Days," and Sorenson's "Kennedy"; as well as from the late President's speeches. Subsequent performances in Boston will be November 5 and 22; plus concerts in Washington and New York during the month. Elliott Carter's first Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, will premiere on Friday, November 11.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 3 1966

ACTOR TO READ WITH BSO

E. G. Marshall Here for JFK Concert

By PEGGY DOYLE

That was no look-alike—that really was E. G. Marshall of television's "The Defenders" you glimpsed in Boston the other day. He was here to rehearse with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for the first of seven performances at the Friday and Saturday concerts.

Marshall will read a text including excerpts from Allen Nevins' introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem, "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great"; Theodore Sorenson's "Kennedy" and from the President's speeches.

He found time to dine with his eldest child, 24-year-old Jill, Mrs. Ralph Pred of Nahant, "who looks like Ingrid Bergman," to speak of his latest motion picture production, "The Poppy Is Also a Flower," which is playing its New England premiere engagement at the downtown Paramount Theater this week.

Defending criminals in "The Defenders," he pursues them in the new Ian Fleming-Terence Young espionage thriller in which he plays an international narcotics agent on the track of a band of smugglers.

Marshall was one of 22 international stars in "Poppy," which was filmed over a six-month period in Nice, Marseilles, Monte Carlo, Naples, Rome, Teheran and the Iranian Desert.

"In Iran the native breakfast is fresh Iranian caviar and vodka, and the oysters, of which there are eight different varieties, have no equal anywhere."

In one sequence in the film he is required to run up and catch a moving train, then fight with Harold Sakata, the wrestler turned actor, who played Oddjob in the James Bond mivie. Does he train for this sort of thing?

"Don't confuse me with the cerebral type. I'm always in training. I used to bicycle to and from work. I walk the dogs, an airedale and a poodle, every morning at seven."

An actor since he was 16 "when I played a 70-year-old man," Marshall at one time thought of entering the ministry. Born of Norwegian parents in the small Minnesota town of Owatonna, he was educated at Carleton College and the University of Minnesota.

After working in radio, he joined a Shakespeare company in the South and Southwest in 1933, then moved with it to Chicago where the group became the nucleus of the classical wing of the Federal Theater. John Huston, who was a writer in Hollywood, got his first acting job there, Marshall remembers.

From there he headed for Broadway, appearing in Eugene O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh," first as the alcoholic law student, then in the leading role of Hickey. His other theatrical credits include Thornton Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth", "Jacobowski and the Colonel", "Waiting for Godot", "Hope Is a Thing Called Feathers", "The Gambler" and Arthur Miller's "The Crucible".

Moviegoers will remember him in "The Caine Mutiny", "Twelve Angry Men", "The House of 92nd Street", "The Mountain", "Compulsion", "Call Northside 777", "The Journey" and "Town Without Pity". In television, name any major drama series since the medium's inception and he's been in it.

As to his private life, this father of five cites as his proudest production, his two-month-old son, Jedidiah, "named for the second son of David and Bathsheba who was never mentioned again in the Bible."

He lives in New York, not far from Gracie Square, and is president of the 77th Street Association as a consequence of his "Defenders" role. Often consulted on legal niceties and in demand as a speaker at bar association dinners, this non-practicing "lawyer" admits that "I obey the laws better than I used to before 'The Defenders.'"

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
NOV 1966

Orchestras

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will present two world premieres during November, with Mr. Leinsdorf conducting. At the Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts of November 4 and 5, the orchestra will play William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy; at the concerts of November 11 and 12, Jacob Lateiner will be soloist in Elliot Carter, Jr.'s First Piano Concerto. Gunther Schuller, conductor and composer, will conduct the concerts of November 25 and 26. Other BSO concerts scheduled at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492): Tuesday, November 1 at 7:30 p.m.; Tuesdays, November 8, 22 and 29 at 8:30 p.m. An open rehearsal, at 7:30, will be held on Thursday, November 10.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 5 1966

Three World Premieres In Orchestra's Season

BOSTON (AP) — William Sydeman's new score in memory of President John F. Kennedy is among three world premiers scheduled for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th season, opening Sept. 23.

Music director Erich Leinsdorf announced the premieres along with a schedule of 24 programs to be given Friday and Saturday evenings at Symphony Hall. Five other series of concerts on Tuesdays and Thursdays are planned.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
AUG 5 1966

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra will open its 86th season in Symphony Hall on Friday, Sept. 23. Although there won't be a glittering Golden Trumpet Ball this year, Proper Bostonians who hold season tickets (and may have for several generations) will find them golden keys to three world premiers during the new season.

Music Director Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year with the Orchestra, has announced that the premieres will include William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 and Saturday evenings at 8:30, the Orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. A series of Open Rehearsals will also be given for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Item (e)
WAKEFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 6,620
AUG 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 29,084
AUG 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,202
AUG 4 1966

JFK Memorial Score Ready

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 49,594
AUG 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
OCT 5 1966

Leinsdorf, Symphony Meticulous on Mahler

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra began their Tuesday "B" series last night in Symphony Hall with a program devoted to only one work—Mahler's lengthy "Symphony No. 3 in D Minor," which, in addition to the orchestra, calls for a contralto soloist, a chorus and a boys' choir.

In this symphony, Mahler, like Berlioz, breaks away from the traditional four-movement scheme. In fact, there are six movements, the first of which requires 35 minutes to play. And, as in all of Mahler's symphonic work, there is variety—restlessness and storminess in places, monumental exaltation in others.

The second movement, for example, is a scherzo; the third is minuet-like in style, the fourth a setting for contralto voice of words by Nietzsche, "O Mensch! Gib Acht," the fifth a song for women's voices in three parts and a boys' choir, and the Finale an instrumental adagio in which the strings predominate.

The entire work is one well calculated to display the remarkable virtuosity of the Boston players; each instrumental section is given its place in the sun. Especially noteworthy was the ethereally beautiful tone quality achieved by trumpeter Armando Ghitalla in his off-stage playing in the third movement and the splendid playing of the post-hornist in the same section.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who conducted without a score, once again revealed his great affinity for Mahler, directing with a nice eye for meticulous detail, shaping the architecture of the work with skill and understanding, drawing from his players a first rate sonority of tone and texture.

Shirley Verrett, the statuesque and beautifully poised soloist, performed her vocal duties impeccably, and there was good work by the New England Conservatory Chorus, trained by Lorna Cooke DeVaron, and the Boston Boychoir, prepared by John Oliver.

The next concert in the series is on Nov. 1, with pianist Claude Frank and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson as guest soloists.

ROCKFORD MORNING STAR
ROCKFORD, ILL.
D. 58,197 SUN. 77,470
OCT 23 1966

★ ★ ★

"In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman, will be performed by the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., on Nov. 4. The concert later will be performed in Washington, D.C., and in New York.

★ ★ ★

Chattanooga Daily Times
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
D. 52,372 SUN. 86,562
OCT 16 1966

This season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf will give the world premiere of three contemporary works; Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moev's Et in Occidentem which the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President Kennedy.

By Louise McCamy

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
OCT 30 1966

'In Memoriam Kennedy'

"In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" will have the first of seven performances at the Boston Symphony's concerts on Friday and Saturday. Commissioned from William Sydeman, the work will be narrated by E. G. Marshall of television's "The Defenders." Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann of New York City gave the money for the commission.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910
OCT 23 1966

Music

JFK Composition

"In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman, will receive its first performance in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, Nov. 4. The Boston Symphony will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf who commissioned the work of Sydeman.

Elliott Carter's first Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, will also be world premiered by the Boston Symphony and Leinsdorf. It will be performed Friday, Nov. 11, as part of the Ford Foundation Program for Performing Musical Artists.

Both composers will be present to hear the premieres of their respective works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
OCT 16 1966

B.S.O. Sets Two Premieres

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will present two world premieres in Boston within the first two weeks of November. One work also will be heard in Washington and both will be performed in New York in the same month.

"In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman, will receive its first performance in Symphony Hall, Friday afternoon, Nov. 4. Sydeman received the Ruth Kaufmann Commission for a work of this nature last November. Funds for the commission were given by Mrs. Kaufmann of New York city. The text of the narration will include excerpts from Allen Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem, "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great"; the Old Testament book of Ecclesiastes; Arthur Schlesinger's "The Thousand Days"; Theodore Sorensen's "Kennedy"; and from Kennedy's speeches.

Subsequent performances will be in Symphony Hall Nov. 5 and Nov. 22, the latter concert also televised by WGBH-TV, Channel 2; at Constitution Hall, Washington, during the orchestra's concert of Nov. 15, and in Philharmonic Hall, New York, during the orchestra's regular concerts of Nov. 16 and 18.

Elliott Carter's first Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as solist, will receive its first performance by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall Friday, Nov. 11. This work, in three movements, was commissioned by Lateiner as part of the Ford Foundation Program for Performing Musical Artists. He also will be soloist in performances with Leinsdorf and the Orchestra at Symphony Hall Saturday, Nov. 12, and at Carnegie Hall Saturday, Nov. 17.

Both Sydeman and Carter will be present to hear the premieres of their respective works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Post
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 11,125
OCT 16 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 30 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 29 1966

THEATER

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston.

Tues. at 1:30:
Erich Leinsdorf leads the BSO in Mozart's Symphony in G minor, K. 550; Berg's Suite from "Lulu"; Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 in C major, Op. 15. Soloists are Phyllis Bryn-Julson in the Berg work and Claude Frank in the Beethoven.

Fri. at 2:
The world premiere of a new work by William Sydeman, "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy, for Narrator and Orchestra," is included on the program. Actor E. G. Marshall narrates. Leinsdorf also conducts Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major for Orchestra and Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B-flat major, Op. 38. Repeat Performance Saturday at 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 30 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 25 1966

Narration Planned

Symphony Hall informs us that the narrator for the world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John f. kennedy," to be performed at the Symphony's weekend concerts on Nov. 4 and 5, will be E.G. Marshall, star of TV's erstwhile series, "he Defenders."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 432,648
OCT 30 1966

TV Star To Narrate JFK Memorial

E. G. Marshall, star of the CBS television series "The Defenders," will be narrator for six performances next month of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The first two performances will be at 2 p. m. Friday and 8:30 p. m. Saturday at Symphony Hall. Others will be Nov. 15 at Constitution Hall, Washington; Nov. 16 and 18, at New York's Philharmonic Hall, and a second "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall Nov. 22, which will be televised by WGBH.

Marshall will read excerpts from Allen Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy speeches; from Stephen Spender and Theodore Sorensen's poems, and from Kennedy's speeches.

Opening the Friday-Saturday program will be Bach's Suite No. 3 in D. Major for Orchestra.

Symphony This Week

E. G. Marshall Will Narrate Memorial

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the narrator for the world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" will be E. G. Marshall, of the CBS television series, "The Defenders."

Mr. Marshall will appear in six performances of Sydeman's work this month, beginning Friday afternoon at 2:00 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

The text will include excerpts from Allen Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great;" Theodore Sorensen's "Kennedy;" and from Kennedy's speeches themselves.

The Friday-Saturday program will begin with Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major for Orchesta and will conclude with the Schumann Symphony No. 1.

OTHER performances of Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" are scheduled for Constitution Hall, Washington, on Nov. 15; Philharmonic Hall, New York, on Nov. 16 and 18; and for the second "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall Nov. 22, which will be televised by WGBH, Channel 2.

The second concert of the Tuesday "B" series will take place this week, Mr. Leinsdorf conducting. The program includes Mozart's Symphony in G minor, K. 550, the Suite from "Lulu" by Alban Berg, and Concerto No. 1, with Claude Frank, soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 79,331
AUG 5 1966

Three World Premieres In Orchestra's Season

BOSTON (AP) — William Sydeman's new score in memory of President John F. Kennedy is among three world premiers scheduled for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 86th season, opening Sept. 23.

Music director Erich Leinsdorf announced the premieres along with a schedule of 24 programs to be given Friday and Saturday evenings at Symphony Hall. Five other series of concerts on Tuesdays and Thursdays are planned.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
AUG 5 1966

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra will open its 86th season in Symphony Hall on Friday, Sept. 23. Although there won't be a glittering Golden Trumpet Ball this year, Proper Bostonians who hold season tickets (and may have for several generations) will find them golden keys to three world premiers duri..g the new season:

Music Director Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his fifth year with the Orchestra, has announced that the premieres will include William Sydeman's new work in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

In addition to the 24 pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoons at 2 and Saturday evenings at 8:30, the Orchestra will present five other series of concerts in Boston. A series of Open Rehearsals will also be given for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Item (e)
WAKEFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 6,620
AUG 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 29,084
AUG 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,202
AUG 4 1966

JFK Memorial Score Ready

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 49,594
AUG 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970
OCT 5 1966

Leinsdorf, Symphony Meticulous on Mahler

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra began their Tuesday "B" series last night in Symphony Hall with a program devoted to only one work—Mahler's lengthy "Symphony No. 3 in D Minor," which, in addition to the orchestra, calls for a contralto soloist, a chorus and a boys' choir.

In this symphony, Mahler, like Berlioz, breaks away from the traditional four-movement scheme. In fact, there are six movements, the first of which requires 35 minutes to play. And, as in all of Mahler's symphonic work, there is variety—restlessness and storminess in places, monumental exaltation in others.

The second movement, for example, is a scherzo; the third is minuet-like in style, the fourth a setting for contralto voice of words by Nietzsche, "O Mensch! Gib Acht," the fifth a song for women's voices in three parts and a boys' choir, and the Finale an instrumental adagio in which the strings predominate.

The entire work is one well calculated to display the remarkable virtuosity of the Boston players; each instrumental section is given its place in the sun. Especially noteworthy was the ethereally beautiful tone quality achieved by trumpeter Armando Ghitalla in his offstage playing in the third movement and the splendid playing of the post-hornist in the same section.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who conducted without a score, once again revealed his great affinity for Mahler, directing with a nice eye for meticulous detail, shaping the architecture of the work with skill and understanding, drawing from his players a first rate sonority of tone and texture.

Shirley Verrett, the statuesque and beautifully poised soloist, performed her vocal duties impeccably, and there was good work by the New England Conservatory Chorus, trained by Lorna Cooke DeVaron, and the Boston Boychoir, prepared by John Oliver.

The next concert in the series is on Nov. 1, with pianist Claude Frank and soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson as guest soloists.

ROCKFORD MORNING STAR
ROCKFORD, ILL.
D. 58,197 SUN. 77,470
OCT 23 1966

★ ★ ★

"In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman, will be performed by the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., on Nov. 4. The concert later will be performed in Washington, D.C., and in New York.

★ ★ ★

Chattanooga Daily Times
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
D. 52,372 SUN. 86,562
OCT 16 1966

This season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf will give the world premiere of three contemporary works; Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist; Robert Moev's Et in Occidentem which the orchestra will perform with the Rutgers University Choir; and William Sydeman's new work in memory of President Kennedy.

By Louise McCamy

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
OCT 30 1966

'In Memoriam Kennedy'

"In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" will have the first of seven performances at the Boston Symphony's concerts on Friday and Saturday. Commissioned from William Sydeman, the work will be narrated by E. G. Marshall of television's "The Defenders." Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann of New York City gave the money for the commission.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 104,910
OCT 23 1966

Music

JFK Composition

"In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman, will receive its first performance in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, Nov. 4. The Boston Symphony will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf who commissioned the work of Sydeman.

Elliott Carter's first Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, will also be world premiered by the Boston Symphony and Leinsdorf. It will be performed Friday, Nov. 11, as part of the Ford Foundation Program for Performing Musical Artists.

Both composers will be present to hear the premieres of their respective works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
OCT 16 1966

B.S.O. Sets Two Premieres

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will present two world premieres in Boston within the first two weeks of November. One work also will be heard in Washington and both will be performed in New York in the same month.

"In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman, will receive its first performance in Symphony Hall, Friday afternoon, Nov. 4. Sydeman received the Ruth Kaufmann Commission for a work of this nature last November. Funds for the commission were given by Mrs. Kaufmann of New York city. The text of the narration will include excerpts from Allen Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem, "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great"; the Old Testament book of Ecclesiastes; Arthur Schlesinger's "The Thousand Days"; Theodore Sorensen's "Kennedy"; and from Kennedy's speeches.

Subsequent performances will be in Symphony Hall Nov. 5 and Nov. 22, the latter concert also televised by WGBH-TV, Channel 2; at Constitution Hall, Washington, during the orchestra's concert of Nov. 15, and in Philharmonic Hall, New York, during the orchestra's regular concerts of Nov. 16 and 18.

Elliott Carter's first Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as solist, will receive its first performance by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall Friday, Nov. 11. This work, in three movements, was commissioned by Lateiner as part of the Ford Foundation Program for Performing Musical Artists. He also will be soloist in performances with Leinsdorf and the Orchestra at Symphony Hall Saturday, Nov. 12, and at Carnegie Hall Saturday, Nov. 17.

Both Sydeman and Carter will be present to hear the premieres of their respective works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Post
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 11,125
OCT 16 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 30 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 29 1966

THEATER

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston.

Tues. at 7:30:
Erich Leinsdorf leads the BSO in Mozart's Symphony in G minor, K. 550; Berg's Suite from "Lulu"; Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 in C major, Op. 15. Soloists are Phyllis Bryn-Julson in the Berg work and Claude Frank in the Beethoven.

Fri. at 2:
The world premiere of a new work by William Sydeman, "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy, for Narrator and Orchestra," is included on the program. Actor E. G. Marshall narrates. Leinsdorf also conducts Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major for Orchestra and Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B-flat major, Op. 38. Repeat performance Saturday at 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
OCT 30 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 23 1966

Narration Planned

Symphony Hall informs us that the narrator for the world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John f. kennedy," to be performed at the Symphony's weekend concerts on Nov. 4 and 5, will be E.G. Marshall, star of TV's erstwhile series, "he Defenders."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 432,648
OCT 30 1966

TV Star To Narrate JFK Memorial

E. G. Marshall, star of the CBS television series "The Defenders," will be narrator for six performances next month of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The first two performances will be at 2 p. m. Friday and 8:30 p. m. Saturday at Symphony Hall. Others will be Nov. 15 at Constitution Hall, Washington; Nov. 16 and 18, at New York's Philharmonic Hall, and a second "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall Nov. 22, which will be televised by WGBH.

Marshall will read excerpts from Allen Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy speeches; from Stephen Spender and Theodore Sorensen's poems, and from Kennedy's speeches.

Opening the Friday-Saturday program will be Bach's Suite No. 3 in D. Major for Orchestra.

Symphony This Week

E. G. Marshall Will Narrate Memorial

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the narrator for the world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" will be E. G. Marshall, of the CBS television series, "The Defenders."

Mr. Marshall will appear in six performances of Sydeman's work this month, beginning Friday afternoon at 2:00 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

The text will include excerpts from Allen Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy's speeches; Stephen Spender's poem "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great;" Theodore Sorensen's "Kennedy;" and from Kennedy's speeches themselves.

The Friday-Saturday program will begin with Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major for Orchesta and will conclude with the Schumann Symphony No. 1.

OTHER performances of Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" are scheduled for Constitution Hall, Washington, on Nov. 15; Philharmonic Hall, New York, on Nov. 16 and 18; and for the second "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall Nov. 22, which will be televised by WGBH, Channel 2.

The second concert of the Tuesday "B" series will take place this week, Mr. Leinsdorf conducting. The program includes Mozart's Symphony in G minor, K. 550, the Suite from "Lulu" by Alban Berg, and Concerto No. 1, with Claude Frank, soloist.

27.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 5 1966

The ARTS

Tribute by Boston Symphony

'In Memoriam JFK'

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

William Sydeman was in the audience at the Boston Symphony concert of Friday afternoon, Nov. 22, 1963, and it was just after the premiere of his Study No. 2 that Erich Leinsdorf announced President Kennedy's assassination. Apart from the fact that Leinsdorf likes Sydeman's music anyway, there was then a special reason why it was Sydeman to whom the conductor turned when the orchestra received a gift from Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann of New York city for the commissioning of a Kennedy memorial composition.

Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" was performed for the first time at Friday's Symphuony concert with Leinsdorf conducting and with E. G. Marshall as narrator. The spoken text begins with an excerpt from Allan Nevin's introduction to the second volume of Kennedy speeches, continues with "To everything there is a season" from Ecclesiastes, Stephen Splender's "I think continually of those who were truly great," passages from the Schlesinger and Sorensen biographies, and, finally, extracts from the President's speeches.

The choice of texts, in which Sorensen assisted the composer, is distinguished. That a couple of passages in the Kennedy speeches themselves are a bit flat is not important in view of the aptness with which material from such disparate sources has been chosen and ordered. The use of the Ecclesiastes passage, said to have been Kennedy's favorite place in the Bible, as prelude to the elegiac Spender verses is an especially noble inspiration.

Sydeman's music uses a phrase from the Star-Spangled Banner, but transformed and obscured so that one would hardly notice it if one's attention were not called to it. There is more telling reference to phrases from the "Eroica" funeral march, a specific evocation, of course, to Leinsdorf's memorial gesture on that terrible afternoon.

In general, to compose music to go with spoken words is a fearful task. The music must jffiustify its existence by heightening, or in some subtler way illuminating the text; yet it should not compete with the words either. In places Sydeman has composed a highly effective music: the introduction leading to the first words, "to tens of millions the skies seemed suddenly darkened at midday;" the violent, convulsive outbursts that follow the passage from Nevins; the series of variations that begins with just a single bassoon as counterpoint to the speaker's voice, as imaginative textural stroke, when Kennedy's words are heard for the first time.

There are weaknesses as well: the obvious sort of underlining provided by the little blips on the glockenspiel that go with "imagination" and "adventure" in the Nevins paragraph; the general sense of anonymity and vapidity of the music, whether quiet or violent, that accompanies the readings from the Bible, Spender, and the biographers.

How does one react to such a work, and what part of one's response really has to do with what Sydeman has actually composed? For a new work, "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" was received with a little more than minimum politeness. It was not a moving occasion, but something more like an a ceremony attended with attention and respect for its honesty, but lacking that which would command heartfelt involvement. Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," the archetype for this sort of piece, does, in spite of its limitations, have music and words whose interest endures. Sydeman lacks the popular touch; neither is his work of more than passing intellectual interest. And of course Kennedy, magnetic, exciting, serious, was no Lincoln either.

As much of the performance as Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony were responsible for was admirable, clear and intense. E. G. Marshall, on the other hand, was only moderately successful as a narrator because of a monotony in his reading that took the life out of the Kennedy speeches that should have been given with quiet urgency, that made the translators of the King James Bibdle sound like Allan Nevins and Spender like the Bible, and that indeed blotted out the difference between pros and poetry altogether.

The concert began with Bach's Suite No. 3 in D in a performance that was austere and remote, though the wonderful Air was beautifully phrased in this fleshless way and the dances, except for the second Gavotte, had a nice rhythmic bounce. It ended with Schumann's "Spring" Symphony, which, except for the excessively slow end to the Scherzo, was done justly and with captivating vitality.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357
NOV 5 1966

entertainment and the arts

Symphony Hall

Memoriam to JFK Opens in Boston

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

BOSTON — Special interest greeted the first performance of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf. E. G. Marshall was narrator.

The work, to be repeated tonight, will also be heard later this month in Boston, Washington, and New York.

Present at the premiere, in addition to the composer, were

Gazette Review

Mrs. Rose Kennedy and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, along with Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann of New York City, donor of the funds for commissioning the composition.

Sydeman, 38-year-old American musician, has had several works performed by the Boston Symphony. Marshall, for years a television favorate in "The Defenders," had a central role yesterday, as Sydeman stated that the words were the core of the piece.

Two Sections

The music is in two sections: "Adagio Lamentoso" and "Allegro: Theme and Variations." The orchestral opening builds up a strong sense of foreboding and tension. One cannot wait for the narrator to speak, such is the composer's spiritual grasp of the mood. The music fluctuates between tenderness and sudden strong outbursts. When the narrator speaks, the music is for the most part quiet and complementary.

Marshall's voice, of great dignity, seemed to lack the spontaneity one would associate with the martyred president. Articulation was crystal clear. Sonorous and meaningful passages were drawn from the writings of Allan Nevisn. Stephen Spender., Arthur Schlesinger, Theodore Sorensen, the Book of Ecclesiastes, and speeches of President Kennedy.

Sydeman used a phrase from the national anthem, "and the rockets' red glare," and two themes from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, all in highly developed and varied forms, to paint the sense of excitement and later that of heroic character in the subject of the work.

Fervent and Masterful

One could not hear this premiere without living again the reactions aroused by John F. Kennedy and his passing. The approach was not only fitting, but fervent and masterful without yielding to outright melodrama at any time.

Leinsdorf preceded the Sydeman work with Bach's Suite No. 3 in D. major, perhaps because tucked among its dance forms was the widely known and splendidly expressive "Arioso" which in itself was a noble elegy.

After intermission, the music turned to gayer channels, when Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat major the hall filled with the outpouring of the famous pianist's love for spring. Some of Schumann's orchestration may tend to be naive, but the total result is joyous and typical of new life, as Leinsdorf and his forces interpret it.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Circ. 12,963
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
SALEM, Mass.
Circ. 27,687
NOV 5 1966

Critics Not Enthusiastic Over JFK 'Memoriam'

BOSTON (AP) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with actor E. G. Marshall, played the world premier of William Sydeman's elegy "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" Friday.

